"I was just about crazy," he says, "I thought it was a fortune."

That was with Carlyle Blackwell, and Goodwin says he could not understand how they could pay him so much money for just walking on in a scene. But he determined to earn more 50-cent pieces, and in a little while was playing small parts.

At 13 he was playing in "Old Heidelberg" with Wallace Reid and Dorothy Gish for D. W. Griffith. At 16 he had the lead with Shirley Mason in "The Winning Girl" for Lasky.

For the last two years his climb has been steady, until he has reached the pinnacle and is now a full-fledged star. His ambition in life, he says, has always been to get as high as he could and to get the best there is out of everything. This means professionally as well as in the personal aim.

He is devoted to his mother, who was Maude Burnell, now Maude Burnell Goodwin, and she is his greatest chum. Millard Webb, William Fox director, who has long been a personal friend of Goodwin, believes there is no limit to the latter's possibilities. He has watched the boy for years and knows his work thoroughly.

So early this year the motion picture public who learned to admire Goodwin in leading roles will have an opportunity to judge just what kind of star he will make.

"A good one," says all his friends, who have no intention of perpetrating a pun. The new star's first picture is now being made at the William Fox Hollywood studio under the title "Oliver Twist, Jr." Millard Webb is directing.

Hallroom Boys Film Plays N. Y. Strand
Brandt Declares Best Houses Will Book the High Grade Independent Pictures

The inclusion recently on the Strand theatre, New York, program of a Hallroom Boys comedy, marks, according to Joe Brandt, president of C. B. C. film Sales Corporation, a new milestone in the history of independent production, and one which independent exchange men and exhibitors would do well to consider.

"Audiences at the Strand received this picture well," says Mr. Brandt. "They laughed at the comic parts, oh'ed and ah'ed at its thrills, and applauded the entire picture. And yet, to them, naturally it meant nothing more nor less than an entertaining comedy."

To the exchange men, the exhibitor and especially to the independent producer of short comedies and of "short stuff" in general, however, this should, says Mr. Brandt, carry a message of the utmost importance. That message is this—that short comedies, independently produced, are in demand, and that they can find a place in the most exclusive market.

Records Are Broken

"On Sunday," says Mr. Brandt, "when the Strand inaugurates its new bill, it will announce that all house records have been shattered. That more people than ever before in the history of the theatre attended every performance. 'A Dog-Gone Mix-Up,' a Hallroom Boys comedy, was the comedy used. What does this mean? That from the pick of all the comedies for the week Hallroom Boys comedies were selected for a record-breaking week. This means that the independently produced comedy in general has a large field and answers a very definite demand."

Larry Semon Slightly Injured During Work

Some new laughs will be discovered, it is promised, when "The Hick," Larry Semon's new special Vitagraph comedy, is issued.

Larry is finishing up the final scene at the Los Angeles studios of the company and the picture will be in New York within a fortnight. For two weeks the star was unable to work. He wrecked his spine in a scene and, coupled with that injury, he was threatened with pneumonia because of over-exposure in a water scene.
Work of Prominent Writers Is Now Being Adapted by Universal

Follows Out Policy of "Better Stories" As Stated Recently by R. H. Cochrane—Big Program of Production Now in Effect

Universal has embarked upon a period of "better stories." R. H. Cochrane, vice president, in a recent statement indicating Universal's plan for 1921 in the story line, laid stress upon the policy which now actuates the Universal scenario department—that no writer is too big for Universal, and no story too good.

Universal is producing or projecting pictures by a list of prominent authors. Among these are F. Hopkinson Smith, Augustus Thomas, Booth Tarkington, Edna Ferber, the late Jacques Futrelle, Courtney Ryley Cooper, Clara Louise Burnham, Max Brand, Marjorie Benton Cooke, Izola Forrester, Mann Page, Edwina Levin, Helen Christine Bennett, George Rix, Philip V. Mighels, James E. Hangerford, Wadsworth Camp and such noted photo-dramatists as Forrest Halseth and Clara Beranger.

Great Activity in West

"We plan to make the coming season a criterion in the production of great pictures, adapted from the work of great writers," said Mr. Cochrane. "The past few months have seen an unprecedented activity in Universal's scenario department, headed by John C. Brownell, who, with an enlarged staff, has obtained for our company the screen rights of more popular plays, novels and stories, than at any other period in our history."

Tod Browning, who wrote and directed "Outside the Law," the latest Priscilla Dean feature, is selecting an all-star cast for the screen adaptation of Edna Ferber's novel, "Fanny Herself." Universal is sparing no pains to assure it a sumptuous production.

Priscilla Dean Working

Priscilla Dean, under the direction of Stuart Paton, has started work on a photo-dramatization of Edwina Levin's novel of stage life, "False Colors." Miss Dean portrays a dual role.

Universal also has acquired the screen rights to "The Open Shutters," the popular novel by Clara Louise Burnham. This will be used as the next starring vehicle for Edith Roberts.

The next picture to be made by Harry Carey will be an adaptation of Courtney Ryley Cooper's story, "Christmas Eve at Pilot Butte." Universal also promises the early screening of "The Fright," by Booth Tarkington. No star has been selected.

Adapt Smith Story

F. Hopkinson Smith will be represented on the Universal schedule by his tale of the mountains, "A Kentucky Cinderella," in which Gladys Walton is to be starred. Rights also have been bought for "The Truant," written by Izola Forrester and Mann Page, Frank Mayo has been cast for "The Truant."

Two other promising stories recently bought by Universal are "The Black Cap," by Wadsworth Camp, and "Patches," from the pen of James E. Huergofer. "The Black Cap" will be produced as the next starring vehicle for Eva Novak, Universal's newest star. "Patches" is being put into continuity for "Breezy" Eason. Young Eason will be directed by his father, Reaves Eason, Sr.

Announce Current Issues

Among current Universal issues are several pictures adapted from stories familiar to almost every reader of current literature. "Out of the Sunset" George Rix's melodramatic story, with Eva Novak in the feature role. It is called "The Telephonic Murder." Max Brand's tale "Tiger" has been made into a picture with Frank Mayo playing the role of the fighting millionaire. It is called "Tiger True" and has just been issued. "The Diamond Master," the adventure and mystery story by the late Jacques Futrelle, was used by Universal as the basis for its most recent serial, "The Diamond Queen," featuring Eileen Sedgwick. It is just being published.

Pictures Near Completion

Among the popular stories nearing completion at Universal City or being prepared for early issue is "The Mad Marriage," taken from Marjorie Benton Cooke's novel "Cinderella Jane." Carmel Myers plays the leading role. Another is "Society Secrets," an adaptation of Helen Christine Bennett's "Never Too Late to Mend." There also is a new story by Philip V. Mighels, called "If Only Jim," in which Harry Carey is the star.

Most heralded of all, however, is the screen adaptation of "Colorado," the famous stage melodrama by Augustus Thomas. It has been screened by Reaves Eason, with Frank Mayo as the star.

Joan Publishes New Billy West Comedy

"The Conquering Hero," the Fourth of This Series, Directed by Parker

Joan Films Sales Company announces the publication of Billy West's fourth two-reel comedy, "The Conquering Hero" which was directed by John Parker. The star is supported by Fred Lancaster in the heavy role and Ethelyn Gilbert as the pretty and persecuted heroine.

It is claimed to be West's funniest comedy yet published. "The Conquering Hero" follows the lead of Billy West's former comedies "Sweethearts," "Service Stripes" and "He's In Again," by striking a laugh with the first "crack out of the box."

A noteworthy feature of "The Conquering Hero" is the double attraction of actor-comedians with who takes the part of a janitor. This is in line with Billy West's intention to make Universal's comedies thoroughly humorous, and to exert every effort to choose the pick of the screen's comedians in his support.

An extra amount of prints of "The Conquering Hero" has been ordered by Joan to meet the demand of exhibitors and exchanges. For the first time, a number of bookings on the West series will take a great stride once "The Conquering Hero" will be screened for exhibitors.

Merwin, O'Higgins and Sheldon to Write for Paramount Productions

List of Big Pictures Is Announced by Jesse Lasky. Included in Which Are “Experience,” “Peter Pan” and Many Others.

Signing of contracts with Edward B. Sheldon, Lucullus Will and Harvey O'Higgins to write and assist in the production of Paramount pictures; the early filming of George V. Hobart's success, "The Secret," with leading cast under the direction of George Fitzmaurice, and the forthcoming production of "Peter Pan" in England under the personal supervision of its author, Sir J. M. Barrie, are among the high spots of an announcement of Paramount production plans made by Jesse L. Lasky.

Wrote "Salvation Bell"

It was while at Harvard that Edward Sheldon jumped into fame as the author of "Salvation Bell," in which Mr. Lasky starred for two seasons. He followed it the next year with "The Nigger," and since then has written such successes as "The Boss," in which Holbrook Blinn starred; "Princess Zim-Zim," "Egypt," "The High Road," "The Garden of Paradise" and "Romance," in which Doris Kenne appeared both on the stage and on the screen.

Mr. Lasky is a graduate of Northwestern University. His first novels to attract attention were "The Short Line War" and "Calumet K.," both written in collaboration with Henry Kitchell Webster. Then followed, among others, "The Citadel," "The Charmed Life of Miss Austin," "Anthony the Absolute," and "The Singing Fool."

Harvey J. O'Higgins, a native of London, Ont., has long been noted both as an author and playwright. Among his early successes was "The Grand Henry Man," in which David Belasco starred David Warfield. In collaboration with other authors, he has written "The Beast and the Jungle," "Under the Prophet" in Utah," "Polygamist," "Mr. Lazarus," "The Argyle Case," "The Dummy" and "On the Hiring Line.""To Produce in East"

Mr. Lasky announces that "Experience," which will be made in the East, will parallel in magnitude and wealth of setting "The Affairs of Anatol," the super-star production which Cecil B. DeMille now has on the way toward completion in the West. "We purpose to go the limit in making it one of the most lavish and interesting productions ever made," he says.

Other productions soon to be produced, both of which will be made in the East, are "The Wanderer," Morris Gest's spectacular stage production of the story of the Prodigal Son, and "Montmartre," the recent predominant sensation of the French stage.

Announces New Film

 Cecil B. DeMille's next production following "The Affairs of Anatol!" will be "Laurels and the Lady," by Leonard Merrick, author of "Conrad in Quest of His Youth." It will be produced with an all-star cast quite as big as the one in "The Affairs of Anatol."

Paramount believes George Loane Tucker has surpassed "The Miracle Man" with "Ladies Must Live," which he is completing.

Other Pictures Coming

From Cosmopolitan Productions will come Marion Davies in "Joan & Co." by Frederick O' B. Bartlett; "Vendetta," by Marie Correlli; "The Young Diana," by the same author, and "Back Pay," by Fannie Hurst.

"Kismet" Going Great in England, Producers Aver

All England is said to be ringing with the praises of "Kismet," according to Robertson-Cole, producers and distributors of this picture which stars Otis Skinner and which has broken records in many American theatres where it has been shown.

Prints of "Kismet" were rushed to England soon after the American premiere. Sir William Jury, who controls the British rights in the picture, the afternoon of December 20 in London gave a showing to which were invited every English motion picture authority and a judgment of men regarded expert in field of motion picture exhibition. The Jesse production is declared to be remarkably appealing presentation of a subject having unusual timely interest.

LITTLE ROCK, ARK.—The new Royal theatre was opened to the public as result of the confidence, besides a number of the most prominent exhibitors in England.

Many Big Theatres To Show Kinograms

Five Principal Playhouses on Broadway to Have News Reel on Program

According to preliminary reports received by Educational Film Exchange, Inc., indications are that during the week of January 30, which will see the first publication of super-Kinograms, the news reel will be played by more first-run theatres than ever booked any one similar product. It will be issued twice weekly.

Booked by Circuits

Not only have the principal great chains of theatres which are using other Educational product asked for these pictures, but in practically every city they have been booked in competing houses. On Broadway it is promised that the news reelm will be seen in at least five principal theatres and an equal record will be set in other cities. An announcement from Educational says that the reports already received have caused them to raise their estimate for the first issue to double over the original estimates. However, the laboratory facilities are so extensive that a vast footage can be turned out daily.

Product Is Unusual

Reports from the field forces of Kinograms are said to convey other assurances of an unusual product. At the start the news reel will represent the work of several new producing companies and Gaumont Weekly, and thirty days later the force making a third weekly will be added. The three entire staffs will be maintained.

"What Women Will Do" and Arliss

Picture to Be Issued in February

The assignment of two productions from Associated Exhibitors, Inc., for publication in February directly attention to the Pathe feature schedule for that month as the most noteworthy presented by that company in some time. The pictures which Pathe will offer during this period are Will Deyo's "H.R. Secrist," and the Edward Jose special production, "What Women Will Do."

With its sensational achievements at the pre-release presentation at the Strand theatre, New York, "The Devil" is to be offered for general publication on February 6.

Success Is Overwhelming

While Broadway may not set the theoretical and motion picture standards for the rest of the country, it is a fact that the overwhelming success of "The Devil" there during the week of January 16 is a reliable index of what may be expected of the new offering from Associated Exhibitors when it is shown generally.

In the endeavor to select a worthy mate for the Arliss vehicle on the Pathe feature card for the month, an excellent opportunity was presented in the mystery melodrama, "The Devil," which is the product of Alfred Greenberg, Riley Hatch and Jane Jennings. The distribution date for this will be February 27.

Written by Logue

"What Women Will Do" is a melodramatic romance written by Charles A. Logue. Among the stars who have appeared in plays written by him are Ethel Barrymore, Pauline Frederick, Madge Kennedy, Emily Stevens, Geraldine Farrar, Mae Murray, Gloria Swanson, Emmy Wehlen, Doris Kenne and others.

From the angle of the box office "The Devil" has a worthy successor in "What Women Will Do," judged by a jury of men regarded expert in field of motion picture exhibition. The Jesse production is declared to be remarkably appealing presentation of a subject having unusual timely interest.
Mother’s Matinee Suggested by Selznick in Playing Gordon Film

Unique Prologue Is Also Detailed in Press Book
Issued by Production Company on “The Greatest Love”

Among the novel advertising and exploitation suggestions embodied in the exhibitors’ campaign book on the latest Select special production, “The Greatest Love,” starring Vera Gordon, the famous portrait of mother love, are two worthy of special mention. The exploitation ideas were originated by L. A. Young, a member of the Selznick publicity staff.

Sixteen pages of advertising and text matter suitable for publicity getting purposes are contained in the press book.

Hold Mother’s Matinee

Two special exploitation features are a “mother’s matinee,” that is calculated to make the exhibitor’s dullest day a winner, and a prologue that should present no obstacle to the average exhibitor. For the “mother’s matinee,” it is suggested that the exhibitor announce in newspaper advertising, etc., that he will mail a free ticket to every person who sends in the name of a mother with two children, the mother also to receive a free ticket. These tickets will entitle the bearers to the special “mother’s matinee.” This method is suggested primarily for the purpose of securing dollars’ worth of word of mouth advertising, and its results should be far reaching and very potent.

In outlining the prologue suggestion the exhibitor is advised to paint a large globe upon a transparency, the size to depend on the amount of room available. The continents, oceans, etc., should be duplicated according to geography. Before the screening of the picture the lights should be turned out, bringing upon a dimmer a small spot focused on the globe. A voice is heard singing a lullaby, very softly at first, then upon bringing up the lights in back of the transparency a mother is revealed singing a child to sleep. Towards the end of the song the child placed in the cradle and lights dimmed down again. “The Greatest Love” is then flashed on the screen. The entire effect may be worked in silhouette by painting the globe on plain white canvas and using only a strong light placed on ground in back and pointing directly towards audience.

Lon Chaney’s Next
Is “The Night Rose”

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

LOS ANGELES, Jan. 25.—Lon Chaney has been selected for the leading male role in “The Night Rose,” by Leroy Scott.

Mary Miles Minter’s Latest to Be Published Shortly by Reartalt

Final cutting and editing of “All Souls’ Eve” have been completed and Mary Miles Minter’s latest Reartalt picture is scheduled for early publication. Reartalt officials are enthusiastic in their praise of the picture, declaring it has the caliber of a big special, and containing the best work Miss Minter has ever done.

Based on the successful stage play of the same name by Anne Crawford Flexner, “All Souls’ Eve” develops the theme of a powerful love so strong that it transcends even death itself. The story concerns Nora O’Hallahan (Mary Miles Minter), an impressionable Irish girl who believes implicitly in the legend that on “All Souls’ Eve” the spirits of the departed may return for a brief communion with their loved ones.

Photography Is Unusual

The photography for “All Souls’ Eve” is declared to be decidedly unusual. Double, triple, and even quadruple exposures were taken in some of the scenes. This was made necessary by the fact that Miss Minter not only carries two roles, but that in one scene she appears as the spirit of Mrs. Heath.

Though these scenes are not of long duration they are important and require extremely careful camera work.

Miss Minter carries the role of Nora O’Hallahan and also plays the part of Mrs. Heath. In order to record scenes where both of these characters meet, talk with, and touch one another great skill was required to attain absolute naturalness.

In one of the scenes Nora and Mrs. Heath are together each with her arm about the other, both parts being played by Miss Minter. The picture is rich in local color, especially in the scenes in the little Irish town where Nora bids her friend good-bye. A strong cast is seen in support of Miss Minter. They are Jack Holt, Carmen Phillips, Clarence Geldart, Fanny Midgley and Lottie Williams.

In point of story, cast, direction, photography and general liveliness, “All Souls’ Eve” is regarded by Reartalt officials as belonging in the class of big special productions.

Alma Rubens Feature Has Wide Sale, Pioneer Says

First run bookings in practically every city of any size in the United States are being rapidly consummated for “Thoughtless Women,” Daniel Carson Giddings’ production for Alma Rubens, according to reports received at the home office of Pioneer Film Corporation. The bookings are continuing to come in daily and the various Pioneer branch managers report to the home office that “Thoughtless Women” is likely, according to present indications, to equal the best record for bookings set by any previous Pioneer issue.
THE TIME, THE PLACE AND THE GIRL

Margaret Beecher, star of the Hemmer production, "Sunshine Harbor," and Ralph Barry Harold, appearing in her support.

Miscellaneous Single Reel Scenics Will Be Distributed by Educational

Emphasizing its specialization in short subjects, Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., is placing at the disposal of exhibitors during January and for the future a number of single-reel scenic and travel pictures which will be published under the heading of "Miscellaneous." The chief aim will be to afford variety as well as quality in the product, so that some single-reeler to fit every program will always be available.

Take Scenes in North

Because attention recently was directed to the Hudson Bay territory by the lost naval balloonists especial interest is being shown in the four single reels that constitute the Hudson Bay Travel series. These pictures were taken by an Educational camera expedition which had the assistance of the entire Hudson Bay organization.

Months were occupied in this trip and some 20,000 feet of film made, showing every activity of this great organization and every post owned by the company, even to those located where few whites have been. The first of this series is "A Tale of the Fur North," which shows intimately the life of the Eskimo from birth, through courtship and marriage to old age. It is said to be the first time that such a picture has been offered. The second of the series is "Hifles—and Go Seek" and shows trapping by Indians around various Hudson Bay posts.

Use Special Settings

Other pictures which are promised by Educational as notable single-reel offerings belong to the "World Wanderings" series. These were taken by a French photographer. The first of these pictures, "The Quaint Isle of Marken," is reported to have been shown at an unusually large number of houses, in many cases with special stage settings. "In Dutch," issued late in January, is said to offer unusually pleasing views in Holland and presenting opportunities for Dutch dances and special music.

Contributing further to the variety of these single reels are the pictures made by the New York state conservation commission. Few people probably know that this state has immense preserves and that its activities in the control and care of forests and game is greater than that of any other state in the nation. "Wilderness Friends," is the first of these pictures and others will follow at reasonable intervals.

Arsene Lupin" Star Will Be Producer of Thirty-eight Issues

Backed by Los Angeles private capital, Wedgewood Nowell will enter the field of production.

Nowell is at present being starred as "Arsene Lupin" in the Robertson-Cole feature, "S13."

Negotiations entered into between Nowell and Joseph Mencher, Jr., of Celebrated Authors Society of New York City and the Societe des Films Menchen of Paris have resulted in an agreement whereby eighteen Arsene Lupin stories by Maurice Leblanc and twenty "Raffles" stories by E. W. Hornung are made available to Nowell for production at a minimum guarantee of $50,000 for each story. Thirty-eight stories are involved.

It is the intention of the producing company to feature Wedgewood Nowell as Lupin, supported by casts of all-star calibre. There is nothing of the serial in the plan, each story being founded upon one of the novels, and although the character of Lupin appears in all the stories, the plot, circumstances and supporting characters vary with each story. Four super-specials a year are proposed.

Hodkinson Planning Novel Exploitation Service Bureau Will Aid the Exhibitor in Advertising "The Tiger's Coat"

The inauguration of the exhibitor service bureau in the W. W. Hodkinson organization is considered by the company to be a great step forward. The department is particularly inviting to the exhibitor who does not maintain a special publicity bureau and whose locale warrants concentrated publicity.

Obtain Free Space

A peculiar condition relative to exploitation exists in San Diego, Calif. G. A. Bush, president of Broadway Amusement Company there, reported to a representative of Dial Film Company's press bureau that he was having difficulties in getting free space. However, the Dial press department succeeded in putting over considerable free publicity in advance of "The Tiger's Coat," which production will be played first run by Mr. Bush.

It is evident that outsiders are able to get into the newspaper accounts of this in view the Hodkinson exhibitor service bureau is planning a novel exploitation campaign to be issued from the New York office a week previous to the opening date on "The Tiger's Coat."

Booked by Loew

"The Tiger's Coat" has been booked over the Loew circuit in New York and the Saenger circuit in the South. Mrs. Stedman and Lawson Butts are cast in the leading roles of the picture, which is an adaptation of Elizabeth Defeaux' novel of the same name. This is the Dial company's second production for Hodkinson and it will be followed shortly by T. Hayes Hunter's screen version of Irving Bacheller's "The Light in the Clearing."

C. B. C. to Distribute Single Reel Christies

Arrangements have been completed whereby C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation will distribute sixteen single-reel Christie comedies that were produced for David Horsely.

A special exploitation campaign is being prepared to put the pictures in a big way and Jack Cohn is personally attending to the re-editing of the pictures. Negotiations are pending for the sale of several territories. When cleared for distribution, these comedies will be issued within a few weeks.

"The Parish Priest" Will Have Independent Issue

Herman J. Garfield will launch his special production of the Dan Sully stage success, "The Parish Priest," through independent exchanges.

Among the exploitation aids which he will offer are four styles of one-sheets. Additional sketches have recently been submitted by Ritchey Lithograph Company, and the new posters, which will give the picture one of the largest editions of paper ever presented for one subject, are now running on the presses.

Ethel Clayton on Coast

Ethel Clayton is back at Hollywood and has started work at the Lasky studio in her new Paramount picture "Sham." Thomas Heffron is the director.
First National Franchise Holders Completing State Organizations

Enthusiastic Meetings in All Parts of the Country
Bringing Members in Close Contact—Local Advisory Committees Are Named

For several months Associated First National sub-franchise holders have been meeting in various parts of the United States to complete their state or district organizations. Everywhere the meetings have been enthusiastic and well attended.

The local organizations are now practically completed. Only a few meetings remain to be held.

EXHIBITORS HERALD here presents accounts of three recent organization meetings in Minneapolis, St. Louis and Newark. A picture of the dinner following the Minneapolis meeting will be found on page 30.

A PREDICTION that 100 per cent membership will be realized by February 1 was one of the enthusiastic declarations made at the recent meeting of the Associated First National sub-franchise holders of Minnesota, Wisconsin and South Dakota in Minneapolis recently.

J. F. Cubberly, manager of the Minneapolis First National exchange; William A. Steffes, president of the United Theatrical Protective League; Theodore Hayes of the Twin City Amusement Theatres, and several of the Associated exhibitors were among the speakers.

The following were elected members of the advisory committee: F. A. Rice, Rice, Majestic theatre, Beloit, Wis.; J. P. Adler, Adler theatre, Mankato, Wis.; Tom Foster, Star theatre, Stanley, Wis.; Louis Nahin, Rainbow theatre, Milwaukee, Wis.; Clyde Hitchcock, Princess theatre, Minneapolis; Minn.; V. B. Vallee, Criterion theatre, Albert Lea, Minn.; G. S. Latta, Fergus Pictures Corporation, Fergus Falls, Minn.; A. J. Kavanagh, New Grand theatre, Granger, N. D.; W. W. Clark, Grand theatre, Devils Lake, N. D.; J. A. Dundas, Strand theatre, Sioux Falls, S. D., and C. F. Hansen, Lyric theatre, Redfield, S. D.

Among those attending the meetings were:

Sub-Franchise Holders on Board of Directors

NEWARK, N. J.—Four sub-franchise holders of Associated First National Pictures of New Jersey were elected to the board of directors at the initial business meeting of the organization held in the Robert Trent Hotel.

Directors Are Named

The four include William C. Hunt, Haddon Heights; Irving Rose, Union Hill; Benjamin Nussbaum, Newark, and Henry Haring, Hackensack. The directorate is comprised of nine exhibitors. In addition to those already named are Jacob Fabian, president of the New Jersey organization; Philip Durand, Paterson; A. M. Fabian, Simon H. Glass and S. H. Fabian.

The exhibitors’ advisory committee, named follows: Morris Feldman of the Grand Palace, Newark; Alexander Oaten of the Cranford, Cranford; Benjamin Schindler of the Victoria, Camden; Hermon W. Austin of the Playhouse, Newark; Louis Belinger of the Summit, West Hoboken; Lewis Pior of the Leader, Gloucester; Mrs. Lilly Davis of the Park, Nutley; Philip Bornstein of the Criterion, Newark; F. A. Struve or the Arcade, Princeton; Adolph Bautz of the Croyland, West Hoboken, and A. B. Smith of the Fenwick, Salem.

Forty in Attendance

Approximately forty of the sub-franchise holders of the state attended the meeting. E. Bruce Johnson, legal advisor of Associated First National, represented the home office. In his talk he laid particular emphasis on the "Big Five Productions." Joseph Stern of Newark, chairman of legislative committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey, addressed the meeting. He was pledged cooperation of sub-franchise members in fighting all adverse legislation introduced into the state assembly.

Change in Harlan, Ky.

HARLAN, KY.—The Cumberland theatre has been purchased by Harlan Theatre Company. Members of the company are G. Wright, R. J. Bondurant, Dr. Sidcoe, J. Bacchetti and A. C. Jones. The work of remodeling the building has been started.

Buys Bethany Theater

BETHANY, MO.—The Elite theatre has been purchased by L. W. Maple of Ridgeway from Hanna & Cobb, and the former has taken possession.

"The Franchise" Is Real Service Paper

"The Franchise," edited by Lee S. Ferguson, which is the official medium of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., made its first appearance under date of January 15. It is to be issued semi-monthly.

It is carefully edited. Every page of the first issue has an appearance of reality. The stories are short and carry a punch. The sketches and half tones are well selected.

Everything in it is aimed to aid the franchise holders. It is a good idea, well executed—a credit to the organization and to its editor.
1,260 Exhibitors Sign Contracts With Stoll Company in One Month

During December, 1,260 exhibitors signed contracts with Stoll Film Corporation to show the pictures of the company on its one a week publication schedule for 1921. This information is contained in reports received at the main office, 130 West 46th street, New York City, by Ralph Proctor, general manager.

Many Sign for First
A few months ago the Stoll company introduced its pictures. From the very start, the idea of obtaining plays written by the best of British and Continental writers, acted by new and fresh stars, and filmed in the very places the action of the play called for, is believed by the company to have appealed to the American exhibitor on the watch for new blood.

The first publication, "Squandered Lives," brought hundreds to the branch offices, eager to sign up for the whole fifty-two publications for 1921, according to the company.

Then came "The Lure of Crooning Water," an interestingly pictured comparison of English stage life and rustic existence. In both these productions, Ivy Duke, the beautiful English actress, and Guy Newall, a wholesomely attractive and capable actor, were featured.

"Mr. Wu," the noted stage success, with Matheson Lang, its original star, and "The Hundredth Chance," from the novel by Ethel M. Dell, also were included in the initial publications.

Impression Is Favorable
The favorable impression created by the first picture, according to the testimony of many contract signers, was strengthened by the later productions, and further fortified by the enthusiasm with which the pictures were greeted by the public.

Included in the list of famous authors whose works will be shown on the screen are H. G. Wells, Baroness Orczy, E. Temple Thurston, Robert Richens, Jeffery Farnol, A. E. Mason, Rita and Rafael Sabatini.

Two Film Exchanges
In St. Louis Merge
F. J. Fegan Is President of Independent Which Buys the Standard

Standard Film Company of St. Louis, Mo., has been purchased by Independent Film Company, a $50,000 Missouri corporation. F. J. Fegan, president of the St. Louis Film Board of Trade, is executive head of Independent.

Two Others in Firm
Others in the company are J. E. Callahan, president of Continental Metal Weather Strip Company, and J. Ray Weinbrenner, attorney.

In addition to the present product of the two concerns, Independent will distribute "Isobel, or the Trail's End": Conway Tearle in "Whispering Devils"; Fannie Ward in "She Played and Paid," and Edith Taliaferro in "Keep to the Right."

May Open in K. C.
Independent offices will be at 3317 Olive street. Later, an office may be opened in Kansas City. It is expected that the company may buy for Missouri, Kansas and Southern Illinois.

Mr. Callahan is a newcomer to the film trade. Mr. Weinbrenner, however, has been counsel for the Film Board of Trade.

Corinne Griffith Is Working in Next Vitagraph Film "The Correspondent"

"The Correspondent," by Heliodore Tenno, has been selected as the next play for Corinne Griffith, Vitagraph star. Work has begun at the Brooklyn studio under the direction of Webster Campbell.

Percy Marmont has been engaged to play opposite the star. He has been her leading man in several photoplays.

Roycroft in Cast
The remainder of the cast includes Leslie Roycroft, George Howard, Charles Cook and Jane Jennings.

The outdoor scenes will be made at Saugerties, up the Hudson River from New York, where Miss Griffith made most of the scenes for "The Garter Girl."

As Clara Blake, "The Correspondent," Miss Griffith has a role splendidly suited to her talents and beauty. She is employed as confidential secretary by Anthony Blake, a power in railroad circles, and is secretly in love with him. Blake, however, is in love with his wife, who does not deserve his devotion. So great is his love that he decides to give his wife a divorce in order that she may marry another man by his testament.

Plan Is a Failure
Blake makes a plain business proposal to his secretary to go with him to a farm he owns. To the world they will be a happy couple living in privacy, but they live separately at the farm. Clara accepts, but does not cash the checks she gives her. The plan is a failure. Mrs. Blake refuses to obtain a divorce, but they do not become reconciled. Clara acknowledged her love for Blake and then goes away. After a year's search, during which his wife dies, Blake finds Clara and there is the happy ending.

Stoll President Returns
From English Conference

George King, president of Stoll Film Corporation of America, has returned to New York after a stay of more than a month in England. He brought back with him his family. They will be established at Bay Side, Long Island.

Following the successful debut of the Stoll motion pictures here, King stated on his return that more definite plans for the erection of a Stoll studio in America were promulgated, details of which he brought back with him. It is proposed to make the Stoll an international organization. Sites for the studio are being considered.

DIGEST of PICTURES of the WEEK

"THE KID," First National's special feature with the inimitable Charlie Chaplin, in the stellar role, which was reviewed in this magazine three weeks ago, has surpassed the most sanguine expectations of the Chicago exhibitors who booked it for a four weeks' run at the Randolph theatre. The first week's receipts indicate that Chaplin is still the screen's most popular comedian and the crowds standing in line from early morn till late at night seeking admission attest it.

"A CONNECTICUT YANKEE IN KING ARTHUR'S COURT" (Fox) based on one of Mark Twain's best known stories, presented as an eight-reel special, is the work of director Emmett J. Flynn. Roy Somerville and Bernard McConville prepared the scenario. This trio has turned out a screen play of unusual merit and one that warrants extra exploitation.

"GUILE OF WOMEN" (Goldwyn) offers Will Rogers as a Swedish sailor in a number of mix-ups with the fair sex. Brimful of comedy and the usual inimitable Rogers touches. Peter Clark MacFarlane directed it. Much of the humor is contained in the clever subtitles, which are in Swedish dialect.

"PAYING THE PIPER" (Paramount) deals with the vagaries of the smart set. based on the theory that one cannot play without paying the piper. A lavish production presented with the usual George Fitzmaurice care for details. A splendid audience picture.

"PRISONERS OF LOVE" (Goldwyn), is a picturization of a problem story, so delicately handled and artistically presented it will find a place in any theatre. It is the first of the Betty Compson productions and justifies the formation of her independent company.

"THE OFFSHORE PIRATE" (Metro) a moderately pleasing offering based on F. Scott Fitzgerald's Saturday Evening Post story. Viola Dana capers through the simple and obvious plot and adds her bit to its general excellence.

"OUTSIDE THE LAW" (Universal) is a crook drama of unusual merit, full of suspense and continuous action. Tod Browning wrote and directed it and made a very good job of both. Priscilla Dean does the best work of her career as "Silk Moll" in league with a band of thieves, and is ably assisted by Lon Chaney and Wheeler Oakman.

"RICH GIRL, POOR GIRL" (Universal) presents Gladys Walton in a dual role. A pleasing picture, while not distinctive, should prove entertaining because of star's winsomeness and story's romantic trend.

"THE DUKE OF CHIMNEY BUTTE" (Federated) with Fred Stone, the famous stage comedian, is a story of the West presented with backgrounds that by their very scope and beauty cause one to become imbued with the wondrous balmy climate, romance and adventure of the cattle raising country. Frank Borzage directed and made a good job of it.

"FORBIDDEN FRUIT" (Paramount) thoroughly satisfies expectations based upon former productions directed by Cecil B. DeMille. The elaborate style of the director obtains throughout. Rich settings predominate. The picture has all the dramatic properties of "Why Change Your Wife?" plus a melodramatic climax superior to anything achieved in former publications. (Complete review on page 42.)

"DIAMONDS ADRIFT" (Vitagraph) is a very meritorious feature offering entertainment and interest that will more than satisfy. An excellent family picture of superior production and cleverly developed plot. Charming backgrounds including many Mexican scenes. Star and others of the cast very good.

"THE CHICKEN IN THE CASE" (Selznick) is one of the best comedy-dramas that has been brought to the screen in months. Owen Moore starred, but was equalled in skill and opportunities for good work by Vivian Ogden as an elderly aunt. A tangle in romance with an inoffensive bedroom scene the fun climax. An especially good picture.

"THE EDUCATION OF ELIZABETH" (Paramount) treats with painstaking care a plot unimpressive as regards originality. Billie Burke is competent in a role placing no great burden upon her ability. Adequate production and Paramount photography adds a certain charm. The whole is refined comedy of acceptable quality.

"ALL SOUL'S EVE" (Realart) offers Mary Miles Minter in dual role—that of matron and maid, blonde and brunette. A feature raising the question of the return of the dead to the living, presented with natural and human development and much appeal. Jack Holt plays opposite the star.

"THE SNOB" (Realart) with Wanda Hawley, gives her the best-played role of her career to date. It is a college comedy—quick-moving, simple and clear cut, delightful in every way. Should go big in college towns, and will be highly satisfactory and entertaining to the better class patronage.

"THE DEVIL" (Associated Exhibitors) is an artistic picturization of the successful stage play with George Arliss in the principal role, the one he created upon the stage. The picture is presented with good taste and director James Young has made the most of the play's dramatic situations.

"TIGER TRUE" (Universal) with Frank Mayo in the role of an athletic young man who falls in love with a girl of the slums and after whipping two thugs wins the girl. A colorful story of New York's underworld, very well acted and deserving of the highest praise in direction and staging.
PRISCILLA DEAN IN OUTSIDE THE LAW
(UNIVERSAL)

A crook melodrama par excellence, with every element of popular success. Embodies rapid dramatic action, well developed suspense and considerable heart interest. Production first rate. Picture should be a big box office winner.

As author and director Tod Browning has done an uncommonly fine piece of work with “outside the Law.” The picture, a crook melodrama, is one of the best, if not the best of its kind that has come to the silver sheet in many a month.

Then in one interesting incident after another, “Silky Moll” agrees to turn a trick with “Black Mike” and “Dapper Bill.” It is a frame-up to railroad “Moll,” and “Dapper Bill” tells “Moll” the true state of affairs. With Bill she turns the tables on “Black Mike” and the waiting police. Taking with them the stolen jewels they become self-sentenced prisoners in an apartment on Knob Hill.

The heart interest is introduced here in the shape of a boy of about four, played by one of the cleverest juvenile actors seen on the screen in many a day. The feel of the little fellow’s arms around his neck softens “Bill” and he wants to return the stolen stuff and start over again with “Moll” as his wife. But the girl, unable to forget the law’s injustice in the case of her father, refuses to relent.

Suspense is sustained through the efforts of the police and of “Black Bill” to find the hiding pair. Meanwhile the boy from across the hall continues to visit the pair until one day “Moll” softens up and Bill. She agrees to his suggestion that they reform.

But Bill, seeking a breath of air, is spied by one of “Blackie’s” henchmen, and when the pair are ready to leave to return the stolen jewels they find themselves face to face with their old enemy. From then on the fight is to keep the jewels from “Blackie,” resulting in fast moving dramatic action, which culminates in one of the most spectacular free-for-all battles ever staged, with its great groups of participants.

The story has been logically developed and holds all the way, although there is a slight sag in the middle. It runs with exceptional smoothness except for two or three jerky spots which are confusing for the moment. But these slips cause no great harm. The titling is excellent, and the production is atmospheric to a praiseworthy degree.

The picture is not wholly Miss Dean’s. She shares honors about equally with Wheeler Oakman and Lon Chaney. Each gives a fine performance. In fact, every role is well done.

“Outside the Law” is a melodrama that should please mightily and draw tremendously.

SUNSHINE PLAYERS IN
(FOX)

Here is a comedy that has some of the Wittiest titles that the screen has seen in many a day. They drew more frequent and heartier laughs at times than did the action when the reviewer saw the film at the Rose theatre, Chicago. They are rarely good. The humor purveyed is of the really cleverly comical sort. It savors of the slapstick, but is done in more much acceptable a way than that in which this is ordinarily offered. Al St. John is the leading member of the cast. He does wire walking and there is a dance duet that will score a sound hit. Action within a Chinese den affords some of the best scenes. The comedy is exceptionally worth while.

Priscilla Dean, the Universal-Jewel star, who gives one of the most vivid performances of her screen career in the new Universal production, “Outside the Law.”
WILL ROGERS IN

GUILE OF WOMEN
(GOLDwyn)

A comedy drama with the accent on the comedy, showing the homely star as a Swedish sailor whose faith in women leads him into numerous difficulties. An entertaining offering but not the best picture Rogers has ever made. Directed by Peter Clark MacFarlane.

In "Guile of Women," Will Rogers portrays a Swedish sailor who is decidedly unfortunate in his experiences with the fair sex. Rogers portrays the role with a delightful simplicity and the same self-conscious foolishness which is one of his distinctive attributes. The titles for the most part are rather clever, many of them being done in exquisitely funny Swedish dialect. There are two exciting fights in the story in both of which Rogers is shown as a rough and tumble scraper of no little ability. The cast is above the ordinary with Mary Warren, former Triangle star, being the only feminine role. Others of prominence are Bert Sprote, Lionel Belmore, Charles A. Skold, Nick Cogley, John Lince and Jane Starr.

"Yal" Maarten declares he is through with women when the girl he left behind in Sweden fails to appear with the $1,000 he sent her, but his resolution fails when his ship hits another port. An American girl with alluring eyes, who apparently held Swedish sailors as her favorite sweethearts, touches his heart once again and incidentally his pocket-book. He swears off another of the fair sex until finally he meets his old sweetheart Hulda, to whom he had sent the money and finds she has come to America upon her own savings, having failed to receive his remittance. Hulda has become the favorite ward of a Captain Larsen and is in line to inherit his estate at his death. Armstrong, the captain's secretary, knows this to be the case and wants to marry her himself. So far as "Yal" is concerned, Hulda is simply a ward in Captain Larsen's house. She agrees to marry him when he has prepared a little home for her, but she will not give up his position. Captain Larsen dies, but Hulda remains. The night of the wedding, Yal is shanghaied, but manages to escape. Armstrong is suspected of hatching the plot. Yal and his partner Skole go to the Larsen home to find out what position Hulda occupies. They find her there at Captain Larsen's old desk in the office of the steamship line. Hulda then explains to "Yal" that she wanted him to work and get ahead so that he would be able to take the presidency, as it is too big a job for her. Yal sees Hulda really needs him. Armstrong is the actual organizer and both Yal and Skole have their faith in women restored.

Lloyd Hamilton, advancing rapidly in popularity since his appearance in pictures bearing the Mermaid trade mark, surpasses in "April Fool," his performance in "Duck Inn," a comedy which received voluminous comment throughout the trade. The newer publication has many points of superiority over the other.

The early part of the action presents Hamilton in a "boob" role in which he is the victim of jokes from which the picture takes its title. At least one of these, a variation of the unique pocket-book joke, is good for two or three minutes of continuous laughter.

A little later the characters embark upon an ocean voyage and the captain and crew burlesque the stereotyped mutiny at sea plot with telling effect. Hamilton is called away getting his full share of attention.

There are several laughs in the footage and a nicety of direction which contributes much to the effectiveness of the whole. The explosion finish is the only trite note.

FRANK MAYO IN

(UNIVERSAL)

A thrilling, interesting tale of the underworld adapted from the story "Tiger" by Max Brand. Effective directing by J. P. McGowan. Star at his best.

The likable Frank Mayo proves his right to the title "Fighting Frank" in "Tiger True." There are several of the most furious, realistic fist battles in this fine real feature ever filmed. It is a dramatic story of New York's lower East Side where denizens of the underworld right their wrongs and settle their differences with their fists. The action is swift and sure from the start and Director McGowan's long experience at staging "thrillers" in serial form is equally effective in the feature-length photodrama.

The story quickly shifts from a beautiful Fifth Avenue home where the hero, Jack Lodge, lives, to New York's toughest neighborhood. Jack spends his idle moments hunting wild beasts in Africa, and on the eve of his departure for big game he stumblest upon adventure in "Tangier's" most grimly distasteful district. It is known. He dons rough clothing and with his chauffeur takes up his abode in a rooming house; after making the acquaintance of a bewitching girl who conducts a cafe. He whips the bully of the place, falls in love with the maiden and finds himself the victim of a trap. The story is imbued with the romance and the comedy of the Orient, and Mayo must overcome his weakness for a goal, and learns the innermost secrets of those who visit him while he impersonates a paralytic soothsayer. Lodge exposes him, however, drives him from the country and wins the girl.

Mayo has one of the strongest roles of his career in "Tiger True," and with excellent support at the hands of Frizzi Brunette, as Mary Dover, and Walter Long as "The Balloon," he puts the story over in an interesting manner.

EARLE WILLIAMS IN

DIAMONDS ADRIFT
(VITAGRAPH)

Comedy-drama with a strong thread of romance and an exciting mystery trend, with a stunning black Persian cat both the center of the mystery and acting as Cupid, comes to the screen herewith in a refreshingly different feature. Earle Williams and his supporting cast bring excellent work to it, but the novelty of theme and the direct, clear-cut manner of presentation and the liveliness of action are the strongest points to recommend it. It is above the average as a picture for the family and it has advertising value in the suggestions that the cat's part in the story and the Mexican and steamer settings afford. Backgrounds are choice and photography and lighting are artistically employed. Interest will be held from start to finish while the patron is completely entertained. It will please youngsters as well as adults, and the same bewitching curly-headed baby who plays in "The Woman in His House," has an important part in the cast and plays winningly.

Beatrice Burnham is pretty and skillful as the leading feminine player, Con-suela. Others of the cast are Herbert Hebert, Lenore Lynard, Jack Rollins.
Jack Carlisle, Melbourne McDowell, Otis Harlan and George Field.

The star plays the part of Bob Bel-lander, who is promised a partnership in his father's business when he repays an overdraft of $5,000 on his allowance. Sent to Mexico as one of the crew on a steamer owned by the father's company, two opportunities to obtain the needed sum present themselves: a wagering of a $50,000 diamond necklace that is around the neck of a Persian cat which has been found and kept by a member of the crew on the voyage, the other in the capture of a Mexican lawbreaker who is also Bob's rival for the hand of Consuelo. Against odds Bob at length acquires all that the girl, the cat and the desperado—then adds the reward of his father's favor and the business partnership.

SPECIAL CAST IN [PAYING THE PIPER]
(PARAMOUNT)

A typical George Fitzmaurice production but of better texture than recent pictures from the same director. Deals with the vagaries of the smart set, with story based on the idea that one cannot play without paying the piper. Bizarre and lavish production and generally good handling of conventional story makes offering a good audience picture.

After viewing the recent pictures made by the George Fitzmaurice-Ouida Bergere combination, one looks for something bizarre in their latest effort, "Paying the Piper," and he is not disappointed. "Paying the Piper" promulgates the idea that the piper must be paid for his playing. The characters who learn this lesson are all members of the smart set and the most extraordinary people. Vividly descriptive titles tell us that the heroine, for instance, knows of more of New York than the police commissioner. Others do the most unconventional things. They play with fire, figuratively speaking, and they will have their fun, but with no thought of paying until the trouble that happens is not to be had through artificial stimulant but through love.

Though the characters are unusual people, the story follows a conventional course. Being the precocious offspring of immensely wealthy leaders in the smart set, the heroine resolves at such an early age as four or five years that when they grow up they will cut a few capers themselves. And they keep their resolutions. The heroine becomes engaged to the hero, but since she holds the philosophy that there are only two ways to solve without marriage engagement and the divorce—she looks for outside amusement even before the wedding. And the hero does likewise. Thus, the two thrust themselves into the lives of a hard-working pair, a girl of the stage and a man of business. The heroine plays with the man of business, while the hero deceives the actress. Though they play with fire, they escape a serious set. They are not until after the sources of income are swept away and they come in contact with life in the raw that they learn their lessons.

It is the people in it rather than the story itself that lay claim to the bulk of the interest, and with the lavish production of director Fitzmaurice and some good acting by Dorothy Dickson, Rod LaRoque, George Fawcett, Alma Tell and Robert Schable, the picture holds considerable audience appeal.

Scene from "Paying the Piper," a George Fitzmaurice production with Dorothy Dickson, Alma Tell, George Fawcett and Rodney LaRoque in the cast. (Paramount).

SPECIAL CAST IN
[A CONNECTICUT YANKEE IN KING ARTHUR'S COURT]
(FOX SPECIAL)

A satirical comedy drama in approximately eight reels. Produced by Emmett J. Flynn, with one of the best known stories of America's favorite humorist as a foundation for the photoplay.

Mark Twain's story tells the fortunes of a Yankee who is supposed to be transported from the present day to the realms of King Arthur of Britain in the year 520. It was directed by Emmett J. Flynn from a scenario by Roy Somerville and Bernard McConville. Harry Myers, Rosemary Theby and Louise Lovel have the principal roles.

This is one of the most exquisite pieces of screen satire yet to be flashed on the silver screen. It should have universal appeal for all classes of audiences, young and old, rural or metropolitan. The exhibitor should have no difficulty in selling this picture to his patrons because of the fact that it is one of Twain's best known stories and is literally saturated with laughs.

Because of the fear of the average patron of costume plays, it is well in your advertising to make your largest display lines "Mark Twain's Connecticut Yankee," placing the "In King Arthur's Court" in a smaller type, for "King Arthur" and "Court" suggest costumes and royalty and might drive away patronage.

Harry Myers, who is seen in the title role, does an exceptionally good piece of acting. The Yankee is transported from the present day to King Arthur's court in the sixth century. The laughs are furthered when it is shown how his Yankee ingenuity transforms the ancient castle into a hive of industry by the installation of modern methods, including telephone, machine shops, time clocks, and the building of a Ford automobile out of discarded suits of armor. All these things give him an ace-high rating with the King. The Yankee is instrumental in saving a lady-in-waiting to his Majesty from torture and death, and wins her for himself and destroys the castle of a "bad" queen in a neighboring domain. Of course, he wakes up to find he has been dreaming and the play is brought back to modernism when awakened to the realization that he loves Betty, his mother's secretary, and he elopes with her.

The scenario writers are to be congratulated on the manner in which the story has been modernized by introducing Fords and motor-cycles which had not been seen the light of day when Mark Twain wrote his famous masterpiece. Pauline Stark has an appealing role as Betty and also in the historic sequence. Rosemary Theby is seen to advantage also. Charles Clary portrays a dignified King Arthur. William Mong as Merlin, wicked magician, gives a worthwhile characterization, full of subtlety and humor and George Siegman in a heavy role gives an excellent account of himself. The titles by Tom Miranda are all that can be desired.
GLADYS WALTON IN RICH GIRL, POOR GIRL
(UNIVERSAL)

Viewed as a program picture this latest Gladys Walton offering of a rich girl who trades places with a poor girl is fairly distinctive, a moderately pleasing little bit of romantic entertainment.

"Rich Girl, Poor Girl," isn't a big picture nor is it distinctive in any way, but as it is based on a romantic story that still has a fair measure of appeal, despite its frequent use, this Gladys Walton offering should provide a fairly entertaining program where program features are the rule.

The story is that of the pleasure limited rich girl and the free but abused poor girl. The two look so much alike that they can change places, which they do because the rich girl wants freedom and the poor girl covets the chance to revel in luxury for even only a brief hour. But the brute father of the poor girl, learning the change in places, bundles off the rich girl and holds her for ransom. Meanwhile the poor girl is having a time of it at the wealthy home. Her table manners are such that the young suitor of the rich girl recognizes the switch in identities. He draws the poor girl, now clad in silks, aside, and learns the truth. And as the rich girl is long overdue in her return the two set out to find her. The clue to the girl's whereabouts is run down and then ensues a fight with the captors and the rich girl's rescue follows. Added footage shows the rich girl giving an impromptu party to the rich Alley, and in her home and the poor girl being adopted into the rich family.

The outcome is always obvious but the story holds interest because of its whimsicality. It is short on vital incident for a length of five reels and some footage is therefore given over to Miss Walton to caper about. She has an agreeable personality and with it touches up the picture a bit. Her characterization of the poor girl is a trifle overdrawn while that of the rich girl might have had more vitality. Antrim Short, though, in a negative manner, but leaves her as a Miss MacGregor is Terry McChane, the brutal father, and Harold Austin the young suitor. The direction is in accordance with conventions.

But taken for what it really is, "Rich Girl, Poor Girl," is a pleasing little bit of romantic entertainment.

BETTY COMSON IN PRISONERS OF LOVE
(GOLDWYN)

A picturization of a problem story, so delicately handled and artistically enacted and directed that it is of absorbing interest. Offering should find wide, popular favor and prove an excellent box office attraction.

After her successful appearance in "Miss Monday," Betty Comson formed her own company to produce pictures representing a sincere effort to achieve an ideal. The first production to come from her company is "Prisoners of Love." The picture justifies the formation of her company.

"Prisoners of Love" might be called a problem picture. In less capable hands, the story of the deceived heroine might have fallen into the average picture class. But Miss Comson and her associates, with Arthur Rosson directing, have handled it with such good taste and with such a keen sense of artistry that the picture is absorbingly interesting.

It is the story of a girl in whom there is the conflict of the material with the spiritual. Discovering that her father is unfaithful after he has betrothed her for a seeming indiscretion, she drops his name and gives up his protection. In San Francisco, she falls in love with the junior partner of the firm by which she is employed. This partner, a likeable sort of a fellow but a butterfly withal, promises marriage, but leaves her to attach himself to a New York financier and his daughter, hoping thereby to advance his own interests. He promises to send for the girl but does not do so. Meanwhile, the girl receives daily telegrams saying that the wedding is a day nearer. The messages are really sent by the firm's senior partner, who is also in love with the girl. To the senior partner it finally becomes a duty to tell the girl presented with amplifications, two couples being included in the plot and numerous characters of lesser importance but essential to the story.

Bobby Vernon and Helen Darling are given what may be termed the stars' parts, but Harry James, playing the lens only as long as developments warrant.

A social event involving a large cast of extras and a great deal of activity is the central scene of action. Complications typical of the Christic outcome ensue upon an inscrutable personality which confuses a stern parent as to the matrimonial preferences of the four young people concerned. Before the explanation is cleared up, a sort of a story is drawn to a close considerably more than the amount of humor expected of the two reel comedy is probable.

The comedy is good. And the title should not be neglected in exploitation.

WANDA HAWLEY IN
(REALART)

A clean, sweet, Simon-pure love story of youth and campus days. Wanda Hawley never better nor prettier. Excellent support. The story of a wealthy young woman reluc to despise all but wealth and social prestige. An exceptionally good picture, particularly for high class patronage. Directed by Sam Wood.

Wanda Hawley at her best in an appealing, fresh comedy of college days. The star is one of the best liked of the ingenue in screendom and she has earned her popularity by excellent forerunners of this vehicle. While it will score 100 per cent with college audiences, it is certain to be enthusiastically approved by the high-grade patronage everywhere. Mothers and fathers, cranks and critics will acclaim it for the lesson it so effectively teaches.

The scenes are laid in a college colony of California. They include shots of the football game between Stanford University and the University of Southern California, which will interest fans of that game. Action in the picture takes impetus from the outset and speeds along an agreeable gait.

The story is simple and clear cut. There are pretty-gowned girls at a college hop, good-looking youths about the training table in a college "hush house," and the cast that gives support is all that could be desired. It includes William Lawrence, Edwin Stevens, Sylvia Ashton, Julia Faye, Walter Hier and Josephine Crowell. Walter Hier is another favorite and gives notable performances such as Harry James.

The footage suggests exploitation stunt in the use of school or college colors, pennants, football players and tie-ups with educational institutions in advertising.

Wanda Hawley has the part of Kathryn Hawley, brought on by an ambitious mother to be unceremoniously snobbish. Visiting a school friend, Betty Welland, on the college campus, she arrives by way of the hop, she "gets in bad" with her disapproval of an attentive swain, captain of the team, because he is working his way for university. She ignores college, but she accuses the narrowness of her vision and her real love for the last, and all ends with a wedding and with downtrodden papa asserting his rights for the first time in his married life.

WEDDING BLUES
(EDUCATIONAL)

The Christie elopement plot has been demonstrated true fire. In innumerable comedies from this quarter the fundamental popularity of the subject has scored. In the current production it is
THE EDUCATION OF ELIZABETH

(PARAMOUNT)

Refined comedy of moderate appeal. Well bred humor superimposed upon familiar plot structure. Adequately produced and carefully directed. Depicts chorus girl's rejuvenation of an "oldest family" without resort to common practice. Contains scenes actually photographed at Ziegfeld's "Midnight Frolic." Loss of value of good early impression as latter reels descend to obvious. Good family picture.

Billie Burke, featured by special arrangement with Florenz Ziegfeld, Jr., moves confidently through the scenes of "The Education of Elizabeth," an orderly production utilizing fresh methods in working out a plot of familiar design. Donald Cameron and Lupusden Hale have supporting roles.

The picture opens entertainingly with the introduction of the chief characters, two chorus girls and the members of an "oldest family," moving quickly thereafter into a sequence involving scenes staged at Ziegfeld's "Midnight Frolic." The material here employed is presented in excellent taste and promises for the latter reels much that is not forthcoming. After the first reel the action is perceptibly retarded, incidents at the same time take on a familiar form, with the result that no great appeal is experienced after it is made clear that the chorus girl, introduced into a sedate, aristocratic household by the eldest son, is to work a reformation therein.

As Betty Banks, chorus girl, Billie Burke is satisfactory. She is admired by the eldest son of an old-fashioned family, who takes her into his home when her show is suddenly "closed." Though she first shocks the Edwardian family by her sartorial and younger brother, her personality and preoccupations effect eventual enlightenment, shod a reformation which brings the three refuses involved to a desirable culmination.

BILLIE BURKE IN

EXHIBITORS HERALD

February 5, 1921

THE DEVIL

(ASSOCIATED EXHIBITORS)

An artistic picturization of the stage success, with George Arliss making his screen debut in the role he created on the stage. Picture of moderate dramatic strength is dominated by star's artistry. James Young directed with a capable hand.

In making its picturization of the stage success that literally swept the country a few years ago, Associated Exhibitors, Inc., scored a ten-strike in obtaining the services of George Arliss to portray the role he created on the legitimate stage. Though this picture marks his debut as a film star, Mr. Arliss' performance never betrays this fact. In truth, his delineation of the sinister Dr. Muller is such that he dominates the picture. In a single sweep he has caught the demands of the camera and thus imparted to the screen a characterization that shines with artistic brilliancy.

Picturizing stage successes of the type of "The Devil," which are dependent largely for success upon scintillating dialogue, presents its difficulties, and while the producers in this instance have worked well, the obstacles before them were a little too great to be entirely overcome.

The insidious whisperings and movements of Dr. Muller sometimes do not quite reach the required dramatic strength as vital motion picture incident. They furthermore do not altogether help the interests of a variety of action. Yet with Mr. Arliss on the scene this sort of mental movement holds one's interest.

The production is appropriately luxurious and in good taste. The setting for the bal masque is of impressive size and quality. Director James Young has done a finished and orderly piece of work.

Sylvia Breamer gives a first-rate performance of Mimi, the artist's model, whose love affair with Paul Devaux, the artist, is disrupted through the Devil's whisperings. Edmund Lowe plays the artist. Lucy Cotton appears as Marie and Roland Bottomley portrays Georges Roben, the young couple who also feel the effect of the Devil's machinations to prove that Evil can overcome Truth.

GEORGE ARLISS IN

THE CHICKEN

IN THE CASE

(SELZNICK)

Comedy-drama hits the bull's-eye squarely in the center. Certain to be one of the biggest comedy successes of months. A "scream" from beginning to end that will "take down the house" wherever high-grade comedy is appreciated. A domestic scene with a delightfully handled "bedroom" farce plot. Directed and written by Victor Heerman.

A comedy-drama that begins with spirited action, proceeds in lively trend to a rousing climax of fun and ends with a final fun sally radically different from the usual. It supplies one of the best bits of high-kicking fun issued in a long while. Indeed, it proceeds to give "Two in Beds"—that peer of bedroom farces—a brisk run for its money, for it will doubtless be even better liked than that feature for the fact that there are scenes leading up to and away from the boudoir climax that are fresh and novel in their setting and situation. Small town and rural patrons will chuckle over the troubles of the trio of city folks on their week-end country visit, and the extremely clever way with which the plot is turned and twisted to defy a suspicion as to what is coming next, for the better part of the time.

The picture is one of the best fun vehicles of the moment and is attractively set and capitaliy played. The exhibitor failing to book it is passing up something good. The title suggests exploitation that should accomplish much of box office value.

Owen Moore, who gives an excellent impersonation of Steve Perkins, is endowed in the picture with a cautious Aunt Sarah who has refused him his share in her dead husband's estate until he announces his marriage. The girl is introduced to the aunt as his wife. Winifred Jones, is really the bride of Steve's chum, Percival, upon whom Auntie looks with the cold eye of disapproval. A second girl enters the complication when the young people go to the country for the week-end, and Steve, chasing a roaming chicken, is literally led to the feet of Ruth Coleman, a charming neighbor. Auntie persists in superintending the affairs of the young people until they reach a hectic climax, but they are straightened out at last, and the proper combinations made and the fortune secured.

Vivian Osten shares honors with the star in this picture, playing with a vigorous vim and skill. Teddy Sampson as Winifred, Kathryn Kerr as Ruth and Edgar Nelson as Percival play important roles excellently. Titles are crisp and will draw many a hearty laugh.

Owen Moore and support in one of the many humorous scenes from "The Chicken in the Case" (Selznick).
FRED STONE IN THE DUKE OF CHIMNEY BUTTE
(FEDERATED FILM EXCHANGES)
Versatile Fred Stone, now playing to capacity houses on Broadway in "Tip Top," is presented in a Fred Stone Production, entitled "The Duke of Chimney Butte," story by G. W. Ogden, directed by Frank Borzage.

This is a story of the cattle-growing West, characterized by scenery that by its very scope and beauty causes one to believe it was transported to the wondrous South, with its balmy climate, romance and cow-punchers, petty feuds and gun play, and, at last, the happy ending. Those to whom things western hold a delightful charm—and their numbers are legion—will stamp this picture as a clean and vivid production, therefore a good box office attraction.

The story tends to drag at first, but about the middle of the picture it strikes its stride and gains interest and holds it to the end.

Director Borzage exercised commendable restraint from a wealth of scenery that blended most happily with the mood of the story. And Camera man Jack Mackenzie comes in for his share of the honors for the filming of such exteriors. There are long shots with men on horseback silhouetted against the horizon; a cloud scene of rare beauty; other shots that cater successfully to the eye. A treat for those enamored of country where physiques are hard and muscular and breathing a matter of sweet pleasure.

Fred Stone makes a picturesque cowboy typically when he has on his large, soft felt hat, and in sky blue. He's made a success, and few are given to display his versatility as an acrobat, a lariat thrower and a gun player. But he demonstrates his ability to ride a horse in true western style.

The cast is rather passive. Fred Stone cannot do as well as he can, but he always does a good job and a master of realistic dying.

The story has to do with a young chap riding aimlessly through the country on a bicycle, selling a crockery and gun play will do everything from opening a bottle to solving shoes. He meets an outlaw of cowhands and becomes one of them. He is proving that he can ride a horse with the best of them and kill a white-livered excuse of a man without any troublesome rebellion.

He races the Limited and beats it. A girl on the observation platform of the car throws a handkerchief and it is because of his determination to find that girl, with a view to marrying her, that he leaves the ranch and becomes a cowpuncher on another ranch in the next town. The girl of the observation car turns out to be a gun toting, sure shootin', woman who has the male mixed up with her husband's unfailing urge of ranch breakers. She pays the penalty, the man realizes his mistake, and marries the girl of the ranch.

MARY MILES MINTER IN ALL SOUL'S EVE
(REAL ART)
Mary Miles Minter in a dual role and a story that raises the question, is death the end of life? An artistically handled production with the exception of one scene. The star beautiful as an artist's Madonna model; the settings elegant and the cast doing good work. Directed by Chester Franklin.

The director is to be commended for putting Mary Miles Minter into a dual role in this feature. He has had her appear as contra-ting types—as a blonde and a brunette, matron and maid. It is in the latter personation, because it is the more natural, that she does the better work; but the film is mainly to the demands of the mother part and is extremely likable throughout the picture.

It is to be noted that Jack Holt, who plays opposite the star is made so delectable a figure for so many feet of film. The effect would have been greatly gained, it seems, had his misfortune not been so exaggerated. Another displeasing element is the scene wherein a larcenous pursuer, the vampire, sends her to death in the very heart of the melodrama and the one jarring note of the picture. There is compensation for these shortcomings in the fact that the picture has an intense heart appeal. It is staged in luxurious settings and on a beautiful estate, and little Micky Moore is captivating in the important part he has to play.

Mary Miles Minter plays both the part of Alice Heath, a young mother, and Mercedes, the widows meet a death at the instigation of a de-signing woman who covets her husband, and of Norah, the nursemaid of the Heath youngster. The meeting of Norah's death of the, the father (Jack Holt), an artist, loses his grip on life and art and becomes clay in the hands of the vampire. Ultimate, he marries the ungrateful Norah and see in her the spirit and looks of his dead wife, lead eventually to his marriage with her and the degradation of his self-respect and professional success.

VIOLA DANA IN OFFSHORE PIRATE
(METRO)
A picture without any high lights, but a moderately pleasing program offering of the sort that can be relied upon to give general satisfaction. "The Offshore Pirate," based on F. Scott Fitzgerald's Saturday Evening Post story, is what might be called a nice little picture. It is a light and frothy romantic story with a simple and obvious plot. But this plot is adorned with a number of typical Dana capers, some very funny, some romance, some comic, and some far be-coming invocations to the Goddess of Chance, which make the offering pleasantly palatable.

The story can be told in a few words. Ardisa Farnam considers men in the same class with doormats until a Russian saves her jewelry in a stage robbery. The Russian is an ex-boxer and with his ex-girl, a very nice lady, from this man, her uncle endeavors to have her meet the nephew of a friend of hers. Ardisa refuses to meet Toby Moreland. Then, while she is alone on the deck of her yacht, a youth who calls himself Curtis Carlyle makes his appearance in company with half a dozen colored huskies. He tells her he is a crook and wins her over by using cave man methods. In the end he is discovered not to be Curtis Carlyle but Toby Moreland.

There isn't enough material in the plot to make six reels, but with the touches the picture makes it wondrous and amuses moderately. Technically, it is nicely done. Viola Dana is vivacious as the girl and Jack Mulhall is pleasing as the prodigal crook. Edward Johnson and Edward Cecil are well cast in small parts.

TOM SANTCHI IN
(PATHE)
A two-reel western feature with the star playing the part of a gang leader in the underwold. He reforms under humane treatment in a sawmill colony and becomes a teacher. He assumes the name of a friend of the mill's superintendent when the former is lost in a wreck. Two companions who have followed into the new life from the old give him the necessary funds from the man who has befriended him. Suspicion rests upon Santchi, but he is able to prove his innocence and brought permanently into the affections of the family of the superintendent to a young widow and foster-father to a little girl. Some scenes are splendidly photographed and the romantic elements and romance of the film, set in beautiful and picturesque surroundings, distinguish this feature. A splendid short subject program.

THE DEATH TRAP
(PATHE)
Pleasing little drama of the West; full of spirited action.

Santchi, in the role of a stage driver, champions a lad led astray by a villainous renegade and made to take part in a gold robbery. As the driver the star is well represented and brought permanently into the affections of the family of the young beauty and the lad's confession of his attempt to do right exonerates him. The boy learns a lesson and brings the crook to book and the crook meets with his deserts; and the gallant hero finds a sweetheart in the lad's sister.

Will Represent Chaplin
J. R. Grainger, representative for Marshall, will act as representative for Charlie Chaplin with regards to contracts accepted for "The Kid," published through First National.

Open Gustine Sunshine
GUSTINE, TEx.—The new sunshine theatre was opened here recently.
Associated Producers

Homespun Folks, a Thomas H. Ince production.—From all angles I never have seen a picture yet made that I thought better to run. Satisfied 100 per cent.—E. Saunders, Palace theatre, Harvard, Ill.—General patronage.

The Last of the Mohicans, a Maurice Tourneur production.—This picture will get you money and please at the same time, but it is the only one of four I booked from this company that didn't make me a nickel.—Charles Dahler, Abingdon theatre, Abingdon, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Homespun Folks, a Thomas H. Ince production.—Very good picture.—R. C. Buxton, Strand theatre, Ransom, Kan.—Country town patronage.

The Forbidden Thing, an Allan Dwan production.—A real profit maker. Keep away from this thing.—Charles Dahler, Abingdon theatre, Abingdon, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

First National

Passion, with a special cast.—Marvelous production. Broke all house records. Characters perfectly cast. Simply a 100 per cent production.—Edward L. Hyman, Strand theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Dinty, a Marshall Neilan production.—Boys, here is a real special. Broke all house records on this. Please 100 per cent. The kind of a picture that they come back and ask for. Come back and say, "Some picture, we want more like it." Book it. Boost it, and watch results. It will stand all you can say for it. It is sure some traffic for the box office.—F. C. Burr & Son, Orpheum theatre, Lancaster, Wis.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Branded Woman, with Norma Talmadge.—Norma Talmadge, as in all her First National pictures, pleased in The Branded Woman. The combination of Talmadge and First National can't be beat.—Opera House, Greensboro, N. C.—Small town patronage.

A Splendid Hazard, with Henry B. Walthall.—Personally thought this a good picture, but does not seem to have any appeal to the public. Star has long since lost his drawing power.—W. H. Creal, Suburban theatre, Omaha, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

Good References, with Constance Talmadge.—Very light story and not much comedy. If it wasn't for Connie and her bathing suit it would fall flat.—O. R. Hans, Scenic theatre, Hastings, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

Twin Beds, with Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven.—An excellent attraction that proved a remarkable drawing card for three days. Kept our crowds laughing from title to the final close-up.—H. V. Friedrich, Majestic theatre, Sheboygan, Wis.—Downtown patronage.

Go and Get It, a Marshall Neilan production.—A first class for any house. This kind helps pay for some of the lemons we get.—W. H. Mart, Strand theatre, Grinnell, Ia.

THE KID, with Charles Chaplin.—Broke all records opening day by $700. Will smash records for first week by over $4,000. Booked for four weeks.—J. Linick & Schaefer, Randolph theatre, Chicago, Ill.—Downtown patronage.

A Daughter of Two Worlds, with Norma Talmadge.—Good. Drew well and pleased.—L. M. Kuhns, Gibson theatre, Gibson, N. M.—Mining camp patronage.

Nomads of the North, with a special cast.—One of the very best. One lady called up her husband and daughter after the first show and said, "Come right over and see this show. It's the best one I ever saw." First National are all good.—S. Olson, Pastime theatre, Delavan, Wis.—General Patronage.

The Branded Woman, with Norma Talmadge.—Not as good as usual Talmadge picture. Unnatural mother. Poor story for Norma.—Edwin Lake, Lake theatre, Baker, Mont.—Small town patronage.

Passions Playground, with Katherine MacDonald.—A very well acted play, especially work by star. She sure is beautiful.—O. R. Hans, Scenic theatre, Hastings, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

In Search of a Sinner, with Constance Talmadge.—Very good comedy.—L. M. Kuhns, Gibson theatre, Gibson, N. M.—Small town patronage.

Don't Ever Marry, a Marshall Neilan production.—Great. Book this and boost it big. Pleased 90 per cent. Biggest business second day than opening date.—T. N. Jones, Strand, Chicago, Ill.—Downtown patronage.

In the Heart of a Pool, an Allan Dwan production.—A very good picture that seems to please all the audience.—H. V. Friedrich, Majestic theatre, Sheboygan, Wis.—Downtown patronage.

The Inferior Sex, with Mildred Harris.—While this is a good picture, Old Dad to us was a far better one. This star we find will draw.—C. Hales Lyric, Orange City, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Greatest Question, a D. W. Griffith production.—Failed to please. Top price 30 cents.—Giacomo Bros., Crystal theatre, Tombstone, Ariz.—General patronage.

The River's End, a Marshall Neilan production.—A special that no exhibitor can pass up. Book now. Raise your admission and cash in.—Polk E. Moore, Portland theatre Co., Portland, Tenn.

Good References, with Constance Talmadge.—There is never an inquiry about full houses on Miss Talmadge's pictures. This one proved no exception. Satisfied everyone.—H. V. Friedrich, Majestic theatre, Sheboygan, Wis.—Downtown patronage.

Go and Get It, a Marshall Neilan production.—Great picture. Got 20 and 40 runs on this by running with The Lost City serial. Had full house. 100 per cent pleased.—R. C. Buxton, Strand theatre, Ransom, Kan.—Country town patronage.

The Notorious Miss Lise, with Katharine McDonald.—Not much to this one. Hardly average program. We barely get our money back on her pictures.—W. H. Mart, Strand theatre, Grinnell, Ia.

Go and Get It, a Marshall Neilan production.—This is an altogether different picture than was ever made before and will hold any audience better than any other attraction you have ever had. Bear advance admission? I'll say it will, but book it no less than two days. Name no good.—Charles Dahler, Abingdon theatre, Abingdon, I1l.—Neighborhood patronage.

The River's End, a Marshall Neilan production.—Great picture, as well as all Curwood stories. Full house. All pleased.—R. C. Buxton, Strand theatre, Ransom, Kan.—Neighborhood patronage.

Good References, with Constance Talmadge.—Constance will have to put on more steam. Consider last pictures pretty poor.—W. H. Mart, Strand theatre, Grinnell, Ia.

The Turning Point, with Katharine
Chester Withey, Norma Talmadge's director, together with the star, visited Folsom's art gallery on Fifth avenue, New York, to get a scene for a forthcoming First National production.

MacDonald.—Slow and draygy. Too much posing. Miss MacDonald is a beautiful lady, but it's too bad to use up 1,000 feet of film to prove it when 100 feet would have answered. Photography good, settings beautiful. Not much to the story. Didn't please.—J. C. Jenkins, Auditorium theatre, Neigh. Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

Human Desire, with Anita Stewart.—This is a dandy. Better than some so-called specials. Book it.—T. N. Magruder, Elite theatre, Iola, Kan.—General patronage.

The Romance of Tarzan, with Elmo Lincoln.—First part fine review of Tarzan of the Apes, balance of picture not as good to my notion. However, they seem to take fairly well.—A. B. Anderson, Pastime theatre, Stratford, S. D.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Hooldum, with Mary Pickford.—A picture that will bring them in. A production that will be long remembered by your patrons.—P. E. Moore, Portland theatre Co., Portland, Tenn.

'A Virtuous Vamp, with Constance Talmadge.—A good little comedy, which gave entire satisfaction. Drew well as do all Connie's pictures.—C. N. Bartow, Opera House, Medora, Ill.—Small town patronage.

Mary Regan, with Anita Stewart.—A real good show. One that pleased the people and made them speak highly of it. Direction in this feature fine. Anita Stewart and Frank Mayo filled the bill to a nicety.—H. J. Longaker, Howard theatre, Alexandria, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Hooldum, with Mary Pickford.—Pleased a big crowd. Not quite as good a drawing card as Daddy Long Legs. Good moral. Six reels.—A. J. Steggal, Opera House, Fayette, la.—College town patronage.

The Woman Grows, with Norma Talmadge.—Another splendid Norma Talmadge subject.—Raymond Gear, Mayflower theatre, Florence, Kan.

Sink or Swim, with George Walsh.—If you have this one booked go alter the crowd as it will please them all. Walsh is a favorite in this locality.—H. Wishard. Wishard theatre, Bloomfield, 1a.—Home patronage.

Forbidden Trails, with Buck Jones.—Give us more like this. One of the finest clears yet we have run lately. Book it if you want something to please a good crowd. No knock on it here. We would like it.—E. Stepp, Regent theatre, Pleasanton, Kans.—General patronage.

Goldwyn

The Man Who Had Everything, with Jack Pickford. A very satisfactory piece of entertainment.—H. V. Friedrich, Majestic theatre, Sheboygan, Wis.—Down-town patronage.

Almost a Husband, with Will Rogers. They have to give it to Bill for being the most human actor on the screen, and he always leaves a good feeling. Good picture, good crowd.—Jno. I. Saunders, Cheney theatre, Cheney, Kans.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Revenge of Tarzan, with a special cast.—Heals no kicks. Drew good. Am not critic on these Tarzan pictures. Never read any of the books.—W. H. Mart, Strand theatre, Grinnell, Ia.

Partners of the Night, with a special cast. Good picture. Group appeal that pleased a small crowd.—H. G. Stettmurd, Jr., Odeon theatre, Chandler, Okla.—General patronage.

The Strange Boarder, with Will Rogers.—It scores another one for Goldwyn.

WEBSTER CAMPBELL
Now directing Corinne Griffith, the Vitaphone star, in "The Correspondent."

Not as good as Jes' Call Me Jim, but good enough for any audience. Rogers has his best picture here, as well as Irene Rich and little Jimmie. It's an exceptional trio. Play this one.—J. C. Jenkins, Auditorium theatre, Neligh, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

IT'S A GREAT LIFE, with a special cast.—Pleased 100%. Ingenious, unique and original. Trenchant, terse and scholarly. Now we need adjectives in 15 degrees with a rising inflection. We need letters a foot high and a yard wide, and a few exclamations points about the size of a pyramid. But we won't go further. You'll be surprised.—B. F. Sharp, Tumble In theatre, Stinson, Tex.—Rural patronage.

Jes' Call Me Jim, with Will Rogers.—No better pictures made. Go to it. Book this one. You can't go wrong.—C. N. Jacobs, Kozy theatre, Chatsworth, Ill.—Small town patronage.

Madame X, with Pauline Frederick.—A remarkable picture. Held the interest of everyone from beginning to end. Business rather light during Christmas week.—H. V. Friedrich, Majestic theatre, Sheboygan, Wis.—Down-town patronage.

Jes' Call Me Jim, with Will Rogers.—I had many people say they liked it very much. It seemed to be the best Rogers subject run.—Raymond Gear, Mayflower theatre, Florence, Kans.—General patronage.

The Truth, with Magde Kennedy.—Pleased the Kennedy fans as usual. Held up good for two nights. A very clever comedy-drama picture they will enjoy.—Dr. F. M. Childs, Cozy theatre, Villisca, Ia.

Jes' Call Me Jim, with Will Rogers.—Rogers' pictures fine, but do not draw here for some unknown reason. Did extra advertising and raised admission 5 cents on this one. Fair crowd. Have had one of his pictures since then. Slightly more attendance.—H. G. Stettmurd, Jr., Odeon theatre, Chandler, Okla.—General patronage.

Partners of the Night, with a special cast.—A very pleasing program offering. Rather out of date, but gave good satisfaction. Very nice business two days.—Fred S. Meyer, Palace theatre, Hamilton, O.—Transient patronage.

Cupid the Cowpuncher, with Will Rogers.—Will Rogers always good, and this better than usual. Star not an exceptional drawing card, however.—W. H. Creal, Suburban theatre, Omaha, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

Stop Thief, with Tom Moore.—They liked this. Very fair production.—W. H. Mart, Strand theatre, Grinnell, la.

Cupid the Cowpuncher, with Will Rogers.—A 100 per cent picture in every way. Goldwyn productions all good, and we regret to have to give up the program.—C. T. Metcalfe, Opera House, Greenfield, Ill.—Small town patronage.

The City of Comrades, with Tom Moore.—A good program picture. Drew a good crowd. A good lesson in it, a man may be down but never out.—Jno. I. Saunders, Cheney theatre, Cheney, Kans.—Neighborhood patronage.

Sandy Burke of the U Bar U, with Louis Bennison.—I like Louis Bennison and my patrons are very loud in their praises for this star. His smile you can never forget. It's a smile that won't wear off, and a smile that brings in the money.—W. W. Stirleen, Alhambra theatre, Delta, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Slim Princess, with Mabel Normand.—Why do we have to play that kind of pictures when we know that it is killing the game? One-third of my patrons walked out on me.—Charles Dahler, Abingdon theatre, Abingdon, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Heartsease, with Tom Moore.—A good picture to a good crowd. Tom is a good drawing card for me.—Jno. I. Saunders, Cheney theatre, Cheney, Kans.—Neighborhood patronage.

A Perfect 36, with Mabel Normand.—Fair comedy-drama only. Without division. I'm a big fan of no good. I record 50 per cent.—R. O. Rhodes, Orpheum theatre, Converse, Ind.—Small town patronage.

The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come, with Jack Pickford.—To take my patrons' word for it, it was a wonderful picture. It snowed all day. Snowing and blowing when I started the show. I was demoted when I saw the seats full in such a storm. Second night held up in spite of bad roads and slippery streets. If you can't get them in on "The Little Shepherd," you're a dead one.—Dr. F. M. Childs, Liberty theatre, Villisca, la.

Upstairs, with Mabel Normand.—A fair comedy to a fair crowd. She does not draw for me.—Jno. I. Saunders, Cheney theatre, Cheney, Kans.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Slim Princess, with Mabel Normand.—About average. A better production than the one produced years ago with Bushman and Ruth Stonehouse.—W. H. Mart, Strand theatre, Grinnell, la.

The Girl from Outside, a Rex Beach production.—An excellent offering that pleased everybody. Regardless of whether Rex Beach means anything to your audiences, here's a picture that you mustn't overlook. It will please and come up to box office expectations.—Fred S. Meyer, Palace theatre, Hamilton, O.—Transient patronage.

Water, Water Everywhere, with Will Rogers.—Very good picture. Well liked.—C. S. Ford, Princess theatre, Reinbeck, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

Flame of the Desert, with Geraldine Farrar.—An excellent picture that would go big with anybody but Farrar. We still are of the firm belief that as a motion picture star she's a great grand opera singer.—Fred S. Meyer, Palace theatre, Hamilton, O.—Transient patronage.

Hodkinson

Riders of the Dawn, with Roy Stewart.

—Good picture. Title draws patrons. 95 per cent pleased. Playing a picture like this every Saturday night with "The Lost City" serial, 20 and 40 cents admission. Full house each night.—R. C. Buxton, Liberty theatre, Ransom, Kans.—Country town patronage.

The Westerners, with Roy Stewart.—Being a resident of the Black Hills in the early 80's, I was disappointed in not seeing a view of Rapid City. Otherwise the Westerners followed the book to a "T." Little Frankie Lee and Hunter played the hearts of all the finest and cleanest western pictures I ever ran. Two nights to good crowds. Grab it.—Dr. F. M. Childs, Cozy theatre, Villisca, la.

The Green Flame, with J. Warren Ker- rigan.—Pleased 100 per cent. Sent them away talking about it. J. Warren Kerrigan is one of our best drawing cards.—E. A. McClain, Liberty theatre, Tryon, Okla.—Neighborhood patronage.

As a Man Thinks, with Leah Baird.—Excellent picture. Went over big. Gave excellent satisfaction.—W. L. Douglas, Strand theatre, Newman Grove, Neb.—Small town patronage.

Metro

Polly with a Past, with Ina Claire.—An excellent picture, but attendance was rather light. Star unknown.—H. V. Friedrich, Majestic theatre, Sheboygan, Wis.—Down town patronage.

Body and Soul, with Alice Lake.—Very good.—L. M. Kuhns, Gibson theatre, Gibson, N. M.—Mining camp patronage.

SHORE ACRES, with a special cast.—Oh, ye good old days, when we tickled the breast in the bream on the wings, rolled the shot on the snare drum and shook the thunder sheet for the storm effect when SHORE ACRES came to town. Good? Yes. But nothing compared with the SHORE ACRES of the screen. Boost it. It's great.—Dr. F. M. Childs, Cozy theatre, Villisca, la.

The Great Redeemer, with a special cast.—Played it two nights to good houses. Most of them thought, it was fine. A few of them did not like it.—Alvin S. Frank, Jewell theatre, Lafayette, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Old Lady 31, with Emma Dunn.—It is a good picture, but will not be enjoyed by the younger set. But it shows in realism what may happen in the future.—E. M. Steward, My theatre, Indianapolis, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

Madame Peacock, with Nazimova.—The best dual picture I have ever seen, from point of view of acting and the moral. A few expressed their appreciation of Nazimova's acting, but the majority of my patrons prefer more action, and hence I lost money on it. Nevertheless, it is a most worth-while picture.—Jean Lightner, Regent theatre, Alameda, Cal.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Walk-Offs, with May Allison.—Another view of the forces. Acting is with the Mutiny of the Elsinore, with a special cast.—One of the best pictures of its kind. Gave universal satisfaction. Nice business two days.—Fred S. Meyer, Palace theatre, Hamilton, O.—Transient patronage.

The Sap Head, with Buster Keaton.—Very funny comedy which about 75 per cent liked.—L. M. Kuhns, Gibson theatre, Gibson, N. M.—Mining camp patronage.

A. L. Thompson, studio manager, and George L. Cox, director, make friends with the latest addition to the cast. His name is "Songbird" and he has an important role in "Sunset Jones," the American's Western feature.
Paramount

The Charm School, with Wallace Reid. —Reid is the best star Paramount has. We packed 'em in.—James D. Kennedy, Alhambra theatre, Indianapolis, Ind.—Downtown patronage.

Below the Surface, with Hobart Bosworth. —No crowds on account of cold weather, but the picture is great. A real special.—Alvin S. Frank, Jewel theatre, Lafayette, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

What's Your Hurry? with Wallace Reid. —Wallie is great. We packed 'em in.—James D. Kennedy, Alhambra theatre, Indianapolis, Ind.—Downtown patronage.

Always Audacious, with Wallace Reid. —Very good picture. Wallie always gets us the business. —James D. Kennedy, Alhambra theatre, Indianapolis, Ind.—Downtown patronage.

The Round Up, with Roscoe Arbuckle. —The picture is six reels full of pleasure and fun, showing Fatty in character of a sharp-shooter who puts off his Western stunts. —E. M. Steward, My theatre, Indianapolis, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

Humoresque, with a special cast. —This picture seemed to please everyone, and business was good.—Raymond Gear, Mayflower theatre, Florence, Kans.—General patronage.

It Pays to Advertise, with Bryant Washburn. —Clever picture. Pleased all. Good business.—F. E. Sabin, Majestic theatre, Helena, Mont.—Neighborhood patronage.

It Pays to Advertise, with Bryant Washburn. —Good picture and good business. —B. O. Baker, Boone Way theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ky.—General patronage.

Boots, with Dorothy Gish. —Another cure success for this one. A picture that suits everybody.—Polk E. Moore, Portland Theatre Co., Portland, Tenn.

Widow by Proxy, with Marguerite Clark. —That's very good.—R. D. Schneider, Midget theatre, Metamora, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Third Kiss, with Vivian Martin. —Fair program picture.—L. M. Kuhns, Gibson theatre, Gibson, N. M.—Mining camp patronage.

Lady Rose's Daughter, with Elsie Ferguson. —A fair picture, but nothing out of the ordinary.—Raymond Gear, Mayflower theatre, Florence, Kans.—General patronage.

Young Mrs. Winthrop, with Ethel Clayton. —Best Clayton we have had, but failed to get us any money. Acting of stars is excellent. Harrison could get some attention as leading man.—W. H. Creal, Suburban theatre, Omaha, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Haunted Bedroom, with Enid Bennett. —A real mystery feature that held up to the very last. Good, clean program and will please.—C. Hales, Lyric theatre, Orange City, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

Mary's Ankle, with Douglas MacLean and Doris May.—Excellent comedy.—L. M. Kuhns, Gibson theatre, Gibson, N. M.—Mining camp patronage.

Told in the Hills, with Robert Warwick. —A 1-1 Western. Book this, boys. You can't go wrong. It's wonderful. It's six reels. Paramount has some lemons, but this is a peach. —R. D. Schneider, Midget theatre, Metamora, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

 Partners, with Enid Bennett. —A lucky little program picture. A production that will be appreciated by all.—Polk E. Moore, Portland Theatre Co., Portland, Tenn.

 John Petticoats, with William S. Hart. —Not the usual Hart story and consequently very cheap business. Hart very much out of place in this.—W. H. Creal, Suburban theatre, Omaha, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

 2½ Hours Leave, with Douglas MacLean and Doris May.—A little old, but 100 per cent. Almost too good for a program picture. You can raise your admission on this feature. Should have a special.—R. D. Schneider, Midget theatre, Metamora, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Hawthorne of the U. S. A., with Wall- lace Reid.—Extra good. Folger and Lila make a good pair. All cast fine.—C. E. Belden, Midway theatre, Mogollon, N. M.—Mining camp patronage.

Mary's Ankle, with Douglas MacLean and Doris May.—A dandy comedy-drama in which these clever stars score as big a hit as in either of their other pictures. Can't be beat for real entertainment.—W. H. Creal, Suburban theatre, Omaha, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

Dangerous Hours, with a special cast.—Just an ordinary program picture.—Bert Norton, Kozy theatre, Eureka, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

On With the Dance, with Mae Murray.—Excellent. Drew a large house and everyone liked it.—L. M. Kuhns, Gibson theatre, Gibson, N. M.—Minning camp patronage.

The Miracle of Love, with a special cast.—Seems to feel of nothing.—Bert Norton, Kozy theatre, Eureka, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Grim Game, with Houdini.—While I was a little slow in getting to this one, it went over fine. It is excellent entertainment, and made patrons smile.—H. J. Longaker, Howard theatre, Alexandria, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Grim Game, with Houdini.—A good picture, enjoyed by all. Not below normal account of heavy snows and zero weather, but no fault of the picture.—W. F. Baker, Boone Way theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ky.—General patronage.

The Egg Crate Wallop, with Charles Ray.—Very good.—L. M. Kuhns, Gibson theatre, Gibson, N. M.—Minning camp patronage.

Battling Jane, with Dorothy Gish.—Here's the niftiest, nippiest, dad burnest best comedy-drama we've had since Heck was a pup. It's an old one with a sprinkle of Red Cross drive, but it's sure a pippin.—Dr. F. M. Childs, Cozy theatre, Villisca, la.

It Pays to Advertise, with Bryant Washburn.—Just a fair picture. Story good, but not a lot of comedy.—Alvin S. Frank, Jewel theatre, Lafayette, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Jane Goes A-Wooin', with Vivian Martin.—Was a nice, clean one. Good photography throughout. We used a good picture, enjoyed by all. Not below normal account of heavy snows and zero weather, but no fault of the picture.—H. J. Longaker, Howard theatre, Alexandria, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

Sporting Life, with a special cast.—Just a fair program picture. No comments.—H. J. Longaker, Howard theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ky.—Neighborhood patronage.

Scarlet Days, a D. W. Griffith production.—Nothing extra. Just fair.—L. M. Kuhns, Gibson theatre, Gibson, N. M.—Minning camp patronage.

False Faces, with Henry B. Walthall.—It's a war picture, but it's fine. Everybody liked it.—Alvin S. Frank, Jewel theatre, Lafayette, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm, with Mary Pickford.—Only booked on eight. Should have booked two. They still like Mary. Very pleasing picture. Pleased 100 per cent.—Edwin Lake, Lake theatre, Blair, Mont.—Small town patronage.

The Misleading Widow, with Billie Burke.—Sure some comedy-drama. A charming girl gets by in good shape with any audience. Why don't they make more like it?—R. C. Buxton, Strand theatres, Ransom, N. S.—Country town patronage.

Luck in Pawn, with Margaret Clark.—Very good. Miss Clark draws well here. Prices 20 and 40 cents.—O. E. Belden, Midway theatre, Mogollon, N. M.—Minning camp patronage.

Border Wireless, with William Hart.—This one went big. Could not keep them quiet. This is soldier stuff, but when Will puts it on it goes. Business buzz.—William Thacher, Royal theatre, Salina, Kans. —Neighborhood patronage.

The Cinema Murder, with Marion Davies.—Star good, but a very poor story.—H. J. McBeth, Gem theatre, Ord, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

His Parian Wife, with Elsie Fergusson.—Society drama well acted. Miss Fergusson wears some stunning gowns.—J. H. Talbert, Legion theatre, Norwich, Kans.—Small town patronage.

Stepping Out, with Enid Bennett.—Good comedy-drama that pleased our house. Picture drew well and is good, clean entertainment. An earmark of Paramount pictures.—C. H. Thomas, Community theatre, Galva, la.—Small town patronage.

Pathes

Dorothy Gish and her newly married husband, James Reison, in a scene from "Flying Pat," the current Paramount feature.

Other Men's Shoes, an Edgar Lewis production.—Received more favorable comments than any picture we played this season. It will please roughnecks as well as church people. Class A picture.—F. Hajtmanek, Opera House, Clarkson, Neb.—Small town patronage.

The Fighting Chance, with a special cast.—Did not please. Too much campagne and artificial life for our patrons.—Edwin Lake, Lafayette theatre, Baker, Mont.—Small town patronage.

Sherry, an Edgar Lewis production.—A beautiful picture that will satisfy any audience. Good story.—F. Hajtmanek, Opera House, Clarkson, Neb.—Small town patronage.

Other Men's Shoes, an Edgar Lewis production.—Poor business first day, second day about double first. Five cent boost in prices. This picture will please the majority.—H. G. Stettmund, Jr., Odeon theatre, Chandler, Okla.—General patronage.

The Broadway Cowboy, with William Desmond.—It gave general satisfaction. It is really a satire on Western heroes; a good picture and some didn't. About 50-50.—L. A. Hasse, Majestic theatre, Maustin, Wis. —Small town patronage.

Dollar for Dollar, with Frank Keenan.—Good society feature.—F. Hajtmanek, Opera House, Clarkson, Neb.—Small town patronage.

Food for Scandal, with Wanda Hawley.—This is a good one. This star very popular with us.—Opera House, Greensboro, Ala.—Small town patronage.

Heart of the Heart, with Mary Miles Minter.—A splendidly pictured story, but such themes do not go well with us. Yet it is a Realart, and our patrons did not complain.—C. T. Mecraft, Opera House, Greenfield, III.—Small town patronage.

Something Different, with Constance Binney.—Average picture, but as a whole continues along on regularization of our pictures.—Martin W. Oepker, Armory theatre, St. Genevieve, Mo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Eyes of the Heart, with Mary Miles Minter.—Poorest Minter picture we have run. Minter O. K. Story the bunk. Disappointed patrons.—P. E. Sabin, Majestic theatre, Eureka, Mont.—Neighborhood patronage.

Eyes of the Heart, with Mary Miles Minter.—Not as good as some of her previous pictures, but Mary Miles Minter always pleasing. It's aMajestic theatre, Sheboygan, Wis.—Down town patronage.

Judy of Rogue's Harbor, with Mary Miles Minter.—Good picture. Everyone pleased. Average patronage.—B. F. Sharp, Tumble In theatre, Sinton, Tex.— Rural patronage.

Her Beloved Villain, with Wanda Hawley.—Another pleasing picture with Wanda Hawley. Good business.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy theatre, Winchester, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

The New York Idea, with Alice Brady.—My fourth Brady picture and the best of the lot. Would like to see Alice in a real vehicle.—A. B. Anderson, Pastime theatre, Stratford, S. D.—Neighborhood patronage.

Oh Lady, Lady, with Bebe Daniels.—This star is gaining great popularity here. This is a delightful picture, and one that should please all. Harrison Ford helped Daniels greatly.—A. S. Widaman, Centennial theatre, Warsaw, Ind.

The Luck of the Irish, with a special cast.—A good one and one that will please all.—L. R. Ledon, Larabee Opera House, Isabel, Kans.

Her Beloved Villain, with Wanda Hawley.—A real comedy is this. Hawley's best to date. 100 per cent satisfaction.—C. T. Metcalf, Opera House, Greenfield, III.—Small town patronage.

The New York Idea, with Alice Brady.—Brady is the poorest star on the screen and this feature is as poor as she is. Cannot understand how she gets by. Never again for Brady. Lay off this one.—A. S. Widaman, Centennial theatre, Warsaw, Ind.

The Deep Purple, with a special cast.—They tell you they like this one. Boost it all you can, it will please.—C. T. Metcalf, Opera House, Greenfield, Ill.

Robertson-Cole

The Stealers, with a special cast.—An eight-reel picture that seemed no more than five. An interesting story that was well liked by our patrons.—H. V. Friedrich, Majestic theatre, Sheboygan, Wis.—Downtown patronage.

So Long Letty, with a special cast.—Picture 100 per cent entertainment to all who saw it. Played it two nights, and lost $17.39, which was not the fault of the picture, but due to the fact that our payers will not pay the price to see a good picture. I have decided to play no more pictures of that class.—J. J. Kudlacek, Swan theatre, Swanton, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

Occasionally Yours, with Lew Cody.—I think this is the best thing Lew Cody has made. Due to other bookings, we could only play it for one day, and did a record breaking business. Everybody went out raving about the picture, and we are very seriously considering diverting from a set policy and bringing it back for a return showing.—Fred S. Meyer, Palace theatre, Hamilton, O.—Transient patronage.

The Notorious Mrs. Sands, with Bessie Barriscale.—Have had better of this star, but we got by very nicely.—C. Hales, Rivoli theatre, Alton, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Butterfly Man, with Lew Cody.—Personally, I thought this a wonderful picture, but did not please all classes of my audience.—E. Saunders, Palace theatre, Harvard, Ill.—General patronage.

In Search of Arcady, with Billie

From Wid's Review of

"BLACK BEAUTY"

"Black Beauty" characterized by thrills and extravagant production.

"The story of 'Black Beauty' is so famous in every part of the country that the title alone will be sufficient to draw a crowd.

"It is a clean, wholesome picture, a fact which you can make an especial appeal to women and children. The book is so well known that there will naturally be curiosity to see it visualized.

"The success of the picture with most audiences is going to depend on its 'human' theme, for the story of the horse holds interest only in those scenes involving fast action. Among the latter are some very good shots of a fox hunt, and a thrilling horse race at the finish which has been admirably done and will be apt to raise them off their seats."
LOVE-MAKING BY EXPERTS

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, the Universal comedians, rehearse a scene for "A Shocking Night" for the officers of the National Park-to-Park Highway Association which recently visited Universal City.

Rhodes.—Billie good, but story too light. Would make a fair two-reeler.—O. R. Hans, Scenic theatre, Hastings, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Love Call, with Billy Rhodes.—Good comedy-drama for the program.—Clarence Langacher, Opera House, New Glarus, Wis.

The Wonder Man, with Georges Carpentier.—If you want your patrons to have a good treat, play this picture.—E. Saunders, Palace theatre, Harvard, Ill.—General patronage.

Poor Relations, with ZaSu Pitts.—A very nice little program picture that will satisfy most all of them.—O. R. Hans, Scenic theatre, Hastings, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

Selznick

Pleasure Seekers, with Elaine Hamerstein.—Wonderful acting on Elaine's part, and was also a good story to work in. Selznick is turning out some good work lately.—Martin W. Opek, Armory theatre, St. Genevieve, Mo.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Daughter Pays, with Elaine Hamerstein.—A very good attraction that provided us with an exceptional New Year's business. Patrons 99 1/2 per cent pleased.—H. V. Friedrich, Majestic theatre, Sheboygan, Wis.—Downtown patronage.

The Servant Question, with Willie Collier.—Fair comedy-drama. Work of star good.—E. A. Baradel, Palace theatre, McGehee, Ark.—Small town patronage.

The Man Who Lost Himself, with William Faversham.—Star not known here. Small crowd, but, believe me, a real picture and well liked.—C. S. Ford, Princess theatre, Reinbeck, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Wonderful Chance, with Eugene O'Brien.—O'Brien always a favorite here, no matter what he plays in. This is just an ordinary, pleasing program picture.—A. S. Widaman, Centennial theatre, Warsaw, Ind.

The Woman Game, with Elaine Hamerstein.—She is growing fast with my crowds, and is better liked each time. Picture theme out of the ordinary, but has a good lesson.—John I. Saunders, Cheney theatre, Cheney, Kans.—Neighborhood patronage.

Marooned Hearts, with Conway Tearle.—Did not draw for us. A good picture, but not worth advanced prices.—C. T. Metcalf, Opera House, Greenfield, Ill.—Small town patronage.

The Road of Ambition, with Conway Tearle.—Star is rapidly forging forward and with such a good vehicle the combination produces a very good picture.—Martin W. Opek, Armory theatre, St. Genevieve, Mo.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Wonderful Chance, with Eugene O'Brien.—The best one with this star and pleased my patrons.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy theatre, Winchester, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

A Regular Girl, with Elsie Janis.—A dandy good picture and was well liked. Was her first appearance here. Fair crowd.—Jno. I. Saunders, Cheney theatre, Cheney, Kans.—Neighborhood patronage.

A Desperate Hero, with Owen Moore.—Owen had better take to the woods if this is the best he can do. Absolutely dead from start to finish.—Harry N. Jennings, Pastime theatre, Granville, N. Y.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Daughter Pays, with Elaine Hamerstein.—A beautiful picture and a pleasing one. Some beautiful shots and the male lead is fine.—A. S. Widaman, Centennial theatre, Warsaw, Ind.

Sooner or Later, with Owen Moore.—A good program picture with some good laughs, but Moore does not draw for me.—O. R. Hans, Scene theatre, Hastings, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

Everybody's Sweetheart, with Olive Thomas.—A well-liked picture that drew capacity houses.—H. V. Friedrich, Majestic theatre, Sheboygan, Wis.—Downtown patronage.

Marooned Hearts, with Conway Tearle.—An ordinary picture to ordinary business two days.—Fred S. Meyer, Palace theatre, Hamilton, O.—Transient patronage.

Sealed Hearts, with Eugene O'Brien.—A good play, but Lucille Stewart spoils the whole play. Not the kind of leading lady for Eugene.—O. R. Hans, Scenic theatre, Hastings, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

She Loves and Lies, with Norma Talmadge.—Dandy picture. Placed 100 per cent.—R. R. Gribble, Grand theatre, New Hamburg, Ont., Can.—Small town patronage.

12:40, with Marie Doro.—A poor picture. Did not please.—Adolph Kohn, Pastime theatre, Granville, N. Y.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Spite Bride, with Olive Thomas.—Good picture. Select has some good ones.—F. C. Burr, Orpheum theatre, Lancaster, Wis.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Isle of Conquest, with Norma Talmadge.—Good picture. Norma does some wonderful acting in this one. Well liked.—C. S. Ford, Princess theatre, Reinbeck, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Poor Sint, with Owen Moore.—Best Owen Moore picture we have run. Good comedy and sure to please.—R. O. Rhoades, Orpheum theatre, Converse, Ind.—Small town patronage.

His Wife's Money, with Eugene O'Brien.—A dandy, good picture. Just enough Western to make it spicy. Pleased a fair crowd.—Jno. I. Saunders, Cheney theatre, Cheney, Kans.—Neighborhood patronage.

Piccadilly Jim, with Owen Moore.—Several knocks on this one. We call it only a medium production.—C. T. Metcalf, Opera House, Greenfield, Ill.—Small town patronage.

Break the News to Mother, with a special cast.—Special in six reels. Very good.—Many favorable comments. Did not raise admission as the two previous Saturdays—Christmas and New Years—we had advanced admission. It will stand a slight raise.—Mrs. Lloyd Kinlin, Queen theatre, Aspermont, Tex.—Small town patronage.

The Spite Bride, with Olive Thomas.—A good picture. She is my best lady drawing card. Everyone loves her. Sorry of her tragic death.—Jno. I. Saunders, Cheney theatre, Cheney, Kans.—Neighborhood patronage.

Stoll

Squandered Lives, with a special cast.
Squandered Lives pleased my audience 100 per cent and held them to their seats till the last minute and packed house all evening.—Lindell & Peterson, Hippodrome theatre, Omaha.

Mr. Wu, the EXHIBITORS Gribble, a picture. Sure Gouverneur packed—admission.

Down on the Farm, a Mack Sennett production.—Pleased about fifty per cent. The dog and the baby worth price of admission, but not the sort of crime that is usually associated with pictures. —From Jackson D. Haag's review in the Detroit News.

United Artists

When the Clouds Roll By, with Douglas Fairbanks.—Very ordinary picture. Story lacks punch but picture has some good flood scenes.—R. R. Gribble, Grand theatre, New Hamburg, Ont., Can.—Small town patronage.

Sundown Slim, with Harry Carey.—Not up to the standard of Carey pictures. Pleased about 60 per cent. Too tame for Carey.—Spalding Bros., Gem theatre, Taylorville, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN, with Dorothy Phillips.—Everything that has been said and written about this picture fails to do justice to the truly remarkable attraction this really is. The first picture that stood up for four days and did as much business on the last day as on the first. Censorship and blue laws would have to go out of business if we could get offerings like this. Very proper regualtity. Exploitation possibilities great. Put it on with a singer and watch 'em break down your doors.—Fred S. Meyer, Palace theatre, Hamilton, O.—Transient patronage.

The Path She Chose, with Ann Cromwell.—Would not say much for this. Did not draw or did not satisfy those who went. Her last for the Majestic Scenic theatre, Hastings, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Heart of Humanity, with Dorothy Phillips.—Very popular.—Mr. Small Town Exhibitor, of seeing, in my honest opinion, the greatest picture ever filmed. It's old, sure enough, grant you an ordinary picture. This solidification does not lessen its greatness.—W. W. Sirleen, Alhambra, Delta, T. A.—Neighborhood patronage.

Blue Streak McCoy, with Harry Carey.—Good, but not as good as some of Carey's pictures. Some of the finest night scenes in this ever put in a picture. This is a very good night scene picture. Most night scenes are too dark. You can boost this picture. Did very good business on two-day showing. 10-20c.—William Thacher, Royal theatre, Salina, Kans.

Everything but the Truth, with Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran.—Same as all other Lyons-Moran comedies. Good actors, but stories sadly lacking. This is nothing better than their two-reelers.—R. R. Gribble, Grand theatre, New Hamburg, Ont., Can.—Small town patronage.

The Marriage Pit, with Frank Mayo.—A good society drama that holds the attention and will be produced. Will make good on regular program.—F. L. Clarke, Cozy theatre, Hazen, Ark.

Everything but the Truth, with Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran. Having read some knocks on this, was a little afraid, but our audience applauded considerably, so I take this as a favorable sign.—Mrs. Lloyd Junkin, Queen theatre, Aspermont, Tex.—Small town patronage.

The Virgin of Stamboul, with Priscilla Dean and Lee Moran. A better picture played. Splendid acting. Please most of our patrons, about 90 per cent.—Edwin Lake, Lake theatre, Baker, Mont.—Small town patronage.

The Devil's Passkey, with Eric Von Stroheim.—A sure money-getter in every respect. A wonderful production. Worth of being called a masterpiece. Big business four days. By all means grab it.—

FRANK CLARK

Is some aviation. He jumped his biplane from the roof of a 10-story Los Angeles building for a thrill in "Stronger than Fiction," Katherine Mac-Donald's new Associated First National feature.

Fred S. Meyer, Palace theatre, Hamilton, O.

The Adorable Savage, with Edith Roberts.—Poor house on account of stormy weather, but everyone liked it.—O. R. Sennett, Strand theatre, Davis, Calif.—Small town patronage.

Everything but the Truth, with Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran.—Fairly good comedy-drama, not as good as Fixed by George. A fair drawer.—T. N. Magruder, Elite theatre, Iola, Kans.—General patronage.

The Virgin of Stamboul, with Priscilla Dean.—This is a wonderful picture, and the climax is a sure thriller. However, oriental plays are not very strong with us.—Royal theatre, Lodi, Utah.

The Forged Bride, with Mary MacLaren.—Fair. Nothing extra. Fair program picture.—T. N. Magruder, Elite theatre, Iola, Kans.—General patronage.

Vitagraph

Trumpet Island, with a special cast.—Tom Terriss sure rings the bull's eye with this production. One of the best Sunday attractions we have played recently. By referring to Governor Morriss' successful picture, The Penalty, we put this picture over with a bang.—Harry M. Palmer, Liberty theatre, Washington, Ind.—General patronage.

Trumpet Island, with a special cast.—A very good picture. Good story, good acting and good direction. Drew well.—H. V. Friedrich, Majestic theatre, Sheboygan, Wis.—Downtown patronage.

Dead Men Tell No Tales, with a special cast.—Drew well. Played two days. Very fair picture.—Gus Starnes, Classic theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Flaming Clue, with Harry Morley.—An interesting detective story that held interest well.—Bert Norton, Koye theatre, Eureka, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Sporting Duchess, with Alice Joyce.—Very good picture and gave satisfaction.—Peter Krauth, Denison theatre, Denison, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Gauntlet, with Harry T. Morey.—Serial will get by. Don't make any fuss over it, though.—O. R. Hans, Scenic theatre, Hastings, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Golden Shower, with Corinne Griffith.—Story not suited for discriminating audiences. Off color.—Bert Norton, Kozy theatre, Eureka, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Wolf, with Earle Williams. Exhibitors who are building for the future will book pictures like this production. It is quaint and entertaining with educational features. A picture well received.—W. W. Sturle, Alhambra theatre, Delta, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Wreck, with Anita Stewart.—Keep away from The Wreck. Danger, even if it is six or seven years old.—Grand theatre, New Hamburg, Ont., Can.—Small town patronage.

God's Country and the Woman, with William Duncan.—Fine. Drew a good house and pleased.—L. N. Kuhns, Gibson theatre, Gibbon, N. M.—Mining camp patronage.

The Birth of a Soul, with Harry T. Morey.—Dual role of star, in my opinion, killed picture. Picture is worth while in its entirety except as above stated, which makes picture go flat.—W. W. Sturle, Alhambra theatre, Delta, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

Specials

Thoughtless Women (Pioneer), with Alene Osgood. Picture is very poor. The only reason that I had a big audience was the fact that I had a personal appearance at the evening show of Miss Ruben,—Charles Steinman, New Atlantic Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Phantom Honeycomb (Hallmark), with Mae Marsh. Fairly entertaining ghost picture. Though screen showings of the snape was repulsive to 75 per cent of the audience, as it shows the revolting as biting two lovers and killing them both.—J. J. Kusture, Swanton, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

Silk Husband and Calico Wives (Equity), with House Peters. A good, clean story.—F. W. Winsple 97% Good for any house.—S. Olson, Pastime theatre, Delavan, Wis.—General patronage.

Dangerous Trails (Aywon), with Rex Ray.—Not much to this one. Did not please. Some of my patrons walked out. Comment, poor picture.—Spalding Bros., Gem theatre, Polk, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

Sky Fire (Independent), with Neal Hart.—Finest photography in first part of this I ever saw. Night scenes at last too dark. Good pulling Western. No kicks from anybody.—F. L. Clarke, Cozy theatre, Hazen, Ark.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Confession (Pioneer), with Henry B. Walthall.—A sure-fire hit in a Catholic community. A picture that will satisfy any fan. Did more on second night than on first. Had the priest here help me put it over.—O. R. Hans, Scenic theatre, Hastings, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

Bubbles (Pioneer), with Mary Anderson. A great disappointment. Absolutely nothing to this picture, and the only thing that got them in was the title.—A. S. Widaman, Centennial theatre, Warsaw, Ind.

Hell's Oasis (Pinnacle), with Neal Hart. A fine Western star. Star now here, but drew well. Picture was rather slow.—H. J. McBeth, Gem theatre, Ord, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

Girls Don't Gamble (D. N. Schwab), with David Butler.—Man, this is a stunner. Don't be afraid to advertise it, as it will make good. Will stand small raise in admission.—F. L. Clarke, Cozy theatre, Hazen, Ark.—Neighborhood patronage.

A Western Adventure (W. S. P. C.), with William Fairbanks.—If your people like Western pictures, book this. It is one of the best I have ever run.—E. Saunder, Palace theatre, Harvard, Ill.—General patronage.

Serials

The Son of Tarzan (National), with a special cast. I'm on the eighth episode. It's no good. Business falling off with each episode.—Ed. J. Fuchs, Opera House, Marion, Wis.

A Bride 13 (Fox), with a special cast.—Worst serial ever run here. Losing money on it.—E. A. Baradel, Palace theatre, McGehee, Ark.—Small town patronage.

The Lost City (Warner Bros.), with Juanita Hansen. —Tenth episode. Serial is headed O. K. We can't do anything big on it, but no fault of serial. Got a bad start.—C. Hales, Rivoli theatre, Altun, Ioa.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Lost City (Warner Bros.), with Juanita Hansen.—Just finished episode No. 15. This is some serial when it comes to getting money. Run it two days. Friday night and Saturday night. Have some hope to see it go off. Wish it was thirty episodes. Have run serials for ten years, but this is the best. Entirely pleased.—William Thacker, Royal theatre, Salina, Kan.

Thunderbolt Jack (Arrow), with Jack Hoxie.—Now on sixth episode and going strong. Jack Hoxie is quite a picture.—H. J. Dorley, Ada theatre, Chicago, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Lion Man (Universal), with a special cast.—Just finished this splendid serial with enthusiastic audience. Used opening episode of King of the Circus on last episode of Lion Man and two-rel Century comedy. The applause and comments indicated a high degree of satisfaction. In spite of spelt in cotton market our crowds have held up fine on this serial.—Mrs. Lloyd Junkin, Queen theatre. Aspen, Colo.—Small town patronage.

Elmo the Fearless (Universal), with Elmo Lincoln.—Poorest apology for a serial ever filmed. Mostly connected thrills. Lincoln struts and poses, but Miss Loraine does some real acting. Can this serial.—Harry Nym, Pastime theatre, Granville, N. Y.—Neighborhood patronage.

Thunderbolt Jack (Arrow), with Jack Hoxie.—Positively the greatest serial we ever had. A box office attraction of merit.—Sam Shlerts, Pastime theatre, Hamilton, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.
Short Subjects

Number, Please (Pathe), with Harold Lloyd. —The Lloyds are all good. This one doesn't fall behind. —F. C. Burr, Orpheum theatre, Lancaster, Wis.—Neighbourhood patronage.

Robin Comedies (Pathe), with special cast. —Miss Margaret O'Neil, “The Smiling Liar,” very good comedies and better than a good many. Pathe Topics of the Day the best spice on any program. Enjoyed by young and old. —E. H. Hanazek, Opera House, Clarkson, Neb.—Small town patronage.

Chester, Christie, Mermaid Comedies (Educational). Most consistent line of comedies we ever had. Every one good. New gags and real plots to most of them. Both Chester and Christie are good. —O. W. Jastram, Strand theatre, Pecatonica, Ill.—Small town patronage.

The Good Ship Rock and Rye (Universal), with Joe Martin. —This was certainly a good one. We are strong for Joe Martin. One of the best drawing cards we can get.—Mrs. Lloyd Junkin, Queen theatre, Aspermont, Texas.—Small town patronage.

An Overall Hero (Educational), with a special cast. —This monkey truly does everything but talk. Contrary to expectations, our patrons like these Chester comedies more and more with each showing and they are a great asset to every high-class program. —Fred S. Meyer, Palace theatre, Hamilton, O.—Transient patronage.

The Scarecrow (Metro), with Buster Keaton. —Still he goes good. Patrons ask, “Can he keep it up?” —O. R. Nation, Strand theatre, Davis, Cal.—Small town patronage.

The Live Wire (Reelcraft), with Billy Franey. —This bird will draw them in. Franey is a strong favorite with my people. —D. W. Eakin, Mystic theatre, Rushville, Ind.—Small town patronage.

The Slacker (Fox), with a special cast. —This is as good as St. John ever worked in. It will please all. It is clever. —H. J. Longaker, Howard theatre, Alexandria, Minn.—Neighbourhood patronage.

THE TROUBLE BUSTER (Vitagraph) with James Aubrey. —Went up into the operator's booth to see how he weathered this comedy and found him convulsed with laughter. When the hard boiled operator enjoys a comedy it must be a good one and this one is very good. —Harry M. Palmer, Liberty theatre, Washington, Ind.—General patronage.

The Race of the Age (Educational), with Man O’War and Sir Barton. —Played this four days and by advertising it extensively on the sporting page got what few sports there are. It failed to justify the way we went after it in exposition but a great picture in every sense of the word. —Fred S. Meyer, Palace theatre, Hamilton, Ohio.—Transient patronage.

Betty's Green-Eyed Monster (Arrow), with Margaret O'Neill. —This is the second of these comedies run and find them to be dandy comedies. Went big. Clean story. —Very good. They have no pulling power, but they sure are good. —William Thacher, Royal theatre, Salina, Kan.

Why Pick On Me? (Pathe), with Harold Lloyd. —This is the first of the one-reel Lloyds brought back during Lloyd Tribute Month and it went over with a bang. While it's not a "mirthquake" it gave universal satisfaction and pleased everybody. —Fred S. Meyer, Palace theatre, Hamilton, Ohio.—Transient patronage.

His Royal Synness, with Harold Lloyd. —Good comedy. The double exposure being unusually interesting, but have a serious complaint against the advertising furnished. None of the scenes illustrated on the one-sheet, three-sheet, six-sheet, slide and live of the 11x1 photos actually took place in the picture. What are we going to do to prevent producers resorting to dishonest methods in their advertising? If only some of them did it we could easily remedy this by withholding our business from them, but all of the producers whose products we use have done it some time or other. I am getting to be afraid to use any advertising for fear of betting. Added as a last line.—J. J. Kudlacek, Swan theatre, Swanton, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

LARRY SEMON COMEDIES (Vitagraph) with Larry Semon. —Have this to say concerning Larry. He's got all the comedy kings and queens backed up in a corner and they are eating out of his hand. Semon comedies radiate fun as the sun radiates light. —W. W. Stirrins, Alhambra theatre, Delta, Ia.—Neighbourhood patronage.

Mongrels (Fox), with a special cast. —Dandy comedy. Everyone liked it. Sunshines all good comedies. Find them the best comedies on the market, not being specials or so-called specials. —William Thacher, Royal theatre, Salina, Kan.

Moonshine (Paramount), with Roscoe Arbuckle. —Paramount has released brand new prints of all these older Arbuckle comedies and if your competitor beats you to them, why, it's your loss. Arbuckle seems to be one comedian who never loses. This is as flat as it is true. —Harry M. Palmer, Liberty theatre, Washington, Ind.—General patronage.

Don't Tickle (Fox), with Clyde Cook. —Clyde Cook has something new, different and very entertaining in this comedy. It is a good one. —H. J. Longaker, Howard theatre, Alexandria, Minn.—Neighbourhood patronage.

Bumping Into Broadway (Pathe), with Harold Lloyd. —Very good comedy that goes well with any program. Lloyd is a big favorite here. Always goes over in fine shape. —Fred S. Meyer, Palace theatre, Hamilton, Ohio.—Transient patronage.

One Law for All (Universal), with Hoot Gibson. Good. Hoot goes big with our audience. Hoot always pleases. The kids are wild over him. —William Thacher, Royal theatre, Salina, Kan.

A Homespun Hero (Educational), with a special cast. —Christie has redeemed himself for some of his past weak offerings. A clean comedy with plenty of laughs. Of course it's an Educational and one of the best. —Fred S. Meyer, Palace theatre, Hamilton, Ohio.—Transient patronage.

AUGMENTING THE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA WITH THE PIPE ORGAN

Top Row—New Mission Theatre, San Francisco; La Petite Theatre, Ocean Park, Calif. Center—Queen Theatre, Denver, Colo.; Liberty Theatre, Fresno, Calif.; Kinema Theatre, Los Angeles, Calif. Lower—Auburn Theatre, Auburn, Wash.; Palm Theatre, Pueblo, Colo., where Robert-Morton organs have been installed, the evolution of which for the theatre is explained in Mr. Werner's article.
Evolution of the Pipe Organ for the Theatre

At the Present Time It Is an Orchestra in Itself—Every Instrument Reproduced

By H. J. WERNER

With the advancement of scenic lighting and other mechanical features of the photo drama including all the essential attributes of making pictures and presenting them, the sense of sight was necessarily considered because of its solitary appeal.

The very nature of the speechless drama, however, demanded a contributing sense of sound to complete the illusion of the screen. Tone is essential to shadow and music was therefore introduced.

The evolution of the photoplay music necessarily passed from the cheap electric to the crude "slap bang" piano and violin and syncopated beats of the trap drummer, through the average small theatre orchestra to the finale of a fifty-piece symphony. The efforts to meet the music necessities of the small theatre with a single instrument was the mission to furnish noise rather than the emotional tonal quality necessary for the more accurate interpretation of the various phases of screen action. The logical step therefore for the artistic development of the photoplay necessitated technically correct music in the matter of relief, substitution, or that of augmenting the public orchestra. This condition gave rise to the installation of the pipe organ, the "king of instruments," both for its solo possibilities and its ability to combine its tonal qualities with that of the symphony orchestra.

The evolution of the organ itself from its churchly dignity in ecclesiastic surroundings to its present orchestral tone in a theatrical atmosphere represents years of intensive technical skill in combination with artistic performance. From the resonance of the deep, vibrant diapason tones of antiquity to the modern brilliance of strings and high pressure windwood and brass, accompanied by the syncopated beats of the drum and other orchestral adjuncts, the organ has surely passed through every phase of music experience.

However, it is well to understand that in the combination of the cathedral and orchestral-toned organ, such as the Robert-Morton, that the dignified diapason is one of the most outstanding features of this instrument which should be the background of every organ and in addition the full-throated vox humana is not neglected. The flute family is well represented by the concert flute, orchestral flute, piccolo, tibia, cello piccolo and doppel flute. The string family represented by the first violin, viola, cello and double bass, together with the octave violins, add greatly to the brilliancy of the organ.

All Instruments Available

The oboe, saxophone, clarinet and bassoon are all available for the organist to use in weaving tone fabrics. The brass section contains cornet, trumpet, tuba and cornet, which produce a fitting climax hereafter belonging only to symphony orchestras. Thus in addition to the harp, orchestral bells, xylophone, bass drum, snare drum, etc., all arranged so that the expert musician can find them just when he wants to, the organ is surely an orchestra in itself.

In theatres of the more limited seating capacity using an eight or ten-piece orchestra the combination of the organ affords the power and variety of an orchestra several times its number, thereby giving greatly enhanced artistic performance with a limited expense of operation.

Recently the organ has become an added member to the orchestra pit in vaudeville theatres, where the instrument will be played in combination with the orchestra itself. The Pantages circuit is now equipping its new theatres with Robert-Morton organs.

WURLITZER AT PANTHEON

(From Staff Correspondent)

VINCENNES, IND., Jan. 23.—The new Pantheon theatre at Fifth and Main streets, will be completed within a few weeks. The local representative of Wilkeson-Lyons Enterprises, which is erecting the house, at a cost of $250,000, says a Wurlitzer Hope-Jones pipe organ will be installed soon and theplayhouse should be ready for the opening performance not later than March 15. L. A. Wilkerson, president of the company, says he has not decided on the opening attraction.

ARE SPECIALLY DESIGNED

Harmonize Completely with Rest of Architecture

Ascher Brothers new theatre at Peoria, Ill., "The Palace," has been completely equipped with "Bilt-Rite" display cases, the product of the Consolidated Portrait & Frame company, Chicago.

The nature of the theatre especially lends itself to a striking display. Two corner cases similar to the cut accompanying this article were installed on the Main Street side so that they catch the eyes of pedestrians coming and going along this busy thoroughfare.

Other Cases Installed

Two more cases similar to those on the front of the theatre were installed on the exit side which opens onto Madison Street. These cases on Madison Street are used exclusively for future productions, the psychology being that as the people leave the theatre they quite naturally will come in contact with this future production literature and, as a consequence, will desire to see the pictures scheduled for future showings.

The designing department of the Consolidated Portrait & Frame Co. designed cases that completely harmonize with the rest of the architecture. Each case is equipped with rich velour covered backboards, onto which are mounted the small gold burnished frames for displaying 11x14, 8x10 or 22x28 photographs.

Lobby Equipment

The inside of the lobby is equipped with cases with velour covered backboards and gold photo frames, similar to street display. The whole thought in the designing of the outfit was to get a display that would be practical and yet entirely in harmony with the rest of the beautiful equipment installed at the theatre.

The cases are a dream. I never thought that such a good, practical display could be handled in so admirable a fashion," was the comment of Manager Menzing.

MILLER'S TEST OF BLUE LAW

Theory Provides Campaign Data

Figures that provide foundation for a campaign of enlightenment well qualified to counteract such influence as may be brought to bear by blue law or Sunday closing advocates were obtained by S. C. Hagan, manager of the Elks Theatre, Mound City, Ill., when he made a personal canvass of his Sunday patrons ascertaining the pursuit to which each would devote his time were the theatre closed on that day.

The answers received constitute an argument for Sunday shows which should be used with good effect in an advertising or newspaper interview in silencing agitators. Any exhibitor can conduct a similar test and utilize the results in protecting his interests. Mr. Hagan's letter follows:

"I have investigated the blue law question, having a talk with all of my customers and finding out actual facts in the case. Of course this is a small town, but people are alike everywhere.

"Yes, we are keeping a few people from going to church on Sunday. I am sorry this few don't go to church, but here is the following true example:

"One-fourth of the people attending Sunday shows would go to church if there were no shows. Three-fourths would go to gambling places and all other places that are forty times worse than a picture show.

"Now, then, the picture show can save three-fourths, and if closed the church can save one-fourth, so what is the best for the public? Three-fourths of the people or one-fourth?

"Nearly every picture play is a perfect sermon and I am sure the picture show is doing more good than any other place for the people in the world. This true argument should be shown to the public everywhere."

MARKET NEW PROJECTOR

Exhibitors Machine Corporation by Eliminating Tension Springs Gets Good Results

Elimination of the tension spring is the outstanding feature of the Professional Projector, a new device now being put on the market by the Exhibitors Machine Corporation of Chicago.

The doing away with the tension springs which is accomplished by means of two intermittent sprockets, gives the manufacturer a chance to speed up the intermittent to a speed where it is possible to use a shutter with very narrow blades, which increases the light on the screen nearly 100 per cent, it is claimed.

Another advantage claimed for the new projector is that the pictures projected are absolutely flickerless. This, it is said, was clearly brought out during a demonstration held at the Covent Garden.

The men who invented the machine are veterans in projection work. Andrew Shustek, who is president of the firm, made his first projector twenty-six years ago, and John Proksa, a brother of Mr. Shustek and Carlton C. Stewart of the firm have been associated with Mr. Shustek for the past few years in perfecting the present model. It requires six years and an expenditure of more than $200,000 to perfect the Professional Projector, officials of the company claim.

SYMPHONY REDECORATED

Outlay of More than $20,000 Expended—Color Scheme Is of Old Rose, Dull Blue and Ivory

The Symphony theatre, Los Angeles, has been redecorated at an outlay of almost $20,000, with a color scheme of old rose, dull blue and ivory, with old rose as the dominating note.

New hangings of rich old rose are in the lobby, new carpets pass down the aisles and the wiring system of the theatre has been completely changed.

On the stage, a rich old rose velvet curtain replaces the blue one, and across the screen is a gold gauze veil as light and filmy as the web of a spider.

The walls have been re-decorated with a lattice work effect with colorful tassels which resemble flowers, and the subdued lighting presents a picture that is most pleasing and unique. The woman's rest room resembles a boudoir with new rugs, furniture and lighting, an old crone pit has been enlarged and ventilating system also has been enlarged.

Sells Music Territory

M. J. Mintz of Synchronized Scenario Music Company Reports Keen Interest in Project

M. J. Mintz, recently appointed sales manager of the Synchronized Scenario Music Company, is at the present time on a very extended trip through the west allotting territory on the new Synchronized service. He has advised the home office that he has already closed up state rights with the Theatre Service Company of Kansas City for Kansas and Western Missouri and with H. A. Kuyler of Denver, Color. New Mexico, Wyoming, Montana, Utah, Idaho, Washington and Oregon.

Mr. Mintz reports that exhibitors wherever he has visited, have taken up the new music service very enthusiastically and are eager to book it.

Dave Love, Criterion Theatre, Atlanta, Believes Music Should Not Upset Patron Interest

Dave Love, who conducts the orchestra of the Criterion theatre, Atlanta, Ga., is a talented musician, and a man who, it is said, "turned down" the opportunity of a wonderful career in Russia. Mr. Love sees no reason why he should not adapt his music to the picture, rather than trying to adapt and warp the picture to his music, as seems to be the ideal of so many really great musicians.

It is his theory that, for every picture ever made that was worthy of being screened, there is, somewhere, music that just fits it. It is up to the orchestra leader to find that piece of music, adapt it, revise it, and build it up into a central theme for the musical setting of that picture. The music, according to Mr. Love, should never be noticed above the picture—that is, the music should not call attention to itself as anything more than a setting for the picture—and the more perfect the setting, the less it will be noticed, consciously.

Dave Love was born in Roswell, Ga., in 1893. He studied the violin with Geraldine Morgan, of New York, and theory with Mortimer Wilson. At the age of nineteen, he was leader of Atlanta's Symphonic orchestra, and at the age of twenty-seven he had won a gold medal for his playing at the old Lyceum theatre in Edgewood avenue.

PRESIDENT SANIEL QUITS

PITTSBURGH, PA., Jan. 25.—S. Saniel has resigned his position as president of the S. & S. Film & Supply Company after two years of active participation in its affairs.

Mr. Saniel has as yet made no announcement of his future plans, but it is understood that he will remain in the film business.

Film Supply Dealers Organize

H. H. Cudmore, Cleveland, Ohio, Is Chairman of Executive Board of Association-Comprehensive Program Is Outlined

Following numerous meetings attended by the managing directors of twenty-four representative supply dealers and jobbers, the Association of Motion Picture Supply Dealers has been formed. H. H. Cudmore, 623 Prospect avenue, Cleveland, O., is chairman of the executive committee.

Incidental with the permanent organization, the new association launched an advertising campaign in the trade papers explaining the object of the new body and also extending an invitation to others in the industry to join.

A constitution and by-laws have been drafted and adopted, some of the committee have been named and the new association is already well under way with a comprehensive program which promises to result in accomplishing big and important work.

Aim of Association

It is announced by those back of the project that it is the desire and aim of the association to list as its members all the representative dealers and jobbers of motion picture supplies. "The association can reach maximum efficiency," reads the announcement in this connection, "only when it has the cooperation of all those engaged in this important and rapidly growing business."

Some of the other points brought out in the public announcement of the formation of the new organization are:

Age of Cooperation

"This is the age of cooperation in business. The old adage 'Competition is the life of trade,' has been changed to read 'Cooperation is the life of trade.'

"The biggest advances made in business during recent years have been due to cooperation. The best cooperators is the best operator of a business."

"The objects of the Association of Motion Picture Supply Dealers are to promote the welfare of its members and to distribute among them the fullest information obtainable in regard to all matters affecting the motion picture supply business; to aid in bringing about more friendly relations between the motion picture supply dealers; to assist in standardizing and marketing high-grade motion picture supplies; to improve the quality of motion picture supplies and apparatus and the service rendered by the various branches of the motion picture industry."

Delft Theatre Opens At Marquette, Mich.

Delft Theatres, Incorporated, added a second theatre in Marquette to its chain of Michigan houses when the Delft was opened recently. The new theatre is the most attractive of the five houses operated by the company and in point of decoration and appointments is said to compare favorably with any theatre in the Middle West.

Agnes Foster Wright of New York designed and supervised the decorations, with the exception of the stage settings, which were designed by Joseph Platt, also of New York, and painted by the Lee Lash studios. The lobby is decorated with several Chinese panels which are imported from the Defosse studios in Paris, and in the foyer is a velvet panel brought from Watanabe, Yokohama.

BLOWER FAN INSTALLED

(From Staff Correspondent)

EVANSVILLE, IND., Jan. 25.—A new exhaust and blower fan has been installed in the Woodlawn theatre. The fans have a displacement of more than 90,000 cubic feet of air a minute.

Frank Lacey, manager of the Majestic theatre, Portland, Ore., produced this excellent lobby effect for "Godless Men," the Goldwyn production, by artistic lighting of well-mounted material and a minimum of foliage decoration.

Metro’s New Electric Plant

The largest portable electric plant in the world has been completed and put into service at Metro’s West Coast studios. This power plant was given its trial run at Whittier last week when it was used to supply electricity for night scenes of “Home Stuff.” Viola Dan’s new starring vehicle. The plant consists of a 300 horse power Liberty motor and two 50 kilowatt submarine type of generators. These are mounted on an especially built Mack truck. The plant will supply enough electricity to light a small city.

Brunton Adds to Staff

Additions have been made to Benjamin B. Hampe, Stockvine’s technical and scenario departments. Those added to the art department are Robert Odell and H. W. Libbert, well known motion picture art directors. Mrs. Joseph L. Percy and James Townsend complete the department. Rex Taylor, the popular continuist and story writer, makes Mr. Hampton’s trip of noted screen quartet. William H. Clifford, E. Richard Schayer and Elliott Chauvin are the other members of the staff, with Blanche May reading.

Burglars are Active

Burglars entered the home of Victor Schertzinger, well-known Goldwyn director, recently, taking nearly $2,000 worth of jewelry and other personal property belonging to Mr. Schertzinger and to his assistant, Wyatt Brower, who makes his home with the director. The thieves made their entrance through the cellar while nobody was in the house.

Bebe Daniels is back from two weeks in Dallas, Texas, her birthplace. Dallas, according to all accounts, rose nobly to the occasion in welcoming the Realart beauty whose fame has added luster to the civic name.

Edith Roberts has just given a house-warming to celebrate her entrance into her new home, in Laurel Canyon, in the Hollywood foothills. The list of the names of the people who called to pay their respects to Miss Roberts would sound like a “Who’s Who in Filmland.”

As soon as Carmel Myers returns to Universal City from New York, where she has been since Christmas, she will begin work on “The Dangerous Moment,” a story by Douglas Doty, under the direction of Mardel de Sanis.

Rozelle Now Managing
Metro in Windy City
Change in Branch Direction
Effective January 17—
Is Capable Official
Among the changes made in the personnel of Chicago exchanges recently was the appointment of L. A. Rozelle as branch manager of Metro. Rozelle succeeded J. A. Greiver who was to have taken active part in the management of three Chicago theatres, the Rose, Alcazar and Boston.

Was First With World
Mr. Rozelle first entered the motion picture field in 1910 when he joined World Film Corporation and was soon appointed Chicago branch manager under Ricord Gradwell, then president and general manager of World. He and Gradwell had previously been engaged in the typewriter industry and his thorough knowledge of salesmanship acquired in that line stood him in good stead in his new field of endeavor.

He held this post until the World exchange was taken over by Selznick Enterprises and later joined Robertson-Cole as assistant manager.

Prominent With Exhibitors
Following through with an established business policy, Mr. Rozelle applied the motto of “a fair and square deal for everybody” at the start of his film career and it has gained for him a reputation for honesty and fairness among the exhibitors of the Central West that will long endure.

Mr. Rozelle was born in Brentwood, Tenn., is a great lover of golf and when not in his office spends his time on the links of the South Shore Country Club.

Frank Zambreno Buys
New Cuneo Production
Frank Zambreno, president of the Unity Photoplays exchange, has purchased the rights for his territory to "The Ranger and the Law," Lester Cuneo's latest starring production. He will back it with an elaborate exploitation campaign.

Si Greiver on Trip
Si Greiver of Russell-Greiver-Russell is in the East disposing of rights to two Lester Cuneo productions, "The Ranger and the Law" and "Lonely Hand Wilson."

Universal’s Showing
Arrangements have been made to give a special showing of "Outside the Law," the big Universal feature starring Priscilla Dean, at Barbee's theatre on Thursday, Jan. 27. It is expected about 400 exhibitors will attend.

Times Changing
A few years ago home offices of film companies used to look to New York, Philadelphia and Washington for men to fill responsible positions.

During the past year there has been a series of drafts on Chicago talent for the big places. One of the latest to "go up" is Stan Waite, who has been named manager of Pathé's Boston exchange. A half dozen others are scheduled for something big.

Look over Chicago's collection of live wire exchange men and guess who's next.

Rothacker Addresses
Publicity Men's Club
Semi-monthly Meeting Enlivened by Interesting Talk from Chicago Manufacturer
The Chicago Motion Picture Press Club turned out in force at its regular meeting last Friday at the Stratford Hotel to greet Watterson R. Rothacker, president of Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, who gave an interesting talk on matters pertaining to the industry. He also suggested methods to combat adverse legislation and uplift the screen.

President Daniel Roche presided at the meeting and the following were elected to serve as officers: Irving Mack, secretary, to succeed Barney Ziv; Ralph Kettering, treasurer, and Harry Rice was made chairman of the entertain ment committee, to arrange for speakers and provide entertainment.

After the luncheon was disposed of Mr. Rothacker in an impromptu address outlined a plan by which the club could become a valuable adjunct to the motion picture industry. He suggested that the club's president get in touch at once with the N. A. M. P. I. and throw its strength into the present local censorship fight by offering the national body every assistance in its national campaign. Mr. Rothacker also outlined a plan whereby the club could become a valuable booster for the screen and counteract much of the adverse criticism that is leveled at individuals and companies in the field. Mr. Rothacker was tendered a vote of thanks by the members at the conclusion of his remarks.

Sidney Goldman Places
Ince's "Lying Lips" in Barbee’s Loop Theatre
"Lying Lips," the special made by Thomas Ince for Associated Producers, has been booked by Barbee's Loop theatre, Chicago, for an indefinite run. Sidney Goldman, local manager for A. P., announces that the feature will open on February 6.

Florence Vidor is one of the principal characters in the picture, about whom advance reports have been highly enthusiastic.

Ascher Peoria House
Reports Big Business
Ascher's Palace theatre, Peoria's newest playhouse, which opened January 6, is doing a record business, according to the announcement of Ascher Brothers. "The Branding Iron," "Dinty," "Scratch My Back" and "Dangerous Business" have been shown. The playhouse cost $500,000.
SHOTS AND MISSES

By Mac

We note Joe Gilder is buzzing around the local exchanges seeking an opportunity to get into the film business again. Many of the oldtimers will recall the Gilder boys, who formerly operated the old Forum theatre at 56th and Calumet Avenue. Best of luck, Joe.

Another of the ‘Hodah clut’ is now in our midst, Art Hodah being transferred from the Boston Pathe office to relieve Stan Warte, who leaves for the East to become the Pathe Boston manager. Welcome to our city, Art, and our best wishes to you, Stan.

With all arrangements of the new Associated Producers exchange now completed, Manager Sid Goldman is a beaming with the off smile as of yore. And by the way, have you all noticed ‘Bravette Tim’ stepping about. We thought Devon Bowman was a Pathe fixture. Looks like Sid is starting a little league of nations all his own.

J. Whitley has just purchased the Redart theatre from the Sultan Amment Co and contemplates overhauling the house and adding many new features for the comfort of his patrons.

The bowling teams of the local Vitagraph and Unity Photoplay exchanges will cash on the Bensinger alleys January 24 for a purse of $1000. This gala event will be reported minutely in our next. May the best team win.

With Bob Lucas reporting Kisner taken care of throughout this territory, looks to us as though Division Manager Hansen dropped off at Chicago to give the booking sheets the once over and show the other boys how to put the big money getter across.

The sale of the Grove theatre by E. E. Dorris to Max Rubin of Chicago was reported effective last week.

If you want to see a poppy sales team go into action just give that Robertson-Cole gang your attention when the charming Stella Jacobs comes around to tell the boys to get their expense accounts ready. Makes those West Point cadets look like a flock of depot brigade rookies on parade.

With the city telling the boys they must be out of the Loop by midnight January 31, there should be plenty of fireworks next week in the mad scramble for shelter on the South Wabash avenue sector. Thurot, Robertson-Cole Co, Pathe, Famous Players, Fox, Associated Producers, Pioneer Films, Superior Screen, Blackstone Pictures, Hodkinson, Suhl Films, American Films, and New Era are permanently located. Understand by February 1, Vitagraph, Celebrated Players, Goldwyn and Unity Photoplays will be cared for.

Hunter Bennett, vice president and general manager of the National Exchanges, Inc., is expected to drop in on Chicago for a brief visit in a week or so.

J. Brockett of Chicago, is the new owner of the Park theatre, having acquired this pretty North avenue house a few weeks ago and with the many valuable showmen tips Brother Barney of Moline can slip him should make a big getaway with this theatre.

Neil Duffy, Elite theatre, Appleton, Wis. William Eastern, Colonial theatre, Danville, Ill., and Gus Birkson, Blackstone theatre, South Bend, Ind., were in the city last week sort of giving our leading film men a chance to argue the relative merits of their several offerings.

Oscar Floren is now guiding our driveways a nifty 1921 Lexington sedan, so all in all we agree with Ose—the life of a film purveyor is not the woes of careers.

Report Shubert Seeks To Buy "Barbee's Loop"

Barbee's Loop motion picture theatre is reported as being sought by Lee Shubert, theatrical impresario, with a view of making it the home of stage productions. It is regarded as unlikely that Shubert will be successful as the theatre has proved a big success as a motion picture house.

EXHIBITORS HERALD
"Mother, dear, will our cow go to heaven when she dies?" "No, my child." "Then, will we have to go to hell for our milk?"—Greenville (S. C.) Piedmont.

We wonder if every time there's an earthquake in California the cows give milk shakes.—Cleveland News.

You noticed the difference in your bottle of milk today, of course. More price at the top.—Detroit Free Press.

Senior: "What makes you so little?"
Freschman: "My mother fed me on canned milk and I'm condensed."—Washington Review.

The price charged for cow's milk nowadays is enough to get your goat.—Rutgers.

In these days of adulteration, first thing we know they'll be running milk trains without a cow-catcher.—North Adams (Mass.) Herald.

Some poor city children visited a farm. Each was given a glass of milk. "Well, boys, how do you like it?" "Fine, I wish our milkman had a cow."—Dallas Morning News.

For Sale: Cow that gives five quarts of milk a day, also two grindstones and one set of harness.—Wantage Free Press.

Mistress: "I saw the milkman kiss you this morning. In the future I will take the milk myself." Jane: "It would be no use, mum. He's promised never to kiss anybody but me."—White Boag.

Our idea of a scientific nut is the fellow who tried to graft a strawberry plant to a milkweed to get strawberries and cream.—Pathfinder.

City Guy: "Tell me, how's the milk maid?"
Country Lass: "It isn't made, you poor nut, the cow gives it."—Cornell Widow.

News Item: The crushes on the Selby cars at 6 p. m. are getting to be something fearful. Last night a woman was so jostled that one of her ears became uncovered.—St. Paul News.

It is our masculine notion that fashion might compromise and let the girls wear one ear each.—Toledo Blade.

The way they dress now, some of the girls show about everything but their ears and their judgment.—Ohio State Journal.

Perhaps it is to dispense the saying "little children should be seen and not heard" that modern girls decree their "little ears shall hear but not be seen."—

There, little ear puff, don't you cry; you'll be a bustle, by and by.—Syracuse Herald.

"Will side whiskers ever come into fashion again?" asks a reader. Ans.—"They're in fashion now. The girls are wearing 'em over their ears."—Regina (Sask.) Post.

A donkey has two great big ears, and keeps them standing in the air. I think a girl's a donkey, too, who covers her's with wads of hair.—North Adams (Mass.) Herald.

It is all right for a girl to imprison her ears under her hair, but she ought to let them out sometimes for exercise.—Calverton News.

"I notice Susie's wearing her hair a la Robert." "How's that?" "Bobbed."—N. Y. U. Alumni.

"I'm sure crazy about my gal's puffs." "Wear her hair pretty?" "Nix, cigarette smoker."—The Sun Dial.

From Motion Picture News Review of "Black Beauty"

In picturizing Anna Sewell's famous classic, "Black Beauty," Vitagraph is deserving of unbounded praise. The lovable story, which has been translated into many languages and read by millions all over the globe, has been visualized with genuine artistic appreciation and should meet with popular approval everywhere.

It has been necessary for Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester to incorporate an "inside" story which would strengthen the "outside" story and give it dramatic expression. The tale the Chesters have written is a simple one of heart interest and romance and harmonizes perfectly with the life of the horse. The dovetailing of these stories shows splendid workmanship—a difficult task at best.

Appreciating the fact that "Black Beauty" is remembered even to this day, it is a credit to Vitagraph that it has been able to command and hold the attention by emphasizing the pathos, stressing the sympathy and incorporating a requisite amount of melodramatic incident.

Director Smith has treated the animal episodes like a born trainer. And his handling of the players calls for a word of praise.

The picture carries a thrill in the burning barn episode and another in the horse race across country. "Black Beauty" certainly possesses exploitation possibilities. Those who haven't read it have surely heard of it. And the exhibitor should have no trouble playing to capacity.

Detroit Exhibitor Says So-Called Box Office Titles on Poor Films Are a Detriment to Business

The following communication has been received by Exhibitors Herald from Fred Michelson of the Odeon theatre, Detroit, Mich.:

In looking over my records and paying particular attention to pictures I have played with suggestive titles I cannot help remarking that if more of these so-called "box office titles" are hung on pictures of no real merit the motion picture business is going to take a flop.

My patrons do not wish to be fooled by such bunk, and I feel sure that there are other exhibitors who long for proper titles to pictures in keeping with the plot.

The time has passed when you can fill your house showing such stuff and disappoint your audience and then expect them to rally around one of these "box office titles" in the near future.

More harm has been done to theatres making a practice of booking these pictures than ten breakdowns with the projection machines could do in one night.

Let's stand together, fellow exhibitors, and refuse to play such stuff. I might set down a few examples of pictures in this class, but I do not think it necessary.

"Speaking of ears, of course, you know why they've been keeping 'em covered?" "Yes! Why?"—N. Y. Daily News.

From the New York Sunday Telegraph Review of "BLACK BEAUTY":

"It is a picture that shines out like a good deed in a naughty world."

"The picture is just about perfect in its details."

"The picture is a high tribute to the artistic ability and the patience of its director, David Smith."

"As for 'Black Beauty' himself, Man O' War could not have played the role with more finesses."
WHEN the patrons of your theater exclaim over the wonderful screen effects, they are paying a tribute not only to the director and producer but to the quality of the film that makes such pictures possible—

In all the motion picture theatres of the Nation where big pictures and good pictures are being shown—there you find patronage heavy and exhibitor profits assured.

In every city where the amusement business has been "off" it has been in the $2.00 or $3.00 theatres, and not in the motion picture theatres Out of 2,000 Associated Producers' exhibitor-customers we have not heard twenty complaints of poor business.

"Best Straight Melodrama in many a day"

M.P. NEWS

"JANUARY 6th is rather early" says MOTION PICTURE NEWS "to make predictions for twelve months, but if "OUTSIDE THE LAW" doesn't prove to be the best straight melodrama of the year then 1921 will see the release of more great pictures than any preceding period of equal length.

"Beginning with some carefully planned scenes that succeed in giving the production atmosphere and establishing sympathy for the leading characters, especially Miss Dean and Wheeler Oakman, the picture builds from sequence to sequence with perfect suspense, good incident and excellent action until its thrilling and dramatic climax, in which Lon Chaney, Mr. Oakman and a dozen others, including Miss Dean, mix it in a way that carries the spectator off his feet and makes him forget that he is looking at a picture.

"If they like action and real drama and thrills, they will like this. It is there from every angle."
IT'S only the dub producer who thinks a serial has to be full of horrible thrills to draw the crowds. Only the dub who relies on his torture chambers to "grip 'em." And it's only the dub producer who gets into trouble with the Censor and finally falls down, with his serial only half completed and your schedule all shot to pieces because of his failure to exercise common sense.

Universal knows—and you know—that it's suspense, not rough stuff, that makes a serial—clean action, clean-cut, not hackings and killings, that makes a chapter-play draw. And Universal, for a long, long time has been making the world's best serials right along these lines. Because Universal knows—and you know—that a serial, today, must be made for the whole family. It must be fast—it must be thrilling—but, most of all, it must be clean.

See "THE DIAMOND QUEEN" at your very first opportunity. It's a first class example of Universal's unique ability to make a serial that appeals equally to Father, Mother, Sister and Brother Jim.

Educational Has Made Good Every Promise to Exhibitors

EDUCATIONAL FILM EXCHANGES, Inc.
E. W. HAMMONS, President
Look Here!

Educational promised to have its own distribution in every key center within one year. That promise was made good in seven months. There are thirty-six Educational Exchanges operating today.

Educational promised Super Specials in terms sounding like the usual superlatives too familiar to exhibitors.

The New York Times did not feel it was indulging in superlatives when it called our “The Race of the Age” “an epoch-marking event in the motion picture industry.”

Educational promised comedies of sustained high quality throughout a year’s releases!

Right now—exhibitors are selecting from six distinct types of Educational Comedies, each of which is the best of its kind.

Educational didn’t have to promise the best scenics and travel pictures—its product in this short subject field has long been without rivals.

Educational now also releases the best News Weekly ever offered nationally to exhibitors. This news service started January 30th, enabling every exhibitor in America to make complete programs from Educational product—with the sole exception of features.

Martinot, the great pianist, thought he wanted a wife with fire, passion and temperament. What he really wanted was someone to keep his hair cut, his chops well done and his conceit unharmed. The story of how he learned his lesson will make your patrons ache with laughter.

Records Topple. Both at New York's Strand

and Buffalo's Criterion

"The Devil" has been shown at only two theatres.

The premier presentation at "The Strand," New York, broke the enviable record made by "Kismet," the high record for the house.

At "The Criterion," Buffalo, the picture broke the record held by "Humoresque." In consequence it has been held over for another week.

Tremendous crowds and enthusiastic audiences at both theatres prove that "The Devil" is one of the very great pictures of all time.

Made by exhibitors for exhibitors it is offered to exhibitors for what it is—a phenomenal box office attraction.

"The Greatest Comedy"

That's what every reviewer says and many say it is the greatest in entertainment ever presented

All Showmanship

It is only simple justice to congratulate Charles Chaplin on his four-fold role of producer, star, director and scenario writer and to assure the film world that "The Kid" is entitled to a place at the head of the Grade A Chaplin releases. "The Kid," long expected, is worth every second of the waiting. The Charles Chaplin six-reel feature will receive a rousing welcome from public and exhibitors.

"The Kid" is all showmanship. It will delight the boys and girls and their mothers—after their fathers have sampled the picture for themselves and put up the money for a treat for the rest of the family.

Will Set New Records

Chaplin's "The Kid" lives up to expectations, which is saying considerable. Perhaps no picture has ever been ushered into official being with so much to recommend it from an exhibitor's standpoint.

It is actually a drama, developed with a splendid lot of highly original and absolutely new incidents, played in an exaggerated tempo with such skill, not only by the star, but the entire cast so well written, that the result is a high class comedy.

Mr. Chaplin and his principal comedy assistant, the child player, Jackie Coogan, earn their laughs by legitimate methods.

There is no doubt that "The Kid" is going to receive the attention of the entire picture-going public and if it doesn't set new box-office records our judgment is badly at fault.

Will Live Forever

"The Kid" is worth waiting for. It is Chaplin's best picture.

It will live when other pictures have died. Its pathos is universal in its appeal; its humor is classic.

We think that he is a humanitarian. He understands the hearts of the irresponsible, the children and the willing failures of the world. Even the broadest humor of "The Kid" is touched by the whimsical and the pathetic.

The joys of "The Kid" cannot be catalogued. They must be seen.

Chaplin's co-star is little Jack Coogan, the most delightful child on the screen. Jack is a miniature Chaplin. Some very fine acting also is done by Edna Purviance, who beats the emotional actresses at their own game.

Chaplin's Greatest

"The Kid" leaves little room for argument; there will be few if any who will not regard it as one of the greatest box office attractions since the commencement of pictures. It is that type of picture that can return again and again.

"The Kid" is an extraordinary medley of pathos and humor, accomplishing in no uncertain manner an amount of strength and heart interest that is seldom seen. It is unlike anything that has ever previously been done. It fits under no known classification. It stands alone. Unless all indications fail, this Chaplin feature will be a sensational box office attraction, winning and holding the public's favor for many a year.

Jackie Coogan, that delightful youngster, registers so convincingly that many will acclaim him the real star of the play. The little fellow's scenes are certainly superb. Of considerable pictorial importance is Miss Edna Purviance, who is exceedingly beautiful. It is probably the finest work of her career.

The public will in turn laugh and weep and as the final is flashed on the screen they will regret that the picture is ended—which to our minds is just about the acid test of a great picture.

Chaplin returns to the screen in his greatest picture, great as a comedy and great as a drama. In it he is a master of dramatic as well as comedy situations. "The Kid" hits the bull's-eye as a box office attraction.

A Knockout

"The Kid" is a knockout. That's all. This tells the story in a nutshell.

If you don't get this—it's your own funeral. Because it's all THERE anywhere you look at it.

The story is there with a wallop. A synopsis cannot begin to do justice to the innumerable bits of real humor, of real comedy, that, interspersed as they are, contribute to making this one of the greatest pictures you ever had a chance to look.

Little Jackie Coogan is "The Kid." A newcomer with a real personality, he is immense. Edna Purviance has a mighty good part, and Charlie—well, he is the same old irresistible laugh maker that he has always been.

That Zealous Minority

By MARTIN J. QUIGLEY

The censorship situation now existing in Chicago is typical of the origin, growth and the carrying on of censorship agitation throughout the nation. An understanding of the Chicago matter sheds considerable light on the problem the industry is facing here and elsewhere.

An outstanding feature of the Chicago situation which is characteristic of the agitation wherever it exists is that the entire matter is a product not of public thought and opinion but due wholly and directly to the zealous interference of a little group of professional agitators who are practically without standing or influence in the various professions and vocations with which they are identified. Individually they are the vagrant atoms of humanity that mean little to the community with which they are identified but banded together in the common cause of minding someone else’s business they find themselves in a flattering position of superficial prominence which appeals very much to their own idea of their importance.

It is this type of petty agitator who believes that his individual thought is public opinion. When he discovers by some process of clear thinking, unusual to him, that his notions are at variance with those of the general public he immediately concludes that the public is deluded and forthwith his activities take a spurt with the idea that the benighted public is dependent upon him to lead it out of darkness.

The writer has more than the ordinary observer’s information concerning the calibre and the activities of the group that has been engaged for some time in censorship agitation in Chicago. At the outset of the work which was represented to be intended to follow lines of sanity and intelligence he was identified with the matter as secretary of the commission which had the inquiry in hand and continued in that capacity until the proceedings took on a farcical aspect and the meeting hall became nothing more than an echo chamber for vapid and bigoted mouthings from persons blinded to any true understanding of the problem by prejudice and misunderstanding and impelled largely by an egotistical desire to dictate to the motion picture industry.

After many months of this sort of thing the commission just naturally died. But a little coterie not content with the natural demise, after many futile efforts to put life back in the body as a whole took it upon themselves to function for the commission that had passed away and proceeded to write a report and prepare a proposed ordinance. The resulting report is an odd document. It is a queer miscellany of random views of many persons who did not even claim to know motion pictures or censorship. Represented in the symposium are such types as Arthur Burrage Farwell, Chicago’s ghost of Anthony Comstock, and specialists on children’s diseases. Careful reading of the report can only cause the reader to wonder what it is all about.

As a contribution to the literature on the subject of censorship it is utterly valueless, partially because information from persons who did not know was solicited and accepted and partially because preconceived prejudices of the framers of the report made it impossible for them to consider the motion picture in any other light than responsible for juvenile delinquency, the crime wave which had not yet commenced, and possibly the European war.

There is but one weapon with which to combat censorship agitation. It is valid public opinion. The public does not want censorship. If it was dissatisfied with the product as a whole that producers are turning out it would not be necessary for it to await the enactment of any laws because merely by the withdrawal of its patronage at the box office it could effect an immediate and decisive change. If the industry did not have the public’s endorsement there would still be no need of censorship laws because there would be no pictures to censor.

On the censorship proposition all that the industry wants in Chicago or elsewhere is that the voice of the majority, and not that of an infinitesimal minority, be listened to.

to the declaration of Timothy D. Hurley, grand mogul of Chicago censorship agitation, to the effect that if he was in power he would never pass "The Kid" which is about as vicious as Longfellow's "Evangelie."

We do not agree with those who claim that censorship is a producers' problem nor with those who argue that the defense should be put forth by the exhibitor. Censorship is a menace alike to every branch of the industry and the industry as a whole should and must meet the attack.

Showmanship of a type which is detrimental to the welfare of motion pictures in a degree out of all proportion to the importance of the occasion of its manifestation was observed at one of the big Chicago chain theatres recently when the orchestra, accompanying with properly syncopated music a cartoon comedy, interpolated the national anthem because a cartoon character was delineated as forcing burlesque Bolsheviks to sing it. A capacity audience was brought to its feet protesting and left standing when, after the first few bars had been played, the orchestra again swung into "jazz" measures.

Auditorium comment was of such nature as to counteract the good effect of an otherwise exceptionally well balanced program. The theatre, depending upon the public for support in its fight for freedom from oppression of various types, cannot afford this class of management.

With the approach of "The Queen of Sheba" a "Big Four" announcement from Mr. William Fox would not be out of order in view of being able to present at a single time a quartet of such attraction magnitude as "While New York Sleeps," "Over the Hill," "The Connecticut Yankee" and "The Queen of Sheba."

Occasionally the industry produces unpretentious little pictures that proceed along quietly until when they finally reach the screen they are found to be just what the public is looking for. Such a picture was "Twenty-three and a Half Hours Leave," which now seems to have a logical successor in "Hold Your Horses."

Students of censorship will be interested in the declaration of Timothy D. Hurley, grand mogul of Chicago censorship agitation, to the effect that if he was in power he would never pass "The Kid" which is about as vicious as Longfellow's "Evangelie."

Company Is Organized to Sponsor Theatre Circuit in Leading Cities
To Play Only Big Film Productions

"Exhibitors Herald" Learns That Enterprise Is Headed by Powerful Factor in the Theatrical World

FORMATION SURROUNDED WITH SECRECY

[Copyright by Exhibitors Herald: 1921]

NEW YORK, Feb. 1.—EXHIBITORS HERALD has been reliably informed that a circuit of legitimate theatres has been organized for the purpose of playing the largest and finest film productions after the manner of first class theatrical attractions. The company sponsoring the circuit has already been formed.

Though the company has surrounded its movements with the utmost secrecy, and while its name and the make-up of its personnel are not known, EXHIBITORS HERALD is in possession of sufficient information to say that the circuit is a fact.

According to EXHIBITORS HERALD sources of information, the company is headed by one of the most powerful figures in the theatrical world. This power is understood to own or control a number of theatres in different big cities which are to be linked together to form the chain over which the big film productions are to be routed.

The theatres forming the circuit are understood to be legitimate theatres with an established two dollar patronage which, it is expected, will be ready-made audiences for the type of motion picture shows the circuit intends to present.

The scale of admission prices to be charged, it is said, will correspond with that set up for first class spoken plays. The top price will probably be $2.00.

Such pictures as are booked over the circuit are to be presented in a manner comparable to the presentations given the best traveling shows. Stress is to be laid upon that sort of showmanship which will attract those willing to pay the same prices as those prevailing at first-class legitimate houses.

Bookings will not be made to cover certain periods but for runs which are to continue as long as business warrants.

Anybody who has a picture which is considered by the new company as being big enough for the circuit will be able to obtain bookings. With the number of big productions steadily growing, it is pointed out that the circuit should have no difficulty in choosing its attractions.

The circuit plan, which aims to increase the receipts of meritorious productions as well as to develop a new motion picture clientele, is a subject, however, upon which there is a variance of opinion between producers and exhibitors on one hand and exhibitors on the other. In the past the presentation of big and costly pictures theatrical attractions has always met with strong opposition from exhibitors.

It is no secret that there are analytical film men who feel that unless the costly productions are played in the plan of the theatrical attraction plan before they reach the bona fide exhibitor the time will eventually arrive when the screen will be swept clean of such productions.

The argument is advanced that when a picture represents an investment of from a quarter of a million to nearly a million dollars, the present day rentals from straight motion picture theatres do not reach a volume large enough to bring in a profit and, in some cases, return the cost. Only in the theatrical exhibition method with its high scale of admission prices and long runs can a vexatious commercial problem be solved, it is declared.

To illustrate this argument, the case of "Way Down East" has been cited. This picture was played, for example, in a Brooklyn legitimate theatre where it took for its weekly share a net figure many times larger than that which it could have obtained, it is said, if the film had been booked in a bona fide motion picture house. The difference in intake, as shown in this case, makes it possible for the men with large sums of money involved in a picture to produce with profit, according to the argument made.

On the other hand, the exhibitor has always contended that he has been an instrument in making costly productions possible, and that, having fostered the costly effort through playing the less expensive pictures, he should not be arbitrarily denied the fruits to be derived from the very thing he helped develop.

The number of pictures involving vast sums of money continues to grow. Now showing are D. W. Griffith's "Way Down East," First National's Charlie Chaplin picture "The Kid," and the Kaufman-Holubar-Phillips production of "Man, Woman, Marriage." Metro has just completed "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" at a cost in round numbers of $1,000,000, while William Fox has a new one, "The Queen of Sheba," on which $500,000 is said to have been spent.

Whether any of these pictures will be played over the new circuit remains to be seen. But one thing is certain: the new circuit is a fact. So definite are the company's plans, in fact, that an official announcement will be forthcoming probably within the next two weeks.
Jones, Linick, Schaefer Get Three Chicago Loop Houses

Immediate Transfer of Alcazar, Boston and Rose
Is Made by Saxe Amusement Company of Milwaukee and Jack Grauman

Jones, Linick & Schaefer have acquired and taken immediate possession of the Rose, Boston and Alcazar theatres in Chicago's loop.

This transaction occasioned more or less of a surprise in film circles. The three loop houses only recently had been purchased by Saxe Amusement Company of Milwaukee and Jack Grauman, former Chicago manager for Metro.

Incorporate as Jayeles Theatres, Inc.

The company, which will operate the houses, has been incorporated as Jayeles Theatres, Inc. George H. Moore, for ten years manager of the Orpheum, a State street theatre controlled by Jones, Linick & Schaefer, has been appointed manager of the three theatres.

High class pictures will be given first runs at the three houses. A policy of week runs will prevail. Remodeling and redecorating of the interiors of the three theatres is underway.

Promotions Are Made

In addition to the Madison street theatres, Moore will have the Lyric in State street under his management. Norman E. Field, general manager of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, has appointed George Burdick, former assistant manager of the Rialto, as Moore's assistant and treasurer.

At the Orpheum Walter H. Moore will succeed his father as manager. Starr Walsh, at present second assistant manager of McVicker's, will become first assistant manager of the Rialto. Edward Malone has been selected as second assistant manager at McVicker's.

J., L. & S Building
$1,000,000 Theatre

The first spade full of earth was turned on January 31 for the foundation of a new million-dollar Roseland theatre, which Jones, Linick & Schaefer is building in Michigan avenue at 110th place. The Roseland is the first of four new theatres which the company will build this year. This is another step in the company's plan of expansion.

The CHICAGO HERALD-EXAMINER Says

The ordinance (censorship measure before the Chicago city council) is unreasonable, and we hope it does not pass. The theory that an adult citizen needs the decision of somebody else concerning whatever he may or may not see or read or hear is not one which is growing in popularity in these parts.
Reports Indicate Industry Oversubscribes Relief Fund

Full Returns Probably Will Not Reach New York for Tabulation Before Another Week—Enthusiasm Shown During Drive

(From Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, Feb. 1—Returns received at Motion Picture Committee Headquarters from all sections of the country indicate the industry will go over the top in the drive to raise $2,500,000 for the Hoover fund for the relief of starving children in Europe.

Saturday, with only scattering returns, the total was over the half million mark. Since then, additional reports are pouring in so rapidly that the committee has been unable to tabulate them.

“Invisible Guest” Checks Received from Patrons

Both the motion picture committee headquarters and general headquarters received a flood of “Invisible Guest” checks in envelopes borrowed from theatres where people saw the film. Many theatres also furnished blank checks to patrons.

Unusually gratifying returns from Minneapolis, New Orleans, Indiana, Chicago, Detroit and Eastern Pennsylvania have been received. The returns attest the work the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry with hundreds of committees, the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, producers, exhibitors, exchange men, stars and other film workers.

Reported returns are being received and will be reported in the weekly progress reports that are being sent to all committee headquarters.

Robert Brunton Will Supply Financial Aid To Reliable Producer

(From Staff Correspondent)

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 1.—The Robert Brunton studios have effected banking connections which will enable them to financially assist reliable producers in the making of meritorious pictures, according to announcement by Brunton.

By this arrangement, which marks a distinct advance in the motion picture industry, producers will be able to receive substantial assistance in completing their financial arrangements for capital. In addition to this announcement Brunton said:

Shaw Declares Motion Pictures Serve Great Purpose

Noted English Writer Scores Agitators and Reformers Who Condemn Films on the Assumption They Have Pernicious Effect Upon Youth

GEORGE BERNARD SHAW, famous English writer, in a recent statement upholds motion pictures. In contradiction to the statements of reformers he declares that he has failed to find the immoral films. He says:

"I am glad that the police have at last testified to the civilizing influence of the pictures. I was once invited to a conference of eminent persons, including the headmaster of a famous public school for the purpose of checking the alleged pernicious effects of the cinema on the youth of the country. I heard the eminent persons speak with sincere horror of the immorality of the picture theater.

"I asked where the immoral films were to be seen, as I had visited cinemas in many European countries and had found their morals oppressively conventional, as might be expected from entertainments which have to be pre-suited to audiences of all classes and races, appearing simultaneously in cathedral towns and Chinese seaports, model villages and urban east ends.

"The eminent persons were unspeakably shocked at my assuming that they had actually seen what they were denouncing, or that they had ever been in a picture palace in their lives. Besides myself there was only one man present who spoke from personal experience of the pictures, and he was the master of a school for defective children in a very poor neighborhood. He testified eloquently to the value of the picture palaces as a refuge from the streets for children who had to be locked out while their mothers were out working.

"What other chance have such children of seeing well dressed people in handsome houses, behaving themselves courteously? If it makes them discontented with squalor and poverty and savage manners, so much the better.

"Such restlessness is far more helpful socially than gambling, cruelty to animals and theft, which are the alternative excitements offered by the pious people who would have them banished from the movies."

Adolph Samuels Goes to Europe to Obtain Rights to Negatives

Adolph Samuels, president of South- eastern Pictures Corporation with exchanges at New Orleans and Atlanta, is en route to Europe where he will visit England, France, Italy, Switzerland and Germany.

At the time of leaving, Mr. Samuels in heated that he would return with several negatives of elaborate European productions.

Mr. Samuels is prominently known in film circles. He has been active in the theatre business since the early days of the industry. While at one time he controlled a chain of twelve houses in New York, the company of the picture theater.

H. G. BALLANCE

Ballance Succeeds Kent as Sales Head

Former Exhibitor Named to Important Position in Zukor Organization

S. R. Kent, general manager of distribution, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has announced the appointment of H. G. Ballance to the position of general sales manager, the post which Mr. Kent himself recently relinquished when he became head of the corporation's distributing activities. The appointment takes effect immediately, Mr. Ballance coming to his new duties from Boston, where he has been district manager in charge of the Boston and New Haven exchanges.

Started As Exhibitor

The record of Mr. Ballance reads not unlike that of Mr. Kent and others of the prominent younger executives of the industry who have reached the top. He entered the motion picture field some seven or eight years ago as an exhibitor in San Diego, Calif. He later opened a state rights exchange in Denver which he conducted for two years, when he joined the Metro organization as branch manager at Los Angeles.

In July, 1918, Mr. Ballance joined the Paramount organization, in charge of the Los Angeles Exchange, and from the moment he took charge of the office he steadily gave evidence that he was one of the best sales executives on the Paramount staff.

Makes Record at Boston

Early last summer Mr. Ballance went East to take charge of the company's New England district as district manager, with headquarters in Boston. So excellent was the record which he made in this important position that when the time came to fill the office of general sales manager he was picked as the successor to Mr. Kent.

Wisconsin Exhibitors Take Reform Question to Public Convention at Milwaukee Condemns Censorship and Blue Laws—Pamphlets to Be Distributed to Patrons Throughout the State

(From Staff Correspondent)

MILWAUKEE, WIS., Jan. 27.—The adoption of resolutions condemning the blue laws and censorship, and the obtaining of legal advice to aid in combatants to the motion picture industry, were the two most important matters taken under consideration by the 100 exhibitors attending the mid-winter convention of the Wisconsin Exhibitors Association in the Colonial room of the Hotel Wisconsin on January 26 and 27.

The organization will issue a pamphlet which will contain data for and against the blue laws and censorship. This pamphlet will be distributed throughout the state and will be given to the patrons as they enter the theater.

Resolution Opposing Censorship Is Adopted

In regard to censorship this resolution was adopted: “Resolved, that we realize the necessity for the transmission of thought excels all other mediums of expression, heretofore known. We are fully cognizant of the responsibility which this fact entails upon us and this one organization was formed in part at least, for the purpose of a united and intelligent use of the screen. We believe the public are the sole judges of what goes on our screen and there are sufficient local police powers to keep from the screen obscene films.”

A resolution requesting that schools and churches showing pictures be obliged to operate under the same rules and regulations as the motion picture houses was adopted.

Oppose Music Tax

The attack of Arthur James upon the national organization and various state organizations was condemned by the convention delegates.

Action on the music tax proposition was taken in the following resolution: “Resolved, that this organization urge congress to modify the copyright laws of the United States so as to do away with the unjust tax imposed for the use of music in theaters.”

A resolution was passed commending the fearless stand taken by the editors of the various trade magazines in combating the censorship and blue law propaganda.

Rhode Attacks Reformers

Joseph G. Rhode, president of the organization, in addressing the members, said: “The agitators of Sunday closing laws have developed a strong national organization which is working quietly, but effectively, and they will have the country bottled before the public knows what has happened if something is not done.”

H. E. Schwahn, manager of several houses in Eau Claire, in a special delivery letter to W. F. Bauman, executive secretary outlined the conditions of his town and requested that the convention take some action. He wrote that the agitators in that city had requested the common council to pass an ordinance requesting the closing of motion picture houses on Sunday. The common council refused to pass the ordinance, and the Sunday blue law faction have appealed to the mayor and district attorney. The matter is still pending. When it comes up in the future the association’s attorney will act on behalf of the motion picture men in that town.

Meeting Date Not Fixed

The next meeting of the association will be held thirty days after the national convention in Minneapolis, the date of which has not been fixed.

Following are included some the exhibitors in attendance:

WILLIAM JACOBS, Lexington theatre, Milwaukee.
O. H. BROWN, Palace, Wausau.
F. E. WOLCOTT, Majestic, Racine.
J. N. PHALEN, Wisconsin, Waukesha.
J. H. WOLCOTT, Strand, Madison.

Famous Players and Koplar Compromise in Dispute Over Control of St. Louis Houses

Approximately 25 Per Cent of Amount Asked Is Paid for Theatres—Litigation Pending Several Months

ST. LOUIS, MO., Feb. 1.—Litigation over the control of seventeen St. Louis motion picture theatres between Harry Koplar and Famous Players Missouri Corporation, of which F. L. Cornwell, an attorney, is president, has been settled out of court, it is learned.

The settlement marks the end of battles—both legal and fistic—which followed a deal made last year by the Koplar interests, by which the control and operation of seventeen theatres was turned over to the Lasky-Missouri Corporation.

Get Less Than Million

Cornwell said today that the Koplars under the terms of the settlement would receive about 25 per cent of the $1,350,-000 which they had demanded. They will be paid partly in cash and partly in mortgages obtained by the theatre properties. The Koplars will receive none of the stock of Famous Players. According to Cornwell, the Koplars will receive for their so-called "little theatre," $240,000. These include the Novelty, Arco, Gravois and Lafayette.

For theatres controlled by the Koplars Greater Amusement Company, which includes the Kings, Pershing and Shenandoah, the Famous Players will pay $80,000. Twelve thousand dollars will be paid for the lease on the Royal theatre.

Depositions and other testimony taken during the progress of the litigation disclosed that the Koplar interests turned over their theatres to the corporation without the formality of a written agreement, having a verbal contract that the Famous Players were to control and operate the theatres for one month.

Details Not Divulged

The details of how the final arrangements for the purchase were to be made have never been divulged. The month during which the corporation was to control the Koplar theatres expired last May 12, when the Koplars tried to regain control of their interests.

At that time Harry Koplar declared he had not been able to collect any money from Famous Players Missouri Corporation, although he claimed it had controlled his theatres for one month and had taken over the receipts from the houses. On one occasion Koplar tried to regain possession of the Arco theatre. A fist fight followed between the Koplars and the employees of Famous Players Missouri Corporation.

Famous Players Missouri Corporation later obtained a temporary injunction to prevent the Koplars from interfering.

Indiana Manager Avert's Fire Panic

WASHINGTON, Ind., Feb. 1.—An audience at the Grand theatre sat through a night performance last week unaware that firemen were chopping holes in the stage to put out a fire that started when chimney sparks lodged in an old piece of framework.

Composure on the part of Manager R. H. Winn averted a panic. When he learned of the fire he directed that the orchestra play the loudest variety of jazz music. The crash of the instruments kept the patronage the din created by half a dozen firemen making holes in the metal roof. The odor of smoke was detected in the auditorium but no particular importance was attached to it.

Threatens to Close All Theatres if Convicted Of Blue Law Violation

SOUTH BEND, Ind., Feb. 1.—If threats of George J. Breinig, manager of a dance hall, are carried out, South Bend may be thrown into the midst of a rigid blue law observance of Sunday.

Breinig has arrested three times for running his dance hall on Sunday and has been freed twice by a jury in the city court. He says if he is convicted he will file charges against all offenders including motion picture house owners and others.

The state will take the third case against Breinig to the superior court. It is the contention of the prosecution that a jury cannot be picked for the city court that will weigh the evidence impartially, but that in the superior court the case will be heard on its merits.

ST. LOUIS, MO., Feb. 1.—Through a deal just consummated, Marcus Loew has taken a ten-year lease on the Kings theatre, Kings highway and Delmar boulevard, and will operate the house after February 27 as a vaudeville and motion picture theatre, according to announcements issued by William Gold- man, general manager of Famous Players Missouri Corporation, in whose control the Kings has been operating.

The deal involves the closing of Loew’s Garrick in the downtown business district of the city on February 16. Loew told a representative for Exhibitors Herald last week that the easing of the Kings theatre would in no way affect the construction of the proposed $1,000,000 State theatre at Eighth street and Washington avenue, in which work will be started within a few days. "There is going to be a tremen- dous revival in motion picture theatre building in St. Louis," Loew said, "and we are going to give it a good start." The Kings will be known henceforth as "The Kings Theatre Playing Loew’s Vaudeville."

Blue Laws and Censorship Meet
With Defeat in Southern States

The legislature of Tennessee by an almost unanimous vote decided to take no action on Sunday blue law and censorship legislation. In South Carolina the senate educational committee reversed a recent decision and voted unanimously against censorship of motion pictures. The committee voted to accept the plan of giving city and town authorities to regulate theatres and films.

Alva Lumpkin represented the exhibitors and Jack S. Connolly the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry in the South Carolina fight.
National Board of Review Lists “40 Best Photoplays”

Scans Productions Published During 1920 for Those of Unusual Merit Which in a Way Peculiar to Each Tells an Effective Story

Another “Big 5”

The critique committee of the National Board of Review has made its selection for the next issue of “Exceptional Photoplays.” They are:

General Film Handles Output of Nordisk and Swedish Film Concerns

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 1.—Advices to the department of commerce report that General Film Releasing Corporation, Ltd., of London, has concluded an agreement to handle for the United Kingdom all the output of the Nordisk and Swedish Biograph Companies for a period of five years. This output, it is stated, will represent a yearly total of three-quarters of the British market, the turn-over value being estimated at 350,000 pounds annually.

Six super-special and ten ordinary features are required from the Nordisk concern each year, and twelve special Swedish Biograph pictures, in addition to short travel and miscellaneous films. The Swedish company has sent out four film expeditions to Kamchatka, Nova Zembla and the Kara Sea, to Central Africa, and to the fourth to tour the world. The first has returned with pictures of Arctic life.

Ohio Exhibitors Investigate Non-Theatrical Distribution

Theatre Men from Southern Part of State Will Confer With the Exchange Managers of Cincinnati on Proposition

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

CINCINNATI, O., Feb. 1.—The grievance committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Southern Ohio has been instructed to confer with exchange managers here relative to the distribution of films to non-theatrical institutions. A full report of the situation will be made at the next quarterly meeting.

Perfect Organization of League

A resolution incorporating these instructions was adopted at the first quarterly convention held at the Gibson hotel here on January 26 and 27.

The seventy-five exhibitors present perfected the organization launched at a convention some time ago. The constitution and by-laws were adopted virtually as drafted. President James A. Maddox presided.

F. F. Stoll Is Missing; Director Starts Action To Recover His Salary

(From Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, Feb. 1.—The mysterious absence of Frederick F. Stoll, president of the United States Photoplay Corporation, has come to light through action to recover salaries started by Harry McRae Webster, director, and Richard C. Travers, leading man, engaged in the making of the picture "Determination." Mr. Stoll has been absent from his office since December 14.

The directors announced that the corporation is in a sound financial condition and that the production of "Determination" will continue.

It is pointed out that the Capt. F. F. Stoll who has been mentioned in newspapers as "missing" is in no way connected with the Stoll Film Corporation of America which takes its name from Sir Oswald Stoll, one of the most distinguished and influential film magnates of Great Britain.

Mrs. Lillian Wells, president of the Women's Division of the Republican Organization, 13th Assembly District, New York City, made the following statement complementing the expression set forth in the foregoing resolution:

"I cannot understand why some of the women's organizations and clubs throughout the country have taken a stand against motion pictures. Our country is in a state of unrest, many people are unhappy, others are resentful. Some feel that those are being legislated against too strongly.

Lack Feeling of Freedom

"We are rapidly getting away from the great feeling of freedom that is really the backbone of pure Americanism. The things we want are more happiness, more laughter, more love and more play and these things will bring about more confidence, more happiness, more satisfaction and a better understanding and will eventually wipe out and automatically destroy social unrest, resentment and dissatisfaction."

"If the women's clubs throughout the country could have the motion picture situation intelligently explained to them there would be more unanomalous resolutions passed and forwarded to the various legislatures in the various states.

Industry's Cause Just

"The motion picture people have much to offer the world. We frankly appeal to women's organizations and explaining the situation. Their cause is just and the womanhood of America and the men who will love them." The meeting was addressed by Charles C. Pettijohn, chairman of the legislative committee of the National Association.

J. A. MADDOX

Four important bills pending before the state legislature at Columbus were discussed at great length. A decision was reached to place the entire legislative situation in the hands of a committee of three—Harry W. Kress of Piqua, chairman of legislative committee, President Maddox and Henry Lustig, president of the Northern Ohio Association.

Drastic Bills Are Up

One of the measures now before the legislature is an emergency censorship bill, while another is a blue law bill. Both are as drastic as have been introduced in any legislature in the country.

A resolution was adopted setting aside February 5 for the raising of funds for the European Relief Council. Many of the theatres of the Southern part of the state have been prevented from participating in the campaign thus far. Because of the desire of those present to cooperate with the other exhibitors of the country this action was taken.

Endorse Uniform Contract

Endorsement of the uniform contract plan drafted by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry was voted. The resolution read:

"Be it resolved by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Southern Ohio that we endorse the uniform contract plan drawn up by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and representatives of the National Association as outlined on page 41 of Exhibitors Herald, dated January 22, 1921." Dr. Alexander of Dayton was instructed to procure a copy of the contract for ratification.

Fred S. Meyer of Hamilton is chairman of the resolutions committee. Other members are Fred Tynes, A. G. Hettusheimer and Tony Zaller.

Resolution Asks Reform

(Worcester, Mass., Feb. 1.—Sunday closing agitation has cropped out here, the Christian Endeavor asking in a resolution that theatres be closed on the Sabbath.

What Exhibitors Are Saying About

EXHIBITORS HERALD

"Of all the trade papers we have, we prefer EXHIBITORS HERALD to all the rest. Your section, 'What the Picture Did for Me,' has been a great help in the booking of pictures, as there are certain people who contribute criticisms to this section regularly whose judgment I have found to be very sound and fair."—E. F. Ekman, Moseley & Ekman, Rialto theatre, Midland, Tex.

"Enclosed find our check for subscription, as we cannot keep house without EXHIBITORS HERALD."—A. W. Barth, Barth Theatre company, Condondale, Ill.

"I do not want to miss an issue of EXHIBITORS HERALD, as it is a very useful guide in selecting pictures."—Henry Mauvin, manager, La Place theatre, La Place, La.

"Best wish to EXHIBITORS HERALD, the best value to the exhibitors."—Sam Bowden, manager, Glen theatre, Glen Ellyn, Ill.
TIGHTENING PRODUCTION MAY STOP HAPHAZARD DABBERS

By C. H. CHRISTIE

Promoters should look first and then leap, says comedy producer

T he narrowing down of film production to a good working level, a process which is undoubtedly occurring at this time, will no doubt be an excellent thing for the industry in that its effect should be an elimination of the "haphazard dabbler," formerly an ever-present evil.

I do not mean to say that there are not new producers who can deliver the goods springing up constantly, but I emphasize the fact that there has been, particularly in Los Angeles, a flood of promoters who have gathered together a "bank roll" which on investigation usually means a stock-selling campaign and have dabbled in film production without the faintest idea as to whether the product is marketable or not, or without an idea as to what market they shall seek when their films are made.

PARTICULARLY in comedies has this flood been present. There is scarcely a day when we and others are not sought to "loan studio space" or to go "50-50" with some one who has an "idea" and a "little money." They have heard of gold mines in films.

They usually rent a small studio, make from one to three comedies, which usually never see the light of day, and then wake up to the fact that their promotion plans did not include looking over the market.

A former stage worker came in a few weeks ago and declared that he was now "making his own pictures." When asked as to what he was doing, he replied in a deprecating manner, "Oh, I am starting in a few weeks. I guess I'll knock out a few two-reels first!"

A NY sane-minded person knows that nobody with all the combined brains in the industry and a bank roll as big as Morgan's can "knock out a few two-reels" as easy as eating poached eggs for breakfast. But you can't convince the dabbler; and the worst of it is that they usually spend some one else's money—throw it in a rat-hole—and make it just that much harder for a legitimate film producing business to finance itself when it is desired to undertake something on a solid foundation and worth while.

Let's hope the dabbler will take stock of their prospects and in other words look first, and then leap.

Fort Wayne to Have New Modern Theatre

(From Staff Correspondent)

FORT WAYNE, IND., Feb. 1.—Within the next month the Kappel building, 113-117 East Wayne street, will be razed to make room for the proposed new theatre and hotel to be erected by Bankers and Merchants Theatres Company, according to announcement made by Albert F. Brentlinger, president.

The theatre will be a combination vaudeville and motion picture house and with the hotel will cost approximately $400,000.

Clark-Cornelius Company To Buy From Four Units

According to an announcement from Clark-Cornelius Corporation that organization will market during the coming year the product of four producing units. All of these pictures will be handled on the state right plan.

During the last few months the corporation has been marketing the productions of Chinax Film Corporation, "Love's Battle" and "The Fourth Face," as well as the Lejaren Hiller picture, "The Devil's Angel," starring Helen Gardner.

The Lafayette (Ind.) Courier Says

But won't they (reformers and censorship agitators) please permit us to retain that glorious human privilege of liking that which really entertains us? Won't they please refrain from branding us deluded victims of a degenerate age because we want a laugh or a thrill when we go to the theatre?
Chicago Film Men Prepare To Oppose Censorship Law

Fight on Proposed Ordinance to Be on Purely Business Lines—William A. Brady May Address City Council Committee

William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, is scheduled to arrive in Chicago Thursday morning, February 3, to give every possible assistance to Chicago film men in defeating the proposed new censorship ordinance in Chicago and the series of freak bills aimed at the industry which are to be introduced at the present session of the Illinois legislature.

It will mark the beginning of a tour, which will take him to most of the principal cities east of the Mississippi river and probably to several western states, for the announced purpose of arousing film men to the danger of the proposed legislation and establishing a more intimate contact between the various factors in the picture industry and the organization which he heads.

Will Address Mass Meeting February 4

Mr. Brady will be the speaker at a mass meeting to be held at 12:30 o'clock noon, February 4, at a downtown Chicago theatre, probably the Illinois. He will be the honor guest at a dinner given by exchange men and others at noon, February 3, and in the afternoon will attend the hearing on the proposed Chicago censorship bill at the city hall.

Preparations for the reception of Mr. Brady were made at a meeting of Chicago film men held in the offices of the A. A. A. Monday, January 31. At the same time, preparations for presenting arguments against the censorship ordinance were discussed.

Plan Business Defense

It was agreed that the defense on the censorship ordinance would be purely along business lines and that no time would be taken up with flowery addresses or appeals to sentiment.

Dr. Sam Atkinson will give the principal address to legislative committee of the Chicago city council, pointing out the inestimable damage which the ordinance would do to the film business. He will be followed by exhibitors and exchange men.

The committee in charge of preparing the industry's case includes: Watson R. Rothacker, president of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing company; P. A. Block, Chicago manager for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; William Ashmann, Chicago manager for Pathe; Harry Rice, representing the motion picture press club; Martin J. Quigley, publisher of EXHIBITORS HERALD; J. L. Friedman, president of Celebrated Players exchange, and Dr. Sam Atkinson.

Dr. Atkinson was placed in charge of the mass meeting at which Mr. Brady will speak. Ben Beadell, Chicago manager for Stoll Films, Carl Harthill, district manager for Reelcraft; Fred Aiken, vice president of the Superior Screen Service, and Maynard Schwartz, Chicago manager for Educational, are in charge of arrangements for the dinner to Mr. Brady.

Brady Itinerary Announced

From Chicago, Mr. Brady plans to go to Milwaukee to spend February 5 and from there to Minneapolis to spend February 7 and 8.

From Minneapolis, his plans are not definite. He will visit Idaho, Nebraska, Missouri and Oklahoma, where state censorship laws threaten. Denver and possibly the west coast may be reached before his return east.

"There is a great need of a full awakening to the necessity for complete cooperation and co-ordination by every branch of the motion picture industry," declared Mr. Brady in commenting upon his trip.

Reichenbach in Chicago

Harry Reichenbach, having seen "Outside the Law" safely launched in Boston, is now in Chicago where he will stay ten days exploiting the Priscilla Dean picture.

Plan to Resume Building

NEWARK, N. J.—Plans are under way for resuming operations in the building of the Newark Beacon Corporation's new picture theatre, halted last June because of excessive costs of building materials.

Royal S. Copeland

Prefers "Sizzling in Hell" to "Blue Laws"

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEW YORK, Feb. 1—"I'd just as soon sizzle in Hell for eternity as to suffer all day Sunday under the blue laws," is the reply of Dr. Royal S. Copeland, health commissioner of New York and member of the Sunday Rights Association to the program submitted by Wilbur Glenn Voliva, overseer of Zion City.

"Blue laws are the greatest blow religious leaders ever received," he added.

The Sunday Rights Association was organized to combat the restrictive Sunday legislation and is headed by Martin Vogel, New York, former assistant secretary of the treasury, and includes Bishop Elect Manning of the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of New York, Major Laguardia, president of the Board of Aldermen, and prominent officials and churchmen.

"Bill" Hart About

To Take Long Rest

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 1—William S. Hart has but one more picture to make under his present contract. With the completion of his ninth feature for Famous Players-Lasky, Hart declared that he would "lay around" for several months and perhaps for the rest of his life.

Mayer Selects Story For Stahl Production

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEW YORK, Feb. 1—"Muffled Drums," an original story by Perry V. Veekroff, has been selected by Louis B. Mayer for the first John M. Stahl production issued through First National. Barbara Castleton, engaged for the leading feminine role, left here Sunday. Stahl is engaging the rest of the all-star cast on the coast.

BERMAN IN HIS OWN HOME TOWN

Exhibitors in every section of the country know personally or have heard of Samuel I. Berman. They know of his signal success in organizing the theatre men of the country. But few exhibitors have seen Berman "in his own home town." Here he is and his Stanley theatre in Brooklyn, N. Y.
Reform Agitation Extends To All Parts of Country

Cities Menaced by Self-Appointed Censors--State Exhibitor Organizations Devise Ways of Combating Move for Regulation

The staff of EXHIBITORS HERALD has undertaken in the accompanying article to show the extent to which censorship agitation has made itself felt throughout the United States.

The reform movement for censorship of motion pictures is not confined to any one locality. It extends from Coast to Coast and from Canada to the Gulf of Mexico. As published in EXHIBITORS HERALD last week the industry must fight five times the amount of co-active legislation as heretofore. This fact is significant.

More statement of this fact, however, is not sufficient. To give an impressive idea of the range of the movement and its menacing influence the statement must be augmented by further details. Censorship legislation is pending in the following states:

- California
- Missouri
- Iowa
- Oklahoma
- Wyoming

While this tabulation gives a fair idea of the situation it must be realized that some of the most drastic regulations are sought in many communities.

Censorship agitators are decidedly active in the following cities and towns:

- Chicago
  - Grand Rapids, Mich.
  - Duluth, Minn.
  - Wilmette, Ill.
  - Baltimore
  - Superior, Wis.
  - Newton, Ind.
  - Minneapolis, Minn.
  - Elgin, Ill.
  - Harrison, N. J.

A movement running parallel with the agitation for legal regulation and which is as menacing as censorship and might eventually lead to it has become prevalent in several cities. In these communities reformers have appointed themselves as censors. Especially is this true in Atlanta, Minneapolis and Baltimore.

Censorship has become an actuality recently in Elgin, Ill., Superior, Wis., and Abilene, Tex. Either passage of ordinances or police orders have made regulation effective.

The reformers have not contented themselves with the introduction of one legislative measure in the various state legislatures. Four bills are up in Nebraska and two in both Indiana and Minnesota. So drastic are some of these measures that operation of motion picture theatres would virtually cease were they adopted.

State Meetings Held

Proof of the alertness of the state exhibitor organizations to the seriousness of the situation is shown by the recent conventions in Ohio, Missouri, Wisconsin, Louisiana, Mississippi, Virginia, Washington, D. C., Maryland and Massachusetts.

Dazey Loses Finger

In Motor Accident

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 1.—Frank Dazey, stage and screen playwright, was victim of an accident that cost him the index finger of his right hand.

While driving to the studios, his motor car collided with a truck. The finger was all but amputated by the ends of pipes that crashed through the windshield of his car and struck his hand as he clutched the steering wheel.

Nip Plot to Rob 15 Theatres in Chicago

Two Bandits Cracking Safe of Harvard Caught—One Is Wounded

Apprehension of two bandits, one of which was wounded in a running battle with police, is believed to have frustrated plans of burglars to rob at least fifteen Chicago theatres having heavy receipts over Sunday.

Lookout Yells Warning

The two bandits were working on the safe at the Harvard theatre, Sixty-third street and Harvard avenue, where the police were discovered in the alley. The alley aroused the suspicions of Mrs. H. G. Gaines, 341 West Sixty-third street. She notified the Englewood police station.

As the police drove up the lookout yelled a warning and the three fled. After a running fight with the police one of the fugitives surrendered. Another was killed with a shot from Patrolman Charles May, while the third escaped.

Carry Theatre List

Had it not been for Mrs. Gaines’ dog the three might have looted the safe of its $1,600. After midnight the dog began barking and refused to be silenced. Mrs. Gaines went to a window looking out on a private alley. There she saw a lookout. After watching him for several minutes she called the station.

In the possession of one of the cracksman was a list of fifteen odd theatres.

Burglars were also successful in robbing the Commercial theatre, 9148 Commercial avenue, and escaping with $1,492. The money was in a vault, and instead of forcing the door, they used a pickax on the wall and broke through.

Fox Stakes Much on Mark Twain Feature

After L. A. Success

Spurred by the success of “A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur’s Court,” in Miller’s theatre, Los Angeles, where it was given a preview, Fox officials are preparing and planning for one of the biggest booking campaigns of its career.

According to the Fox officials, no exhibitor will be allowed to book the feature until he has seen it screened at one of the Fox branches, desiring that the enthusiasm the patrons themselves have for this Mark Twain pictured story and then go out and put it over in the biggest possible way.

Harry Myers, who plays the Yankee, is said to have done admirable work and among the others whose work stands out are Pauline Stark, Rosemary Theby and Charles Clary. The scenario was written by Bernard McConville. Lucien Androit was in charge of the camera work.

Capital Moves Office

Capital Film Company has transferred its Chicago headquarters from the Consumers building in State street to the Hartford building, 8 South Dearborn street.

JEFFERSON CITY, MO., Feb. 1.—A blue law measure has been introduced in the legislature. It would permit Sunday baseball but would close all theatres.
Will Public Pay More For Mostly Pictures? First National Says That on Answer Depends Progress of Producer

(From Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, Feb. 1.—Does a big, worth-while production deserve to command higher prices at the box office than the average picture, or doesn’t it? Will the theatre-going public cheerfully pay more to see such productions in proportion to their increased ex- pense, or does it prefer the more common run features, or will they rebel against an advance in admission price?

First National asks these questions as the most important confronting the industry. It holds that on the answer depends the producers’ ability to continue progress as during the last twelve months exhibitors’ ability to continue showing attractions of the caliber to meet the public’s most fastidious demand.

First National holds that the outstanding productions this season proved the power to please at advanced prices in every case where the exhibitor had enterprise and foresight. As an example the response given Harry Crandall of Washington when he played “Passion” at his Metropolitan Theatre.

Crandall increased his admission price 10 cents per night with a night admission of 85 cents. He declared that the only mistake he had made was in not charging $1. During one week’s run Crandall took in $28,589 in receipts. The picture was held over for another week.

Cochrane Arrives At Universal City For Survey of Work

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 1.—R. H. Cochrane, vice president of Universal, arrived at Universal City today. It is his first visit here in several years. Both he and Carl Laemmle, president, will be at the studios during the coming month.

Hereafter, Universal announces that either Mr. Laemmle or Mr. Cochrane will be in Universal City most of the time. This will assure complete accord between the studios and the executive and distributing ends, which will result in greater efficiency and better pictures.

Universal now has the rights to “The Conflict,” the novel by Clarence Budington Kelland. Priscilla Dean will be featured in the production.

Lichtman and Feist Open Offices in N. Y.

(From Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, Feb. 1.—Al Lichtman and Felix Feist have opened offices at 409 Fifth avenue. Lichtman is away from New York for a month’s visit in Hollywood. The plans of the two are not divulged.

NEW YORK, Feb. 1.—First National announces that the publication date of Allsop’s “Husbands and Wives” has been changed to April.

Three Leagues Meeting In Washington Join National

Maryland, Virginia, District of Columbia Theatre Men Vote Unanimously to Endorse Cohen and the M. P. T. O. A.

(From Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, Feb. 1.—Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, announces that the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Maryland, Virginia and the District of Columbia in convention at Washington, D. C., voiced approval of the national league and voted unanimously to affiliate with it.

Jake Wells Permanent Chairman at Meeting

The convention was held on January 26 and 27 at the Hotel Arlington. A. Brylakowski, vice-president of the District of Columbia organization, was named temporary chairman. He immediately gave way to Jake Wells, president of the Virginia league, who was elected permanent chairman.

Well extends the thanks to the success in forming the national association under the leadership of Cohen. The national president then addressed the convention.

“We are organized not for profit but for protection,” he declared. “We have for the first time in the history of motion pictures a powerful and virile national organization consisting of thirty-eight states, none having a representation of less than 50 per cent, and the most ranging between 75 and 95 per cent.”

Cites League’s Purposes

Cohen said the purpose of the organization was first to make an effort to modify the 5 per cent film rental, the music tax and to fight Sunday legislation.

An attack on William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, was launched by Julian Brylakowski because of a few days previously by Brady before exhibitors of Baltimore and Washington. Brylakowski declared that Brady is using bolshievik methods to disrupt the M. P. T. O. A.

Varner Makes Accusation

“Evidently he and his employers are afraid of us and are trying to discredit our organization and leaders,” he stated. “They found out in New York that our organization stands 100 per cent back of its leaders which makes them all the more afraid.”

H. B. Varner also accused Brady and his cohorts of trying to influence some exhibitors with pretended friendship. He declared that they were more interested in creating dissension in exhibitor organizations than in co-operating with them in Sunday opening and censor- ship fights.

Goldberg Tells Incident

Thomas Goldberg, vice president of the Maryland exhibitors, said he had called the exhibitors together on January 25 at the request of Brady. He said Brady spoke supposedly for co-operation and on censorship. Brady, however, ad- vised Goldberg, according to the later, that he (Goldberg) had misunderstood him (Brady) and that Brady was against the M. P. T. O. A. and that there was no way to make a tour of a number of states.

Goldberg told the assembled exhibitors that he had to give Baltimore theatre men known Brady’s intention and feeling in the matter they would never have called a meeting and invited Brady to be present.

Harry Crandall talked on the practice of exchanges and manufactures furnishing films to non-theatrical organizations. Samuel I. Berman also talked.

Add Tiny Theatre To Metro Studios

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 1.—Metro lays claim to the smallest theatre in the world. It has a seating capacity for three persons, can be emptied in half a minute, and advertises only to keep patrons away. It has been dubbed “Viel- ler’s New Hundred Dollar Theatre.” The tiny playhouse was built adjoining Bayard Veiller’s offices at the Metro studios to permit the director to per- sonally supervise the titling of pictures.

Picture Men Join The Eagles’ Order

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 1.—Several well known members of the Hollywood Film colony were initiated into the Order of Eagles last Saturday night. Among the joiners were Charlie Murray, Buster Keaton, Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran, Roscoe Arbuckle, Billy West, Glen Cavan- der, Larry Semon and Leo White.

Go East to Premiere Of “Four Horsemen”

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 1.—Rex Ingram, who directed the Metro special production of “The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse,” and June Mathis, who prepared the screen version of Vicente Blasco Ibanez’ popular story, have left for New York where this picture will have its first showing.

Theatre for Lepers

PORT OF SPAIN, TRINIDAD.—A motion picture theatre is now in operation in Trinidad’s leper colony. Visiting Americans made the first showing. The orchestra is composed of girl lepers.

Adler Goes West

Bert Adler has succeeded Helen Rock- well as publicity man for Allan Dwan on the West Coast.
New Bay State Association Faces Revived Censor Fight

Jacob Lourie of Boston is President of Branch of National Organization—League Will Hold Convention Shortly

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

BOSTON, MASS., Feb. 1.—The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Massachusetts is facing a revival of the censorship fight of 1920.

Though only recently formed the organization has well developed plans for counteracting the sponsors of a new regulatory measure. Agitators believe they have eliminated the objectionable features upon which Governor Coolidge based his veto last year.

Operation of Law Would Cost $40,350

Provision is made in the measure for legal regulation under the supervision of the department of public safety, with a salaried official directly in charge. Three censors would review films, two appeals being granted from their decision. The third appearance would be made to the director and one to the commissioner of public safety.

The expenditure necessary to maintain censorship for one year under the provisions of the bill as drafted would total $46,350. It is estimated that the annual revenue, taxing $2 a reel for reviewing, would be $62,400.

Affiliate with National

The new league, which is affiliated with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, is directing considerable attention to its membership. Each is expected to enroll every exhibitor in the state so that a united front can be presented if the legislative situation warrants. A convention is expected to be called shortly.

Executives of the new organization include:

- Jacob Lourie, Boston, president.
- C. H. Ross, Boston, secretary.
- G. A. Ramsdell, Malden, treasurer.

In addition to the local committee on organization includes L. Boas, Mrs. Ayres, Boston, and Thomas Soriero, Lowell. The entire state is being canvassed for organization purposes.

Many Have Joined

Included in the membership are:

- New York, public theatre, Everett.
- ERNEST H. WHITE, Pastime theatre, Mass.
- GEORGE HUSON, Royal theatre, Lowell.
- LOUIS BOAS, representing twelve theatres in Massachusetts.
- NATHAN YAMINS, Plaza theatre, Fall River.
- CARL ALBERT, Xavonthea theatre, Auburn.
- GEORGE WRIGHT, Pull's theatre, Springfield.
- RAY W. AVERELL, Inn Square theatre, Cambridge.
- C. H. ROSS, Lancaster theatre, Boston.
- K. O. SMITH, Corner theatre, Boston.
- FRED HARRIS, Natick.
- JULIA RICHARD, Congregational, Lowell.
- JACOB LOURIE, Modern, Beacon and Shaw theatres, Boston.
- JOHN JOSEPH, New Haven, Malden.
- JOHN J. LEONARD, Town Hall theatre, Amherst.
- PHILIP DAUVILLE, Globe theatre, Holyoke.

- MISS PINKELSTEN, Fenway theatre, Boston.
- GEORGE F. BROWN, New Bedford theatre.
- POL'S THEATRE, Worcester.
- MICHAEL O'LEARY, 92 Old South Rd., Boston.

O'Reilly in Attendance

Charles L. O'Reilly of the executive committee of the M. P. T. O., New York, and Samuel I. Berman of the national organization, attended the meeting in Boston at which the state league was formed.

S. R. Kent Is Given Testimonial Dinner By Paramount Force

An impromptu testimonial dinner was given in honor of Sidney R. Kent, general manager of distribution for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, on Monday evening, recently, in the Gothic Room at Murray's, by a number of the members of the Paramount distribution organization, and a busy week in close business association with him.

Besides Mr. Kent, those present were: Assistant Treasurer Emil E. Shauer, H. G. Ballance, general sales manager; Frank V. Chamberlin, general service manager; H. M. Lewis and John W. Sparks, assistant managers; George W. Weeks, general manager, Canadian exchanges; Fred F. Cresswell, field sales supervisor; Melville Shauer, assistant sales manager; W. E. Smith, district manager, Philadelphia: H. H. Buxbaum, branch manager, New York exchange; Lester Rose, branch manager, Washington exchange; John D. Clark, branch manager, Philadelphia exchange; Jerome Beatty, director of publicity and advertising; Cloud Saunders, exploitation manager, and Oscar A. Morgan, editor of Paramount "Pep."

The dinner was a complete surprise to Mr. Kent, whose presence was secured only after he was tricked into breaking an important business engagement.

"Morosco" Opening Building in L. A.

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 1.—"Greenwich Village," the tiny city being constructed by Oliver Morosco, J. Harvey McCarthy and other associates, at the corner of Western and Melrose avenues, will be called "Morosco-town." The announcement was made following a recent conference of organizers of the novel community. It was announced, also, that a contract has been let for the construction of a six story block of studios there. Since the beginning of the work in that locality, real estate values are said to have increased 100 per cent.

Selznick to Widen News Weekly Scope

Myron and David Selznick to Supervise—Durinig Is Named Editor

Selznick News in View will be even more definitely a unit of the Selznick production output than in the past. It will be the only news weekly distributed henceforth by the Motion Pictures organization, and will be edited by E. V. Durinig under the direct supervision of Myron and David Selznick.

Elimination from the Selznick output of all other publications which might in any way conflict with Selznick News has been made. From Magazines the new news weekly less than a year ago, Mr. Selznick's instructions have been that nothing should be spared to make it the world's greatest news reel.

Seek Wide Distribution

Having become convinced that this screen newspaper is entitled to the undivided attention of all the department of this organization, for the promotion and distribution, Mr. Selznick has disposed of his conflicting interests and a drive has been launched to get Selznick News in every established theatre in the United States and Canada.

The production department of the weekly, in charge of Myron and David Selznick, will have the benefit of the studio organization which will cooperate constantly in working out features.

Durling Is Well Known

E. V. Durinig, the editor, is a graduate from the newspaper and magazine business and has a wealth of information as to the things the public wants. He was originally a member of the Selznick staff and more recently has been editing the organization house organ, "The Brain Exchange."

The new arrangements for Selznick News became effective Monday, January 17. Early issues of the film weekly are to uncover a lot of new ideas which have been incubating for some time.

Home Town Folks to Greet Will Rogers

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 1.—According to reports received, a Broadway theatre is planned for Will Rogers in his home town in Oklahoma which he will visit on his return from New Orleans. He is editing the organization house organ, "The Brain Exchange."

NEW YORK, Feb. 1.—W. Ray Johnston, vice-president of Arrow Film Corporation, who underwent a minor operation last week, has returned to his desk.
Mastbaum Opens $2,000,000 Stanley Theatre, Philadelphia, Beautiful Playhouse Which Represents the Most Advanced Ideas in Construction Will Accommodate 4,000 Persons

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

PHILADELPHIA, PA., Feb. 1.—The Stanley theatre at Nineteenth and Market streets was opened on January 28.

Erected as a memorial to the late Jules V. Mastbaum, the structure represents the latest in theatre construction. Perhaps no theatre in the state surpasses it. It is doubtful if any playhouse in the country devoted to the silent drama is finer.

Beautiful Structure Seats 4,000 Persons

The mammoth auditorium seats 4,000 persons. From every seat the patrons get a clear and unobstructed view of the screen. From the entrance to the auditorium the theatre is furnished for the comfort of the theatre-goer. The richness of the decorations and appointments in itself will attract many persons to the house.

In addressing those attending the opening Jules E. Mastbaum, president of Stanley Company of America, said of this great achievement:

Satisfied of Support

"Your support of this company in the past has made all this possible. This achievement has been created for you to enjoy, and it belongs to you."

"We were satisfied when we contemplated the erection of this theatre that you would give your unqualified approval and support of our efforts, which we trust will be in line with you, to ourselves and to the city of Philadelphia. All of this has been made possible entirely through your appreciation of our efforts.

First House Seated 60

"The Stanley company came into existence with a small picture house at the corner of Eighth and Market streets when the industry was still in its swaddling clothes. My recollection is that it had a seating capacity of about sixty people, and the performance lasted about five minutes. Through the merging of individual interests and affiliations with other exhibitors, it has become one of the leading organizations in the motion picture field."

"That it has grown, widened its scope of enterprises, extended and is extending its field of usefulness, has been due to the fact that the policy of the Stanley company has always been to give the public the very best in entertainment, courteous treatment and clean and well ventilated houses.

Paintings Adorn Walls

"Without you, our efforts would be in vain, but with you, we hope to go on running a successful business, and each member of the Stanley organization will do his part for your benefit and approval."
Censorship Loses by Committee Resolution
Redraft in South Carolina
Would Give Local Officials Regulation

NEW YORK, Feb. 1.—By a unanimous vote, the senate committee on education of the South Carolina legislature reported unfavorably on the bill introduced by Representative Rogers of Spartanburg, which provided for the creation of a state censorship board. This action, which kills the measure, was taken four days after the same committee had reported favorably on the bill.

Rehearing Is Held
The reversal was the result of a rehearing at which film men presented arguments. The committee then modified its previous action by voting to draft a bill, which would allow each town and city in the state the right to punish an exhibitor showing an objectionable film. When the representatives of the committee appointed a sub-committee to frame a bill that would become a part of the penal code if passed. It will subject an exhibitor to a fine and imprisonment for showing an immoral or cruel picture.

May License Houses
The subcommittee may also incorporate a license for operating theaters, which may be revoked for showing prohibited subjects. Senators Hart, McColl and Rogers are on the sub-committee.

Herbert Brenon Appeals Case in Arlis Decision

NEW YORK, Feb. 1—Herbert Brenon, who conducted the Herbert Brenon Film Corporation in 1917, has appealed against a decision by which George Arlis, the actor, was granted a judgment for $22,500. The case has been pending since 1917 when Arlis sued to recover on an agreement whereby he was to play the lead in a screen version of "Faust." The film was never made.

Juanita Hansen to Have Own Company

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 1—Juanita Hansen is back in town. She brings with her a contract providing for her own producing company. Miss Hansen has been in New York for the last year making serials for Pathé. She expects to begin filming with her company within a few weeks, probably on space at Universal City.

Niblo Will Direct Read's Masterpiece

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 1—J. Parker Read, who is planning what he considers the production of his career, has announced the signing of Fred Niblo as director.

Picture Colony to Have Masked Ball

(Los Angeles Herald)

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 1.—Thirty leading Los Angeles theaters will participate in the entertainment to be given for the release of "Mardi Gras" and "Valentine Masque" balls at the Ambassador hotel, Saturday evening, February 12.

Sid Grauman, chairman of the arrangement committee, has been in San Francisco for the last week arranging for special features. Illumination by 12,000 Japanese and Chinese lanterns will create a scene of Oriental brilliance on the gaily decorated Carroll Ford "Mardi Gras Lane." Hernández Villa, the Spanish artist who has been making art titles for Cecil B. De Mille's latest picture, has completed a color design for the cover of the souvenir program. The musicians' union has informed Secretary Woodward of their intention to provide a jazz orchestra of twenty pieces for the festivities, gratis.

Record Sales Are Reported by Lubin
Five Territories on "West of the Rio Grande"

Disposed of
Bert Lubin, who made record sales with "Honeymoon Ranch," his first state right picture, has started another record drive on "West of the Rio Grande," his second Allene Ray feature in which Harry McLaughlin plays a co-star part.

"West of the Rio Grande," a five reel Western-comedy-drama adapted from a Tex O'Reilly story under direction of Robin H. Townley, was announced by Bert Lubin only recently.

Five Territories Sold
Within four days Lubin claims to have sold five territories. These include: Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey to 20th Century Film Company, Philadelphia, District of Columbia; Maryland, Delaware, Virginia and North Carolina to Reliance Film Exchange of Washington; Iowa and Nebraska to Pontenelle Feature Film Company of Omaha; Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, South Idaho and New Mexico to C. C. McDermont Theatre Amusement Company, Salt Lake City; and Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas to L. C. Baxley Attractions of Dallas, Texas.

Buy Rights In N. Y.
Mr. Baxley bought the picture while in New York. In commenting on "West of the Rio Grande," he said, "I was determined to get this picture as soon as I saw the wonderful success 'Honeymoon Ranch' was having in my territory. After having seen Lubin's second picture I am convinced it is one of the best westerns of the year. It is even better than 'Honeymoon Ranch.'"

Polly Moran Will Go Back to Stage

(Los Angeles Herald)

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 1.—Polly Moran is planning to quit pictures within the next few weeks and return to vaudeville. She expects to play the Keith circuit in New York in April.

Hutchinson Enthusiastic By New Production

American President Regards "Their Mutual Child" as Exceptional Offering

American Film Company, Inc., has recently published another special in which Nigel Bruce has the leading male role. It bears the title, "Their Mutual Child," and is claimed to be fully as amusing as "The Blue Moon," the preceding "Flying A" subject, is dramatic. "Their Mutual Child" is a story of modern society life.

The balance of the company is comprised of Joseph Bennett, Margaret Mitchell, Robert J. Flaherty, Harvey Clark, Andrew Pollock, Beverly Taverners, Thomas O'Brien, William Lloyd, William Marion and Stanhope Wheatcroft.

"I feel sure," says President Samuel S. Hutchinson, of American, "that every exhibitor who praised 'The Blue Moon' will find 'Their Mutual Child' to his liking. It is a story that for humor has seldom been equalled. The interest of the spectator is maintained throughout reel on Kirk Winfield, an artist, and from that point on to the very end there is never a let-down in the suspense element of the plot."

A critic, who looked at the film at a pre-release showing, said, "I don't recall having seen a film in over a year in which the humor and pathos have been so excellently blended. When it goes on the theatre screen, I am certain it will meet with the approval of the audience." P. G. Wodehouse, who is the author of several successful novels, wrote "Their Mutual Child" and Daniel F. Whitecomb adapted the story to the screen.

Willman Is in Charge of "Big Four" Office

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Feb. 1.—W. W. Willman, formerly associated with First National Co., has been appointed resident salesman of the United Artists office at 21 Dolly Madison apartments. He has complete charge of the Indianapolis territory, although films and accessories must come from the Chicago exchange.

Drascona Producers Will Make Comedies

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 1.—Drascona Productions has just announced preparations for a series of two reel comedies to be produced at its temporary studio in Boyle Heights. The pictures will feature Hal Stephens and will be directed by Stuart Featherstonhaugh with Paul Hosier assisting.

Independent Films to Have Griffith Studios

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 1.—The Independent Films Association has taken over the D. W. Griffith studios here, according to Eddy Eckels, Pineapple productions, pineapple comedies, Gooden productions and Tattenham productions will be accommodated.
EXHIBITORS ADVERTISING
A DEPARTMENT OF MOTION PICTURE EXPLOITATION

Your Picture in the Paper

The Butte Daily Post, Butte, Mont., printed in the issue of January 22 a two-column portrait of H. A. Albright, manager of the American theatre, interposing it between a two-column, two-line head and a story of approximately 1,000 words. Mr. Albright's showmanship, as attested by comments appearing from time to time in this department and preserved in the American theatre scrap book, was the subject of the story, a genuine newspaper feature.

The idea was suggested by Mr. Albright, who wrote a story for the purpose, but the city editor saw the feature value of it and rewrote Mr. Albright's original in terms more glowing than the most optimistic exhibitor would have confidence to employ. (Excerpts are hereinafter reproduced.)

The line of procedure followed to such satisfactory end by Mr. Albright is open to every exploitation exhibitor. The value to the theatreman in thus having his efforts in behalf of his patrons made the subject of a special newspaper feature is obvious.

All exhibitors should digest carefully the details of the Albright achievement and act upon his suggestion that they utilize it for their own benefit.

"In the manner of presentation and class of pictures shown," the Daily Post story begins, "Butte ranks high among the other cities of the United States, according to Manager H. A. Albright of the American theatre. In fact, Mr. Albright contends, Butte is in reality setting the pace for many of the larger towns and cities not only in the west but in the entire country. "Butte is right at the top and in some respects is helping to set the standard," said Manager Albright. "For instance, take the American theatre. Doesn't it show signs of life and of pep? Isn't it just as we advertise it to be, a leading theatre?"

"And, as if to prove his assertion, Manager Albright brought forth a book of clippings gleaned during the past year and a half which told of the progressive work being done by the American manager. All praised Mr. Albright's showmanship and the American's progressiveness in general.

"A COUNT showed that Manager Albright had been brought into the limelight forty-seven times," the story continued. Clippings from the "Pathé Messenger" and similar publications were also kept in Mr. Albright's scrap book. "The Exhibitors Herald, the progressive motion picture exhibitors' trade paper published at Chicago, alone ran twenty-one stories of Mr. Albright's innovations and originalities. Stories ranged from one column by two inches to one and two pages, making a grand total of seven hundred and ninety-six magazine pages."

In commenting upon this phase of the published story Mr. Albright writes, "You will note how far away the editor got when he improved my reference to inches. I'd given the total as 796 column inches." The story continues, in error as to figures.

"Were these assembled in one continuous story and printed in book form on five by seven inch book stock, one hundred and sixty pages would be required to carry it. That would be a good-sized text book and a complete treatise on theatrical advertising, exploitation and showmanship.

"But Mr. Albright is not interested in writing a treatise. His efforts are rather centered on giving Butte the best available entertainment presented in the most artistic manner, to keep the American, as he says, 'in its position as Butte's leading photoplay house and the home of Butte's best music.'"

The abridged reproduction of the newspaper feature supplies practically all the material necessary for its duplication by any exhibitor who has exploited his attractions in such manner as to receive the required comment and has preserved the clippings. Such an exhibitor has but to prepare a story similar in general outline to that accorded Mr. Albright—a mere sketch which will be rewritten by the newspaper staff is preferable—and present it to the city editor of his paper.

The feature angle will not be missed if the sketch is properly written, and it is more than likely that request for a photograph will be forthcoming. At any rate it is well to have one in readiness, unless the newspaper has already been given a cut.

The figures in the Daily Post story, though greatly in error, give added strength to the narrative. A certain dignity attaches to figures in any such composition, and when tradeins are employed in moder-
Showmanship Suggestions in the Stills

"THE FOUR HORSEMEN OF THE APOCALYPSE," a forthcoming Metro production, indicated by advance report as worthy of elaborate presentation, contains the scene shown above. The special drops required for such a setting may be prepared without great expense, and necessary tables and chairs may be borrowed for the occasion. Two professional dancers may be employed for the prologue or interlude, amateurs supplying the "atmosphere." Characteristic music is available in quantity, allowing great latitude in selection.

THE opening scenes of "The Gilded Lily," a Paramount picture featuring Mae Murray, are in Prizma color photography, the background of the above being deep blue and the star's costume gold tinsel cloth. A stage setting modeled closely after the still should serve admirably for a spoken prologue employing a reader or singer.

LARRY SEMON'S Vitagraph comedy, "The Hick," as represented by the advance still reproduced above, offers opportunity for exploitation similar to that widely employed in behalf of "Down on the Farm." An impersonator in characteristic Semon costume may be sent upon the street carrying bucket and milking stool and leading a balky bovine. Attempts to milk the cow at busy intersections should attract general attention.

A GIRL attired as the above still shows Priscilla Dean appearing in Universal's "Outside the Law," may be sent about the city in a newspaper-store-theatre cooperative stunt of the "mystery girl" type. A Rockford, Ill., department store, theatre and newspaper experienced marked success with the enterprise, the store donating tam-o'-shanters for the purpose.
Adopted by First National Pictures, Inc.

The publicity department of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., has displayed commendable enterprise and appreciation of exhibitor requirements in inaugurating a policy of supplying well in advance of publication date stills from forthcoming productions accompanied by stories pointing out presentation possibilities, adopting the method originated by this department in the page headed "Showmanship Suggestions in the Stills."

The adoption of the idea reflects credit upon the organization, the success of the original page of exploitation and presentation suggestions having thoroughly demonstrated its practicality. With still camera men especially commissioned to obtain photographs for the purpose designated great practical assistance may be given the exhibitor in planning his advertising campaign and presentation in advance of playing date.

The initial effort of this type by First National has been made in behalf of "The Old Swimmin' Hole," Charles Ray's forthcoming production. To show the sincerity with which the work has been undertaken an established rule has been set aside and the story issued, with the reproductions of stills concerned, follow exactly as received.

The old-fashioned village school suggests itself less obviously, perhaps, for use in a prologue with the Charles Ray-First National feature, "The Old Swimmin' Hole," than does the stream named in the title itself, yet it affords an opportunity for a pleasing contribution to the program capable of easy and inexpensive construction, and with the double advantage that it would revive tender and intimate memories in the minds of the women as well as the men in the audience.

The teacher in the Ray picture is a hard taskmaster, just as are the teachers of all village and country schools, in fiction at least. Such a one was the instructor in Edward Eggleston's "The Hoosier School-Boy." Clutching a switch or a ruler—he uses the ruler on Ernie's (Charles Ray's) hand in "The Old Swimmin' Hole"—"he would walk up and down the schoolroom seeking a victim." Such is the perversity of human nature that the effect, inevitably, was to arouse the youngsters to additional acts of mischief and even downright meanness. "The brutality of a master," says Eggleston, "produces like qualities in the scholars. The boys drew caricatures on the blackboard, put living cats, or dead ones, into the teacher's desk, and tried to drive him wild by their many devices."

Both "The Hoosier School-Boy" and "The Hoosier School-Master," each revealing the small, old-fashioned school in all its primitive picturesqueness, abound in suggestions appropriate for a prologue to precede the picturization of Riley's masterpiece. In all probability the school that Riley attended as a youngster was very like the one that Eggleston describes. It was in the same state and in a rural district of the state. There is no cat to be seen in Mr. Riley's film story, but Ezra, by "swapping" loose ends of cord and a top or two with "Skinny" (Lincoln Stedman) acquires a white mouse, which he conceals beneath his shirt, and which, of course, escapes. The ensuing scene may be easily and effectively reconstructed—the disappearance of the innocent four-footed culprit, the wrath of the teacher, as he charges about in quest of a victim; the terror of the little girls, who, drawing their skirts about them, seek safety on the benches, and the frank delight of the boys in their successful efforts to heighten the general confusion.

There are suggestions, too, in "Ye Old Deestrick-Skule" which, a few generations ago, was popular with amateur "talent" in small towns. Strictly speaking, the school in "The Old Swimmin' Hole" is not a district school, yet the similarity is so strong that it is difficult to draw a line of distinction. The blackboard must be much in evidence, of course, and besides the caricatures of the master it will be well to have a picturization of "teacher's pet," the unconscious model for which probably was the only youth who wears a necktie. The girls should be in short frocks, naturally, and with their hair down their backs, and besides the presentation to the more favored ones of candy hearts with "I Love You" inscriptions there should be an occasional yanking of braids by the "bad boy" of the class to make the situation realistic. Most of the boys should be barefoot, and one, at least, should be bandaged as to his great toe, to indicate contact with cockleburs. The crude benches should be of the crudest and marked with initials. And, on the school door or in some other conspicuous place might appear two chiselled hearts, each initialled, and the two pierced by a single love-dart.

The old-fashioned spelling bee, in which the pupils choose sides and "spell down" is capable of reproduction, or, better yet, a few minutes might be devoted to "speaking day," when the budding Ciceros strive to orate and declaim but actually give a much more nearly perfect demonstration of stammering, the other scholars aiding and abetting them in this meanwhile. A few lines from "Curlew Shall Not Ring Tonight," and "A Soldier of the Legion" are certain to strike responsive chords in every audience.

And when school "breaks up" for the day and the "bad boy" is kept in, some of his more fortunate classmates are certain to call back, from their positions of safety outside the building "O—O—O—Skin-nay!" and, as particularly appropriate to the picture about to be shown, "Come on in, the water's fine!"

Illuminated box banners carrying simply the title of the production in engagement were used in great number by the management of the William Penn theatre, Chester, Pa.

Lighted Announcements Give Title of Vitagraph Feature

"DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES," the title of the Vitagraph production, was made the chief center of exploitation in a campaign recently conducted by the William Penn theatre, Chester, Pa., and illustrated herewith by a photograph taken during the period of engagement. There are features of interest in the methods used.

A strong drive was made on the title. No other word matter was used prominently, and lighted announcements put forth that phrase, a potentially sigificant one, with exceptional force.

The boxed announcements used in great number in front of the theatre are shown in the accompanying illustration. Their effect upon passersby can be sensed rather more effectively than described. The showmanship sense will bring home to readers the effective appeal exerted by the display.

Report does not give other details of the campaign.
It is not stated that similar boxes were displayed throughout the city, but the fact that such methods would have heightened the effectiveness of the stunt is sufficient unto itself. The box idea permits of extensive elaboration.

Any title of similar forcefulness may be used by exhibitors who adopt the William Penn idea. The boxes are easily constructed of wood which is at hand and muslin or other cloth obtainable at little expense.

Upon the outside of these the title of the picture may be outlined in whatever color is chosen, red being the obvious selection. Other copy may or may not be added, according to individual taste.

It may be possible in many cases to gain permission of the city to utilize certain electrolites for the purpose, such a course being practical with attractions which justify the end in some manner, as "What's Your Hurry?" though "Dead Men Tell No Tales" is readily identified with a traffic campaign where newspaper and police co-operation is obtained.
“Curtain” Accorded First Prologue Staged By S. Barret McCormick at New Ambassador

S. BARRET MCCORMICK, a national figure by reason of his spectacularly effective showmanship methods applied at the Circle theatre, Indianapolis, Ind., and later at the Rivoli, Toledo, O., thoroughly satisfied West Coast expectations when citizens of Los Angeles were shown his first prologue staged at the New Ambassador theatre, illustrated herewith. “Curtain,” Katherine MacDonald’s First National attraction, was the production accorded the presentation.

The photograph reproduced above, showing the New Ambassador stage with the prologue in progress, is ample proof of the reported fact that McCormick standards prevailed in the introductory feature. The back drop fade-in, which may be seen in the illustration, is not the least novel or adaptable feature of the prologue. It is in itself a stunt of such promise that exhibitors everywhere may benefit directly from the suggestion.

The initial McCormick presentation is in keeping with past accomplishments, familiar to readers of this department by reason of many illustrated stories printed in past issues. Such a circumstance was entirely according to expectations.

Los Angeles theatre managers, among the most uniformly progressive in the world, will undoubtedly exert every effort to parallel or eclipse the work of the newcomer.

An interesting contest should be the result, and in that contest should be produced many innovations of great value to the theatre field. Exhibitors throughout the nation will watch closely the developments of the situation and gain therefrom ideas of great practical value.

Indianapolis and Toledo theatregoers have been deprived of Mr. McCormick’s genius. That is regrettable as concerns them, but good for the trade.
Straight Display of Paper Draws for "Devil's Angel"

This is a story of possibilities, and of success that might have been sensation. The scene is the Lyric theatre, of Reading, Pa., and the time is indefinitely established but recent.

"The Devil's Angel," the Clark-Cornelius production, is to be advertised. It has been booked for a three-day run.

A quantity of excellent paper is available for lobby use and the lobby opening paragraph are practically unlimited. There was material at hand for extraordinary display of originality and the exertion of tremendous drawing power through carefully prepared and displayed advertising in lobby and about the city.

Such was not done; yet the picture drew three days of big attendance.

Speculation as to what the box office record would have shown had other methods been used is interest-is architecturally well suited to display purposes. An ornate composition of cutouts can be placed to advantage, or specially mounted posters can be effectually illuminated and advantageously displayed.

But these tactics are not used. Instead, the paper at hand is used in the most convenient manner, the 24-sheet being given the central position and the lesser posters set up where least effort is required to place them.

The picture opens. The first day it is attended by big crowds. The second day that experience is repeated, and the third sees no decrease in patronage.

The engagement is set down as thoroughly successful.

The picture won its way.

The possibilities mentioned in the

Cinderella Slipper in Milwaukee Window Convention Tie-Up

A convention of the National Shoe Retailers' Association recently held in Milwaukee, Wis., was capitalized by Ed. J. Weisfeldt, manager of Saxe's New Strand theatre, in the exploitation of "Cinderella's Twin," to be shown at the theatre the following week.

One of the novelities at the convention was an especially ornate slipper, such as might have been worn by Cinderella of the fable at the grand ball, and this was obtained by Mr. Weisfeldt for display in a window of the Walk-Over shoe store.

With it was displayed a card stating that it was the slipper worn by Viola Dana in the production of the picture.

The idea may be adopted generally.

“Kismet” Exerts Stimulating Influence
On Theatre Exploitation and Presentation

A thing that has not been done is contemplated by man with doubt and trepidation. Impractical, unadvisable, unnecessary and pointless are words popularly employed as camouflage for that state in which the exhibitor who has not tried exploitation and presentation exists.

A thing that has been loses its terrors. It is done again, and better, and rapidly improved upon until satisfactory standards are established.

Powerful stimulant is necessary occasionally. An occasion which moves the exhibitor to precedential effort is of many-sided value.

Many exhibitors who have not heretofore tested exploitation or presentation with more than lukewarm enthusiasm, if at all, are making their engagements of “Kismet,” the Robertson-Cole production, the occasion for unparalleled exploitation and presentation. Full page advertisements are being used by men to whom a quarter page formerly appeared unreasonable extravagance. Street exploitation is being tried out by showmen who formerly regarded the idea as unfit for various reasons for their adoption.

Presentation has reacted even more noticeably to the stimulating effect of the attraction. Exhibitors who have never before devoted the slightest effort in this direction are making thorough test of it with “Kismet” and reaping the normal reward. Theatres without stages are overcoming this difficulty by various interesting means, and the “Kismet” engagements reported show marked uniformity in the matter of methods employed.

Accompanying photographic reproductions show the stage of the Trent theatre, Trenton, N. J., with the prologue for “Kismet” in progress, and the exterior of that playhouse while the picture was in engagement.

Though scenery was not at hand for prologue purposes, the management was not stayed in its determination to present the picture under the best possible circumstances.

This spirit of showmanship is essential to definite progress. Obstacles must be overcome if advance is to be made, and the effort required to surmount them develops the strength and resourcefulness of the man who puts it forth.

Curtained and Illuminated Lobby Stage Is Innovation

PAUL E. NOBLE, managing director of the Liberty theatre, Portland, Ore., a master of stagecraft as applied to presentation, accomplished a distinct innovation recently in behalf of “Curtain,” Katherine MacDonald’s First National vehicle, transferring his attention for the occasion to the lobby.

Above the box office Mr. Noble suspended a box stage of unusual characteristics. The photograph reproduced herewith shows the general effect obtained, but does not reveal the fact that a curtain was installed in such manner as to ascend and descend at appropriate intervals, disclosing and screening a scene showing Katherine MacDonald in cutout directing attention to a sign announcing the engagement of the picture.

Footlights and borders of standard design were also used in the lobby stage, the effect of the rising curtain being materially heightened by this device. The test of the stunt is, of course, the business experienced, and in this case report is to the effect that the test showed the stunt valuable.

Mr. Noble’s work has been reported in this department frequently. The method he has perfected of deciding upon and producing presentation features was set forth in detail some months ago. Other achievements have been recorded with uniform praise for work well done.

His newest accomplishment is none the less distinctly an achievement. It has the unmistakable marks of the showman, the thorough treatment and the clearly defined purpose effected by decisive action.

There is no reason why the stunt cannot be duplicated by other exhibitors, and with other attractions, though the title, “Curtain,” lends it particular effectiveness in this instance. Indeed, it may well be made a permanent feature of the advertising policy.

Drawn Diary Cards Prepared To Advertise New Ray Film

Lobby display cards of unusual design have been prepared by Brakenhoff for Associated First National Pictures, Inc., to be distributed in connection with “The Old Swimmin’ Hole,” Charle’s Ray’s production based upon the poem by James Whitcomb Riley. Reproductions presented herewith give in miniature the designs provided.

Exhibitors will doubtless achieve lobby novelty of unusual degree. A new type of poster representation, the unique designs will doubtless be extensively employed.

In design a fine effectiveness has been accomplished. The pictorial aspect of the whole is such as to attract without divulging a great amount of the subject matter. Closer inspection is necessary for the complete grasping of the information presented, and such is the display of the whole that closer inspection is easily forthcoming.

The cartoon and the straight pictorial attraction combine to produce doubly strong appeal. On lobby stand or in wall frame the cards are certain to attract considerable attention. When that is accorded them the business of convincing the beholder that the picture is worthy of their attendance is passed on to the text.

A box stage, with foot and border lights and a curtain that rose and descended at intervals, was effectively employed by Paul Noble, manager of the Liberty theatre, Portland, Ore.

Freckled Newsboy Featured In Branford "Dinty" Stunt

The Branford theatre, Newark, N. J., a leader in successful showmanship despite the brevity of the period of its operation, conducted an effective and easily adaptable presentation stunt for "Dinty," Marshall Neilan's First National attraction. Accompanying illustrations show the essentials of the feature.

The Branford stage was set to represent the background against which much of the action is produced. In producing this set no great amount of ingenuity was required and a minimum of expense was entailed. The materials used are such as any exhibitor has access to and the scene does not require a deep stage.

The freckled newsboy who impersonated "Dinty" is shown in another illustration. The make-up is simple and effective, every city containing a youngster who possesses the proper appearance. It is conveniently true that a boy of the proper appearance is generally of the proper temperament for the work in hand. No great amount of training is necessary to prepare him for the work, reversion rather than stimulation being required in the coaching of such a youth.

The form which such a prologue takes is almost entirely a matter of exhibitorial choice. Whatever such a boy can do best is doubtless the best thing to have him do. Naturalness is thus obtained, and for purposes of presentation in this case the natural things that a boy of proper qualifications likes to do are precisely the things that are best suited for introductory requirements.

The Branford method, use of the natural, is the best method of presentation.

One of the most effective lobby displays in recent exploitation, arranged by the Strand theatre, Nashville, Tenn.

"Fortune Teller" Inspires Artistic Lobby Decoration

"The Fortune Teller," the Robertson-Cole production featuring Marjorie Rambeau, has produced since publication some of the most artistic lobby displays in theatre history. A number of these have been reproduced in this department and were the subject of close study by exhibitors everywhere who realize the importance of an attractive theatre front.

Excelling in artistry and attractive power all that have gone before, the display reproduced herewith, that used by the Strand theatre of Nashville, Tenn., represents the best type of lobby endeavor.

The product shows plainly the important fact that great effort was involved in its manufacture. Careful assembling of parts, minute attention to detail and mass effects, elimination of the cheap and concentration upon general purpose, were necessary.

The work and thought that went into the display might have been devoted to other channels, newspaper advertising, for instance, with telling effect. It is doubtful if such a campaign would have exerted better effect than the display which it produced.

The display is a worthy work.

Plunkett’s “Great Adventure” Prologue is Contribution to Exhibitor Stagecraft

With the steady improvement of presentation the motion picture exhibitor, in the majority of instances unprepared by former theatre experience, has found a cultivation of stagecraft necessary. The legitimate theatre itself has given valuable experience to many showmen who have gone to it frankly for the knowledge of working principles required, but not all motion picture men have seen fit to seek it at that source.

The accounts of practical presentation carried in this department are written with this condition in mind. The terms utilized are the terms that any exhibitor can understand rather than the technical ones that might be employed for the few.

In such accounts the fund of exhibitor stagecraft is constantly added to. There is no occasion for any exhibitor to seek elsewhere the supposedly intricate but in reality simple knowledge which is of practical use to him in preparing and executing prologues and other stage features.

JOSPEH PLUNKETT, managing director of the Strand theatre, New York, contributed valuable data to the general fund of exhibitor stagecraft when he staged his prologue for “The Great Adventure,” the First National attraction starring Lionel Barrymore. The photographs reproduced herewith are rich in informative power, showing the two important stages of the prologue from the stagecraft viewpoint.

At first glance the two pictures appear identical. A second inspection discloses the fact that the figure in the frame has taken on life in the second photograph, a fortunate circumstance of photography retaining just a suggestion of the original figure, a suggestion not discernible in the actual staging of the transformation.

The mechanics of the transformation are simple, though technical terms and line drawings might be employed to clothe them with such forbidding aspect as to discourage the most courageous. A box frame, with muslin or some heavier stuff stretched tightly across the opening, is the first requirement. It is easily constructed by any carpenter.

The figure of the girl is then painted upon the cloth and the curtain draped across the front.

Lights are mounted upon the front of the frame, or a spotlight may be employed as effectively, though the latter arrangement renders a bit more difficult the transformation.

Lights are likewise placed within the box in such position as to throw the figure of the singer there concealed into high relief, the inside lights coming into full brilliance as the exterior lights are dimmed. The dimmer apparatus used in effecting this change is a part of practically every theatre’s equipment, or can be dispensed with without great loss of effect, the transformation in that case being instantaneous instead of gradual.

The prologue may take whatever form talent at the exhibitor’s disposal dictates. A dream feature is the obvious suggestion, in which case the dark opening, the fireplace solo, the vision and the reversion to the familiar closing, is suggested. Both players may be required to sing suitable numbers, or the man alone may carry this portion of the work.

The actual form that the prologue shall take may be determined after the picture has arrived at the theatre and a private screening has been had. The affair can be managed without one or two rehearsals to thorough satisfaction.

Showing the Trend of Advertising Activity
Recorded by the Lens

HARRY SWIFT, Paramount exploitation representative at Albany, N. Y., arranged this display for “Humoresque” in the only music store in Oneida, N. Y., despite the fact that the store is also an undertaking establishment. The window display was maintained over a period of four days.

WAYLAND H. TAYLOR, Paramount exploitation representative at Seattle, Wash., evolved this window stunt for advertising “Idols of Clay.” The studio furnishings were obtained from stores in the neighborhood and a sculptor worked with clay in easy view of the street from 11 a.m. until 5 p.m. daily.

WHEN Abner Robinson, New York exploitation representative for Paramount, effected an arrangement whereby the “New York Telegram” used “Something to Think About” as the name of a new editorial feature, the delivery wagons of the publication carried banners announcing the innovation.

“SWEET SINGERS OF THE STREET,” recently staged at Grauman’s Million Dollar theatre, Los Angeles, gave opportunity for entertainment of various types by thirteen performers. The general style of the feature is such as to recommend it for use when an added attraction of no specific purpose is desired.

THE Majestic theatre, Reno, Nev., owns a number of attractive special billboards which are utilized for display of matter permitting of infrequent change. The copy for the Mary Pickford productions is characteristic.
A STORM at sea was graphically represented in the entrance-wide display constructed by Ascher's Merril theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., prior to the engagement of “Godless Men,” the Goldwyn production. An effective method of making advance announcements.

A CUTFOUT strikingly mounted and prominently displayed served as centerpiece in the lobby display of the Queen theatre, Houston, Tex., for Goldwyn's “Earthbound.” Specially designed cards were utilized for the side panels and a specially painted banner carried the big line.

A CUTFOUT made up by Verner Hicks, manager of the Family theatre, Marion, Ill., to advertise “Dead Men Tell No Tales,” the Vitagraph picture. The newspaper clippings tie up the picture with a local murder trial and suicide.

N extraordinary cutout display made up by the management of the Orpheum theatre, Scotts Bluff, Neb., for the engagement of “Forty-five Minutes From Broadway,” Charles Ray’s first National attraction. The display provides new angles for adaptation.

ROY H. HAINES, manager of the First National branch at Cincinnati, O., arranged with the “Cincinnati Post” for a parade of newsboys to the Boulevard theatre to a showing of “Dinty,” Marshall Neilan’s First National attraction.

THE Alamo No. 1 theatre, Atlanta, Ga., photographed at 10 a.m., half an hour after opening, showing the attendance drawn by properly advertising “Vanishing Trails,” the Selig serial starring Franklyn Farnum, which divided space with a Fox Sunshine comedy.
Chicago Exhibitors Respond to Demand
For Better Presentation of Features

Despite unity February neighborhood reported use

The Pantheon's school room prologue used for presentation of
"The Jucklins."

Exhibitors visiting Chicago have commented variously upon the apparent discrepancy existing between operation methods in use and patronage experienced. Despite a seeming indisposition toward the more sensational type of exploitation and presentation, practically every theatre is found crowded to capacity upon any and all occasions.

The indisposition is not one of choice, but in most cases of necessity. Recent events prove this conclusion beyond question.

Chicago theatres are, for the most part, constructed in such manner as to practically forbid presentation save of the more modest variety. Comparatively few houses have stages of any sort, and those properly equipped are being put to use with more and more regularity.

Photographs reproduced herewith show the stage of the Pantheon theatre, the leading Lubliner & Trinz house, upon three recent occasions, the Christmas, New Year's and "Jucklins" features being in progress. They are typical of the work which is done in this phase of the theatre when occasion is such as to warrant it.

Perhaps the most notable step forward in presentation was recorded at the Ziegfeld theatre, on Michigan Avenue, when "Kismet," the Robertson-Cole production handled for the premiere by Roderick Ross, was put in engagement on Saturday, January 22, at an admission charge of $1.10 for the main floor. Full performances were advertised at 2:45 and 8:45, and half an hour before the first performance the long lobby of the building was filled with waiting patrons.

The stage was hung with black and gold drops and cushions were placed about the floor. Two huge incense pots flanked the proscenium and others were distributed throughout the auditorium. Attendants and ushers were dressed in Oriental costumes.

A concealed orchestra, advertised as consisting of twenty pieces, introduced a contralto singer who sang "Kismet," one of the few genuinely musical compositions published in connection with motion pictures, in excellent voice. Following her exit, nine classic dancers performed a pantomime which lasted some ten or twelve minutes, after which the drop was parted and the picture screened.

Another sign of the increasingly favorable trend of theatre thought was seen in the presentation given a two reel Sennett comedy in which the bathing girls figured prominently in the Shakespeare theatre, a neighborhood house, where six girls in appropriate costume sang, danced and paraded upon the stage, unfortunately not equipped with scenery or provision for the same.

At the Covent Garden, another Lubliner and Trinz house, "The Mark of Zorro" was presented with more pretentious special features. The costumes worn by the cast were made the connecting link in this instance, and considerable enthusiasm is reported as being aroused by the innovation.

All are favorable indications of the proper exhibitorial attitude. The tendency toward genuine presentation was never so marked as at present. And the course followed in other cities will be traversed rapidly by Chicago theatre men, necessary remodeling and other preparations being dependent solely upon the forming of the inevitable determination.
STUNTS

Fay Tincher appeared at the Rialto and McVicker's theatres, Chicago, during the week of January 24-30, following screening of selected scenes from a recent comedy, under the auspices of the Pioneer Film Corporation of Illinois. Following several minutes of comment upon studio conditions she concluded with a request that patrons ask proprietors of their favorite theatres to book her pictures.

Classical music is being capitalized as a special feature of programs at the Strand theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., which gives E. L. Hyman, manager, opportunity to write letters to school teachers in his territory, as well as music teachers, encouraging attendance of their pupils especially interested.

"The Love Light," Mary Pickford's United Artists production, due to the success experienced with "The Mark of Zorro," was exhibited simultaneously at the Clemmer and Winter Garden theatres, Seattle, Wash. The box office record set by the Fairbanks vehicle was broken, a new record for both houses being established. The theatres combined their advertising in a single full page and small boxes throughout each edition called attention to that display.

A folder constituting six pages and listing current attractions at "loop" theatres is being published by Jones, Linick & Schaefer, four pages being devoted to advertising the theatres controlled by that concern in Chicago.

A Prizma prologue for George H. Davis' feature, "Isobel or the Trail's End," is being sold to independent distributors through the C. B. C. Film Sales Corp. The Standard Film Exchange of Kansas City, Mo., which also handles the feature, has purchased distribution rights to the prologue for western Missouri and Kansas.

A red card upon which was printed "You Are Wanted at Headquarters" was distributed in automobiles parked in Casper, Wyo., by Rae Barnes, manager of the Hub theatre, in advertising the Universal attraction, "Wanted at Headquarters." Police arrested Mr. Barnes, but explanation of the purpose of the stunt obtained his release—and considerable newspaper publicity.

Brooklyn Theatre Crowded As Star Makes Appearance

(Photograph by EXHIBITORS HERALD staff photographer)

CHAS. STEINMAN, manager of the New Atlantic theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., experienced marked success with the specially arranged personal appearance of Alma Rubens, star of "Thoughtless Women," the Pioneer production, at a recent showing of that attraction. The photograph reproduced herewith shows the arrival at the theatre of the star, accompanied by Chas. Goodman, her director.

In a report printed in the "What the Picture Did for Me" department of this publication, issue of Feb. 5, Mr. Steinman characterized the attendance upon that night as "a big audience." That is the sort of attendance invariably reported when stars are present at the screening of pictures in which they appear.

It is significant in this connection that recent news of the industry has contained a larger percentage of personal appearance stories than met with at any previous period in theatre history. In this connection the personal appearance tour of George Beban comes readily to mind, and similar events of lesser magnitude follow.

The proposition of established custom arises naturally. Little difficulty seems involved in the standardization of a definite star appearance policy by any standard producing or distributing company.

Were each such organization to keep but one of its stars upon the road, alternating to conform to production schedule, every theatre in the country could be accommodated at reasonable intervals. Too frequent stellar appearance is not conducive to the best results. The arrangement suggested should just about satisfy all parties concerned.

The proposition is interesting. It is only a proposition, but it will not be surprising if announcement to the effect that such a course has been adopted is made at any time by one or more companies.
John M. Stahl
A Director Whose Rise in the Film Industry Has Been Decidedly Meteoric
BY W. H. LEAHY.

No motion picture director has ever forged to the front with such startling rapidity as John M. Stahl, whose special, "Sowing the Wind," starring Anita Stewart, has been selected by Associated First National Pictures as one of the "Big Five" productions of the coming year, thereby ranking it with "Passage," "The Kid," "Man, Woman and Marriage" and "The Oath." His rise to prominence in the cinema world has been decidedly meteoric, but by no means transitory, for in a quiet way Stahl has for some time been turning out fine productions.

But it has only been within the past year that his work has attracted from producers, distributors and exhibitors the attention it deserved. Previous to that he had produced under his own direction such box office winners as "Wives of Men," "The Woman Under Oath" and "Women Men Forget," and those on the inside recognized in him a genius that was sure to land on the top.

"Then came the "Woman in His House," which on its previews brought forth the production that it would prove one of the really big productions of which the screen has boasted. This production has already been borne out in a dozen or more clues.

It was at a showing of this production at Hotel Alexandria, Los Angeles, the other evening that Stahl offered one of the rare opportunities of getting him to talk about his work and ambitions.

"I have never really known why any director should talk about his work, for in no line of endeavor does a man's product speak for itself so eloquently as does that of a motion picture director," he said. "Whether that product be well or ill of itself does not matter. The fact remains that millions of picture fans are aware, and even eager to listen, and regardless of what the director himself may say, it is only what his production says that counts."

"I have been trying to make good pictures for a long time, and I say trying advisedly, for despite the generous reception accorded by the public to some of my productions, I have never succeeded to the point where I felt satisfied. The problem that most directors feel is how to do this in this regard, and I venture the opinion that even Griffith is not wholly satisfied with his "Way Down East," although the public has enthusiastically placed its stamp of approval upon it."

"The first great difficulty, a director finds is the apparent inability of the average continuity writer to produce a perfect script. It is true that some of our greatest writers are not especially good in this line of work for the screen, but no matter how great a writer may be, he must have a thorough knowledge of screen technique in addition to his literary talents. The writing of a continuity is simply the cutting of a picture before it is shot, and unless a writer has vision enough to do this he cannot possibly succeed."

"Another difficulty encountered is the lack of time allowed a director to prepare his story before shooting. No legitimate producer with as little as $100,000 invested would think of launching his production without rehearsing his players for several weeks. Yes, the picture producer, with ten times that amount at stake with his director a script, assembles a cast and starts an actual work to begin almost immediately. This is all wrong for when the camera starts to grind the players should be as familiar with the story and their lines and business as a legitimate company is when staging a first-night performance."

"But if the preparation of a story is important the cutting of the picture is even more so. I consider this operation quite as important as the actual shooting. For no matter how effective the photographed scenes are, the whole punch and drama of a story can be lost by misplacing them. And the cutting of a picture, just as much the work of the director as the actual shooting. A director may delegate this work to another, but you may be sure the result is never as satisfactory as if the director had done it himself."

"I would like to say a word about the exploitation and distribution of pictures. I've noticed that many companies spend fabulous sums in popularizing a trade-mark of some kind, after the fashion of Sterling in connection with silver, Tiffany as regards jewelry, etc. But I do not believe this kind of advertising can ever be effective in connection with pictures. For motion picture production is not a mechanical process. There can never be a uniformity of standard such as you find in silver jewelry, clothing and other trade-marked goods."

"Picture making is an art despite its commercial aspect that has not been and never will be standardized. Each picture must be made to order on schedule as to expect a producer to maintain a fixed standard in his pictures. He may strive hard to do so, but temperament is such an element in his calculations that he himself is not sure of the result. The producer roughly realizes this fact and are no longer influenced in its selection of motion picture entertainment by trade-marks. They will flock to see good pictures made by a new or unknown producer and stay away from the bad picture offered under some well-known trade-mark."

"Stahl is now at the Louis B. Mayer studio in Los Angeles, working on the first of a series of pictures to be issued through Associated First National as John M. Stahl specials."

"A Slave Of Vanity" Said To Be Generally Popular
As the time for the publication of "The Mistress of Shenstone," Pauline Frederick's second Robertson-Cole special, approaches, the distributing company reports an increasing satisfaction in the manner in which the first production, "A Slave of Vanity," is paving the way for the second.

Everywhere the first picture, which is based on "Irish," by Arthur Wing Pinero, is said to be pleasing exhibitors and their patrons. The star is supported by Steel, Willard Louis, Maude Allen, Daisy Robinson, Arthur Hoyt, Ruth Hanfords and Howard Gaye.

Ziegfeld's First Feature Is Ready for Distribution
W. K. Ziegfeld's initial production has reached the screen.

After filming at the Peerless studios: Fort Lee, N. J., titling and cutting. The Black Panther's Cab," starring Reed and directed by Emile Chautard, has just been completed. Others of the cast are Tyrone Power, Earle Foxe, Norman Trevor, Henry Stephenson, William Rosell, Paula Shay, Mlle. Davie, Ernest Lanibar and a score of others. The story was written by Ethel Donohue, a stage writer, and the scenario prepared by Philip Bartholomew, celebrated playwright.

Plan February Opening
DES MOINES, IA.—According to plans, the Strand theatre will be opened on or about February 1.
Production Work Refutes Statements of Depression

Interests Declare That Report of Confusion and Chaos Is a Malicious Misrepresentation of a Natural Readjustment

Stories of depression, even chaos, in the motion picture industry have been published broadcast in the daily press. Such statements have not been disseminated unheeded. Production interests have taken stock of themselves. They have summarized following surveys the situation as it now exists within their own organizations.

The consensus of opinion is that calamity howlers are behind the reports. Such rumors of depression and chaos are branded as "malicious misrepresentation of a natural readjustment of abnormal conditions."

First National Points to Great Activity

Associated First National declares that statements made in the daily press are "ridiculous and misleading." As a foundation for this belief, a summary of the work being carried forward in eight independent studios on the West Coast is cited. On the assumption that the activity at these eight plants is representative of the general situation, First National executives see no cause for concern.

Robert W. Priest, president of the Film Market, in the other who has an optimistic view of the condition and of the future of the industry.

Reports Are Exaggerated

"Any depression in the motion picture business at this time," he stated, "is exaggerated in its importance and is the result of wilful and malicious misrepresentation, ignorance or selfish aggravation of a natural readjustment of abnormal conditions."

The First National summary shows that Marshall Neilan, in producing his latest picture for the company, "Bob, Hampton of Placer," required the services of 2,000 persons and used a dirigible balloon for photographing large scenes which extended over miles of country.

Big Sets Are Used

In producing Katherine MacDonald's next picture, "Stranger Than Fiction," First National points out that a large amount of talent is employed. Several big sets are used.

At the other studios where First National stars and producers are working there is an equally extensive activity. In several of the productions extraordinary sets are required. No effort to arbitrarily economize is in evidence.

Among the productions being made for First National, in addition to those already mentioned, are Charles Ray's "Scrap Iron," the Louis B. Mayer picture, "The Tornado," starring Anita Stewart, supported by several hundred extras; "The Sky Pilot," which is being directed by Norman Tea; Sidney Franklin's adaptation of Andrew Soutar's "Courage," and Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven's "The Girl in the Taxi."

Business Is Good

President Frieda stated, in continuing his optimistic expression of the present situation, declared:

"Motion picture theatres everywhere are doing business and consequently require good pictures to supply their demands. Film rentals unquestionably are more than exhibitors for the first time, find it possible to fill their needs without submitting to oppression and dictation. State right buyers are directly responsible for this position of the exhibitor."

"The wonderful prosperity of the past three years served to promote an unusually large number of good, as well as mediocre, pictures, all of which could not possibly be absorbed by the regular distributors, and so it was that the state right buyer or independent exchange made it into his profit. Excess of production in motion pictures creates the same result as excess of production in any other business—the less desirable product necessarily becomes a drug on the market."

"Forbidden Fruit" Breaks Records At N. Y. Rivoli

Cecil B. DeMille's newest Paramount production, "Forbidden Fruit," which opened its New York pre-issue engagement at the Rivoli theatre recently, broke all records for receipts on the opening day, exceeding the amount grossed by John Barrymore in "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" for the previous Sunday record holder, by $584.

On Monday the mark reached was just under the figures for Washington's Birthday Day Labor Day. During the week of which holiday fell on Monday, and Paramount states that the DeMille picture is certain to break all previous Rivoli records for a week's attendance.

Universal Prides Itself On Gladys Walton Film

"Rich Girl, Poor Girl," the five-reel feature just issued by Universal, with Gladys Walton in the starring role, is said by Universal executives to be one of the best pictures ever offered to exhibitors by that company. The star's two leading men are Astin Short and Harold Austin. Others in the cast are Gordon McGregor, Wadsworth Harris, Joe Neary and C. W. Herzinger.

Victor Fleming In East With "Wife Insurance"

After a two months' stay in California and Mexico, where the mob scenes of "Wife Insurance," the John Emerson-Anta Loos special production, were filmed, Victor Fleming, director, has returned to New York. He brought with him approximately 12,000 feet of film, which will go to the cutting rooms of the Talmadge studios for condensation to five reels.
New York Notes About Film Folk

By J. B.

NEW YORK CITY, Feb. 1, 1921.

Henry Cole, the genial and "spiritual" host at the Bronx Motion Picture Theatre Owners Association ball, which was held at Hunts Point Casino, has recently been given the sobriquet of "Cuck-Coo" by his intimate friends.

John Bolte, vice-president of the Bronx M. P. Association, looked the part of one "to the manor born." His dignity was refreshing and all told he is one of the most cultured looking gentlemen we have seen for a long time as a V. P. of a motion picture association.

Ruby DeRemer was the shining light at the ball, and as usual she captivated all by her personal charm and physical perfection.

J. C. Jossey, special representative of Arrow Film Corporation, has made good at Broadway and returned to his headquarters in Chicago. Mr. Jossey has been East since the holidays.

M. B. Flowitz, who operates six theatres in the city, has opened among the out-of-town visitors to Broadway.

Eulalie Jensen, playing the leading role in the all-star David G. Fischer special, "In the Shadow of the Dome," shortly to be released, and now engaging in portraying the Nance O'Neil role of Raimunda in the picturization of "The Passion Flower," looks at first considered too young for this role. But Miss Jensen cleverly tricked Time by applying, with assiduous care and much skill, a ten-cent piece to the makeup under her eyes. She brought into vivid relief shadows that did the ageing work of years. And this is no dime novel story, either.

Robert Schable, who plays the heavy lead in a big episode of "Blind Wives," the Fox special, and who has just completed work as the heavy lead in "Wing and Limbs," a George B. Baker production, has not been always the disliked third of the screen triangle. For ten years Schable was John Drew's stage director, and acted in a similar capacity for Ethel Barrymore, Nazimova, Marie Doro and others. Schable's drifting into heavy leads in motion pictures was an instantaneous matter—George Fitzmaurice, Charles Maigne, and other noted directors recognizing in him precisely the type to put the punch into the story. And for several years now Schable has been doing the "heavy punch" act. Among his big 1920 releases are "O. P. With the Dance," "The Stolen Kiss," "The Romantic Adventurers," "Blind Wives" and others.

Vignola Back From Bahamas

Robert G. Vignola has returned to New York with his company from the Bahamas Islands, where he spent three weeks shooting exterior scenes for his next Cosmopolitan-Paramount special, "Redemption Come." He spoke of his experience: "I have nothing to say about the trip," said Mr. Vignola. "Nothing unusual or worth mentioning happened. We met no título piratical; we were not lost at sea in a storm; we weren't wrecked on a deserted shore; we weren't attacked by pirates and robbed of our jewels, including our imported porcelain necktie; we weren't presented with the key to the city, nor were any holidays declared in honor of our arrival; we weren't attacked by giant sharks while bathing in the well known surf; nor were we saved by a beautiful maiden with a million dollars in the bank and no living relative. Seriously, it was a quiet, uneventful trip. We worked hard and we got some very effective results."

Reminded of the report that he and his company were almost killed or seriously injured when a cliff collapsed, Mr. Vignola deprecated the incident and said: "We're back in little old New York, safe and sound, aren't we? What else is there to say? Besides, what's an unexpected ducking or two among friends anyway."

The weather was so hot that all of us except Mr. Lincoln and Miss Owen worked in our bathing suits. Can you imagine anything sweeter when you're in a bathing suit than a dip in the tropic surf?"

In the Vignola party were E. K. Lincoln and Miss Seena Owen, who play the male and female leads, Phil Carle and Russell Mathias, assistant directors; Al Liguori, cameraman, and a staff of technical aids. Mr. Vignola is now putting the finishing touches to the production, the release date for which will be announced later.

Charles J. Geigerich is again with Lee Keedick, for whom he publicized Guy Ump's "Over the Top," and Lincoln Pat O'Brien. He is looking after the publicity for the lecture tours of Gilbert K. Chesterton, the noted English author, and Claire Sheridan, the sculptor, who modeled Lenin, Trotsky, and other revolutionary leaders.

Maurice Meyers will leave for Los Angeles on a business trip within the next two weeks.

My wireless correspondent flashes the following: W. A. Gibson of the Australasian Films, Ltd., and S. F. Doyle of Union Theatres, Ltd., expect to sail on the S. S. Niagara about February 3 for the United States on a tour of inspection of American theatres.

"Passion Flower" Ready For Issue in February

In "The Passion Flower," scheduled for February issue, Norma Talmadge is prepared to offer one of the most interesting roles of her career.

The story was written by Jacinto Benavente, hailed as Spain's greatest living novelist. Nance O'Neil is this season playing the part of Rainumba, the mother, in the stage interpretation of the play. Miss Talmadge will appear as Acacia, the daughter, whose prominence is stressed in the picture. The story is a romance of Castilian peasantry.

Adjust Theatre Insurance

SPRINGFIELD, MO.—The damage to the Landers theatre building by fire on December 18 has been adjusted for $35,000. The rebuilding of the theatre is expected to start at an early date.

New York's Livest Pick-up Service

The one important link between the exhibitor and the producer is the fellow who delivers the theatre's daily show, and no city in the world boasts a better service than that furnished by the Prudential Film Delivery Co. of New York. This company, of which Joseph M. Seider is general manager, serves theatres in Brooklyn, Hudson county, Essex county, Elizabeth, N. J., and Orange, N. J., besides Manhattan proper. It also owns and operates the New Amsterdam theatre, Newark, N. J., and the Pearl and LeRoy theatres, Brooklyn.

In addition to picking up and delivering films, Mr. Seider often renders the theatremen valuable service by paying for his films in case he has neglected to send a check for them, thus obviating the closing of his house. In all of these transactions, involving thousands of dollars, Mr. Seider has never lost a cent.

Authors Laud Goldwyn for Giving Them Supervision Over Production

President of Company in Reply Declares Prominent Writers Have Made It Possible for the Industry to Score Achievements

In laudatory terms members of Eminent Authors, at a luncheon tendered at Culver City, Cal., by Samuel Goldwyn, president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, declared that the president was the first producer to bring authors into close personal touch with the production of their stories.

Present at the luncheon and among those who talked were Rupert Hughes, Mary Roberts Rinehart, Gertrude Atherton, Rita Weiman, Leroy Scott, Gouverneur Morris and Katherine Newlin Burt. They declared that they had been won over to an enthusiastic support of the screen and that they were ready to give the fullest cooperation in developing motion pictures as a medium for artistic expression.

Studio Is Activity

The keynote of Mr. Goldwyn’s reply was that “had not prominent writers come to the screen we would not have made the progress which we have achieved.” In addition to the authors and other members of the Goldwyn producing forces, some twenty-five magazine and newspaper writers attended.

There is no indication of any lull in activities at the Culver City studios where two productions have just begun, They are “The Old Nest” and “The Bridal Path.” Rupert Hughes, who is supervising the editing of “Dangerous Curve Ahead,” wrote the continuity for “The Old Nest” from his novel of the same name and turned it over to Reginald Barker for production with a cast including Mary Alden, Dwight Critten- den, Johnny Jones, Lucille Rickson and Buddy Messenger.

Moore Back in West

E. Mason Hopper was chosen to direct “The Bridal Path,” in the cast of which are May Collins, Richard Dix, Stuart Holmes, Raymond Hatton and Marcia Moran. Will Rogers, producer Clarence Badger and members of their company are in New Orleans taking exterior scenes for “Unarmed Heroes.”

Tom Moore and Director Victor Schertzinger have returned from New York where they took exteriors for “Made in Heaven.” Rapid progress is being made on Charles Kenyon’s “The Alibi,” directed by Frank Lloyd, with House Peters, Irene Rich, Sidney Ains- worth, DeWitt C. Jennings, Gertrude Claire and William Friend in the cast.

Leroy Scott is assisting in the production of his first screen story, “The Night Rose,” which Wallace Worsley is directing. Leatrice Joy plays the leading feminine role and Louis Chaney has a part similar to his Blizzards in Gouverneur Morris’ “The Penalty.”

New York Scenes Being Made by Emerson-Loos

Members of the cast of the John Emerson-Anita Loos special, “Wife Insurance,” have arrived in New York from the coast to make Eastern scenes. Included in the company working in the East are Basil Sydney and Tom Wilson. Emerson and Miss Loos arrived ahead of their company to prepare the scenes. Meanwhile, other parts of the picture are being filmed in California and Mexico under the direction of Victor Fleming.

English Shakespearean Actor in “Great Day”

When “The Great Day,” one of the productions Hugh Ford made for Paramount at the London studio of Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., is shown in this country, the American public will see as the featured player a prominent English stage actor, Arthur Bourchier. He has gained wide fame throughout the British Empire as a Shakespearean player and an interpreter of comedy roles in lighter drama.

Universal’s “Outside the Law” Is Booked Over Entire U. B. O. Chain

“Outside the Law,” the Universal-Jewel production starring Priscilla Dean, has been booked over the entire U. B. O. circuit in New York City, comprising twenty-six first-class theatres. The opening run of the feature in New York was at B. S. Moss’ Broadway theatre, where the picture drew large crowds during the week of January 16.

This run was preceded by the unique premiere arranged by Universal, whereby “Outside the Law” appeared simultaneously in the Lyric, the Astor, the Longacre and the George M. Cohan theatres, New York City, for one day only—Sunday, January 16.

Plays Simultaneously

Following the successful week at the Broadway, the new Priscilla Dean picture was shown during the week of January 23 at the Eighty-first Street theatre, New York, and at the Flatbush theatre, Brooklyn. “Outside the Law” was the only picture booked in New York City in two leading theatres at the same time during that week. In addition to its two-seven-day showings, it also was exhibited for four days in the Prospect Theatre, Brooklyn.

The next big presentation of the film was made at the Park theatre, Boston, where it opened January 24 to a morn-

ANNA G. NILSSON

Lead in the all-star production “Temple Dusk,” made by Sawyer and Lubin and distributed through Metro.

OMAHA, Neb.—W. R. McFarland and Sam H. Goldberg, representing the World Realty Company, are making an extensive trip to gather ideas for construction of the motion picture theatre that they expect to build at the north- west corner of Fifteenth and Douglas streets. Construction will begin in the spring. The company now operates the Sun, Moon and Muse theatres.
Goldwyn Issues List Of Films Available

For Current Booking

Goldwyn directors are now putting the finishing touches on seven interesting productions, while six other pictures are either in production or about to get under way. The pictures now being finished are Reginald Barker’s production, “Snowblind,” with an all star cast including Russell Simpson, Mary Alden, Cullen Landis and a Pauline Starke; Frank Lloyd’s production of “A Tale of Two Worlds,” with J. Frank Glendon, Beatrice Joy and Wallace Beery in the leading roles; “Don’t Neglect Your Wife,” with Mabel Julianne Scott and Lewis S. Stone heading the cast, directed by Wallace Worsley; “Boys Will Be Boys,” story starring Will Rogers, directed by Clarence Badger; “Mr. Barnes of New York,” starring Tom Moore, directed by Victor Schertzinger; “Dangerous Curve Ahead,” with Helene Chadwick in the featured role, directed by E. Mason Hopper, and the twelfth of the Booth Tarkington “Edgar Comedies,” featuring 12 year old Johnny Jones, directed by Paul Born.

Johnny Hines Scores Hit
With Cleveland Patronage

Reports from Cleveland, where Johnny Hines made personal appearances in the Loew theatres and other principal houses, was that he drew crowds which tested the capacities of the theatres. The Torchy comedies, published through Educational, have proven popular in the Cleveland territory where they have reached almost a 100 per cent bookings, it is announced.

Following a week in that section, Hines went to Cincinnati to appear at the Libson and other principal theatres, devoting a portion of the week to appearing in Dayton, Akron, Hamilton and several other cities. He will later appear in the Pittsburgh territory and then he will return to New York to complete the tenth of the comedies made from the stories by Sewell Ford.

Reelcraft to Distribute Alt and Howell Comedies
In Series of Twenty-Six

Reelcraft Pictures Corporation will publish, on February 12, a new two-reel comedy series featuring Alexander Alt and Helen Howell, vaudeville and screen actors. Alt Martin will direct the series.

“Marked Women,” is the title of the first issue. Union Film Company is producing the series at its studio in Sherman, California. There will be twenty-six comedies, one to be issued every other week.

Bethany to See Pictures

BETHANY, MO.—The Bethany band boys, who have leased the Auditorium for the season, have embarked into the motion picture business. H. A. Kelly is manager of the house.

Hammons to Consider Acquisition
Of Additional Subjects on Coast

President of Educational Will Visit Several of Company’s Exchanges While En Route
West and on Return East

E. W. Hammons, president of Educational Films Corporation of America and its distributing subsidiary, Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., left this week for Los Angeles on the most extensive trip he has made since the establishment of the exchange system. He will visit branch offices en route West and on the return East.

In Los Angeles he will have important conferences with the producers of Chris- tic, Mermaid, Vanity and Gayety comedies, which Educational distributes. Mr. Hammons in going West desires to get in personal touch with production activities and to offer such suggestions as the experiences of the home office and the various branches have had with these pictures.

Meets Outside Interests

Many other producers of one and two-reel subjects of much variety have made appointments during the last few weeks with Mr. Hammons and he will meet these gentlemen in Los Angeles. While no effort is being made to increase the volume of product handled by Educational, it has been Mr. Hammons' policy to consider pictures within his company's scope that meet its quality standard. However, in every case he has declined to make contracts until he has seen the product itself and been satisfied the standard of production can be maintained.

"There is no change in policy involved in my trip," said Mr. Hammons. "As you know, the policy of Educational has always been to build slowly and soundly. Before we selected the product that we are now distributing we examined a vast amount of product and we were sure that we selected the best. Not a week goes by that we are not offered much other material, but we have resisted any temptation to acquire quantity at the expense of quality.

Consider Additional Product

Another element entering into the situation has been that with our distributing organization new, and as specialists in short subject selling, we have preferred to devote our efforts to the material that we have already had rather than to accumulate too much product and distribute our energies over too large a field. We have now reached the point where we have put these various pictures 'over the top' and where we can take on additional product provided that it meets our standards. So I expect to confer in Los Angeles with some of these producers whom I have not been able to offer previous encouragement on account of the conditions I have cited.

"Educational is now, with the acquisition of super-Kinograms, in the position of offering everything that the theatre needs except the feature—a field which we will continue to leave alone."

Mr. Hammons went to California by way of New Orleans, stopping there and in Dallas. He will return by the Northern route, visiting the Seattle, Minneapolis, Milwaukee, Chicago and probably a number of other branches.

Hodkinson Would Limit Production

Tells Missouri Exhibitors That Every Concern Distributing Pictures Must Reorganize and Readjust Its Business

W. W. Hodkinson delivered an address at the recent convention of Missouri exhibitors which is of interest to every theatre owner in the United States. So that all exhibitors may have the privilege of studying his ideas, the address is here printed. It is well worth the reading.

Producers-Controls of This Phase of Industry Is Fatal—Looks for Big Decrease in Number of Concerns Handling Distribution

I AM here to address you on the relationship of the producer, distributor and exhibitor in this business. I notice on your program the slogan "An injury to one is the concern of all." I wonder if you mean it in your relationship to each other or your relationship to the distributor. Personally, I am afraid to say that that slogan applies to the business generally and suggests the course of what I have to say to you today.

We might compare the picture business as a whole to a man's body. And we might compare the exhibitor to the body hands. You gentlemen are gathered together here with your local problems foremost and yet the hands are related to the rest of the body, and if there is something wrong with the heart, with the brain, with the lungs, with the liver of the exhibition industry, in come theicine and if the disease die or become ungit, you gentlemen will suffer though you may not recognize the disease at their earliest appearance. I want to clear up any points of uncertainty in your mind as to what you can do best to function for the good of the whole body, because a selfish viewpoint which only regards the local things will not be the best viewpoint in the future.

What I would like to make clear to you is that I am not a manufacturer of motion pictures. I am discussing this subject today with you from the viewpoint of the exhibitor who has gravitated into the center of things, with the endeavor to solve some of the problems which I as well as you can clearly see. I want to us to consider what a distributor is and what their relationship is to you.

 A producer, as I think of a producer, is one who manufactures pictures or who assumes the risk, the complete burden of production cost of a motion picture before it has demonstrated its value.

Hodkinson Believes That—

"Producer-control of the channels of distribution is fatal to the progress and advancement of this business."

"Every concern in the business of distributing pictures must now or later reorganize and readjust."

"They must limit the number of their pictures to a few equally meritorious ones, thus avoiding the waste caused by unproductive pictures."

"The motion picture industry must first take stock, get its house in order and intelligently combat this 'reform' movement."

"The executives in New York must get their heads together and quit 'kidding' themselves."

"What this business needs today is some architects, it needs some plans, it needs some intelligence."

Independent Declares That It Is Time to Take Honest Steps to Counteract the Reform Propaganda

The producers first buy these things, incur this expense, collect from the exhibitors, and the question whether the exhibitor can collect from the public is not considered. You are familiar with the fact that there are more pictures turned out than can be exhibited by the first-run theatres in St. Louis and every other center.

Some exhibitors are noting this today and taking advantage of the situation. They say: "I will take one out of every five of my pictures and not go by this concern makes." Gentlemen, this concern from whom you take one out of every five of your pictures cannot stay in business unless the conditions that are shaping up. These producers have problems ahead of the fact that they do not get a complete distribution for their products they cannot keep making that product. You on the other hand are depending on this surplus of product to let you take your choice, and you think it is going to continue, but such a condition will not help you.

It is only the wonderul growth of the business and the willingness of the public to pay more and more and more money that has let this unbreakable unsound condition go on. We all know of producers who control a large number of inferior pictures that do not bring their money back but who stay in business because occasionally they hit a big success, some sensation. That is skating on thin ice. It is necessary for this big business to go on, that different plans for the mutual supporting of each other be made out between the exhibitors and the producer.

The organization which I represent is an effort to encourage individuals to produce pictures and reorganize their products through our organization, which is a common channel open to all meritorious pictures.

This type of organization has been designed by me out of my knowledge of conditions and because of my belief that I cannot print an arbitrary stamp of value depending entirely upon my personal view and judgment on films and then expect my judgment to carry weight. I feel these films over the exhibitor. If I thought that could be done continuously and was good business policy, probably I would do it.

As it is, I believe that every concern in the business of distributing pictures today must now or later reorganize and reorganize to limit the number of their pictures to the really meritorious ones, thus avoiding the waste caused by unproductive pictures. In this way, the waste caused by an excess of channels of distribution will be done away with, not to mention the waste from the surplus products which are only partly digested as well as the waste of pay-
Your gentlemens with your local organization are incapable of meeting this situation. The first problem is that you have to meet. After that you must organize and shape your affairs in such a way as to coordinate and cooperate with such other organizations from the exhibitors angle, and you must also cooperate with such organizations from the producers angle as signed to deal with you on a just basis.

Two conditions now concern the industry which are going to give it a lot of trouble. Enthusiasm in distribution. That is due to bankers and others with money at stake in those larger organizations who are bringing their own distributing forces. These men are becoming concerned over general business conditions. That is going to slow down the industry. The other is that there is available to you gentlemen, and that is something that you will have to contend with in the future.

Another condition is the amount of propaganda being circulated in the public press against motion pictures, favoring regulations, censorship, board of control, Sunday censorship, etc. Unless a great deal more intelligence is displayed in the meeting and opposing of this condition that it is evidenced at the time I left New York, the effects of that are going to be very drastic and very far reaching.

There is a general attitude on the part of the motion picture business to seem incapable of contending with this propaganda, which is supported undoubtedly by the reformers and agitators who make a living by spreading it. There is no evidence that our industry is going to combat that. They can do it. The statement "Our business is all right. It is fine. Leave us alone."

Now that is not the way to combat that. The first thing the motion picture business has got to do is take stock. If there are points in connection with our business that is private and public and give the reformers an excuse upon which to attack us and denounce us, gentlemen, we must clean that up.

The motion picture industry must first take stock, get its house in order, and then intelligently combat the reform movement, or it is going to slow up over its country and result in so much censorship, Sunday closing, etc., that it will not be possible for anybody to make pictures for you because that person will not know whether that picture will be shown in every community, or in enough communities to make an investment profitable.

In the New York Times a couple of two weeks ago there were three different attacks on the motion picture industry. There was a statement by the chief of police in Chicago that he was going to widen police powers and not let any picture which depicted vice, immorality, etc. He is the chief of police in Chicago. This is very serious, gentlemen, because within a few days the Chicago Daily News, which wants a little publicity, is going to say the same thing. If the motion picture industry is not so organized that it can intervene at the head of New York combat movements like that of the chief of police in Chicago to put us on a basis with legalized vice, there is something wrong with this industry that makes it an unsafe business to be in. The executives in charge in New York must get their heads together and quit "kidding themselves."

First they must make sure that they have the right goods, that nobody has a complaint against the picture, and then combat this thing, or it will embarrass industry a great deal of trouble within the next year or two.

Another condition which can give you equal concern is that the picture business is facing the fact of retrenchment and reaping on account of its past sins, its past waste. You gentlemen recognize that the movie is a unique player, but it is a good picture and you display this picture. And one of these personalities, actor or actress, in the picture becomes popular as a result of your exploitation and the general excellence of the picture. Under this condition, which is going to be increased,) and the increasing popularity of that personality would be used to increase your earnings and increase the earnings of the actors, and the benefit should be divided generally.

Under the present system, although you furnish the machinery that has done more to popularize and personality and anything else, it is merely an excuse to shoot your rentals up. The harm is that somebody gets a picture made before they never had before and feels free to spend it any way because they got it that way.

The bank elements that are perhaps not as good judgment but realize more the necessity of not making these un-economic moves, continuing these wastes, getting more and more in a position to control at some future time these big organizations. There is every evidence that they will endeavor to regulate and regulate, but that a thing that is worth is worth and no more. It has only been the wonderful nature of the business whereby it can pass over everything the public that has made a lot of concerns successful in this business. Let any condition of general readjustment extremely favorable for this country, such as we have started no doubt, and almost without exception it means that. Down to the very last business of producers who are supplying you with pictures today. The question is—Have you adequate plans for meeting these conditions? In so far to you think because you have had a surplus of pictures that this will continue? Now, as I said when I first started to speak, I would like to remove some confusion that I think is in your minds relative to my organization. Our organization is designed to see pictures just exactly as the exhibitor selects them for his theatre, with the idea of getting the best possible result of his expenditure of money.

Our organization is designed as a mechanism to go into the market and get the best possible result for the individual producers who are handling their own distribution and who may be required to reduce their output so they cannot supply their own. We are free to handle, and contemplate handling some products of that sort during the end of the year, which will sooner or later cut down the number of national distribution systems to perhaps 25 per cent of what they are today.

I wish I knew of some general plan whereby exhibitors and producers could work together, but when a producer committed himself to a condition in making enough pictures to start a distributing machine, nothing will satisfy him short of a connection insuring him a profit on this condition which I, if I were an exhibitor, would not care to face because at present there are many million dollars being spent in producing values in New York today with the elements, the directors, the stars, all in, that produce万元以上 in other camp producing pictures in competition, in the organizations they have left. What this business needs today is, it needs something, it needs a plan, it needs some intelligence. Get the business adjusted, so an injury to one is the concern of all the others. It is not accomplished now, it is only going to be accomplished perhaps through competition.

The producer in control of the machinery by which he gives you pictures has built that machinery by a lot of waste which somebody has got to pay for. Now he will coordinate with you and operate with you if you will set under his waste and take him at his valuation—and you will not do that if you can help yourself. If, on the other hand, you are depending on the producer for the pictures, you are only partially support go out of business because you only partially support them. Then, gentlemens, from me the producer and distributor will make you undervise every risk, waste and all, if they take your theatre. That is what you are facing. The only way is—what are you going to do about it?

I do not believe you are going to get anywhere by any method which is not fair to the producer. If you are successful in taking over the distribution channels yourself, I find that where exhibitors in a committee have the right to tie up all the houses they are just as unfair toward the producer as the producer is to them. It is, a case of each taking all he can when he can. Some better system must be devised.

This business needs control, some sort of control that you would be pleased to discuss with you gentlemen if you have any plans of your own. I would be glad to pass on to them as whether they are beneficial to the condition which is developing.

I think the whole business must reorganize along the lines that are set in our—this independent agency between the producer and the exhibitor in my opinion is absolutely necessary. This present state of affairs will only get together with exhibitors by recognizing his values and the exhibitor's cannot afford to get under the producer's load.

REGINALD BARKER says of CENSORSHIP

The screen, like the press, is a conservator of intelligence. The producer is a governmental officer as the editor to disseminate his personal beliefs.

The right of freedom of speech, guaranteed by the first amendment to the constitution, must apply to the screen as well as to the press. If the producer does not give license of obscenity. Police of every city have ample power to suppress violations of decency on the part of screen or press.

But the right of free speech can not be abridged constitutionally by a censorship of either screen or press.

Double Number of Kinograms Prints Principal Theatres in N. Y. and Big Circuits Show Initial Issue

Super Kinograms, under its first publication through Educational Exchange, was shown in every principal motion picture theatre in New York City, according to announcement by the distributors. Practically an equal showing was made in every principal city in the country, while it is said that almost every important circuit of theatres was represented among the first showings.

Order Extra Prints

So great was the demand for the initial issue of super Kinograms, which took over the product of Gaumont News and will absorb another news weekly on March 1 that exactly double the number of prints that were originally estimated were sent out from the New York laboratories on January 31. Every theatre as far west as Omaha had copies for Sunday showings.

Kinograms has not simply absorbed other news weeklies. It has taken over their product, with their staffs, including cameramen in some fifty principal centers.

Has Exclusive Pictures

The first issue of super Kinograms is declared to contain exclusive pictures of the Roumanian royal family on a state visit to an ancient shrine; striking views of the great fire at New Haven; scenes in Washington and California showing the railroads fighting the heavy snows; pictures of the moving of Mr. Harding from the home he occupied when he was a senator to the white house with Mrs. Harding superintending the work and the Harding cooK posing for the camera; striking views from the top of the Queensboro bridge showing the traffic across East River: testing the biggest of lighthouses at Navesink, N. J.; photos of a Siamese prince who is here to follow his study of bugs; views of a ceremony at Chicago in which Miss Van Gordon becomes a member of the Sioux tribe of Indians; some striking pictures of war veterans in the wilds of Haiti and finally the latest pictures of President-elect Harding enjoying himself on his house-boat cruise in Florida.

Kinograms is to be issued twice weekly, on Sundays and Thursdays.

"The Magic Cup" Is Next Constance Binney Picture

Constance Binney has begun work on her new Realart picture, "The Magic Cup," adapted from an original story by E. Lloyd Sheldon. It is being directed by John S. Robertson.

Paterson, N. J., to Have New 1,000-Seat Theatre

PATERSON, N. J.—Plans are in preparation for a new motion picture theatre to be erected at Union and Redwood avenues by Harry R. Grossman, who operates several New Jersey theatres, including one at Montclair. The new house will cost about $60,000 and will seat 1,000 patrons.

Doubleday Company Building New $150,000 Studio Near Hollywood

Lester Cuneo Pictures for Capital Distribution Will Be Produced at Plant Which Will Be Modern in Every Respect

Doubleday Productions Company has broken ground for the construction of a new $150,000 studio near Hollywood, Calif.

Lester Cuneo pictures for distribution by Capital Film Company will be produced at the new plant.

Maintain Riding School

All the latest equipment will be installed. Approximately 12,000 square feet of glass will be used in the roof of the structure. Space for shooting ten scenes simultaneously is provided. Provision is made for laboratory and projection equipment.

At the plant will be a riding school where various stunts will be rehearsed. A herd of cattle with grazing space will be maintained. The corral planned will confine 100 head of horses.

Finished by April 1

The new studio probably will be operating by April 1.

The rights for Alabama, Georgia, Florida, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Louisiana and Mississippi have been purchased by Pearce Films of Atlanta and New Orleans on the Lester Cuneo series of Westerns, including "Lone Hand Wilson" and "The Ranger and the Law."

St Greiver of Rusell-Greiver-Russell, who is making a trip through the South-eastern and Eastern territory, reports that he is meeting with great response on the Cuneo Westerns.

Already the Indiana and Illinois rights have been disposed of to Frank Zambreno of Unity Photoplay Company.
Capacity Audiences at Hartford
See Premiere of "Black Beauty"
Mr. and Mrs. Randolph Chester, Who Handled the Script for Production, Attend Opening of Attraction at Capitol

Capacity crowds attended the premiere at the Capitol theatre, Hartford, Conn., of Vitagraph's picturization of Anna Sewell's "Black Beauty."

State regulations in Connecticut permit Sunday performances only between the hours of 7 p.m. and 10 p.m. Throughout the first performance, with the 3,200 seats occupied, people jammed the lobby waiting for the second and last show.

Chesters in Attendance
Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester, who wrote the scenario, incorporating in this famous story of a horse the human element, were present at the premiere. Jean Paige is featured.

In a brief address before the showing of the picture Mr. Chester explained just how the difficulties were overcome in adapting the story of "Black Beauty," a narrative told in the first person by a horse, to the screen.

"Black Beauty" is a splendid example of the efforts of Vitagraph to produce better pictures," Mr. Chester said. "It is a great step forward in the right direction. The picture is clean and wholesome and it is also good entertainment.

Scenes Are Applauded
"If you like 'Black Beauty' simply because you know the story and because there is nothing in it to offend man, woman or child, then we have at least partially failed in our purpose. If you like the picture for these reasons and because it is also good entertainment—exceptionally good entertainment—then we have accomplished what we set out to do and will be encouraged to continue along the same lines in making better pictures."

There was no doubt that the huge audiences liked "Black Beauty." Many of the scenes were applauded. At the close the entire audience arose and showed its approval. Subsequent audiences were as large and as enthusiastic and the engagement of the Capitol hung up a new record for attendance.

Press Book on "The Blue Moon"
Suggests Effective Exploitation

American Film Company's publicity department in putting out campaign books for its productions has expanded its greatest energy on practical suggestions for exploitation, devising numerous and attractive ways for dressing the lobby and stage, and novel ideas for the exhibitors' use in advertising.

Some of these suggestions are simple and easily put over, while others are elaborate and lavish, giving the man with the suburban theatre a chance to do some unique stunts, exploiting and presenting his pictures as well as the man operating a large house.

Press Book Information
The campaign book on the recent drama, "The Blue Moon," is graphic and filled with these suggestions, whose effectiveness has been shown. From the information arriving from exhibitors the amount of exploitation and advertising done on the picture has greatly added to the box office receipts.

The report reached that both small and large houses are making use of the campaigns suggested, as well as using ideas of their own. One of the popular stunts adapted is a rider, wearing a red mask and carrying a banner or pennant, driving a spirited horse about the streets. On the banner the words "Catch me if you can on the Blue Moon at the theatre tonight."

Use "Fancy Vest" Idea
Referring to the two-column ad cut on an enclosed six-page spread gives the exhibitor a good idea of the "Red Mask" who takes a prominent part in the drama.

The "Fancy Vest" idea also adds to the interest of the rider, since in the drama "The Man in the Fancy Vest" turns out to be the "Red Mask." Next in favor and used in suburban theatres and rural towns were lighted blue moons on automobiles on which the name "The Blue Moon" and the name of the theatre in blue letters on a white background showed up prominently.

Educational Has Affiliated With National Association
Educational Film Exchanges is the latest motion picture film distributing company to join the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

Earl W. Hammons, president of the company, formally filed an application for membership of his company recently.

Educational has been a member of the producers' division for several years and is the fourteenth company to affiliate with the distributors' branch of the national association and will bring its percentage nearer to the 100 per cent mark than ever before.

Atlanta Women Hold Reception for Beban
“One Man in a Million” Is Given Warm Welcome
In the South

Continuing its triumphant course, which began at Newark, N. J., where George Beban, author, director and star, was highly honored by city officials and influential citizens, “One Man in a Million,” the production which is to be distributed by Robertson-Cole, met like honors in Atlanta recently.

The Atlanta Women’s Club, taking cognizance of the fact that “One Man in a Million” is a direct effort at better and cleaner pictures, appointed the following committee which attended a special preview of “One Man in a Million”: Mrs. Alonzo Richardson, Mrs. B. M. Boykin, Mrs. Hamilton Douglas, Mrs. Norman Sharp, Mrs. Bun Wylie, Mayor James L. Key attended the special performance and the picture was received by welfare bodies with a warm welcome.

Exploration Successful
“One Man in a Million” played at the Howard theatre, a leading Atlanta house. This theatre arranged for an extensive program of exploitation which was set going more than a week before the engagement of the Beban picture began.

Ford Educational Offers Interesting Information

Two new issues of the Ford Educational Weekly are announced ready for publication, the one on January 23, the other on January 30.

“Democracy in Education” is the title of the first to be published, “In a Palace of Honor” the other. The former briefly traces the early history of American pioneers and shows the modern means for “making the world safe for democracy.” The latter shows the lie and work of the honey bee.

“Business Fine” Is Word from Dallas

(Dallas, Feb. 1.—Contradicting the hue and cry of hard times and the serious condition of some film salesmen, comes the startling sales of L. C. Baxley Attractions. Almost the newest of the Dallas stock, the company reports sales aggregating in excess of $8,000 since December 15. The local Goldwyn office is showing a remarkable volume of business, contracts amounting to $30,000 resulting from a ten-day trip by Mr. Remy.

Schlank Features and Comedies Will Be Issued by Shallenberger

Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow Film Corporation, announces that he will sign contracts with Morris R. Schlank, of Morris R. Schlank Productions, for several series of pictures to be made during the year. Among the list of pictures to be produced by Mr. Schlank are twenty-four two-reel comedies of two series of twelve pictures each. These will feature two well-known comedy stars and the comedies will be of the highest type.

Will Make Features
In addition to these, Mr. Schlank will make eight feature productions. These features will be specially made for Arrow and will consist of two series of four features each, starring two well-known stars. The first of these feature production will be delivered to Arrow about March 15 and there will be one feature delivered each month thereafter.

In discussing this contract, Mr. Schlank stated: “I believe that this is one of the most important deals that I have ever entered into. I have secured two well-known Broadway female stars to feature in my productions. I have purchased from prominent authors a number of stories that are specially adapted to the histrionic ability of these stars.

Builds New Studio

“I have recently built a new studio in Hollywood that will take care of at least six companies, all working at the same time. I intend to keep this studio busy constantly making productions exclusively for the Arrow, and I anticipate big things for 1921.”

Dr. Shallenberger will go to Los Angeles with Mr. Schlank and will personally approve the stories to be used in making the first two of these features and will also watch the making of the first pictures while he is there.

While this deal with Mr. Schlank is considered an important one, it is but one of a number that Dr. Shallenberger is making for 1921 productions.

Louise Glaum’s New Feature Ready Soon

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 1.—Louise Glaum’s next Associated Producers picture, a J. Parker Reid special, to be published about March 10, will be called “I Am the Woman.”

It was written by Bradley King, playwright and magazine contributor. Jack Nelson directed and Mahlon Hamilton has the leading male role, with Ruth Stonehouse, Joseph Kilgour, George Cooper and other prominent picture players in the supporting cast.
Irving Lesser Reorganizes Company
For Adaptation of "Peck's Bad Boy"

Irving M. Lesser, who is producing "Peck's Bad Boy" with Jackie Coogan as the featured player, announces a reorganization of the company.

Production Is Resumed
Production has been resumed following the return of the youthful star, who was seriously injured some time ago. Under reorganization Louis E. Loeb becomes production manager. Following the employment of Loeb, plans were made immediately for a more elaborate production.

Sam Wood, through the courtesy of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has been retained to handle the megaphone. Doris May will portray the "big sister" role. Wheeler Oakman is assigned the leading male role. Others in the cast are Raymond Hatton, James Corrigan, Lillian Leighton, Charles Hatton and Gloria Wood.

Work at Brunton Plant
Large space at the Brunton studios will be used for production activity. It is now planned to have the picture ready for the cutting room within a few weeks. Distribution plans are now in the hands of Lesser.

The production will be in five parts.

Survey Prospects for Connersville Playhouse
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

CONNERSVILLE, Ind.—Feb. 1—Promoters, whose names are not disclosed, have been canvassing the north side with the intention of learning the possibilities for the successful operation of a first-class motion picture theatre for that section. They emphasized the fact that two-thirds of the population of Connersville would be served by such a theatre. The men did not attempt to sell stock.

Formal Opening Given
The Waterloo Strand
WATERLOO, Ia.—The Strand, construction of which has occupied more than a year, recently was given formal opening. The theatre is owned by Strand Theatre Company, of Waterloo, with the estate of M. Ford and A. J. Diebold, of Cedar Rapids, the chief stockholders.

Charles McGuire is the manager. He will be succeeded as manager of the Palace by A. B. Heston. A number of prominent motion picture men attended the opening.

Muriel Ostriche Signs

$60,000 Theatre Will Be Built in Milwaukee
MILWAUKEE, WIS. — Announcement has been made by a local real estate company of the contemplated building of a theatre at 35th street and Lisbon avenue, to cost $60,000. It is understood that the house will be built for a client who operates several other houses.

The straight publicity value of such a story is great. It adds to the personal prestige of the exhibitor, which is a direct benefit to the individual and to the theatre in both business and social sense.

The point registered, that a man of demonstrated ability, a man whose work has been made the subject of commendatory comment by a journal which examines the work of the national body of exhibitors, is devoting his every effort to the proper selection and presentation of motion picture entertainment, is of great direct influence upon the box office.

With that impression firmly implanted in the public mind, more and more patrons will attend the theatre because of its individuality and its management. Theaters with that type of patronage are singularly independent of program variation and industrial conditions as regards box office success.

Mr. Albright again has demonstrated his unquestioned ability as a showman in engineering this remarkable enterprise. He has made another important contribution to the archives of exploitation, a contribution which every exhibitor should study with a view toward adaptation.

The stunt, it merits that term in its best sense, was brilliantly conceived and no less brilliantly executed. It shows the keen insight and the deft execution which has marked Mr. Albright's every achievement.

The idea will be capitalized by exhibitors in big cities and in little towns. For it is equally adaptable for all theatres and newspapers.

Things theatrical have always been a scapegoat. Sex or problem plays were first attacked, then burlesque, then the ballet, then farce, and just now it is motion pictures. While it is true that the industry has been hampered by those who care little for consequences so long as they get financial results, the same is true of the legitimate stage and the vaudeville. Both the screen and the stage have suffered from them and the danger is, in attempting to root them out, we also destroy others in their environment.

There are pictures which by reason of being badly directed, poorly acted, amateurishly photographed are a real detriment to the industry. They are made in the hope of tempting a morbid few by their misleading titles. Fortunately they are but short-lived and the American public is gradually learning which concerns are making and distributing the really worth-while productions and they attend only those theatres showing them.

"THE PARISH PRIEST" (Herman Garfield) has been pleasingly transferred to the screen after serving Daniel Sully as a stage vehicle for years. It is a simple, human story of the problems of small town folk, blending nicely the elements of popular appeal.

"A MAD MARRIAGE" (Universal) is a brisk-moving, pleasantly pictured story of a domestic problem, with Carmel Myers in the stellar role. A feature delightful in every way. Supporting cast especially good. Should please generally.

"MAMMA'S AFFAIR" (First National) is an adaptation of the Rachel Barton Butler stage success, with Constance Talmadge in the leading role. While generally pleasing it is quite talky and therefore falls short of the usual screen comedy-drama in which we have been accustomed to see Miss Talmadge.

"HOLD YOUR HORSES" (Goldwyn) is a first-rate screen vehicle for Tom Moore. Adapted from a Saturday Evening Post story by Rupert Hughes it will prove highly entertaining because of the delightful treatment given the human story. It is the story of a street cleaner who becomes a power in politics.

"THE MARRIAGE OF WILLIAM ASHE" (Metro) will be met with enthusiasm by the high grade patronage and will entertain the average patron. May Allison plays charmingly. The British and Venetian backgrounds are charming. A domestic drama, the story of a wife's misguided efforts to aid her husband politically.

"THE DIAMOND QUEEN" (Universal) promises to take its place among the leaders in Universal serial history. It is unique as to setting and the first four episodes constitute entertainment of the highest serial standard. Eileen Sedgwick is the featured player and admirably supported. The picture is adapted from a story by Jacques Futrelle.

"THE CHEATER REFORMED" (Fox) presents William Russell in a ministerial role, far away from the customary trappings of the West. Star in dual characters. The tale of a reformed ex-convict who usurps his brother's place to get a fresh start. Interesting and entertaining. Will please.

"THE TAVERN KNIGHT" (Stoll) is a play of the days of Cromwell and the Roundheads. Chief charm in historical settings and interesting backgrounds. Valuable educationally, and should be advertised to draw the school and college patronage.

"MY LADY'S LATCHKEY" (First National) offers Katherine MacDonald in a role that permits elegant gowning and shows her great beauty to distinct advantage. Story of a reformed crook. Should please generally.

"The TRUTH ABOUT HUSBANDS" (First National) is a society feature above the grade of the average. Stars May McAvoy who plays with decided charm and ability. A domestic problem makes the theme—the story of a man who plays ruthlessly with one woman then marries another. Excellent in every way.
CONSTANCE TALMADGE IN MAMMA'S AFFAIR
(First National)
An adaptation by John Emerson and Anita Loos, of Rachel Barton Butler's stage success that, while generally pleasing, is quite talky and therefore falls somewhat short of the established Constance Talmadge standard.

"Mamma's Affair" demonstrates once again the fact that material which makes successful stage plays cannot always be adapted to the screen with an equal measure of success. The hysterical whining of the selfish mother who cannot bear to have her little Eve torn from her side was properly effective on the stage, but on the screen it makes the first two reels talky. And the tete-a-tete in the last reel wherein the heroine ingeniously forces the hero to confess his love for her has the same fault. The talkiness causes what seems to be repetition when projected on the screen and makes a slow beginning and ending to the general detriment of the offering. While the selfish mother who matches her daughter to the unlikeable son of the next door neighbor in order to keep her child near her always is an exaggerated character, it is the mother more the less who is the generating power that thrusts the girl into a romance that has some fine human incidents. It is this human quality that must counteract the talkiness which it does to an extent great enough to make the picture generally pleasing.

The role of Eve is different from any of these essayed by Constance Talmadge in recent pictures. She is not the flapper of "Dangerous Business" but a down-trodden flower of innocence because of her mother's selfishness. In it she strikes a human note, yet despite her portrayal it seems that comedy is her forte. There is no better screen delineator of hoydenish characters than Constance Talmadge. Nor is Miss Talmadge's part as big as most star's parts are. Effie Shannon, as the selfish mother, shares honors with her. And another outstanding figure in the picture is Kenneth Harlan, who as Doctor Harmon gives one of the best performances of his career. Katherine Kaelred is the neighbor and George LeQueure is her son. The skilled hands of John Emerson and Anita Loos are in evidence in the smooth running continuity, while the direction by Victor Fleming, though not without its flaws, is of a general high tone. "Mamma's Affair" is not riotous by any means, but it is sufficiently interesting to make the picture generally pleasing.

SPECIAL CAST IN
THE TRUTH ABOUT HUSBANDS
(First National)
A feature above the grade of the average society drama, with beautiful backgrounds and portrayed by a highly skilful cast. May McAvoy distinctively good. An absorbing, entertaining and well finished picture. Directed by Kenneth Webb.

If your patronage has been as enthusiastic over May McAvoy as her work heretofore should have made them, they will like her tremendously in this picture. She has proved herself equal in beauty, grace and skill to the best ingenues in the business. A thoroughly charming little actress. Anna Lehr in another important role, plays as delightfully. H. E. Herbert as Dustin Renshaw and Richard Gordon as Hugh Murray bring good interpretations to the screen, and others of the supporting cast play with the ease and grace of motion and moderation of dramatic skill that puts the picture high in the ranks of current issues.

The greater part of the play takes place in and about an Italian villa. Interiors and exteriors are in excellent taste and fascinating in their beauty. The whole is an exceedingly artistic production. The plot is strong and cleverly developed with interest held fixed up to and away from the exciting climax.

In the story Janet Preece, librarian, in a little country town in America, is wooed and betrayed by Dustin Renshaw, a city stranger. Knowing him only under an assumed name, when she endeavors later to find him, she has but his initials on a cigarette case for a clue. Meanwhile he has met and wed Leslie Brownell (May McAvoy) and settled funds upon her guardian in exchange for the girl. Supremely happy in their honeymoon days in Italy, tragedy comes into the life of the young wife when fate throws the three principals in the drama together and discloses the past of the husband and Janet. The latter refuses the love of Leslie's brother, and when she meets death in an accident, she dies forgiving all.
TOM MOORE IN

HOLD YOUR HORSES
(GOLDwyn)

Rupert Hughes' "Saturday Evening Post" story, "Canavan," made into a first rate comedy of the most popular type.

Making predictions generally places one in embarrassing positions because predictions have a habit of failing to materialize. But in the case of Goldwyn's "Hold Your Horses" with Tom Moore, one can venture to predict with more than ordinary assurance that this picture will prove a highly popular offering.

In "Canavan," or "Hold Your Horses," as the story has been retitled for screen purposes, Rupert Hughes has metamorphosed an humble white wing into a political and domestic figure so powerful that everybody comes under his control. His theme is that the humble man should find his strength and use it.

Whatever else may be said of it, the theme is a popular one. And the treatment of it is delightful. Canavan is a human character and in his unconscious humility he is a study. He catches the sympathy at once as the target of carriages and automobiles and of his wife. And then after being brought down by the carriage of an exclusive Rodman Cadbury, III, and the haughty and aloof Beatrice Newsome, he takes a job as a signaler with a blazing gang because street sweeping is too dangerous. As a signaler he has authority. He can hold up automobiles and pedestrians and horses, and in his new authority he finds his strength. So he goes home "to knock hell out of the old woman." The sequence is genuinely funny. With his newfound strength he climbs to the heights, politically and socially, finally marrying Mrs. Cadbury after she has been left a widow and he is a widower. And once again he finds occasion to use his strength.

There is a rich vein of humor running throughout the story which, with its human incidents, aided by well-written titles, make the picture most diverting. Tom Moore as Canavan and Naomi Childers as Beatrice give excellent characterizations; in fact, the whole cast, including Sylvia Ashton, Petram Grassby and Sydney Alvear, all perform exceedingly well. Technically, the picture has been very well done.

KATHERINE MACDONALD IN

MY LADY'S LATCHKEY
(First National)

The beauty of the star is the feature's greatest value. The point should be impressed in advertising, for Katherine MacDonald's loveliness is one of the strong points of appeal about her pictures and her admirers are many. The story of a crook hero. It was directed by Edwin Carewe.

So compelling is the beauty of Katherine MacDonald in this picture that it attracts and arrests through practically every foot of celluloid, thereby redeeming to considerable measure the plot's weak construction. However, there is no question but that the picture will be understood popularly. It takes the star from the abuse of a hateful old woman into luxury as the wife of a man she helps out of a tight place, and domestic problems raising in the eyes of her guardian. The husband takes her into elegant surroundings and lavishs valuable gifts of jewels upon her. Then she suddenly discovers that he is at the head of a gang of clever "society" thieves, and that her gifts were acquired by theft. By this time, however, her influence and his real love for her have made him determine to walk the straight and narrow way, and the end of the picture leaves him bound for the higher hayways of life.

It is to be regretted that the plot was not more logically developed and better hung together. It is from a story by the Williamsons and therefore suggests a hook that is better than the play. Its attractiveness of setting will make it go far, however, and Katherine MacDonald's beauty is always an asset.

WILLIAM DESMOND IN

THE PARISH PRIEST
(IrERMAN J. GARFIELD)

After having been a stage attraction for so many years that one has lost count of the number, "The Parish Priest" is revived in picture form and offered to state right buyers by Herman J. Garfield.

As a stage attraction "The Parish Priest" was of that type of play that never grows old. Year in and year out it was played throughout the country, holding its own as an old reliable to attract at the box office. And now that it has been done in picture form there seems to be no reason why it should not attract as well as the original.

The picturization has all the appeal of the play. The people in it are simple, human, everyday beings; people of small town outlook who have elementary problems to solve. They are not thrust into any smashing, crashing dramatic situations. But no matter. They catch the interest and hold it because they are human, even if they do move unerringly to an anticipated outcome. In the telling of the story stress is laid on the pathos, though that element is nicely blended with comedy relief.

In point of technicalities, the story has been particularly well done. The ordination sequence, which serves as a prologue, is handled with such excellent taste that it seems unlikely that anyone can object to its religious nature. The play is staged in modern locale, but it retains its charm just the same. In the matter of continuity, titling, settings and detail those responsible have worked with good effect.

William Desmond plays the title role with skill, and is supported by a most competent cast.

"The Parish Priest" is an old play with human people in a simple charming story so well done that it is a relief from the riotous type of picture. It stands at the top among the best of recent state right offerings.

CARMEL MYERS IN

A MAD MARRIAGE
(UNIVERSAL)

The same bright and sprightly cleverness that has made the stories by Marjorie Benton Cooke a perpetual delight to the reading public will make this picture popular with the film devotees. A rare skill has been exercised in the atmospheric atmosphere of the author's writings and transported it to the screen. Every one will doubtless like the picture, for it presents the same problems frequently met with. It is an everyday tale with ordinary people, unassuming and unelaborate, but wholesome and charmingly told.

Miss Myers is particularly appealing, plays excellently and looks charming. Scenes of society tableaux give her opportunity to display a real beauty, and offer one of the best entertainment points of the picture. There is just enough of comedy to tincture the whole very pleasantly. Some of this gained by use of titles certain to get a good laugh. Truman Van Dyke heads the especially capable supporting cast which includes also the ever popular Margaret Collington.

Carmel Myers, in the story, is Jane Judd, a capable, faithful friend in an attractive study building. Jerome Van Dyke, a man of many loves, including a society girl, persuades her to keep him to keep a promise to a society alliance. Jane's devotion to him leads her to accept the aid of a theatrical producer to write a play, the while keeping him waiting for a picture he has been made in order to surprise him. He discovers her frequent visits to the other man just as the play scores its opening night, doubts her fidelity and suffers bitterly while learning his lesson of selfishness. There is the popular happy ending with husband and wife and baby son reunited and supremely blissful.
SPECIAL CAST IN THE TAVERN KNIGHT
(STOLL)
This picture holds a goodly amount of educational value, particularly for school youngsters. Atmosphere of the time of Oliver Cromwell well caught. A costume play with interesting backgrounds.

A roistering, romantic drama of the swashbuckling days "when knighthood was in flower," is brought to the screen in this late offering from Stoll Film Corporation of America. It has an educational value in the faithfulness with which it has caught the atmosphere of the reign of Charles I in England, and youngsters studying English history should get valuable and interesting knowledge and entertainment from it. Patrons who like things historical will be pleased with the picture. It was filmed in the storied hills and battlefields of Worcester, England, on the ground where the original fighting between King's soldiers and Oliver Cromwell took place. Attractive exploitation is suggested in a duplication of costumes worn at that time. Battle scenes lend some excitement, and the cast plays well.

The story is that of Roland Marleigh, a Royalist, hated by the Puritans and battling the followers of Cromwell. The Ashburns are a war-ravaged family. The husband killed his wife and taken away his son whom they rear and engage to Cynthia, their ward. Before the connection of the Knight and the Ashburns is discovered, the former has wooed Cynthia and won her love. Kenneth dies at the hands of the Ashburns and makes possible the marriage of Roland and Cynthia.

WILLIAM RUSSELL IN THE CHEATER
REFORMED
(FOX)
A story of usurped identity with the star in a dual role. The tale of the redemption of an ex-convict who adopts his dead brother's name and assumes his place at home and church. Interesting and entertaining. Directed by Scott Dunlap.

Better than it may be imagined by those who have seen William Russell time and time again in Western plays, does he play this radically different role in radically different surroundings—that of a minister in a New York village. While the whole is not at any time particularly compelling, it is entertaining and the theme is one which will appeal with a heavy dosage applied to the reformation theme. Russell does good work in the leading role, but he shares honors with a lad who appears as his pal and offers the humorous tinge that relieves the seriousness of the whole. Seena Owen plays the part of Carol McCall with gracefulness and distinction. Sam de Grasse qualifies as the enemy of Dr. McCall and Carol. In the story de Grasse as Edinburgh covets the love of Carol, the wife of the Rev. Dr. McCall, his friend. In an effort to win her, when his own wife divorces him, he displays to her a prison record of her husband. Before she has time to obtain the latter's explanation of this, she is the heiress of a wreck. "Lefty" McCall, his twin brother, an ex-convict, in eagerness to start life again with clean slate, usurps the minister's place in his home and community. The climax comes when Carol, to shield her husband from threatened notoriety, promises to go away with Edinburgh. The cleverness of "Lefty's" pal saves the day and the woman and the ending is a happy one.

MAY ALLISON IN THE MARRIAGE OF WILLIAM ASHE
(METRO)
A feature for high-grade patronage particularly, but one combining the majority of elements that make the universally pleasing picture. A domestic drama with clever comedy tinge in opening reels. An excellent offering. An Edward Slocum production.

Inasmuch as this is a story by Mrs. Humphrey Ward, the English novelist, it is natural that its strong appeal should be to the reading public. It is a high grade picture in every way and is excellently plotted, directed, lighted and photographed.

It has scenic settings in Scotland that are superb, scenes in English estates and gardens that are very attractive, and Venetian villa and canal scenes that are charming. The settings should be made a point in advertising, and if the scenes of the honeymoon in Scotland, wherein the star appears in the dress of that land, are accompanied by the playing of Scottish ballads (as they were when the picture was shown at the Boston theatre, Chicago), it will aid materially in putting the feature over.

Because the screen story presents a domestic problem the eagerness of a wife to advance her husband's political position in following the dictates of a deceiving friend, with the resultant that their love barque almost goes on the rocks—there will be universal appeal to the lovers of screen sentiment. Women especially will like the picture.

Miss Allison plays with her usual rompish vim and is extremely pretty. She wears captivating gowns and proves herself mistress of the skill in acting that can affect the youthful Hayden equally as well as the emotional woman. Wyndham Standing is admirable in the impersonation of William Ashe and Frank Elliott is a good choice for the deceiving Geoffrey Chilie. Lydia Titus has opportunities for good character work which she meets with her customary appreciation of their possibilities. The cast as a whole plays unusually well.

BEN TURPIN IN POULTRY A LA MODE
(VOGUE)
A goose and a duck who waddle through this comedy in two reels with a suggestion of far more intelligence than the average poultry yard denizens, supply the best laughs that it provokes. They lead their masters into a Sultan's harem after "chickens," treat them to a happy frolick with the inmates, only to have them waken and find it all a dream, with two hen-pecking wives completing the suggestion of feathers. The whole is moderately amusing and will please where the acrobatic Ben scores.

"Sunset Jones" Said to Give Co-Star Good Role

American's recent issue, "Sunset Jones," co-starring Irene Rich and Charles Clary, is averred to display to advantage the former's talent for sincere and earnest characterization.

Irene Rich came to the screen from private life, her first appearance being three years ago in the character of a nurse in "Stella Maris." For two months she played as an extra and was then given small parts. She was soon promoted to leading roles with several well known film stars and her performance in these productions firmly established her popularity as a leading lady.
EILEEN SEDGWICK IN THE DIAMOND QUEEN
(UNIVERSAL)

A swift-moving and vivid serial the first four episodes of which, reviewed, promise excitement in super-abundance. Starts with a zip and each episode ends with arresting thrills. The South African diamond country about Kimberley and the African jungle contribute much of the locale. Directed by Edward Kull.

Back to the days of the wild animal service these producers of this chapter play have gone for material, modernizing exciting situations in African jungles for an important part of this new offering. It begins with a bang and the culmination of each episode leaves the breath checked and excitement high.

At the end of the first episode the girl of the story, Eileen Sedgwick, possessed of incriminating documents entrusted to her by a suicide father for delivery to a certain man, flees from pursuing enemies out of a skyscraper window. She crosses a narrow plank to an opposite window far above the street, slips and falls. The second episode depicts her rescue from imprisonment in a safe, and thereafter she is taken to the Kimberley diamond mine country and made queen of the cannibals. The test whereby she is chosen ruler is a gruesomely hair-raising procedure.

The story is melodramatic. It is in eighteen episodes. The theme of the story is a girl's heating the Diamond Trust at their own game. It includes scenes of the making of synthetic diamonds and a replete with thrills.

GERTRUDE OLMSTEAD IN SWEET REVENGE
(UNIVERSAL)

While this is a two reel Western giving the important role to Hoot Gibson, the appearance in it of Gertrude Olmstead, the young lady who entered the picture field through the Elks' recent popularity contest, is the valuable advertising point. The picture has to do with the frequently-told tale of the antagonism between cattle men and sheep herders of the West. Hoot has the sheep and Adams, the father of the girl, owns the cattle range wherein Hoot desires his sheep to graze. The stubbornness of the father in refusing is eventually conquered after the girl and her small brother are exposed to danger by cattle men, and are rescued by Gibson. It is a well produced short subject with attractive mountain and desert setting.

FORD STERLING IN ABALL ROOM ROMEO
(SPECIAL PICTURES)

A two-reel comedy presented amid more dignified surroundings than the ordinary comedy, which the Specials consistently offers Ford Sterling in an attempt to break into society. The high spot of the whole is an Hawaiian dance, ridiculously exaggerated and lively, created by Sterling. The whole is only lukewarm as its comedy. Charlotte Merriam plays the role of the girl whose latticework Sterling is seeking. Settings are attractive and the players include Margaret Cullington who is always one of the best things about any picture in which she appears.

"A Small Town Idol" Wins Favor
At Its Premiere in Los Angeles

"A Small Town Idol," Mack Sennett's first contribution to the output of Associated Producers, Inc., of which he is a member, opened to an immediate public and box-office success at the New Mission theatre, Los Angeles, last week.

The following telegram from Harry David, managing director of the Mission, to F. B. Warren, general manager of distribution for Associated Producers, describes the production's opening:

MACK SENNETT'S "SMALL TOWN IDOL" POSITIVELY THE BIGGEST THING THAT EVER PLAYED LOS ANGELES. NO QUESTION THAT IT IS SENNETT'S GREATEST PICTURE. OUR GROSS BUSINESS WEEK ENDING TONIGHT $13,895. THIS SEEMS UNRELIABLE, TAKING INTO CONSIDERATION THAT MISSION THEATRE HAS ONLY 890 SEATS.

The newspaper critics of Los Angeles commented favorably on the production.

Critics Are Favorable

Florence Lawrence, writing in the Los Angeles Examiner, said: "A Small Town Idol" is an instant success. Huge audiences filled the Mission theatre yesterday to greet Mr. Sennett's picture. He has eliminated entirely the proverbial slapstick and has evoked one of the most amusing films of his career."

"Hardly an angle of melodramatic art escapes unscathed," says Guy Price in The Evening Herald. "Melodrama, farce, polite comedy, comedy-drama revue, spectacle and plot are all there. It is Sennett's first big picture since Mickey."

Monroe Lathrop, writing in the Evening Express, said: "The Mission theatre management started out with a standard of productions in their opening bill and the premiere of 'A Small Town Idol' yesterday afternoon maintained their prestige and good judgment in picking plays that please the public."

May Markson Praises

"A Small Town Idol" creates much mirth at the Mission theatre," said May Markson in the Los Angeles Record. "Mack Sennett is perhaps the only director who can make an audience sit through seven reels of frivolity and make them feel at the end that the picture is too short. He has accomplished this in 'A Small Town Idol,' which played to overflow audiences at its world premiere at the Mission."

Edwin Schallert in the Los Angeles Times said: "Ben Turpin, valiant knight of careless eyes, corners all laurels. You have to be hard-hearted indeed not to succumb to the heroic charms of Ben in 'A Small Town Idol.'"

"A Small Town Idol," which Mr. Sennett personally regards as his greatest motion picture achievement since the days of "Mickey," features Ben Turpin, Phyllis Haver, Marie Prevost, Charles Murray and James Finlayson. It was directed by Earle Kenton under the personal supervision of Mr. Sennett.

Pathe Offers First Six
Tom Santschi Westerns

The first six Western melodramas featuring Tom Santschi for publication every other week by Pathe have been announced.

"Beyond the Trail" will initiate the series on January 23 and will be followed by "The Impostor," "The Death Trap," "The Tempest," "The Desert Wolf" and "La Rue of Phantom Valley."

TWO SELZNICK STARS IN "SOCIETY SNOBS"

Scene from the Selznick feature to be published February 15, with Conway Tearle and Martha Mansfield in the leading roles.
American

The Blue Moon, with Pell Trenton.—A good picture. If you want a good American picture get a Bill Russell. Some pep.—McCleure & Faulkner, Comique theatre, Jamestown, Mo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Six-Feet-Four, with William Russell.—A dandy good picture. Pleased 90 per cent.—W. H. Gillillan, Louis theatre, Red Lake Falls, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

Six-Feet-Four, with William Russell.—A real good western with a real star. Some of the patrons came back second time to see this.—C. S. Ford, Princess theatre, Reinbeck, Iowa.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Valley of Tomorrow, with William Russell.—This is a dandy. Went big big days. Ran this with The Suitor, with Larry Semon. Everybody pleased; to big business. You can’t go wrong on either of the above pictures.—William Thacher, Royal theatre, Salina, Kan.

The House of Toys, with Seena Owen.—Oh, why do they keep on making these society pictures for the small town theatre? Can’t they give us a real western now and then? Too much lovesick stuff. Give us a rest.—McCleure & Faulkner, Comique theatre, Jamestown, Mo.—Neighborhood patronage.

First National

Nomads of the North, with a special cast.—Very good picture to very good business. Has a very realistic fire scene. Pleased my patrons very much.—George W. Ring, Society theatre, Seattle, Wash.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Branded Woman, with Norma Talmadge.—Very fine production; however, a weak supporting cast. Muddy looking cast, possibly to make Norma’s beauty shine still more. However, went over big.—T. B., Lyric theatre, New Ulm, Minn.

In Search of a Sinner, with Constance Talmadge.—Fine. Everybody pleased and said so. I have played nearly all the Constance Talmadge pictures and will keep on playing them. They always draw me a good house.—G. F. Rediske, Star theatre, Ryegate, Mont.—Small town patronage.

Forty-Five Minutes From Broadway, with Charles Ray.—A splendid picture. Title and star a good drawing card. Made as big a hit as the famous musical comedy, and some liked the screen version even better.—Peter Krauth, Denison theatre, Denison, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

Peaceful Valley, with Charles Ray.—This one more than pleased. Keep Ray in the rube stuff and he will always please them.—George W. Ring, Society theatre, Seattle, Wash.—Neighborhood patronage.

Yes or No, with Norma Talmadge.—Another Norma Talmadge success that will go over in any theatre a star’s acting good as usual.—R. A. Batts, Grand theatre, Carrington, N. D.—Small town patronage.

A Splendid Hazard, with Henry B. Walthall.—Did not please half the patrons. Ran it one day.—B. C. Bros, Star theatre, Viroqua, Wis.

The Inferior Sex, with Mildred Harris.—This picture drew good business and pleased them all.—Pfeiffer Bros., Opera House, Kenton, O.—Neighborhood patronage.

Forty-Five Minutes From Broadway, with Charles Ray.—This production gave the greatest satisfaction of any Ray picture played thus far.—T. B. Melzer, Lyric theatre, New Ulm, Minn.

Curtain, with Katherine MacDonald.—Very well produced. My patrons seemed to like it better than I did and, after all, that is what counts.—George W. Ring, Society theatre, Seattle, Wash.—Neighborhood patronage.

Married Life, a Mack Sennett production.—This was not as good as I expected it would be. Was simply a repeater of two-reel comedies put together. Fell down the second night.—W. W. Woltz, Star theatre, Lake City, Iowa.—Neighborhood patronage.

A Temperamental Wife, with Constance Talmadge.—One of the best pictures, Constance has ever made. Simply a knockout. Had a good crowd in an uproar from start to finish. Could repeat and would have us clean up for you.—Smith Read, Patriot theatre, DeKalb, Texas.—Small town patronage.

The Family Honor, a King Vidor production.—A good, clean, wholesome show. One that would leave no work for censors to do. Book it.—R. A. Batts, Grand theatre, Carrington, N. D.—Small town patronage.

The River’s End, a Marshall Xelian production.—Great. A real picture that pleased all. You will have to advertise, as the title does not attract. Run cross days anytime; 15 and 30c.—J. H. Hooks, Palace theatre, Thomas, Okla.—Neighborhood patronage.

A Virtuous Vamp, with Constance Talmadge.—Connie is a favorite here. Some of my best patrons stopped to tell me what a “g-g-grand” picture it was.—W. Lloyd Beebe, Opera House, Manito, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Polly of the Storm Country, with Mildred Harris.—This is a dandy little picture in six reels. Mildred Harris content to show her ability, and Mickey Moore as “Wee Jolly” surd kept the audience laughing. Comments good.—H. J. Longaker, Howard theatre, Alexandria, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

Mary Regan, with Anita Stewart.—Splendid picture. Pleased big house. The story is interesting and the star’s acting is up to the standard as usual. Very popular here and getting better each week.—Smith Read, Patriot theatre, DeKalb, Texas.—Small town patronage.

The Jack-Knife Man, a King Vidor production.—This is a good, clean picture. Something different. Some comedy, some pathos.—W. W. Woltz, Star theatre, Lake City, Iowa.—Neighborhood patronage.

Daddy Long Legs, The Hoofdum, and Heart of the Hills.—Ran them as above one week apart. Good pullers, but not quite equal to Tarzan pictures. Biggest receipts on The Hoofdum.—J. Christensen, Star theatre, Sandusky, Mich.—Small town patronage.

Daddy Long Legs, with Mary Pickford.—We thought it just a picture for women and children, but it even pleased the “hard-boiled.” We don’t expect any better pictures.—Paul & Overton, Lyric theatre, Winchester, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

A Virtuous Vamp, with Constance Talmadge.—Exceptionally good. Think GEORGE ADE'S PLAY ON THE SCREEN

Constance Talmadge better for small towns than Norma.—Yeomen theatre, Nueva, S. D.—Neighborhood patronage.

In Old Kentucky, with Anita Stewart.—Very good, but if you have played Heart o' the Hills you won't see much difference. Pleased about 60 per cent. I believe that some exhibitors have boosted this one too strong. 22 and 26c.—I. I. Hooks, Palace theatre, Thomas, Okla.—Neighborhood patronage.

What Women Love, with Annette Kellerman.—This was a real treat, especially for the men, although there's nothing offensive. Some bathing girls, good figures, lots of comedy, some fighting.—W. W. Woltz, Star theatre, Lake City, Iowa.

Human Desire, with Anita Stewart.—Nothing startling, but good entertainment. Pictures of this kind are sure death to blue laws. More of this kind and the hammer will be laid on the shelf.—W. Lloyd Beebe, Opera House, Manito, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Tarzan of the Apes, with Elmo Lincoln.—Everyone pleased and wanted to know when we show Romance of Tarzan. Good crowd.—Mrs. Pearl G. Robinson, Gem theatre, Harper, Kan.

The Idol Dancer, a D. W. Griffith production.—Very good. Pleased a two-day crowd.—George E. Taylor, Idle Hour theatre, Dunlap, Iowa.—Neighborhood patronage.

Back to God's Country, with Neil Shipman.—Did remarkably well with this one. Packed them in at regular 25c admission. Everybody well pleased. You don't need any comedy with it.—W. Lloyd Beebe, Opera House, Manito, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Tarzan of the Apes, with Elmo Lincoln.—Went over great here and did pretty good business with it. We advertised it extensively and people came to see it that do not usually come. It is a thriller.—M. D. Foster, Gem theatre, Williamsburg, Kan.

In Search of a Sinner, with Constance Talmadge.—Like all of Connie's—good, and they said it. It's a pleasure to play this star and we're sorry she didn't make more of them.—C. Hales, Lyric theatre, Orange City, Iowa.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Romance of Tarzan, and Tarzan of the Apes, with Elmo Lincoln.—Good attractions, Good business.—Frank Allen, Rose theatre, Byron, Ill.—Small town patronage.

A Temperamental Wife, with Constance Talmadge.—A fine picture and pleased.—H. A. Wishard, Wishard theatre, Bloomfield, Iowa.—Home patronage.

In Wrong, with Jack Pickford. —A nice clean comedy-drama that drew well and pleased.—C. N. Bartow, Opera House, Medora, III.—Small town patronage.

Fox

The Scalllers, with William Farnum.—This is a good picture. Farnum fans and men will like it. Women find they don't care for sea pictures.—W. W. Woltz, Star theatre, Lake City, Iowa.—Neighborhood patronage.

Prairie Trails, with Tom Mix.—Just a fair Mix picture. We have run lots better.—Pfeifer Bros., Opera House, Kenton, Ohio.—Neighborhood patronage.

Tiger's Cub, with Pearl White.—Broke house records. Pearl White is liked very well here. Book it.—G. Hublar, Grand theatre, Marked Tree, Ark.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Land of Jazz, with Eileen Percy.—A frothy and satirical farce comedy.—P. G. Estee, Fad theatre, Brookings, S. D.—Neighborhood patronage.

While New York Sleeps, with a special cast.—Excellent acting, but is not understood by people who do not know big town life. Packed house. Top price, 50c.—Giacomo Bros., Crystal theatre, Tombstone, Ariz.—General patronage.

The Thief, with Pearl White.—A society drama. A hit slow in the first two reels, but gets interesting from there on.—Peter Krauth, Denison theatre, Denison, Iowa.—Neighborhood patronage.

Blind Wives, with a special cast.—Another one of those Fox specials that mean nothing to your patrons. This is a special with which you fool your audience. There is nothing special about it except 9,000 feet of wearisome film. Special like this one and While New York Sleeps and The White Moll kill your business. They are not even good program pictures. We know! We have shot them all. Don't try them! The finishing will hurt you.—Hans J. Petersen, Ruby theatre, Jamestown, N. D.

The Challenge of the Law, with William Russell.—Northwest police story. A good one.—O. M. Smith, Opera theatre, Barry, Ill.—Small town patronage.

Girl of My Heart, with Shirley Mason.—Shirley always please here and this was no exception. Good story.—F. G. Estee, Fad theatre, Brookings, S. D.—Neighborhood patronage.

Drag Hatlan, with William Farnum.—Great. Pleased large audience.—Hackett & Krauss, Hackett's theatre, Fort Gibson, Okla.—Neighborhood patronage.

Molly and I, with Shirley Mason.—The star is a cute little girl and picture was nothing extra; like all the program stuff they send out. Small crowd.—F. Rediske, Star theatre, Ryegate, Mont.—Small town patronage.

Two Moons, with Buck Jones.—A very good western. Pleased.—George E. Taylor, Idle Hour theatre, Dunlap, Iowa.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Reformed Cheater, with William Russell.—One of the best Fox pictures we have seen since they started in color.—Pfeifer Bros., Opera House, Kenton, Ohio.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Challenge of the Law, with William Russell.—Splendid acting in this picture, but too much of the horrors of desert travel. Small town exhibitors should run a good comedy in connection. It does not leave the come-back impression.—Smith Read, Patriot theatre, DeKalb, Texas.—Small town patronage.

Tiger's Cub, with Pearl White.—This picture was redeemed by its beautiful scenic views. The scenes, the Wishard theatre, Bloomfield, Iowa.—Home patronage.

Flame of Youth, with Shirley Mason.—Star and picture both good.—George E. Taylor, Idle Hour theatre, Dunlap, Iowa.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Little Wanderer, with Shirley Mason.—Cannot say enough for this clean cut program picture. Very interesting, highly entertaining and appreciated by a good house. Let's have some more of that this week.—Auditorium theatre, Carleton, Neb.—Small town patronage.

Just Pals, with Buck Jones.—Story not very logical, but they will forget that in charm of star and his juvenile assistant. Pleased 90 per cent.—Estee, Fad theatre, Brookings, S. D.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Husband Hunter, with Eileen Peer.—Very good.—Amusing all the way through.—J. G. Varnell, Princess theatre, Piedmont, Ala.—Small town patronage.

The Challenge of the Law, with William Russell.—This one is better picture, but too much of the desert scene spoils it.—Peter Krauth, Denison theatre, Denison, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Adventurer, with William Farnum.—Didn't get by. Fox should not play
The Exhibitors' Point of View

Some exhibitors never report on pictures, but they like to read reports from others.

Brother Exhibitors, it is time for some of you to wake up. Send in your reports.

We all like to read them and know how to put the pictures over. Get busy.

Send in your reports!

WM. THACHER,
Royal Theatre,
Salina, Kans.

Far from anything but westerns. Put their gits on instead of dramatic costumes and they'll get them. — J. H. Wishard, Palace theatre, Thomas, Okla.—Neighborhood patronage.

Her Honor the Mayor, with Eileen Percy.—Just an ordinary picture. Eileen is a beauty.—J. G. Varnell, Princess theatre, Piedmont, Ala.—Small town patronage.

The Devil's Riddle, with Gladys Brockwell.—Good program picture. However, it's an old story, but well presented. Top price, 25c.—Giacoa Bros., Crystal theatre, Tombstone, Ariz.—General patronage.

The Iron Rider, with William Russell. This is a good picture. Rather dark on account of so many night scenes. Has a surprise at the ending.—W. W. Wolz, Star theatre, Lake City, Iowa.—Neighborhood patronage.

Camille of the Yukon, with Miriam Cooper.—Contains the usual dance hall stuff. Poor business. Picture fair, however Fox is losing me business on their program stuff and I will be forced to cut it out.—G. F. Redlake, Star theatre, Eyegate, Mont.—Small town patronage.

Leave It to Me, with William Russell.—Not much to it. Rather amusing, but that is about all we can say for it.—Auditorium theatre, Carleton, Neb.

The Terror, with Tom Mix.—Good, as are all of Mix's pictures. They have got the action and keep your audience on their toes.—J. H. Hooks, Palace theatre, Thomas, Okla.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Little Wanderer, with Shirley Mason.—A crackjack of a five-reel feature. Good acting and a good star. No kicks, but lots of compliments as over 400 passed out.—H. A. Wishard, Wishard theatre, Bloomfield, Ia.—Home patronage.

The Joyous Troublemakers, with William Farnum.—This has the wittiest subtitles ever and therefore is good without the support of its other good qualities. Even if it is old, boost it high, because it is unusually enjoyable.—Jean Bitter, Regent theatre, Alameda, Calif.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Man Who Dared, with William Russell.—This is one of the best pictures I ever ran. Wouldn't want a better picture, and I believe it will please any audience.—J. G. Varnell, Princess theatre, Piedmont, Ala.—Small town patronage.

Leave It to Me, with William Russell.—A five-reel comedy-drama that just gets by, but, of course, they cannot all be good.—H. A. Wishard, Wishard theatre, Bloomfield, Ia.—Home patronage.

Twins of Suffering Creek, with William Russell.—This one is a good one and is up to the Russell standard.—G. M. McClain, Star theatre, Barry, Ill.—Small town patronage.

The Daredevil, with Tom Mix.—It is just what you are looking for. Advertise strong, as it is full of pep and will please.—J. H. Hooks, Palace theatre, Thomas, Okla.—Neighborhood patronage.

Just Pais, with Buck Jones.—A dandy good western and comedy mixed. Full of pep, especially last three reels. Get them in. They will go out pleased.—H. A. Wishard, Wishard theatre, Bloomfield, Iowa.—Home patronage.

The Little Wanderer, with Shirley Mason.—A very clever picture. Shirley Mason is fine in this one.—G. M. McClain, Star theatre, Barry, Ill.—Small town patronage.

A Sister to Salome, with Gladys Brockwell.—Not liked only by the very few who understand such a very good picture and complimented by them. One of the few that an audience is divided on.—H. A. Wishard, Wishard theatre, Bloomfield, Iowa.—Home patronage.

The Square Shooter, with Buck Jones.—Buck Jones is fast coming to the front. A clever picture and will please.—G. M. McClain, Star theatre, Barry, Ill.—Small town patronage.

Goldwyn

Just Out of College, with Jack Pickford.—Pleasing picture. Good business.—Pfeiffer Bros., Opera House, Kenton, Ohio.—Neighborhood patronage.

Stop Thief, with Tom Moore.—A dandy comedy-drama. Photography and settings fine. Pleased 100 per cent.—Peter Krauth, Denison theatre, Denison, Iowa.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Branding Iron, with Barbara Castleton.—A very well produced play, but did not draw for me. My patrons won't take a chance on a play that sounds like it was too heavy.—George W. Ring, Society theatre, Seattle, Wash.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Revenge of Tarzan, with Gene Pollar.—If you have played the other two Tarzan pictures be sure to play this one, but don't mention cast. Star disappointing, but you will get the coin.—J. Christensen, Star theatre, Sandusky, Mich.—Small town patronage.

The Man Who Had Everything, with Jack Pickford.—All Jack Pickford's pictures are very satisfactory. Business big.—John Halner, Princess theatre, Donora, Pa.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Great Lover, with a special cast.—Will go good in a high-class neighborhood; others lay off.—Pfeiffer Bros., Opera House, Kenton, O.—Neighborhood patronage.

Scratch My Back, with a special cast.—Say, boys, of all the poor comedies this is the worst. You know, after years of the show game, you can't fool an exhibitor.—Presston Bros., Empress theatre, Rockwell City, Iowa.

The Truth, with Madge Kennedy.—Not up to the average of Goldwyn programs, and we are losing our pull on Kennedy pictures.—B. C. Brown, Star theatre, Viroqua, Wis.

Scratch My Back, with a special cast.—Go the limit on this one. Your patrons will like it. Wonderful advertising possibilities in this picture. If you go after it watch your box office.—G. M. McClain, Star theatre, Barry, Ill.—Small town patronage.

Double Dyed Deceiver, with Jack Pickford.—A good story; good picture.—P. G. Estee, Fad theatre, Brookings, S. D.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Truth, with Madge Kennedy.—Slow up on this one. An attempt at

WHAT MAKES UNIVERSAL COMEDIES POPULAR?

You guessed it. The comedy beauty squad. They keep in good shape—so they tell us—by "gym" work.
making a picture without a story. Result? Successful failure.—T. B. Melzer, Lyric theatre, New Ulm, Minn.

Honest Hutch, with Will Rogers.—This is a real picture. Enjoyed very much by many of patrons. Good drawing card.—H. A. Wishard, Princess theatre, Donora, Pa.—Neighborhood patronage.

Water Water Everywhere, with Will Rogers.—Good. Good business and the best of satisfaction.—F. G. Rediske, Star theatre, Rye Gate, Mont.—Small town patronage.

Jes' Call Me Jim, with Will Rogers.—This is a good one. Lots of good, clean fun in it.—Alvin S. Frank, Jewel theatre, Lafayette, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Dangerous Days, with a special cast.—A good picture. Drew well for two days. When a picture brings three times its cost I am satisfied. This one did.—H. A. Wishard, Wishard theatre, Bloomfield, Iowa.—Home patronage.

One of the Finest, with Tom Moore.—Splendid comedy-drama that will amuse and entertain all classes.—Harold Despit, Atherton theatre, Kentwood, La.—Neighborhood patronage.

Madame X, with Pauline Frederick.—Fine production. If they like a picture that makes you weep this is it. Good drawing card.—John Haflner, Princess theatre, Donora, Pa.—Neighborhood patronage.

Dollars and Sense, with Madge Kennedy.—A dandy. Madge Kennedy always takes in Barry.—G. M. McClain, Star theatre, Barry, Ill.—Small town patronage.

The Silver Horde, with a special cast.—Not as good as they told me it was, but still a very good picture.—Alvin S. Frank, Jewel theatre, Lafayette, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Out of the Shadows, with Pauline Frederick.—Good. In fact, one of the best of this year's pictures on this program. Regular price, 77 and 25c.—A. X. Miller, Eminent theatre, Eminence, Ky.

Jes' Call Me Jim, with Will Rogers.—Just as good as a sermon. Patrons stopped at the office and told us so.—Proctor Bros. Empress theatre, Rockwell City, Iowa.

Cupid the Cowpuncher, with Will Rogers.—Splendid comedy-drama with good, spicy readers.—Paul & Overton, Lyric theatre, Winchester, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Hodkinson

Love Madness, with Louise Glau.—This was well liked. Far better than The Leopard Woman, her first picture on Associated program. Good drawing card.—John Haflner, Princess theatre, Donora, Pa.—Neighborhood patronage.

The U. P. Trail, with Roy Stewart.—Played three days to try three-day runs. Saved us on account of bad weather second day. A great picture; sure to please.—Verner Hicks, Family theatre, Marion, Ill.—General patronage.

The U. P. Trail, with Roy Stewart.—Pleased the men and boys, but the women didn't care for it. A real western.—Hardin Enterprises Company, Hardin, Mo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Down Home, with a special cast.—Good picture. Liked by most people.

Business satisfactory.—John Haflner, Princess theatre, Donora, Pa.—Neighborhood patronage.

Metro

The Saphead, with Buster Keaton.—Many days to play. This picture will add to his popularity, which is sure gaining.—Frank Allen, Rose theatre, Byron, Ill.—Small town patronage.

The Great Redeemer, with a special cast.—Lacked good.—John Haflner, Princess theatre, Donora, Pa.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Misfit Wife, with Alice Lake.—Good story, but a little misleading. No comments.—Yeomen theatre, Seneca, S. D.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Price of Redemption, with Bert Lytell.—A true special worthy of care in presentation. Don't be afraid to advertise it and raise admission, but precede it with a good comedy since it is heavy.—John Lightner, Regent theatre, Alameda, Cal.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Misfit Wife, with Alice Lake.—Beautiful drama and well cast. Pleased.—Hackett & Krauss, Hackett's theatre, Port Gibson, Miss.—Neighborhood patronage.

Body and Soul, with Alice Lake.—A very good picture. Comments.—A new star for us, but I believe she will prove one of our best drawing cards. Many favorable comments.—B. C. Brown, Star theatre, Viroqua, Wis.

Held in Trust, with May Allison.—This is one of the best Allison pictures that we ever ran.—Piefifer Bros., Opera House, Kenton, Ohio.—Neighborhood patronage.

Held in Trust, with May Allison.—Several people told me this was much better than they expected from the name. Personally, I thought very highly of it. Poor business on account of weather.—George W. King, Society theatre, Seattle, Wash.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Cheater, with May Allison.—Did not care for so much cigarette stuff on part of star, but picture seemed to please.—P. G. Estee, Fad theatre, Brookings, S. D.—Neighborhood patronage.

Held in Trust, with May Allison.—Picture liked, but would not draw. Poorest second night crowd in a year. First night average.—O. R. Nation, Strand theatre, Davis, Cal.—Small town patronage.

A Modern Salome, with Hope Hampton.—A very pleasing picture in my opinion, but did not seem to please audience.—R. A. Borts, Grand theatre, Carrington, N. D.—Small town patronage.

The Walk-Offs, with May Allison.—A dandy. Star cute and picture cuter. Everyone pleased.—W. W. Wolff, Star theatre, Lake City, Iowa.

The Heart of a Child, with Nazimova.—If your folks like Nazimova this is all right, for it is one of the best things she has ever made, but it is my first, last and only Nazimova. I have to raise my prices to 5c and 25c and there are not enough people who appreciate her to the extent of paying more to see her.—A. X. Miles, Eminent theatre, Eminence, Ky.

The Right of Way, with Bert Lytell.—The sad ending of this picture makes it stand out in a class by itself. The author has this picture sold before you show it.—W. C. Whitt, Home theatre, Anderson, Cal.—Small town patronage.

Please Get Married, with Viola Dana.
Too silly to show to an intelligent audience.—Frank Allen, Rose theatre, Byron, Ill.—Small town patronage.

A Chorus Girl's Romance, with Viola Dana.—Good. Viola getting better every day. House well pleased.—Hackett & Krauss, Hackett's theatre, Port Gibson, Miss.—Neighborhood patronage.

Nothing But Lies, with Taylor Holmes.—Good as any of the farce comedies made from stage plays. That don't mean anything wonderful for any of them.—P. G. Estee, Pad theatre, Brookings, S. D.—Neighborhood patronage.

Should a Woman Tell? with Alice Lake.—Fair program picture. Fine photography. Story failed to please. Too much triangle stuff.—F. E. Sabin, Majestic theatre, Eureka, Mont.—Neighborhood patronage.

Fair and Warner, with May Allison.—For a fun-maker you can't beat this one. They all liked it.—Hardin Ent Co., Odeon theatre, Hardin, Mo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Fair and Warner, with May Allison.—Pleased all and drew well.—Frank Allen, Rose theatre, Byron, Ill.

Parlor, Bedroom and Bath, with a special cast.—What the Ohio censors left of this picture went over in good shape. It gave entire satisfaction with the exception of the abrupt changes. The continuity not the best. It's a crime censors can't leave so harmless a farce without cutting it all up.—Fred S. Meyer, Palace theatre, Hamilton, Ohio.—Transient patronage.

Alias Jimmy Valentine, with Bert Lytell.—Can't run this with The Scarecrow on Christmas. Please a large patronage.—Frank Allen, Rose theatre, Byron, Ill.—Small town patronage.

Please Get Married, with Viola Dana.—This is fine. Full of comedy. My patrons tell me so.—W. W. Wolts, Star theatre, Lake City, Iowa.

Dangerous to Men, with Viola Dana.—A good picture, but just a little too spicy for some of our patrons. However, it will not offend.—Hardin Ent Co., Odeon theatre, Hardin, Mo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Fair and Warner, with May Allison.—A very good offering that went over big four days and please to big business return engagement. A sure box office attraction. Gave universal satisfaction. Don't know why this excellent opportunity—Fred S. Meyer, Palace theatre, Hamilton, Ohio.—Transient patronage.

The Mutiny of the Elsinore, with a special cast.—Just got by, Ran Fatty Arbuckle in The Garage with it.—Frank Allen, Rose theatre, Byron, Ill.—Small town patronage.

Paramount

A Full House, With Bryant Washburn. Please a very good house as a regular program production.—Giacoia Bros., Crystal theatre, Tombstone, Ariz.—General patronage.

Always Audacious, with Wallace Reid.—Excellent picture. Took well with the patrons. One of his best.—Royal theatre, Lehi, Utah.

Something To Do, with Bryant Washburn.—This pleased about as well as any Wallace Reid picture we have had. Gave.—Miles, Eminence theatre, Eminence, Ky.

Black Is White, with Dorothy Dalton.—Too much cannot be said for this picture. It should be appreciated anywhere, for we seldom get a picture as good as this.—J. G. Varnell, Princess theatre. Patrons well pleased.—Small town patronage.

Hairpins, with Enid Bennett.—A splendid little picture. I booked it for but one day and regretted it. It is good for two. Treatment and support are excellent.—Jean Lightner, Regent theatre, Alamada, Cal.—Neighborhood patronage.

Idols of Clay, with Mae Murray.—Played three days to ordinary business. Did not come up to expectations. Very much disappointed. Continuity very poor.—Levine Bros., Parkview theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y.

What Happened to Jones, with Bryant Washburn.—All Paramount subjects are good. Have not found a poor one.—Hackett & Krauss, Hackett's theatre, Port Gibson, Miss.—Neighborhood patronage.

Humoresque, with Alma Rubens.—Excellent. One of the best we have ever had.—L. M. Kuhns, Gibson theatre, Gibbson, N. M.—Small town patronage.

Behold My Wife, with a special cast.—An exceptionally fine picture to very good business. Everybody said it was great, and I think they were right.—George W. Ring, Society theatre, Seattle, Wash.—Neighborhood patronage.

Sand, with William S. Hart.—Dandy picture. As good as Hart ever made.—Frank Allen, Rose theatre, Byron, Ill.—Small town patronage.

Guilty of Love, with Dorothy Dalton.—Dorothy Dalton goes strong here as a general program feature. Top price, 25c.—Giacoia Bros., Crystal theatre, Tombstone, Ariz.—General patronage.

The Sins of St. Anthony, with Bryant Washburn.—Good production. If you want to give your patrons honest-to-goodness laughing material this one will fill the bill.—T. B. Melzer, Lyric theatre, New Ulm, Minn.

The Cradle of Courage, with William S. Hart.—Something different; not a westerner, but a crackerjack. Pleased everybody.—Royal theatre, Lehi, Utah.

His Wife's Friend, with Dorothy Dalton.—This is a fine picture. Dorothy well liked by my patrons.—W. W. Wolts, Star theatre, Lake City, Iowa.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Lottery Man, with Wallace Reid.—Dandy. Everyone more than pleased. Give us more like it. Wanda Hawley and Harrison Ford got their share of praise along with Wallace. 10 and 25c.—J. H. Hooks, Palace theatre, Thomas, Okla.—Neighborhood patronage.

Guilty of Love, with Dorothy Dalton.—Story deals with that daring subject that so many writers fall back on nowadays. Gave 72 per cent satisfaction.—T. B. Melzer, Lyric theatre, New Ulm, Minn.

Humoresque, with a special cast.—One of the best plays I have ever shown. In a non-Jewish neighborhood it drew fine crowds for two days, where the usual policy is a daily change.—J. E. Stecker, Myrtle theatre, Detroit, Mich.—Neighborhood patronage.

Stepping Out, with Enid Bennett.—A very good program picture. Everybody seemed to be well pleased.—J. A. Yeakel, Star theatre, Kenawa, Iowa.—Neighborhood patronage.

Double Speed and Excuse My Dust, with Wallace Reid.—Both good pictures. Wallace a good bet here.—Frank Allen, BUTTERFLIES IN THIS VITAGRAPH CHAPTER PLAY

William Duncan and his co-star Edith Johnson in a scene from "Fighting Fate," written by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, and Arthur P. Hanks.

Rose theatre, Byron, Ill.—Small town patronage.

The Round-Up, with Roscoe Arbuckle. My patrons do not care for Fatty in a drama. This was a very good production, but did not get the money. Fatty should make comedies.—George W. Ring, Society theatre, Seattle, Wash.—Neigh borhood patronage.

The Miracle Man, with a special cast —Drew a full house at 50c top, and every one was delighted with it, a good many saying it was the best picture they ever ran. In a class by itself.—Harold Das pit, Atherton, theatre, Kentwood, La.— Neighborhood patronage.

The Valley of the Giants, with Wallace Reid. —This is a mighty good picture S. R. O. and all pleased.—F. E. Sabin, Majestic theatre, Eureka, Mont.—Neigh borhood patronage.

The Thirteenth Commandment, with Ethel Clayton.—Excellent picture. Should go well anywhere.—J. G. Varnell, Princess theatre, Piedmont, Ala.—Small town patronage.

The Cost, with Violet Hening.—One case on record where we have broken even a one-night Monday showing. The Cost was usual Paramount society play of the deadly average type. By putting on Arbuckle in The Garage we packed the house. The Garage is a coker. The 11x14 lobby cards for Arbuckle always draw a crowd.—Philip Rand, Rex theatre, Salmon, Idaho.—Small town patronage.

Hawthorne of the U. S. A., with Wallace Reid.—This was enjoyed by all our patrons. Play it and boost it.—Preston Bros, Empress theatre, Rockwell City, Iowa.

Jane Goes A-Woofing, with Vivian Martin.—Nice little picture. Star hasn't much drawing power, but a good two reel comedy with this picture will make a good program.—A. N. Miles, Eminence theatre, Eminence, Ky.

Mary's Ankie, with Douglas MacLean and Doris May.—This is a sure good comedy drama. Play it and boost the price.—Preston Bros, Empress theatre, Rockwell City, Iowa.

All-of-a-Sudden Peggy, with Marguerite Clark.—Not her best picture but pleased the ladies.—Royal theatre, Lehi, Utah.

Let's Be Fashionable, with Douglas MacLean and Doris May.—A happy-go-lucky pair who never fail to please our patrons. There are many good laughs in this production. Hop to it. It's sure to please.—Lyric theatre, New Ulm, Minn.

Told in the Hills, with Robert Warwick.—Won't go where Indians are plentiful, and as there are plenty of them here it failed to register.—J. H. Hooks, Palace theatre, Thomas, Okla.—Neighborhood patronage.

Bound in Morocco, with Douglas Fairbanks.—Short. Only a scant four reels, but so much action that you feel like you have seen six. Good crowd at 10 and 25c.—A. N. Miles, Eminence theatre, Eminence, Ky.

The Valley of the Giants, with Wallace Reid.—The first picture of Reid I ever showed. Went over big. I think this one made Reid for me.—W. C. Whitt, Home theatre, Anderson, Cal.—Small town patronage.

Paris Green, with Charles Ray.—This is a good one. Lots of good, clean fun in it.—Alvin S. Frank, Jewel theatre, La fayette, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

John Petticoats, with William S. Hart. —This is a humdinger and will please most any audience. Pleased a good house. You take no chance on this one.—Auditorium theatre, Carlson, Neb.—Small town patronage.

23 1/2 Hours Leave, with Douglas MacLean and Doris May.—Great. Best picture we used in some time and nothing but comments from the audience as they passed out.—Hackett & Krauss, Hackett's theatre, Port Gibson, Miss.—Neigh borhood patronage.

The Egg Crate Wallop, with Charles Ray.—A little slow in starting, but has a whirlwind finish and sends them out satisfied. It will more than please men and boys.—J. H. Hooks, Palace theatre, Thomas, Okla.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Valley of Giants, with Wallace Reid.—Good story. Good acting. Good picture. Attendance very good.—F. E. Sabin, Majestic theatre, Eureka, Mont.— Neighborhood patronage.

The Misleading Widow, with Billie Burke.—Burke always draws here. Good picture.—W. H. Gillian, Lotus theatre, Red Lake Falls, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

More Deadly Than the Male, with Ethel Clayton.—Not up to Miss Clayton's standard.—L. M. Kuhns, Gibson theatre, Gibson, N. M.—Mining camp patronage.

Told in the Hills, with Robert Warwick, a great picture. Everybody liked it.—W. H. Gillian, Lotus theatre, Red Lake Falls, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Miracle Man, with a special cast —Undoubtedly a wonderful picture. One of the few that will make me a thousand dollars.—J. Herbert Talbert, Legion theat re, Norwich, Kan.—Small town patronage.

Pathé

Dice of Destiny, with H. B. Warner.—A big hit. Was well liked by all and is indeed a good drawing card.—LaPlace Amusement Co., LaPlace theatre, LaPlace, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

A Broadway Cowboy, with William Desmond. —This is the best western drama we have played in months. Plenty of action and the variety of clean comedy. My patrons were well pleased and business was more than good.—Arthur Fukuda, Universal theatre, Hanford, Cal.—Small town patronage.

PASSERS-BY, a J. Stuart Black ton production. —Here is a feature that is chock full of heart interest. My patrons congratulated me when leaving the theatre. Book this one, and you won't go wrong. It is also the type of play that will keep the blue laws out of your town. Exploitation possibilities good.—Arthur Fukuda, Universal theatre, Hanford, Cal.—Small town patronage.

A Broadway Cowboy, with William Desmond. —Gave the boys a treat in this one and they sure did turn it out for it. A western that a better class house can play. Get by word of mouth—"make'em-kiss-the-sand" stuff that in vites censorship.—Lyric theatre, New Ulm, Minn.

The Right to Lie, with Dolores Cas sules. —This one seems to please them all. Many comments on same.—L. A. Hasse, Majestic theatre, Marston, Wis.

Respectable by Proxy, with a special cast.—Good feature.—F. Hejtmancik, Opera house, Clarkson, Neb.—Small town patronage.

Half a Chance, with Mahlon Hamilton. —Hamilton is one of the best stars here.
Play very strong and pronounced the best in every way. Can't choose a better picture.—LaPlace Amusement Co., LaPlace theatre, LaPlace, La.—Neighborhood patronage.

Help Wanted: Male, with Blanche Sweet.—First-class comedy drama. Drew well and all pleased.—Jack Carins, Brooklyn theatre, Detroit, Mich.—Neighborhood patronage.

Dawn, with a special cast.—The picture was so touching that one of our young society ladies wept copious tears over the sad plight of the poor blind boy. Acting of Robert Gordon a good piece of work.—Harold Daspit, Atherton theatre, Canton, La.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Right to Lie, with Dolores Casinelli.—Good society drama. Fine settings and photography. Gave good satisfaction.—F. Hejtmanek, Opera House, Clarkson, Neb.—Small town patronage.

Fighting Cressy, with Blanche Sweet.—A fine picture. Drew well for me.—W. H. Gillilan, Lotus theatre, Red Lake Falls, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

A Damsel in Distress, with June Caprice.—An exceptionally good comedy-drama that will please and get the laughs.—Harold Daspit, Atherton theatre, Kentwood, Mich.—Neighborhood patronage.

Oh Boy, with June Caprice and Creighton Hale.—Very good comedy. Your patrons will walk out smiling.—F. Hejtmanek, Opera House, Clarkson, Neb.—Small town patronage.

Realart

The Furnace, with a special cast.—More favorable comments than on any picture played for four months. Counter-attractions and bad weather kept crowd down.—O. R. Nation, Strand theatre, Davis, Cal.—Small town patronage.

Her Beloved Villain, with Wanda Hawley.—A dandy picture. Plenty of comedy. They all like Wanda Hawley.—Hardin Ent. Co., Odeon theatre, Hardin, Mo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Oh Lady, Lady, with Bebe Daniels.—Bebe has given us another one that is a knockout. Not yet a drawing card, but watch her come. We predict that in less than two months she will be in the first rank.—C. T. Metcalf, Opera House, Greenfield, Ill.—Small town patronage.

Food for Scandal, with Wanda Hawley.—A pleasing picture. It is clean.

Reelcraft Has First Birthday

The Reelcraft Pictures Corporation will celebrate its first birthday and start into the second year of existence in February. To mark the beginning of its second year in a fitting manner, it is rumored they will be a party, at which news of the forthcoming productions concerning the coming year will be made to the trade.

The first year witnessed the perfecting and systematizing of the consolidated companies into a single corporation, also the expansion of the distributing organization which placed branch offices in Cleveland and Kansas City in addition to the other cities maintaining Reelcraft offices.

Peter Krauth, Denison theatre, Denison, Iowa.—Neighborhood patronage.

A Cumberland Romance, with Mary Miles Minter.—Very fine picture. Really good girls.—Pfeiffer Bros., Opera House, Kenton, O.—Neighborhood patronage.

Blackbirds, with Justine Johnstone.—Our people don't care so much for these crook pictures. A good picture of its kind.—Hardin Ent. Co., Odeon theatre, Hardin, Mo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Miss Hobbs, with Wanda Hawley.—This is an unusually good comedy-drama. You can promise real good, clean entertainment.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle theatre, Detroit, Mich.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Luck of the Irish, with a special cast.—Will please any kind of an audience. Splendid photography and no weakness in this picture.—Frank Allen, Rose theatre, Byron, Ill.—Small town patronage.

Miss Hobbs, with Wanda Hawley.—Finished production to the smallest detail. Wonderful cast. Harrison Ford deserves lots of credit. He's a winner. Gave 100 per cent satisfaction.—T. N. Melzer, Lyric theatre, New Ulm, Minn.

39 East, with Constance Binney.—A splendid picture that should suit any audience.—Paul & Overton, Lyric theatre, Winchester, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Jenny Be Good, with Mary Miles Minter.—100 per cent production. All I need to do is to tell the way of advertising. Mary does the rest.—Lyric theatre, New Ulm, Minn.

The Deep Purple, with a special cast.—Another good Realart picture. Work of the cast is to be admired. Plenty of comedy relief.—Frank Allen, Rose theatre, Byron, III.—Small town patronage.

Robertson-Cole

The Stealers, with a special cast.—Here is a special in every sense of the word. Big in theme and drawing power. Ran it two days, and could have filled house two days longer. Robertson-Cole have the goods. Their material is top rate.—M. W. Eakin, Mystic theatre, Rushville, Ind.

The Illustrious Prince, with Sessue Hayakawa.—A very good picture and pleased those who saw it, but Hayakawa's followers are few.—George E. Taylor, Idle Hour theatre, Dunlap, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Blue Bandana, with William Desmond.—Pretty fair program picture. Desmond has the posing habit. Maybe he's quit it.—Alvin S. Frank, Jewel theatre, Lafayette, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Man Who Turned White, with H. B. Warner.—Very good picture.—W. H. Gillilan, Lotus theatre, Red Lake Falls, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

 Dangerous Waters, with William Desmond.—Desmond is a favorite here, but this one did not please. A case where lewdness and suggestiveness is no doubt supposed to be art, but is bad small town stuff.—George E. Taylor, Idle Hour theatre, Dunlap, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

 Life's a Funny Proposition, and The Blue Bandana, with William Desmond, and the Bonds of Childhood, with Sessue Hayakawa.—All very good.—C. A. Kelso, Liberty theatre, Burr Oak, Mich.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Open Door, with a special cast.—This is a real picture in every way. One you should follow closely to get the beauties of it. We had lots of comments on it.—C. Hales, Lyric theatre, Orange City, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

Selznick

Broadway and Home, with Eugene O'Brien.—Picture O. K. O'Brien likes well with our lady patrons.—Lyric theatre, New Ulm, Minn.

The Figurehead, with Eugene O'Brien.—Very good political story.—Paul & Overton. Lyric theatre, Winchester, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Point of View, with Elaine Hammerstein.—Very good picture. Star liked very well here. Book it.—G. Hubler, Grand theatre, Marked Tree, Ark.—Neighborhood patronage.

DARLING MINE, with Olive Thomas.—Every time I report on a production of this, the "Little Wonder Girl," who has gone, I place another flower in memory's casket. Would we had more like her.—C. T. Metcalf, Opera House, Greenfield, Ill.—Small town patronage.

Sooner or Later, with Owen Moore.—A laugh from start to finish. Book this one.—Max Davits, Dixie theatre, Winona, Miss.—Neighborhood patronage.

Darling Mine, with Olive Thomas.—First real look like a real picture. From then on it looked like they used anything they could get hold of to make the footage.—Frank Allen, Rose theatre, Byron, Ill.—Small town patronage.

Marooned Hearts, with Conway Tearle.—This went over big. Good for any theatre.—John Hafenr, Princess theatre, Donora, Pa.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Daughter Pays, with Elaine Hammerstein.—A good picture, but could be cut to five reels.—Peter Krauth, Denison theatre, Denison, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Way of a Woman, with Norma Talmadge.—A dandy little drama. Good

drawer. Got 15 and 35 for it.—T. N. Magurder, Elite theatre, Jola, Kans.—General patronage.

The Faith of the Strong, with Mitchell Lewis.—Mitchell Lewis draws good here. Good patronage.—W. H. Gilfillan, Lotus theatre, Red Lake Falls, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

Sealed Hearts, with Eugene O'Brien. —You can imagine about what you get with a title like this and a Eugene O'Brien. A picture built on the same old disgustimg theme, the eternal triangle. No wonder there is a clamon for censorship. My audience left disgusted. Let it alone.—J. C. Jenkins, Auditorium theatre, Neligh, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Woman God Sent, with a special cast.—Might be all right for city, but not small town. Draggy. We were glad when it was over.—Paul & Overton, Lyric theatre, Winchester, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Knife, with Alice Brady.—A typical Brady role and will please her admirers.—Harold Daspi, Atherton theatre, Kentwood, La.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Forbidden City, with Norma Talmadge.—A fine picture.—W. H. Gilfillan, Lotus theatre, Red Lake Falls, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

Out of the Snows, with a special cast. —A Northland picture of real merit. Drew a good crowd for us and pleased all. Zena Keefe at her best in this.—C. T. Metcalf, Opera House, Greenfield, Ill.—Small town patronage.

The Desperate Hero, with Owen Moore.—I cannot understand why Moore would consent to play in anything so ridiculous.—Frank Allen, Rose theatre, Byron, Ill.—Small town patronage.

The Isle of Conquest, with Norma Talmadge.—This picture will stand up for two days, and you will do better the second day.—Max Davitts, Dixie theatre, Winona, Miss.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Point of View, with Elaine Ham-merstein.—Very good picture. Had a Chester comedy with this. Went over big.—Peter Krauth, Denison theatre, Denison, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Gift Supreme, with a special cast. —A very good picture.—Adolph Kohl, Pastime theatre, Granville, N. Y.—Neighborhood patronage.

Stoll

Squandered Lives, with a special cast. —I was a little nervous about this one, having been made in England by an English company, but if this company's subsequent releases measure up to the standard of this one they will make a strong bid for the American business. Miss Duke registers as a fine actress and photographs beautifully and is ably assisted by Guy Newall. The lighting in some scenes could have been improved upon, but the direction was good, and the picture registered as satisfactory entertainment. It will not class as a special, but will answer as a good program offering.—J. C. Jenkins, Auditorium theatre, Neligh, Neb.

Squandered Lives, with a special cast. —Very good story. Titling different from ordinary. Method used in this picture for committing suicide very interesting. Some inside photography poor. No exhibitor could go wrong on this picture, because it is different from the ordinary. Ran this picture two days without advertising, and the second night's receipts were more than the first night.—A. E. Driskell, Van Nuys theatre, Van Nuys, Cal.—Neighborhood patronage.

Mr. Wu, with a special cast. —A most excellent picture. Magnificent in scope and with no lagging moments. It is so entirely different that the audience was pleased with the fact and commented freely on it.—Frank D. Adams, Dixie theatre, Milledgeville, Ga.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Lure of Crooning Water, with a special cast.—This is the first of the Stoll pictures we have shown and our audience liked it very much. Good story. Good photography. Fine production.—James G. Rhod, Rhode theatre, Kenoshia, Wis.—Transient patronage.

United Artists

The Love Flower, a D. W. Griffith production.—Very good picture.—L. M. Kahns, Gibson theatre, Gibson, N. M.—Small town patronage.

Pollyanna, with Mary Pickford.—Very good. Pleased everyone. Two of the best fights we ever have seen in any picture. Interesting from start to finish.—Ed L. Wegener, Lyric theatre, Valley Jct., la.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Torrent, with Eva Novak.—Interest holding, but a trifle brutal in spots.—P. G. Estee, Fad theatre, Brookings, S. D.—Neighborhood patronage.

Human Stuff, with Harry Carey.—Up to the Carey standard. A good picture will please any audience.—G. M. McClain, Star theatre, Barry, Ill.—Small town patronage.

West Is West, with Harry Carey.—My first Carey. Hope the rest hold up as well as this one. Well liked.—E. Salm, Van Nuys theatre, Eureka, Mont.

Two Kinds of Love, with a special cast.—Little Breezy Eason has the star honors. A good Western story.—P. G. Estee, Fad theatre, Brookings, S. D.—Neighborhood patronage.

ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN, with Dorothy Phillips.—We showed this picture for three days to very satisfactory business and pleased patrons. Many of the patrons expressed their appreciation and thanked us for showing this picture. We used a story with the feature suggested by the Des Moines office and it made a wonderful hit.—W. I. Neagle, Princess theatre, Oskaloosa, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

Once to Everywoman, with Dorothy Phillips.—Proved to be one of the best attractions. Not a single adverse criticism. The business great.—B. C. Brown, Star theatre, Viroqua, Wis.

Hitchin' Posts, with Frank Mayo.—Brother exhibitors, wire Universal. Tell them to send you this big special that for some unaccountable reason slipped through on the program. It is so big it will surprise you.—F. D. McMillan, Royal theatre, O'Neil, Neb.—Small town patronage.

The Girl in the Rain, with Anne Corn-well.—Very poor. Nothing to it. Tame little story with a tame little actress.—J. G. Varnell, Princess theatre, Piedmont, Ala.—Small town patronage.

Once a Plumber, with Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran.—There are only 365 chances in a year to make a hit picture, and this must be one of the chances on this comedy. Very disappointing.—Philip Rand, Rex theatre, Salmon, Idaho.—Small town patronage.
Hitchin' Posts, with Frank Mayo.—Here is a feature that is bound to make friends for the next few weeks. This star is coming to the front fast and it is an assured fact that if Universal keeps on giving him real stories like this, he will make good for any house. We are running Universal three days each week.—W. J. Neagle, Princess theatre, Oskaloosa, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Adorable Savage, with Edith Roberts.—A splendid picture. Beautiful scenery. The hurricane and typhoon scenes held one fascinated. We charged $1.00 a seat, but well worth $2.50. All theatres should play this as it is a picture for the entire family.—C. H. Cannon, Gem theatre, Kouts, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

Everything But the Truth, with Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran.—Patrons said this was the best comedy-drama we have run. We liked it very much. Universal can be depended upon for those of us that are in the market for consistent pictures.—D. N. Essick, Ankeny Picture Show, Ankeny, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

Vitagraph

The Romance Promoters, with Earle Williams.—A light, clean comedy-drama.—Peter Krauth, Denison theatre, Denison, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Tower of Jewels, with Corinne Griffith.—Fair program picture.—Bert Norton, Kozy theatre, Eureka, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Fortune Hunter, with Earle Williams.—Not a heavy production, but one that is sure to please. For real entertain-
lightful humor, full of comedy touches, and a funny act. From W. M. Cannon, Alhambra theatre, Delta, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

Specials

The Golden Trail (Arrow), with Jane Novak.—Everyone pleased. The picture not as big as I thought it would be, but it's a good one. Fine snow scenes. Fine tinting. If you play it don't advance price. Business only little above average. 10 and 20c special. The sub-tides are dark in the above picture. Some of my friends the third saying they could not read them. Give us more light.—William Thacher, Royal theatre, Salina, Kans.

Eyes of Youth (Equity), with Clara Kimball Young.—A good picture, but my patrons do not care for this star. I lost money.—Max Davitts, Dixie theatre, Wimona, Miss.—Neighborhood patronage.

FOOL'S GOLD (Arrow), with Mitchell Lewis.—Good Western picture. I placed four of five nuggets of gold, twelve by dipping stones into bronze, in all store windows with a card reading, "See Fool's Gold." It was a success.—W. H. Gillilan, Lotus theatre, Red Lake Falls, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

Up in Mary's Attic (Fine Arts), with a special cast.—Stay away from it. We know a good one when we see it.—Preston Bros., Empress theatre, Rockwell City, Ia.

The County Fair (Tourneur), with a special cast.—Good program picture. Not in same class with Mickey Mouse business.—O. R. Nation, Strand theatre, Davis, Cal.—Small town patronage.

The Long Arm of Mannister (Pioneer), with Henry B. Walthall.—Nothing to rave about. Fair program picture.—J. H. Hooks, Palace theatre, Thomas, Okla.—Neighborhood patronage.

Silk Husbands and Calico Wives (Equity), with House Peters.—A very good program picture, and will please. Not a special, but will draw on account of its title.—C. Hales, River theatre, Alton, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Unpardonable Sin (Garson), with a special cast.—Has been a great picture, but too old to be out now. We all want to forget the war.—W. H. Gillilan, Lotus theatre, Red Lake Falls, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

Mid-Channel (Equity), with Clara Kimball Young.—An excellent picture. About the best this star ever made. Big exploitation failed to bring returns anticipated. A picture that pleased, but not a money getter.—Fred S. Meyer, Palace theatre, Hamilton, O.—Transient patronage.

Serials

The Lion Man (Universal), with a special cast.—Poorest serial ever run. On twelfth episode now and still can see nothing to it.—Hackett & Krauss, Hackett-ett's theatre. Port Gibson, Miss.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Lost City (Warner Bros.), with a special cast.—Opened to more people than any serial ever run. Would advise running first two on start.—E. D. Miller, Plaisance theatre, Chicago, Ill.

The Moon Riders (Universal), with Art Accord.—Am on twelfth episode and they are all full of action, but there is too much sameness, and the serial, in my judgment, is too long. Wherever they like a lot of blood and thunder, it will go good, but where they want some degree of intelligent story, it won't take

Equipment Progress

Let the public know what you are doing for its comfort.
When you spend money for new equipment, don't wait for your patrons to find it out by accident. Call it to their attention.
Your local papers will willingly handle a news story on an improvement in your theatre and you, yourself, can find many ways of passing the word along.

There is another testimonial in the following pages by an exhibitor who has found out what new equipment means in terms of enlarged patronage and increased box office receipts. His discovery came as the result of a fire. Don't wait for your house to burn down. Put in modern equipment now and put in fire equipment to protect it.

The article this week is by Grant Heth of the Minusa Screen company. He says that a screen is not simply a screen—that each theatre is a separate problem in this regard. Better read what he has to say. Grant has the reputation of knowing what he is talking about.

What kind of a sign have you in the front of your theatre? Is it the best that can be obtained for your purpose? Remember, it is your introduction to your clientele. Does it reflect you, your personality, and your theatre the way you want it to?

New equipment means box office dividends.

Selecting the Screen for the Motion Picture Theatre

Vast Sums Have Been Expended to Produce the Perfect Effect in Projection Surfaces

By GRANT HETH

(Minusa Cine Screen Company)

In reproducing the motion picture, research has determined that no part of the appliances required occupies a more prominent position than the screen. It is the essential that determines the final result, be it good or bad.

It is for this reason that vast sums of money have been expended in an effort to produce the perfect projection surface. Theory after theory has been traced to a hopeless end, with but few exceptions, and if the record of more than a dozen years of successful screen building counts for anything, together with the fact that more than 30 per cent of the world's largest and costliest theatres are equipped with Minusa Gold Fibre screens, it is to be presumed that their theory and construction of a projection surface is well advanced toward perfection. Their theory is as follows:

Minusa construction is exclusive, in that each and every screen is built to the specifications of the theatre in which they are to serve, as light conditions must be taken into consideration if color harmony in light rays is to be had for, therefore does it stand to reason that a screen surface 12x18 feet, producing a perfect picture at 150 feet on D. C., would produce the same results on A. C. at 100 feet on, say, 9x15 feet surface? The color characteristics and nature of A. C. and D. C. light are essentially different. The size of the picture and length of throw are different. Shouldn't the screen be different as well?

We know it should. Our experiments have shown us that the color of the screen surface must match perfectly the color characteristics of the projected light at the "point of contact." Thus we eliminate, absolutely, the glare so apparent on all silver and imitation gold fibre screens.

Ultra-Violet Rays

This glaring light is especially rich in short ultra-violet rays, which are most active and intense, and consequently most irritating to the eye, through their action on the focusing muscle (ciliary), the marvelous photographic plate (retina), which under these conditions must telegraph messages to the brain far more frequently than usual. This is the scientific reason for "eye-strain."

Everyone who has taken a walk on a sunny day, when the ground was covered with snow, can recall the glaring reflection caused when the brilliant yellow or golden sunshine struck the equally brilliant white snow; you also recall how it almost blinded you. That is exactly what happens when the light from a projection machine strikes a screen surface which fails to match it perfectly in color.

The terrible glare produced by such a screen not only is very injurious to the human eye, but at the same time causes a "veil" to appear over the picture. This veil, or in reality "excess reflection," caused by a negative or yellow-colored light coming into contact with a positive or white-colored surface, just like the sun shining on the snow, is what the greater part of the perspective and depth of your picture image. Brilliance at the cost of a lack of perspective and detail is entirely undesirable.

Color Background Used

Increasing or decreasing the amperage proportionately increases and decreases this haze or reflection. This result is also common on gold screen surfaces under certain conditions of projection, unless a color background underneath the surface finish is used. Our method of proving these assertions is to photograph the light rays from the projection machine from a side angle as they strike the screen surface. When the projected light from the arc strikes a surface of exactly the same color as it is, there is absolutely no reflection or fuzz registered on the plate, or photograph.

This is not a complicated scientific theory; anyone with a slight knowledge of the color characteristics of projected light knows the spectrum of such light is composed of the three primary colors, red, blue and yellow. Of course, the various combinations of these three colors make green, orange, violet and a score of other tints and shades. Just use your own knowledge of projected light and remember our reference to the sunlight striking the snow.

Point of Contact

Here's the proof: Throw your light frame down on your screen and freeze your carbons; you can read the color scale just as easily as we can. At 5 feet the light color is violet, 25 feet purple, 50 feet red, 75 feet orange, 100 feet dark yellow, 150 feet light yellow, 175 feet very light yellow. Thus you can easily see how the various sizes of pictures, various lengths of throw and the known variations in color characteristics of A. C. and D. C. light

Typhoons in Loew's New State

Memphis Theatre, One of Chain, Installs Typhoon Cooling and Ventilating System

In the construction of the equipment of Marcus Loew's State, Memphis, Tenn., one of the most important features is the method of ventilation by the Typhoon Cooling and Ventilating System, similar to that in other Loew theaters throughout the South.

The Typhoon System of Cooling and Ventilating is based upon the simple laws of nature, it having been demonstrated a long time ago by Ernest Glantzberg, patents of the Typhoon System, that it was possible to maintain absolute comfort in theaters under the most adverse weather conditions throughout the warmest section of the United States, providing air is supplied into these theaters at a sufficient velocity. This principle is carried out to the letter by the Typhoon Cooling System, which delivers cool air to the audience with an air motion of sufficient velocity to break up the aerial envelope surrounding the body, thus allowing a natural dissipation of the excess heat generated by the body.

Installed on Roof

Wherever the construction of the theater permits the Typhoon Cooling and Ventilating apparatus is installed on the roof, and by this means is enabled to draw pure, fresh air from high above the dirt and dust of the street, and blow it down through the grille in the ceiling of the theater, where it passes out at the rear of the theatre through the opening doors or other exits. So completely does this system renovate the air in the theatre that it requires only one minute to completely change the entire atmosphere.

The Typhoon equipment installed in the State theatre comprises two No. 38 and one No. 212 Typhoon Twin Sets, and one No. 112 Typhoon Single Set—the twin sets being installed in the attic space above the theatre, and the single set on the roof.

During the winter months perfect ventilation may also be maintained by simply reversing the operation, as carried on in the summer, thus drawing out all of the foul air.

Heating Is Simple

For heating purposes the process is likewise very simple, being very much the same operation as that which cools the theatre, the air, before passing into the theatre, is forced through a heating chamber. Thus, when it reaches the audience it is of a sufficiently warm temperature to make all parts of the theatre comfortable.

So popular has this system of cooling, ventilating and heating become, it is said, that many of the big new theaters being built throughout the South are installing Typhoons. It is not only economical in its operation, but it is absolutely reliable, very little attention being needed to keep the apparatus in perfect running order.

The Typhoon Fan Company of 345 West Thirty-ninth street, New York, manufacturers of the Typhoon Cooling and Ventilating System, has representatives in practically every large city in the country. Its business has so increased during the past year that it has been compelled to establish new factories in New York, New Orleans and Chicago, from where it is sending out forces of salesmen and engineers to solve the different ventilating problems of exhibitors in every locality.

PERFUME SPRAY SYSTEM

Thompson Theatre Equipment Company Puts Automatic Device on Market and Begins Installations

What is declared to be an ovation in this regard is the new automatic Hygiene Perfume Spray System manufactured and now being installed by the Thompson Theatre Equipment Company of Minneapolis.

Operates With Motor

The Perfume Spray operates with an electric motor and air compressor, forcing air through copper tubing that connects with containers located in various parts of the theatre forcing any liquid, such as disinfectant, perfume or deodorant, into the air in vapor form.

Some of the features emphasized by the company are that the system comes complete and ready for installation with all directions; that no special knowledge is required, the only electrical connections necessary being to insert screw plug to ordinary lamp socket to attach motor.

Operation Is Noiseless

Another point made is that the equipment can be installed entirely out of view of the patrons. Its operation is noiseless and conforms with all fire, insurance, state and city regulations.

According to the Thompson company, installations of the new spray system have already been made in the Minneapolis territory.

NEW THEATRE SUPPLY CO.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.—The Queen Feature Service has been incorporated here for $100,000. A. M. Graham is president and general manager; Eugene M. Smith, vice-president, and W. S. Bell, secretary and treasurer.

The company will carry a complete line of theatre equipment and will operate in territory contiguous to the southern city.

Good Equipment Is a Business Builder

E. F. Ekman is authority for the statement that his company, Moses & Ekman, are now firm believers in theatre equipment as a business builder. Following a fire which razed a theatre owned by the company at Pecos, the exhibitors concentrated their efforts on their Rialto theatre at Midland. The results, in Mr. Ekman's own words, follow:

"Since the big fire at Pecos which completely destroyed our theatre building, equipment, light plant and home, we have been unable to reopen there due to the present money crisis. But we have been devoting our attention to our Rialto theatre at Midland. We have completely remodeled it, putting in an attractive front, lobby, box office and have redecorated the interior. We also installed a Photo Player and to top it off we are giving our patrons the newest and best features and comedies on the market with the result that business has increased about 200 per cent."
New Projects

Elgin, Ill.—The Rialto theatre being erected in Grove avenue will be opened in March by Mr. Paul J. Minusa, according to Mary A. Land- on and John B. Newman.

Mt. Clemens, Mich.—The Macomb Theatre Company expects to have its new playhouse in operation by June 1. It will seat 1,933.

Troy, N. Y.—Morris and Jacob Weine- stein have purchased the building at 22 Fourth street. It will be remodeled into a large motion picture theatre.

Paterson, N. J.—Harry R. Grossman is having plans prepared for a new 1,000 seat theatre at Union and Redwood avenues. It will cost $60,000.

Pt. Huron, Mich.—E. J. Schoolcraft and Herman Appel are developing plans for the erection this Spring in the South Park section of a $50,000 theatre to seat 700 persons.

Jersyville, Ill.—Reddock Reddish will rate the Gym theatre and erect on the site of North Street a modern motion picture house.

Lawton, Okla.—J. D. and A. L. Ram- sey are considering the erection of a motion picture theatre at Fourth street and D avenue.

Indianapolis, Ind.—Richard and Henry Stegemeier will erect a $175,000 theatre at 37 North Illinois street.

Enid, Okla.—Manager Walter Billings announces that the new Billings theatre at Independence and Maple streets will be opened in February. It was erected at an expenditure of $200,000.

Newark, N. J.—Plans for resumption of construction work on the theatre at 344 Broad street are being made by Ne- wark Beacon Corporation.

Remodeling

Kansas City, Mo.—The Warwick the- atre at 3097 Main street will be rebuilt next Summer. M. J. Barry has leased the property.

Shawano, Wis.—Many improvements will be made at the Crescent theatre shortly.

Fires

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Approximately $500 in damage resulted from a fire at the Pastime theatre, 621 Herron avenue.

Shreveport, La.—Slight damage was incurred by fire at the theatre at Ruston owned by Kidd-Astor Amusement Company.

Transfers

Wichita, Kan.—It is understood that L. S. Naftzger, and associates will take over control of the Wichita theatre.

Central City, Neb.—The Donelson theatre has passed to the management of Miss Marie Goodhand.

Beloit, Wis.—Orpheum Picture Com- pany has purchased the Strand and Rex theatres.

Michigan City, Ind.—Wallenstein Brothers have purchased the Garden, Idlehour and Dreamland theatres from Ezra Rhodes of South Bend.

Forest Park, Ill.—John H. MacGery has assumed control of the Forest Park theatre.

EXHIBITORS SUPPLY SALES

Concern Active in Equipping New Thea- tre—Fort Armstrong and Biltmore Among Those Supplied by Company

The Exhibitors Supply Company has made a number of the booth equipment installations in the big theatres opening in the last few weeks and scheduled to open soon.

Joseph Duffy, manager of the Exhibitors’ Chicago Branch, reports that when Joe Hopp’s Fort Armstrong theatre at Rock Island opened, it was equipped with two Type-S Simplexes that the first picture was thrown on a Minusa screen. Mr. Duffy credits Earl Wright, the projection- ist, with being largely responsible for the beautiful picture obtained, as he in- sisted on equipping his Simplex machines with Keep-on-lite lenses, which increase the light on the screen considerably. In addition to the projection equipment, this house purchased their ticket selling ma- chines and ticket changers from the Sup- ply Company.

Equip New Biltmore

Another sale reported is for equipment for the Biltmore theatre, consisting of two Type-S Simplexes, a 22-ft. Minusa Screen, Peerless Arc Controls, orchestra music stands, ticket sellers and ticket changers, besides many other supply articles.

Perhaps one of the biggest feathers in the cap of the Exhibitors Supply Com- pany’s Chicago sales force is the sale of equipment to Balaban & Katz for the Tivoli theatre at 63rd and Cottage Grove avenue, which will open soon.

Minusa Screen Used

Here the booth will be equipped with three Type-S Simplexes, one to be used as an auxiliary machine. The picture will be projected on a Minusa Screen of huge proportions. The large screen is necessary because of the tremendous size of the house.

In keeping with their policy of always giving a show which is a continuous, un- broken entertainment, Balaban & Katz have installed Peerless Automatic Arc Controls on all machines. A battery of Simplex Ticket Selling Machines com- pleted the equipment.

RIALTO INSTALLS AUSTIN

In line with the progressive policy of its management, the Rialto theatre, Balatkin, one of the A. H. Schwartz circuit of houses, is to be entirely re- decorated and an Austin organ, costing $90,000, installed. R. P. Cohen is man- aging the house.

GLANTZBERG FINISHES TRIP

Typhoon President Has Spent Winter in South and Predicts Good Business Coming Year

Ernst Glantzberg, president of Typhoon Fan Company, who has been spending the winter in the South, looking over the ventilation field for 1921, has returned to New York to spend a week, after which he will leave again for New Or- leans, Atlanta, Dallas and other points.

Mr. Glantzberg is enthusiastic over the prospects for a large increase in business during 1921, and reports that already many large orders for the Typhoon Cooling and Ventilating Sys- tem have been received.

Takes Option in Dixon

DIXON, ILL.—Leonard G. Rorer has taken an option on the Family theatre property in Peoria avenue. He intends to continue the operation of the Family theatre after the erection and opening of his new playhouse in Galena avenue.

Davis In Elberton, Ga.

ELBERTON, GA.—J. P. Davis of Athens has arrived here and assumed management of the Strand theatre.

SELECTING THE SCREEN

change the color of the projection light at the point of contact.

In addition to this, wide house condi- tions require expert color shading. More than sixty distinctly different formulas, ranging in surface color from a dark red- dish gold to a very light shade of yellow, are used to meet the various conditions described. The surface color of the screen we build must match perfectly the color of the light at point of contact. The texture of surface finish must vary from a fine grain to a roughness that will harmonize and utilize the side angle re- flection which practically eliminates the fadeaway and distortion when viewing the picture from an extreme side angle.

Vandawalker Opening Milwaukee Exchange
It Is Understood That Doll-Van Corp. Will Further Expand Shortly

Doll-Van Film Corporation of Chicago will open an exchange in Milwaukee early in March, according to an announcement by D. M. Vandawalker, head of this independent company.

Has Fourteen Pictures
While the location of the exchange in the Wisconsin city has not been made public, it is not unlikely that space will be rented in the Toy building. Rights to fourteen pictures, all features of five or six reels, have been obtained, Mr. Vandawalker said.

The manager of the new exchange has not been selected nor has the sales staff.

Company to Expand
Establishment of the exchange in Milwaukee is believed to be the first step in a policy of expansion to be adopted by Doll-Van as it is said that several other film centers may be invaded by this progressive company during the present year.

Buys Space in Telephone Book to Push Films

The Independent Films Association has contracted for space in telephone directories in New York, Philadelphia, Washington, Pittsburgh, St. Louis, Kansas City and Chicago to advertise the Neal Hart productions, being state rightsed by this firm.

The idea is Harry Rice's, business manager of the Film Association, and he expects to reach upwards of 5,000,000 people in this way. The first firm to buy the Neal Hart series on the strength of the advertising was the Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, New York, of which Samuel Zierler is president.

Mrs. Rinehart in Chicago
Mary Roberts Rinehart, who has been on the West coast preparing screen stories for Goldwyn, stopped off in Chicago Jan. 27 en route to her home in Sewickley, Pa. She stated the film business has recovered from its recent slump and studios are again as active as in the past.

Opens at Barbee's
The Gollos Enterprises have secured a downtown showing for their big special "Hidden Light," starring Dolores Cassini, at Barbee's Loop theatre, March 6 to 13. Afterwards it will play the L. & T. houses.

Lesserman Off on Trip
L. L. Lesserman, manager of the Universal Exchange, left on Sunday, Jan. 30, for a three months' sojourn in California. Morris He'llman will be in charge during Mr. Lesserman's absence.

To the Trade
Do you know the provisions of the proposed Chicago censorship ordinance? Do you realize what effect passage of the ordinance would have on your business interests?
If you do you will attend the hearing at the city hall on Thursday, February 3 at 2:00 o'clock.

C. W. Phillips Joins Gollos Enterprises
C. W. Phillips, for the past year and a half connected with the Goldwyn Pictures exchange, Chicago, has been made manager of Gollos Enterprises.
Mr. Phillips is perhaps one of the best known film men in the Central West, having been with the General Film Company nine years and during that time met almost every exhibitor in the Wisconsin, Illinois and Indiana territory. He was also connected with the World Film exchange for three years under Managers Jensen and L. A. Rozelle.

Mr. Phillips will have complete charge of the Gollos output in Illinois and Indiana.

Expands Activities

Schaefler Succeeds Maurice Choymski
Allied Amusements Elect Former President to Leadership Again

Peter J. Schaefer of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, has been named president of the Allied Amusements Association of Chicago to succeed Maurice Choymski, who resigned on account of the demands of other business.

Mr. Schaefer was waited upon by a committee of A. A. A. members, who requested permission to place his name in nomination. He consented and was unanimously elected.

Urges Exhibitor Unity
"Now is the proper time for all amusement interests to get together," declared Mr. Schaefer in taking office. "We are being pressed on all sides by a lot of notoriety seeking reformers who hope to scare us with the blue law bugaboo. If we do not organize to protect ourselves, we will find Chicago a psalm-singing, hypocritical city of 3,000,000 indigo dead ones.

"We must help the public protect the constitution of the United States and its God-given right of freedom."

Known Throughout Nation
Peter J. Schaefer is one of the best known showmen in the United States. He has held office in practically every national exhibitor organization. He was president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, at the time it was the leading organization.

As president of the A. A. A. he built up the organization so that it included representatives of every branch of the amusement business.

Fr. Wayne Theatre Man Buys Residence

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

FT. WAYNE, Ind., Feb. 1—W. C. Quimby, proprietor of Quimby's United Theatres, which include the Jefferson and Strand theatres here, has purchased the J. M. Landenburger residence, 2440 Fairfield avenue, for $30,000. The house and location are among the most attractive in the city. Quimby plans to remodel the house.

Cowden, Ill., Strand Sold

COWDEN, ILL.—For the second time within the last six months the Strand motion picture theatre has been sold. Ed Kesler of Stewardson recently sold it to Anderson and Son, who have since disposed of it to Velarous Phipps and Melron Prater.

Reopen Marion Theatre

MARION, ILL.—The Family theatre recently reopened after being closed for remodeling and redecoration.
SHOTS AND MISSES
By Mac

The Mary Pickford productions, controlled in this territory by the Interstate Film Service, have apparently gone over with a rush. The Casino theatre on West Madison street is playing them every other week for a week's run and the crowds in daily attendance signify the admiration America's little sweetheart holds for the Loop film. The Intersect recently closed a deal taking over fifteen of these productions, which have been entirely revamped with new art titles, showing Mary surrounded by many of the biggest stars of today who supported her back in the days of Biograph when D. W. Griffith was the directing genius of this company.

That was rather a gay party assembled at the Oliver Hotel, South Bend, Ind., Saturday evening, January 29, congratulating the popular Jake Handelsman upon the opening of his new theatre, the Blackstone. With this new cinema palace now giving the Hoosiers the very best available features the market offers, South Bend is now much to the fore in film circles. Thank Jake, he's responsible!

C'mon you ex-"leather necks," army and navy K. P.'s, make it snappy. Eddie Trinz is getting thin running around trying to locate an adjutant for the film post of the American Legion. Here's a swell chance for some former hard boiled sergeant to call the section to "attentions" and get 'em reporting at the weekly meetings. Ed tells us he is willing to attach a cash consideration in payment for the duties attached to this important office. This should interest a real live mess sergeant, aha! Report to Eddie Trinz, Lubliner & Trinz enterprises, Kimball building.

Congratulations are in order. We hear that Fred Ward of Vester & Wild, celebrated his twenty-fifth wedding anniversary Jan. 29. It must be so. Got it right from Fred himself. The evident youth of this genial good chap should make it a cinch to record his Golden anniversary.

Henry Schoenstatt is back from his sojourn at Hot Springs, Ark., looking as regular as a regular two-year-old, so we look for the early opening of the New Brighton theatre most any day now. Understand the o'vet, Jack Williams of the Mid-West Theatre Supply has completed the installation of two Simplex projectors of the latest design for this pretty 1,800 seat theatre.

W. W. Willman of Indianapolis has been placed in charge of the entire Indiana territory for United Artists, under supervision of Cress Smith of the local exchange.

That's quite a pretty shade of deep purple that Cress Smith has had his left or decorated with the past week or so. When 'tis considered that upon leaving for his office a while back this gay Romeo was bidding a fond adieu to friend Better Half, we'll agree marital bliss has pranks all its own.

Morris Kline of the Blackstone Pictures announces that for the future Dick Fox will cover the Indiana and Max Cutler the City territory for his company.

A Shalit, former Boston sales representative for the United Artists, is leaving for the West to become the manager of their St. Louis, Mo., branch. C'mon old top, lots of room out here for winners.

The golden horseshoe is surely on that feature, "The House Without Children," which Maury Salkin is distibuting to the exhibitors around this part of the country. It seems Maury is overcome with a streak of generosity the other day, booking this feature to an exhibitor friend of his at the exhibitor's price. Last Saturday he received his third check from this exhibitor with a few lines explanatory. As the sages quoth, "Let your conscience be your guide."

The honors in last week's struggle for bowling supremacy go to the Vitagraph five, defeating the Unity team with a lead of 196 pins. The five victors were W. A. Rowley, high man for his team, Bill Brimmer, Ed Lansing, Jim Salter and "Golfie" Greenwood, splitting a grand prize of two hundred iron men.

After the dust was raised away last Saturday in the Rothacker offices we discovered that John Hahn had been moving his secretarial chambers one suite to the east. All quiet again with this busy official registering the usual one hundred per cent.

The boys of the local exchanges got together a handsome purse for the widow of the late Chris Whelan, pioneer filmman who died December 31.

Superior Screen Service, Inc., has acquired the Illinois and Indiana rights to Herald Productions.

In all the motion picture theatres of the Nation where big pictures and good pictures are being shown—there you find patronage heavy and exhibitor profits assured.

In every city where the amusement business has been "off" it has been in the $2.00 or $3.00 theatres, and not in the motion picture theatres.

Out of 2,000 Associated Producers' exhibitor-customers we have not heard twenty complaints of poor business.

BY IDAHO STATE EXHIBITORS' ASSN

That "Outside the Law" is a Masterpiece and has a tendency to create new theatregoers and to elevate the exhibiting business to a new standard.

Read the following wire from Don Corrother, president of the Idaho State Exhibitor Association: "On account of the unusual interest aroused among members of our organization, we included in our official routine of business at our semi-annual meeting in Boise a special screening of 'Outside the Law.' A resolution was passed unanimously to the effect that 'Outside the Law' is by far the most meritorious product that has so far come to our notice. IT IS A MASTERPIECE IN EVERY RESPECT AND HAS A TENDENCY TO CREATE NEW THEATREGOERS AND TO ELEVATE THE EXHIBITING BUSINESS to a standard that must be called a real achievement. EXHIBITORS SHOULD BE PROUD TO PRESENT THIS ATTRACTION to their patrons in an community irrespective of creed, size or fastidiousness of clientele."
Clean Suspense gets the Whole Family

—and keeps them coming week after week

TIME was when a producer could put almost any old kind of junky “ruff stuff” into a serial and get away with it. Nobody cared much then—neither producer, exhibitor nor public. Not so today! In these days when serials—GOOD serials—UNIVERSAL SERIALS—are an attraction for the whole family, they must be produced with just as much care as the very best feature. And because Universal serials are produced with exactly such care; because they ARE clean, speedy and healthily exciting entertainment for the whole family, they are making money for hundreds of exhibitors, just as they will make money for YOU.

IN "HOLY SMOKE" JIMMIE ADAMS IS AT HIS BEST

MERMAID COMEDIES
One a Month

Mermaid Comedies are not one star comedies. Mermaid Comedies are all star comedies—organization comedies—built up on the personalities of comedians like Lloyd "Ham" Hamilton and "Jimmie" Adams

It is the versatility of Director JACK WHITE, however, which has made Mermaid Comedies such a "sure fire" box office success. Though Mermaid Comedies are rough-and-tumble comedies, they are not of the slap-stick variety. They are best defined as ridiculous situation comedies which never insult the intelligence of an audience with pie throwing or similar childishness. Director Jack White's unique art is that of being able to bring out his story by manufacturing comic situations which are genuinely humorous.

"HOLY SMOKE" is a roaring comedy of thrilling human interest. Good old fashioned melodrama and farce at their best.

A melodrama strange as life itself.
Depicting in vivid flashes the agony of a man's soul of the single passion which moved him—the love of a girl—and of the crime he committed in its name.

But the girl knew, and the man came to know at last that nothing but the great atonement would wipe out the stain.

No question that Small Town Idol is Mack Sennett's greatest picture stop our gross business week ending tonight thirteen thousand nine hundred and fifty dollars stop this seems unbelievable taking into consideration that Mission theatre has only eight hundred eighty seats regards
Harry David
Managing Director Mission Theatre

And here are reasons why:

Florence Lawrence, Los Angeles Examiner: "A Small Town Idol is an instant success. Mack Sennett has eliminated entirely the proverbial slapstick and has evolved one of the most amusing films of his career."

Guy Price, Los Angeles Evening Herald: "Hardly an angle of melodramatic art escapes unscathed. Melodrama, farce, polite comedy, comedy-drama, revue, spectacle and plot are all there. It is Sennett's first big personal production since 'Mickey.'"

Edwin Schallert, Los Angeles Times: "Ben Turpin, valiant knight of careless eyes, corners all laurels. You have to be hard-hearted indeed not to succumb to the heroic charms of Ben in 'A Small Town Idol.'"

May Markson, Los Angeles Record: "'A Small Town Idol' created much mirth at the Mission Theatre. Mack Sennett is perhaps the only director who can make an audience sit through so many reels of frivolity and make them feel that the picture is too short. He has accomplished this in 'A Small Town Idol.'"

"Sennett's biggest personal production since 'Mickey.'"

All motion picture box-office records!

"FORBIDDEN FRUIT" broke all records for paid admissions last week at the Rivoli Theatre.

It was the biggest week in history by $1,200. The former record was made last April by "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde."

In seven days 53,963 people paid to see Cecil B. DeMille's masterpiece. And there were more turned away at every performance than ever before, since the theatre holds only 2,000.

At the beginning of the second week of its Rivoli showing it is still going strong.

"Forbidden Fruit" is also breaking records at Stanley's new $2,000,000 theatre in Philadelphia, in Shea's Criterion in Buffalo, and at The Majestic, Columbus.

From all present indications it is the greatest box-office attraction the world has ever known.

Last Year—

THE big pictures of last year—those pictures that neither you nor your patrons can ever forget—established a standard by which all future pictures must be judged.

Look, therefore, at the list of productions for release during the next six months—and compare them with last year's big ones. You'll find that they were little more than appetizers for the feast that is to come.

William DeMille’s “MIDSUMMER MADNESS” and “THE PRINCE CHAP” broke records for you. In the next six months there will be two William DeMille’s productions. There is first, Sir James M. Barrie's famous play, "WHAT EVERY WOMAN KNOWS." With the exception of “Peter Pan” this was Maude Adams' biggest stage success, and Barrie's most successful play. Conrad Nagel and Lois Wilson are in the screen production.

Then there is Mr. DeMille's “THE LOST ROMANCE.” This was written by Edward Knoblock, author of “Kismet,” specially for the screen, and the author worked with the director throughout.

George Melford's production, “BEHOLD MY WIFE,” was acclaimed by many exhibitors the best picture ever made. Mr. Melford will excel that one in “THE FAITH HEALER,” by William Vaughn Moody; in “THE MONEY MASTER,” by Sir Gilbert Parker, author of “Behold My Wife,” and in “A STAMPEDE MADONNA,” starring Dorothy Dalton, with Jack Holt in support.

John S. Robertson, the man who made “DR. JEKYLL AND MR. HYDE,” has produced Sir James M. Barrie’s “SENTIMENTAL TOMMY,” with a cast headed by Gareth Hughes, Mabel Taliaferro, May McAvoy and George Fawcett.

William S. Hart’s production, “O’MALLEY OF THE MOUNTED,” stands up so well alongside “THE TESTING BLOCK” that it would be hard to pick between them. Each a big heart story, filled with thrills.

You will never forget Mae Murray in George Fitzmaurice’s “ON WITH THE DANCE.” In “THE GILDED LILY,” a Robert Z. Leonard production, she plays a similar role, and the picture is even more beautiful and elaborate.

“THE CITY OF SILENT MEN” will be Thomas Meighan’s biggest picture, with even more heart appeal and punch than “THE PRINCE CHAP.” Many scenes were filmed in Sing Sing Prison. It is a real special of an unusual kind.

Wallace Reid in “THE LOVE SPECIAL” is another record-breaker. It's got the thrills of “WHAT'S YOUR HURRY?” and the comedy of “ALWAYS AUDACIOUS” melted into one thrilling romance.

William A. Brady’s production, “LIFE,” by Thompson Buchanan, was acclaimed the biggest dramatic spectacle ever staged when it ran for a year in New York. So you can imagine how big it will be on the screen, when all the thrills will be real.

Elsie Ferguson in “SACRED AND PROFANE LOVE,” in which she scored on the stage last year, marks the highest point in that star's career. Arnold Bennett’s play makes a marvelous emotional drama. William D. Taylor, who made “HUCKLEBERRY FINN,” produced it.

Another Taylor production is “THE WITCHING HOUR,” the great play by Augustus Thomas. Elliott Dexter is in the cast, and the play is even more timely than when it ran on the stage.

Gloria Swanson, whose beauty and charm in Cecil B. DeMille’s “MALE AND FEMALE,” “WHY CHANGE YOUR WIFE?” and “SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT,” placed her in the front rank, appears in her first starring vehicle, “THE GREAT MOMENT,” which was written especially for her by Elinor Glyn, author of “Three Weeks.” The author worked throughout on the making of the picture.

On the opposite page is the complete list. Look it over yourself and you’ll see what fine things are ready for you.

"BEHIND THE DOOR" hit your patrons—and it hit them hard,—for it was a marvel of dramatic construction.

"BELOW THE SURFACE" gripped them with its stark realism and its vivid tragedy for it was forceful and true.

"DOWN HOME" pulsed with interest and tugged at their very heart-strings with its sweet human appeal.

And now in "PARTNERS of the TIDE," Irvin V. Willat has created a picture in which he combines every quality that made his past productions colossally successful.

This industry is surfeited with the shouts and clamors of petty personal animosities. It is insufferably tired of what seems to be an interminable succession of verbal clashes that can only be likened to fishwives' bickerings. From within it has been billingsgated from one end of the country to the other.

In line with what has been going on there was enacted in Chicago last week a spectacle of appalling humiliation to the industry.

The president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and the president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry stood before each other in a quasi open forum and hurled charge and counter charge into each other's teeth.

While great and vital problems hang in threatening suspense over the industry, these two acknowledged leaders of the two distinct factors of the business engaged in acrimonious argument over a lot of absurdly trivial matters.

Exhibitors and others identified with the industry who came to learn remained to scoff.

The whole event becomes one of sad memory.

Let there be no misunderstanding: The culpability for this situation does not rest upon Sydney S. Cohen and William A. Brady; they merely have been made unwilling victims of certain circumstances which have thrust them into the unpleasant mess.

Simply because of his position of leadership and utterly without respect to his record of performance, Sydney Cohen has been made the target of assault and censure and in a natural reaction he has been caused to give his time and attention to a score of cheap trivialities which are unworthy of him personally and unworthy of his great mission as the chosen head of the organized exhibitors of America.

In a similar manner William A. Brady, the appointed head of the producers and distributors, is forced into circumstances wherein he is compelled to devote his energy and time to petty personal controversies while he should be directing his ability and influence along the lines of the constructive work that is to be done.

Responsibility for this deplorable situation may be laid squarely at the doors of those individuals and groups within the industry who seem to believe that their interests can be best served by keeping burning perennially the fires of discord.

The blame is with those who through personal jealousy, pique and ambition, drag lying insinuations out into the forum with a view to upsetting constituted authority and creating a breach between exhibitor and producer.

* * *

In the entire Brady-Cohen controversy we fail to catch a gleam of any fundamental difference of sufficient importance to keep the groups these men represent from working hand in hand on the big constructive things that must be done. It is true that there are evidences of promises, if not broken, at least too long deferred. There are internal problems that may take months to solve. But certainly there is no

On the day that there are only ten automobiles stolen in Chicago the papers get out an extra.

Spring is almost here. Baseball experts are beginning to pick the pennant winners for 1921.

Now that Ground Hog Day is passed, the only thing to look forward to is the presidential inauguration.

Hip Hip Hurrah

Out in California, a Senator proposes to prohibit the wearing of trousers where they have hip pockets. A lot of us will have to go to bed for the rest of our lives if that becomes a national law.

Dowling Kicks In

Pat Dowling, the old reliable Christie press agent, comes to bat with this one: At the Windsor theatre in Los Angeles, on the same bill with Metro’s “Parlor, Bedroom and Bath” there is a Christie comedy, “Dinnigroom, Kitchen and Sink,” which, according to Pat, only leaves “Up in Mary’s Attic” and that classic cellar, “Below the Surface,” to cover the whole house.

They Look It

“A writer of one-reel comedies suddenly lost his mind. For six months thereafter he continued to write those things, and no one ever knew the difference.”—Film Fun.

And we strongly suspect he dashed off a few two-reelers while he was about it.

Songsters Are Busy

If songs will win the fight against the Blue Sunday measures, the reformers are already licked. Twenty songs, all titled “Blue Law Blues,” are submitted to the Music Publishers’ Protective Association in one week.

Quite appropriately, Constance Talmadge’s next picture, “Lessons in Love” will be followed by “Wedding Bells.”

Anita Stewart believes in getting plenty of atmosphere into her pictures. She has completed “Sowing the Wind” and now announces “The Tornado.”

Wants His Money’s Worth

A Chicago exhibitor who believes in getting all he can for his money is up-decided whether to book “Black Beauty,” which has only one horse in it, or wait for the Metro feature, “The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse.”

Max Linder must intend to remain in this country. I see he’s taking up spelling and learning to speak English.

true regard for the welfare of the industry is seriously engaged in endeavoring to establish a basis of harmony which would make possible the vitally necessary unity of action on the part of the various branches of the industry.

However, the “hand grenade squadron” appellation may prove to be very apt but in a different sense than originally intended as there are evidences of a bomb being exploded where it will do much toward clearing the road of futile and obnoxious impediments.

The Blue Sunday agitation has stumbled and fallen into the pit of absurdity which has been dug for it by its sponsors. But it is not dead. It is in fact in a position more dangerous to the industry than at any previous time as there is a likelihood that it will be ignored for a time and if this happens it will be permitted to go on quietly strengthening its forces for a stronger attack at a later date. The Blue Sunday agitators must be watched checked at every turn.

So-called “box office titles” have contributed materially in keeping censorship agitation alive. For some time there was no proof to set against the assertion that the exhibitor welcomed and demanded titles of this character. However, there is now proof at hand that the exhibitors of the country as a whole not only do not welcome titles of this type but are in fact decided against them.

legitimate reason why these men should be forced into a line of action which substantially amounts to holding aloft the torch of civil war!

We have listened to the charge that the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry is intent upon a course which substantially amounts to an effort to wreck the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. But there is no evidence to support this contention and we cannot bring ourselves to believe that the National Association for a moment would determine upon any such ridiculous procedure; that the producers and distributors would launch into an attack against the legitimate organization activities of the customers which make their business possible.

Mr. Brady states publicly that he seeks only a harmonious understanding for the common good.

Mr. Cohen states publicly that just such a harmonious understanding is cordially welcomed by his organization.

Where, then, is there anything that stands in the way of unity of action excepting only those items of petty controversy which are thrown into the situation by those who are loath to see harmony become a fact?

* * *

We can conceive of nothing more generally disastrous to the uniform progress of the industry than just such a civil war as seems to be menacing the immediate future. If there existed issues which were impossible of amicable adjustment, then a finish fight would be the only possible road to a settlement. But no such issues exist. The various branches of the industry are actually within reach of an amicable adjustment of differences and it is probably this very fact that has precipitated the present crisis because there are those who shudder to think of the day at which they will no longer be able to profit by the discord that has existed.

Just so long as there exists any grounds for suspicion that the aim of the National Association is to disrupt the exhibitors' national organization, Sydney Cohen is pursuing a sane and logical course in going before his members throughout the country with the real story of the organization, what it is doing and what it means to the individual theatre owner.

But, convinced as we are by considerations that cannot be ignored that the true aim of the National Association is solely the accomplishment of united action the pursuit of such a plan as Mr. Cohen has undertaken, instead of being in any manner an interference with what the National Association aims to do, will actually render an aid and assistance that could be accomplished in no other way.

* * *

In the situation that has occurred, this publication reaffirms its wholehearted support of every legitimate aim of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

Also its support will be gladly given to the program of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry to effect the necessary unity of action among all branches of the business—an eventuality that must be achieved if grave misfortune is to be avoided.

We petition both the exhibitors organization and the National Association to guard carefully against those active influences which are aimed to keep discord alive and also to free the leaders of the respective bodies from those controversies of petty calibre which remain as a menace to the accomplishment of the important things that are to be done.

The apparent efforts to capitalize dissension which result in the cheap, tawdry misrepresentation of the industry before the world must be reached for and stopped.

Those tactics of misrepresentation and lying insinuation which cause leaders of the industry to squander valuable time in petty controversy, resulting in volumes of gaseous small talk, now assume an especially dangerous character in that they are interrupting the march toward harmony and must be dealt with accordingly.
Rumor Parament To Sell St. Louis Houses to Lynch

John C. Flynn Emphatically Denies Report Which Has Been Current in New York and Missouri—Several Policy Changes Effective

(From Staff Correspondent)

ST. LOUIS, MO., Feb. 8.—John C. Flynn, representing the executive offices of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in New York City, who has been in St. Louis for the past three weeks and who has assumed an active interest in the affairs of the Missouri corporation during his stay, today denied emphatically to a representative of the Exhibitors Herald that the seventeenth local Paramount motion picture theatres were to be sold to the S. A. Lynch interests of the South.

Rumors that have been prevalent here and in New York during the last week were to the effect that Famous Players-Lasky Missouri Corporation controlling the string of St. Louis picture houses, including the new $1,250,000 Missouri theatre and the Delmonte theatre, were transferring their interests to S. A. Lynch for a consideration well up in the seven figures.

Changes Made in Policies of Organization

Flynn’s advent at the St. Louis offices and the subsequent changes in some of the local organization’s policies gave further accentuation to the existing belief that the sale was pending. Frederick L. Cornwell, president of the Missouri corporation, has been out of town for several days and every effort to reach him for a statement was futile.

The announcement on February 1 that the litigation over the control of the St. Louis houses between the Missouri corporation and Harry Koplar interests had been settled out of court came suddenly and as a surprise which led the rumor of the impending transfer.

Says Rumor Not Authentic

In discussing the current reports, Flynn declared that they had no sound or authentic source. “There is absolutely nothing true in the rumors that are floating around the East and around this city,” said Flynn. “The Missouri corporation has no intention of selling their local interests and the trend of past events form no conclusive evidence to support the rumors.”

When asked whether there had been any deal consummated in the past week which might give rise to the alleged sale Flynn said there had not. “I can see no reason why gossip has become so intent upon charging us with great losses in St. Louis and then with the contemplation of a sale,” he concluded.

Book Stage Attractions

The Pershing theatre at Hamilton avenue and Delmar boulevard, one of the leading houses which the Koplar interests turned over to the Famous Players, recently was converted into a legitimate theatre with a stock company playing musical comedies and light operas.

The Kings theatre at Kingshighway and Delmar boulevard, it was announced last week, has been leased to G. Marcus Loew who will take charge of the house beginning February 27. The leasing of the Kings theatre to Loew had been a subject of repeated rumor since December 15, but these rumors were at the time denied by William Goldman, manager of the Missouri corporation.

Prices Reduced

Other evidences of the condition of the Missouri corporation may be gained from the fact that the Criterion theatre,

Industry Plans One-Day Drive to Aid Stricken People of Ireland

Plans for a charity drive to be executed on March 17 are now under way.

Following the great success of the industry’s Hoover drive for the benefit of the starving children of Europe, a new movement of a similar nature is to be undertaken for the relief of poverty stricken people of Ireland, and of course, March 17 is the date for that work.

A preliminary announcement of the new drive has been made by William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, who stated that Cardinal James Gibbons, of Baltimore, will be chairman of the committee which will have the work in hand and that other members of the committee thus far appointed are Frank Crise, mayor of Edward F. Dunne, of Chicago, to represent the Middle West and Senator James D. Phelan, of San Francisco, to represent the far west.

Exhibitors and others in the industry will be requested to cooperate in the work along the lines followed in the recent Hoover drive.

International Figure to Represent Industry

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry is contemplating the appointment of a figure of national prominence to represent the industry generally in legislative and other matters.

A man of wide prominence who has occupied a conspicuous position in the public eye for some time is under consideration and an announcement may be expected within the near future.

First Brady Unity Meeting Brings Debate With Cohen

President of N. A. M. P. I. Opens Nation-Wide Campaign for Co-operation in Chicago—M. P. T. O. A. Officers Challenge His Purpose

William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, opened in Chicago last week a campaign which was announced as a movement for a united industry.

An unexpected turn in the proceedings was occasioned by the presence of Sydney S. Cohen, president; Senator James J. Walker, national counsel; Samuel I. Berman and other leaders in the affairs of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

BRADY ANNOUNCES PROCEDURE

An interesting situation was created early last week by an announcement of Mr. Brady that he would commence in Chicago on Friday, February 4, a series of addresses to exhibitors in leading cities throughout the United States.

Mr. Brady's announced purpose was to weld the exhibitors and the other factors of the industry into a united front for defense against censorship and other legislative assaults and also to urge exhibitors to join the exhibitors' division of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

LARGE ATTENDANCE AT MEETING

Mr. Cohen, however, as spokesman for the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, construed the Brady program as an assault upon the exhibitors' organization and an effort to alienate the interests of exhibitors in favor of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

In a spirited meeting attended by large delegations of exhibitors and other persons identified with the film industry in Chicago and vicinity, Mr. Brady vehemently denied the construction placed upon his actions by Mr. Cohen, who with equal force countered with the declarations reaffirming his assertions.

The meeting, which was held in Washington Hall, was arranged by a committee of Chicago film men to give Mr. Brady an opportunity to deliver his message to representatives of all branches of the industry in Chicago and vicinity.

Otis Skinner, Henry Miller, William Hodge, Blanche Ring and Lenore Ulric, theatrical stars now appearing in Chicago, attended the meeting as a courtesy to Mr. Brady. The public was invited to hear his address.

Sydney S. Cohen Will Tour Nation With Senator Walker

Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, announced in Chicago February 5, that he would return to New York immediately to make preparations for a nationwide tour to make clear to the entire industry the aims and purposes of the organization which he heads.

Cohen will be accompanied on this trip by Senator James J. Walker, counsel for the M. P. T. O. A., and a speaker of exceptional ability.

Preparations will be hurried and the date of his departure from New York and the itinerary decided upon will be announced within a few days.

of other leaders in the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America came as a distinct surprise.

Dr. Sam Atkinson, business agent of the Allied Amusements Association of Chicago, presided at the meeting and introduced Mr. Brady. He was asked if Mr. Brady would answer questions after he completed his address. The chairman conferred with Mr. Brady.

"I will answer any questions before I start speaking," said Mr. Brady. There was no response, and he continued: "Then I will anticipate the questions. I am here because I stand for cooperation. That is the purpose of this trip I am undertaking. I am not here to disrupt any organization. I am not here to abuse anyone. I am here for one purpose and that is to bring the serious-minded people of the industry together to realize the dangers ahead of them."

Schmidt of Indiana Opens Questioning

There was another pause. Then Gustave G. Schmidt, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Indiana, arose.

"I was one of the delegates called to New York for the purpose of bringing about an association," he said. "I was called by Sydney Cohen to serve on a committee which I understood was to meet with the producers themselves to bring about a better understanding. With one or two exceptions, the producers were absent and sent representatives. The result of the conference was disappointing. I was told that any costs met by the state organization in fighting censorship, blue laws and other evils were not this beside the point?" asked Mr. Brady.

"You wanted to be questioned first and talk afterwards," interjected Sydney Cohen.

"You know my opinion on this entire matter," returned Mr. Brady.

"I know your individual opinion, but I want the opinion of the National Association," replied Cohen.

Discusses Financing of Legislative Work

"I was told," continued Mr. Schmidt, "that the money legitimately expended in combating legislation would be met by the producers."

"I have no knowledge of that promise," said Mr. Brady.

"It was made by Gabriel Hess," interjected Mr. Cohen.

"I knew nothing of it," returned Mr. Brady.

"We have a big fight in Indiana," resumed Mr. Cohen. "We raised a large amount of money. Then we got in touch with the national association and asked them to send help quick, as we would only have twenty-four hours notice when the censorship bill was called up for hearing. Information was sent back to a man ostracized from our organization that we would receive $1,000.

"We have 600 theatres in Indiana. There are at least ten large producers. They are going to give us 20 cents per house for the purpose of this trip."

Contract Proposition Receives Consideration

"You were present when the uniform contract was discussed," resumed Mr. Schmidt. "We spent two days on that matter with counsels of the various film companies. We bargained upon all of the points. We understood that we were to receive the contracts within a short time. We also were given to understand that advance deposits were to be done away with." Mr. Brady, "I was present when a joint committee appointed by the producer on the business of the theatre entered the question, which continued several minutes, concluding with Sydney S. Cohen exclaiming: "Those committees agreed to cooperate on censorship, blue laws and all other unfriendly legislation. Now why is it necessary for you to make a trip throughout the United States preaching organization and harmony? Answer that and I will ask you some more!"

Atkinson Suggests Executive Session

Dr. Atkinson interposed at this point by calling attention to everyone present that in the audience were people representing the business of theatre and distributors who were not interested in the internal problems of the industry.

"My opinion is that we should not wash any dirty linen in public," he said. "I suggest that we have Mr. Brady deliver his address, which is of interest to the general public, and then go into executive session and talk these matters over afterwards.

Mr. Brady consented and his questions raised no objection.

Sydney S. Cohen Will Tour Nation With Senator Walker

"Then I will open my talk by answering the question which was put to me," said Mr. Brady.

"There should be some system whereby this industry could act as one unit. I represent an industry of other industries don't attack each other in the trade papers.

"I must have a united front. It is absolutely essential. I am not pleading that the one organization should be the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, but recommending an association for self-protection."

"I say right now that the National Association, Industry is facing Many Dangers Now

A division between the whiskey and the beer and wine forces brought prohibition. Don't let that happen to us. I resent the reference of our friend to the millionaire producers. They are our staff and you should not oppose them.

"I say to Mannheimer that this kind of committee did not consider the interests of the industry. We are facing dangers that you all know about—censorship and taxation. You know of Secretary of the Treasury House of Representatives is under consideration for doubling the rental tax and the admission tax. The Associated Manufacturers have asked for conference and have advocated doubling your tax.

"Blue Sunday! We must prepare for it, although it has been laughed out of court," said Mr. Cohen. "You must be organized and prepared.

"Tarf is important. You wouldn't want to see this country flooded with foreign productions. You wouldn't want the excise tax.

"But, gentlemen, you are looked upon as the next crowd to trim."

the people in this business throughout the country.

Brady Says Chicago Address Is Model

"Surely there is no harm in William Brady or Jimmy Walker going around the country to warn the industry of these dangers.

But I am not asking you or your association. I won't mention your name again. I have given you the model of the speech I will deliver in every town in this country. Is there anything wrong about that?

I wish to have with us this afternoon a very capable speaker and I am going to ask my good friend, Senator Jimmy Walker, a man for whom I have the greatest respect, to address this assemblage.

Senator Walker then took the floor and discussed at length legal censorship and the attitude of the exhibitors towards it.

"Censorship is unfair, impracticable, un-American and unworkable," he declared.

"The ordinance before the city council of Chicago at the present time is a glaring example of the danger it holds.

"The American exhibitor is opposed to censorship and blue laws, but he is willing to lose one dollar in order to save one dollar in the country. The theatre owners of America have brought about the finest organization I have ever had the privilege of seeing.

Walker Says Exhibitor Owns Picture Screen

"The exhibitor is a quasi-public servant. The screen and the responsibility of that screen comes back to him every day. It is he that takes the brunt of public criticism. When a producer tells a story or a film, it is the exhibitor, not the producer, who becomes the target.

"And yet the exhibitor remains silent for the good of the business. He does not carry his troubles to the public. If that meeting in New York had produced the same results, it was capable of, it would be unnecessary for anyone to go through the country to combat censorship or blue laws.

"It is useless for Mr. Brady to advocate one big organization in the motion picture industry until there is a house cleaning in the ranks of the organization represented by him.

"When the motion picture theatre owners from all parts of the country went to New York in an effort to adjust differences, it was the time to advocate one big organization. But now the exhibitor has his back against the wall. He will not have one big organization while it is subjected to advance deposits and the present forms of contract.

"Unless there is genuine cooperation there cannot be one organization. Censorship and blue laws must be defeated, but the theatre patron will do that. That will not make a happy family.

Brady's Testimony in Council Is Reviewed

"I want a man who when he EXISTS he is not an exhibitor present who agreed with you, but not one raised his voice in protest. They didn't want to hurt our case. Don't talk about one organization until you talk of an organized, some with one heart, with one mind, and predicated on honest and fair principles.

"We're with you on censorship and blue laws and any other legislation which threatens our industry. But we insist on one organization being good in our family affairs. If there isn't honesty, principle, fairness, there can't be one organization. There cannot be one organization without equity. If the exhibitors have lacked anything in cooperating, point it out and it will be cured fairly.

"Before this meeting adjourns, I said Mr. Brady, rising. "I want to make public admission of a mistake." If I have ever made any mistakes, I am sorry for them. They have been made in the interests of the industry, the industry which we have to defend our lives and answer questions. Of course, if you cannot remain we will proceed. I want the film men of Chicago and all of the United States and the governing bodies of the country to know what is going on.

Mr. Brady glanced at his watch and retired.

Milwaukee Exhbitors Ask Recall of Brady

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

MILWAUKEE, WIS., Feb. 8.—A resolution to the effect that William A. Brady's tour, which was announced as a crusade against censorship, was in reality a move of Wall Street to gain control of the motion picture industry, was passed on the evening of Mr. Brady's arrival here by the local exhibitor's organization. Mr. Brady was called upon to discontinue his campaign.

Success of Mr. Brady's movement would mean practical destruction of the business, it was declared, by Mr. Brady. Mr. Brady was characterized as the "cat's paw of a financial ring."

"Blue Laws Laughed to Death"

Brady Declares at Milwaukee

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

MILWAUKEE, WIS., Feb. 8.—"The blue laws have been laughed to death," declared William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, in a luncheon given in his honor at the Plankinton Hotel here last Saturday by Milwaukee and other Wisconsin film men.

"Such men as Bishop Manning, the press, the public, representatives of the church, citizens' unions and other organizations have attended to them," Mr. Brady announced "those fanatics who profiteer on morality" and made a few pertinent remarks about Dr. Crafts, leader of the blue law agitation.

"I have never dodged an issue yet and I won't now," announced Mr. Brady. "I am going to remain in the battle.

"People not in the film business were requested to leave the hall and adjournment was taken ten minutes to give those outside the trade an opportunity to leave.

Mr. S. Cohen, president of the M. P. T. O. A., took the floor when the executive session was opened ten minutes later.

"I want to discuss the effort toward cooperation in the National Film Council," he said. "Gabriel Hess requested a joint meeting on censorship and I told him I was a member of the council. He wanted to know how they were operating all parts of the United States to New York. I suggested that they also take up the advance deposit and uniform contract and regulations at the same time and it was agreed.

"The joint committees decided definitely on the uniform contract question. Counsel for all of the producers were there. It was also agreed to eliminate advance deposits and establish a credit bureau through which men who paid their bills could get service. We're not in a game any longer. We're in a business. The producers urged that the entire trade be made on doing away with advance deposits on account of the present financial conditions.

Cohen Tells of His Message From Elliott

"I am good enough to remain, Mr. Brady," said Sydney S. Cohen, rising to his feet. "We would like to have you here to defend your friends and answer questions. Of course, if you cannot remain we will proceed. I want the film men of Chicago and all of the United States and the governing bodies of the country to know what is going on.

Mr. Brady glanced at his watch and retired.

A sub-committee was appointed to put this into writing early in January. A meeting was arranged for January 12. The day before, H. Elliott called me by telephone and said it was impossible to hold the meeting as members of the committee had more important work. I asked him to put that in writing for my records. He replied, 'I won't. Take it for what it is worth.'

"The joint legislative committee agreed on a fifty-fifty basis of meeting all legitimate expenses in fighting censorship and other legislation in the various states.

"I am told, Bill, that you made the statement at a dinner given you yesterday that if it hadn't been for petty politics $5,000,000 could have been raised for the Hoover fund," he continued. "Did you say that, Brady? It's true. Petty politics were introduced and Bill Brady died."

Brady interrupted and explained at length his version of the Hoover drive in New York City; a question as to whether Charles O'Reilly or Adam Brandt was to be appointed to take charge, and finally the naming of Samuel Rothaefel as a compromise. The politics matter, but apparently of great interest to Mr. Brady and Mr.
Cohen and others from New York, seemed to become more complex as the explanations lengthened. It was apparent that the feeling existed, and this feeling had interfered with the results obtained. They were many "You did's" and "You didn't's."

Baltimore Incident
Is Told by Cohen

Mr. Cohen then passed to the recent incident at Baltimore.

"Tommy Goldman advises me that after the meeting you looked him up and said: 'Tommy, you misunderstand me.' I am against the M. P. T. O. A.," he said, addressing Mr. Brady.

"I didn't say that," returned Mr. Brady.

"There is no reason why I should say anything like that. I urged several exhibitors to join the N. A. M. P. I. There is no reason why Mr. Goldberg couldn't retain his membership in the M. P. T. O. A. and still be a member of the N. A. M. P. I."

"Just to set you right," said Cohen, "I want to explain the New York situation. Every exhibitor in the New York Chamber of Commerce belongs to the state organization and to the M. P. T. O. A."

"How many theatres are affiliated with your organization?" asked Mr. Brady.

"Between 2,000 and 5,000," said Mr. Cohen.

"And how many are there in the United States?"

"About 15,000 giving daily performances and about 3,000 semi-weekly," replied Mr. Cohen, and continued:

"Senator Walker and myself had a talk with Mr. Selsnick, the producer, recently and he told me they had voted you $25,000 salary. He also stated that he was against the uniform contract and the abolishing of advance deposits."

Report Brady Is Out to Get Sydney Cohen

"Why, Bill, men in your organization are standing on the street corners in New York saying that I am going to be 'framed'—that they are going to get me. You can go back and tell them that I will give them a receipt for all they give me."

"Why, Bill, one of the trade papers called me up and said you were starting on a trip to get me and break up my organization. They are starting stories about me. There is one about my being implicated in opium smuggling in England. I was never in England in my life."

"We don't want to take anything from you. We are organized for protection, not profit."

"Now listen, Cohen, you can't expect the uniform contract in a minute," replied Mr. Brady. "If, as you say, all the terms were agreed upon, I give you my word—and I have never broken it yet—that the promise will be carried out and I will resign as president of the National Association."

"I'd like to have you forget your trip and come back to New York with me now and fix up that uniform contract," responded Mr. Cohen.

The questioning then shifted to the particulars of Mr. Brady's trip. He said it had been arranged in New York and he had been invited to several cities to speak on censorship.

Mr. Bingham arose to read a letter, purporting to have been sent from Frederick H. Elliott to Frank Rembusch of Indiana asking Rembusch to arrange to have Mr. Brady invited to Indiana.

"Please go back to Mr. Elliott and tell him to write to the president of our exhibitors' state organization, Mr. Schmidt, or to myself as regional director," said Mr. Bingham.

Questions Motive of N. A. M. P. I. Activity

"Are you out to get members for the exhibitors' branch of the N. A. M. P. I.?" Mr. Cohen asked, following with a statement: "If your purpose has been honest, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America would have been glad to arrange meetings for you in every state."

"Another thing," he continued, "did you tell the Chicago censorship commission that the National Association is ready to prosecute and send to jail any exhibitor showing an immoral film? Well, I'll tell you, Mr. Cohen, that producers are ready to prosecute and send to jail the producer of any immoral film."

"The thing is, Brady, that you and I ought to keep out of local legislative fights. We don't know how to talk and we only do harm. Stay in your own state."

Senator James J. Walker then took the floor to express his opinion on the matter. He reviewed the story of the Widow Dodge, for whom the M. P. T. O. A. is supposed to be financing a university and a theatre.

"You know that an organization which reaches out and projects the weakest member of its organization ought to be sustained," he said. "Bill will join one organization. So say I, and I will tell you why you ought to join the M. P. T. O. A. They have started an offensive to cure the evils of the theatre owner's business."

"Does the N. A. M. P. I. advocate protection from advance deposits? Does the M. P. T. O. A. want uniform contracts? If they want one big organization, what are they going to give you in place of the organization you have? I'm for unity and we must do the same if they would only do something."

Says Brady Is Best Evidence of Producer

"I have yet to hear when a producer wanted anything from an exhibitor except his money. Let's not have a misunderstanding. If you are going to join an association, see what benefit it will do you."

"We don't want to cripple the producers. But until they stop demanding more salary and until they stop squeezing the little fellow, we have got an evil to fight. I warn you, if you let your organization be disrupted you will regret it."

"Why is Brady on this trip? I'll tell you why. It is because he is the best evidence that bunch has got to offer. He is the only one who can stand the sunlight. Bill doesn't know what it's all about. He's being used."

"I'm for Bill. I like him and I like the things he likes. But he's onlywindow dressing. I'm in for something solid."

"Closing, I want to say: Boys, if there is some other place you can get better protection than from the M. P. T. O. A. go to it!"

Samuel J. Berman called for order as Senator Walker completed his talk and people started to leave, thinking the meeting was over.

"I want to say that I like Bill Brady and I've fought for him in the past and am ready to fight him in the future," he shouted. "Bill's all right, but he is in damned bad company."

Mannheimer Discusses
Hoover Drive in New York

The discussion became general again. John Mannheimer of New York taking the floor to discuss the Hoover drive in New York again. William Brandt as being "too fond of having medals pinned on him," and declared that he, not Brandt, is the real head of the New York Chamber of Commerce.

Joseph Hopo, president of the Illinois Exhibitors' Alliance, and Dr. Atkinson were among others who spoke. The meeting was then adjourned.

Mr. Brady climbed to the platform and held up his hands for silence.

"Every word spoken here today proves we need cooperation," he exclaimed. "They have pleaded my case. I rest it."

Brady Praises Cohen for Aid
In Fight on Censorship Laws

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., Feb. 8.—William A. Brady, president of the N. A. M. P. I., in an address to the local film club at Hotel Radisson here last night, praised Sydney S. Cohen and other officers of the M. P. T. O. A. for their assistance in fighting censorship.

"In the past five years of our existence, not a single state has enacted a censorship bill," he said in part, "I want at this time to give credit to the exhibitors for their splendid cooperation in many instances. In the New York fight, I desire to pay special tribute to my good friends, Sydney Cohen, Sam Burman, Charles O'Reilly, and to that great friend of the motion picture industry, Senator James Walker of New York."

He said the whole object of his trip is to urge cooperation and coordination among every branch of the industry and added "I am not here as has been charged to break up any organization or to interfere in any of your local or state problems."
Possibility of New Chicago Censorship Law Is Remote

Observers Predict Ordinance Drafted by Hurley Either Will Die in Committee or Will Be Modified to a Great Extent

That the possibility of the proposed new censorship ordinance becoming a law in Chicago is a remote one became apparent at the second hearing on the matter conducted by the legislative committee of the city council, February 19.

The few remaining shreds of camouflage were torn off the measure. It became apparent that the proposed measure would accomplish no constructive results and that its primary effect would be to strip Chief of Police Fitzmorris of his authority over pictures.

Mayor Thompson Expected to Veto Measure.

Observers, who have followed closely the arguments for and against the ordinance, predict that the ordinance will either die in committee or be greatly modified before it reaches the council floor. The chance of the council's passing it in modified form is slight.

when one or two people in the audience suggested that it was getting late and nothing was being accomplished.

One of the legislative committee arose to ask Chairman Olson to shut off the questioning. He had not concluded his sentence when Mr. Harry shouted:

"No, you don't," he said, "I have worked on this two years and I intend to question these witnesses.

"And I'll tell you," retorted Chairman Olson flushing, "that this hearing is being conducted by the legislative committee and every member of that committee has a right to speak or make a suggestion, and I intend to give members of the committee the first chance to speak."

Exhibitors Approve Fitzmorris

Dr. Sam Atkinson, business manager of the Allied Amusements Association, opened the meeting for opponents of the new ordinance by taking up the ordinance section by section and expressing his objections.

He pointed out the addition made to the definition of what should be barred from pictures invested unlimited authority in the censors and under it almost any type of picture could be arbitrarily barred.

The actual cost of the new system is misleading, he said, as addition to the $15,000 per year in salaries provided, the existing machinery must be maintained and added to. In addition, the following secretaries and other assistants provided the censors.

On behalf of the exhibitors of Chicago, he declared that the present censorship under Chief Fitzmorris is satisfactory in every way, both to the theatre owners and their patrons.

Brady asks "Square Deal"

William A. Brady opened and closed his address with the statement: "All we want is a square deal."

The commission to consider the youth of the motion picture industry; the rapid strides it had made in the last few years, and give it a chance to develop without being hampered by men who did not understand the motion picture or the drama.

Rapidly, he sketched the tremendous influence of American motion pictures in all parts of the world; their part in the winning of the war, and their recent achievement in raising $2,500,000 for the Hoover fund, and briefly called attention to the millions invested in the business.

one and rejected in another on the "whims" of political appointees, closing with a brief outline of the many great pictures which would be harmed from Chicago under the proposed act.

Recalled to the Stand

As Mr. Brady left the stand, proponents of the new censorship asked to question him, and he recited a cross fire which continued for an hour and a half. Dr. W. W. Burgess, representing the Illinois Vigilance Association, was one of those present who attempted to stop the questioning of Mr. Brady by the censorship commission on account of the time it was wasting.

"Can't you stop this, Mr. Chairman?" he asked when he gained the floor.

"I have tried to stop it for an hour and can't," said Chairman Olson.

"You can't bar us from the floor," explained Mr. Hurley, half rising from the chair; "I don't intend to be stopped.

Another clash followed, but the questioning continued, bringing laughs, cheers and rapping on the table from the chair.

Senator Couch曼, representing the M. P. F. O. A., was called from his seat to speak when it was learned that he was present. He delivered an interesting and convincing address which was received as the high light of the session, doubtless greatly advancing the industry's cause.

"We all seem to agree on the same thing," he said. "We want clean pictures, good pictures. The only difference of opinion seems to be the method of obtaining them. The motives of the men proposing this ordinance should not be questioned.

"The principal danger of this ordinance seems to me to be that passing upon a picture is to depend upon the whims of the people appointed to two people view the same thing alike."

"I am here representing the exhibitors. They are not a fly-by-night class of men. The great number are men of families; clean, capable business men; fathers who are just as zealous of guarding their children as any other man."

"It seems to me that the police power is sufficient. Any harm in a picture or a poster can be cured by an appeal to the constituted authorities. But submitting property worth $100,000 to the whims of three men amounts to practically irresponsible action."

"One of the greatest dangers of the ordinance is that these men have the final say. There can be no appeal. It would give them more power than is exercised on any judicial office in the American plan of government. A murderer is entitled to an appeal even after twelve of his peers have found him guilty. A man with $1,000 property interest can carry his case to the supreme court. But this ordinance says that a man who saw a film worth $100,000 must abide by the decision of three men, and from that decision no appeal can be taken."

Associate of Finkelstein and Ruben Declares That Impartial Investigation of Company’s Affairs Will Be Welcomed

(Minneapolis, Minn., Feb. 8.—A resolution has been introduced in the Minnesota house of representatives asking that an investigation be made of charges that there is a monopoly in the motion picture theatre business here controlled by three men.

No names were specified in the resolution. However, William Hamm, associate of Finkelstein & Ruben, declares that undoubtedly it was “aimed at Messrs. Finkelstein and Ruben and myself.” In a statement Mr. Hamm says:

Investigation Heartily Welcomed, Says Hamm

“The resolution introduced by Mr. Levi, as to the moving picture industry and theatrical industries in the Twin Cities and in Duluth is not a surprise to us. For several weeks the information has been pouring into us intermittently that such a resolution would be introduced.

“We have only one answer and that is that we heartily welcome the introduction of such a resolution: that it would give us an opportunity to convince the public of the cities that there was no foundation for the charges made in the same, but that if the facts were brought out, as we propose they shall be, we have no fear of public opinion in this case.

Only One Result Possible

“The resolution, without mentioning any names, was undoubtedly aimed at Messrs. Finkelstein and Ruben and myself. This conclusion must be drawn from the fact that we are the only three people who are jointly interested in a number of these theatrical enterprises.

“If this investigation is an impartial one made with an honest effort to arrive at the facts, and is not a foreclosed verdict by a packed jury, there can be but one result and that is that the theatregoing public will be convinced that far from being a monopoly, which is gouging the public, the interests which are represented in this statement by myself have endeavored to give the public of the cities the highest class of entertainment at the very lowest possible price. It is only because of the organization and the investment of capital that this has been possible.

Admission Prices Lower

“Repeatedly, when special pictures have come in and have been shown by other houses, the price has been tripled and quadrupled, but it has been our policy and will be our policy, on the contrary, to give to the public the same class of service at the regular price of admission and far below the prices which are charged in other cities for the same class of service. Anybody who cares to investigate what is being done in other cities of the same size, will find that this statement is based on actual facts.

“There are, in the city of Minneapolis, 72 amusement houses, of which we operate 15, including vaudeville and stock houses, and in St. Paul there are 41 amusement houses, of which we operate 15, including vaudeville and burlesque. This ought to prove to the public that a ‘monopoly’ is hardly the proper term.

Want Only Truth Given

“In conclusion, I repeat that we welcome an honest investigation. We do not want to impose upon the public our own publicity medium, but we emphatically state now, that we shall not hesitate to take advantage of the medium of publicity which the screens afford us, to give the facts to the public, if they are not brought out otherwise.”

M. P. T. O. Presents
House to Mrs. Dodge Griffith’s “Way Down East” Donated As Opening Attraction

(Morrisville, Vermont, Feb. 8.—Mrs. Pauline K. Dodge, who formerly operated the Bijou theatre which was taken over by Alfred S. Black, opened the Town Hall for motion pictures on February 5.

The theatre was entirely equipped by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. The opening attraction, “Way Down East,” was donated by David Wark Griffith, who also sent a special operator, piano player and publicity man from New York. T. M. Salyers represented the M. P. T. O.

Salyers was in Morrisville for two weeks aiding in moving equipment from the Bijou and otherwise preparing for opening. Letters announcing the opening of the new house were sent to every resident here by the exhibitors organization.

The selectmen of the town have given Mrs. Dodge exclusive license for showing pictures here. The house was packed at both performances on Saturday. All proceeds went to Mrs. Dodge.
Harry Cohen enjoys luxury of suite of Ex-Emperor at $6 per Error on part of Hotel Clerk gives Metro official $60 service for almost nothing

(From staff correspondent)

NEW YORK, Feb. 8.—Harry Cohen, manager of Metro's foreign department, is back from Europe with a story of how he paid $6 a day for the use of the ex-Emperor's suite in a Berlin hotel.

Arriving in Berlin late at night he taxied to an Under den Linden hotel only to learn that every room was occupied and that he could get no accommodations.

Harry Cohen, manager Metro's foreign department, and Mrs. Cohen, who recently returned from a ten weeks' tour of Europe, where he studied conditions affecting the interests of his firm.

"Only the former Emperor's suite is available," the clerk told him.

The Metro official had visions of a bill with staggering total. "How much?" he demanded.

"Four hundred marks a day."

"At such a figure (about $6 at current exchange rates) the proposition didn't ring true to him. Mr. Cohen thought the clerk was concealing a joker. He demanded to see the suite.

A few moments later he was being shown a series of rooms so elaborate in their furnishings that "they looked more like forty motion picture sets," Mr. Cohen says. He promptly snapped up the bargain.

Until he was ready to leave he reveled in luxury. "Then the shock came. A garrulous attendant innocently mentioned that the rate for the suite was 4,000 marks a day. Not $6, but $60! Mr. Cohen went to the desk with his information.

"The attendant is right," the clerk said. "A mistake was made but since it is ours we'll have to suffer the consequences. Your rate is 400 marks."

Now Mr. Cohen thinks that he holds something of a record for getting value for his money.

Plans submitted for Eighteen Story Film Building in St. Louis

(From staff correspondent)

ST. LOUIS, MO., Feb. 8.—Plans for the erection of an 18-story building on Olive street at Lindell cutoff for exchanges have been submitted to the St. Louis Board of Trade. The plans are in the hands of W. H. Gruen Company, architects and municipal engineers. It was indicated that if 18 stories proved insufficient, two additional stories would be provided.

Mr. Gruen said he had conferred with the city regarding the amending of the zoning laws to permit the erection. The building would resemble the New York Times building. It will be triangular in shape and each floor will contain from 5,000 to 6,000 square feet of space.

Serious contemplation is being afforded the new proposal by the local exchange men. Members of the Film Board of Trade were told that the ground for the proposed structure could be purchased for $800 a foot.

Directors commence Erection of building

(From staff correspondent)

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 9.—The Motion Picture Directors Association will commence construction this month of its $150,000 building in Highland avenue near Hollywood boulevard. The architecture will be Latin. The structure will be three-stories high. Those in charge of the erection of the building are Reginald Barker, Frank Lloyd, William D. Taylor, Joseph De Grasse, Roy Clements, Wallace Worsley and Murdoch J. MacQuarrie.

Fischer back in U. S.

NEW YORK, Feb. 8.—A. H. Fischer of A. H. Fischer Features, Inc., and owner of the Fischer studios at New Rochelle, is back from Europe after a month's absence.

Federated members convene at Frisco

Sem-Annual Meeting at Unit will be in session for three days.

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., Feb. 8.—Federated exchange officials opened their three-day meeting here today, with Federated exchange men from different parts of the country in attendance. Officials from the East and Middle West arrived on a special train from Chicago, the assembling point, Joseph L. Friedman, president; Sam Grand, treasurer; Harry Charnas, Walter Green and Bobby North were in the party. After the meeting those in attendance will motor to Los Angeles to tour the studios there.

Meet at Dyron Springs

Temporary headquarters are at the Hotel St. Francis. The convention is being held at Dyron Hot Springs, forty miles out of Frisco.

On February 11, the party will return to San Francisco and will leave on February 13 for Los Angeles, arriving in Los Angeles on the 14, where the headquarters will be at the Alexandria hotel for three days. The exchange men make extensive tours of Hollywood and Culver City studios.

Plan Banquet at Tait's

George M. Mann, Marion H. Kohn and D. J. Charkin of the Federated Film distributors have charge of all arrangements and entertainments for the members, which will consist of a banquet at Tait's on the beach, San Francisco, and a High Jinks at the St. Francis hotel.

The following are officers and franchise holders of the Federated: J. L. Friedman, of Chicago, president; J. E. Pearce, New Orleans, vice president; D. J. Charkin, San Francisco, secretary; S. V. Grant, Boston, treasurer; Warner Brothers, New York City; Empire State Film Co., Buffalo; Federated Film Exchange; Fox Masterpiece Film Attractions, Philadelphia; Quality Film Service, Pittsburgh; Standard Film Service Co., Cleveland, Detroit, Cincinnati; Celebrated Players Film Corporation, Chicago; Merritt Film Corporation, Minneapolis; Mid-West Distributing Co., Milwaukee; Crescent Film Co., Kansas City; United Film Service, St. Louis; Supreme Photoplays Co., Denver; Federated Film Exchange, Baltimore; Specialty Film Co., Dallas; Greater Productions, Omaha; Consolidated Film Corporation, Los Angeles and San Francisco.

Chaplin denies rumor of a new affiliation

Charles Chaplin has sent the following wire to Hiram Abrams, president of United Artists:

"Newspaper reports or rumors regarding any business affiliations or transactions between myself and Goldwyn entirely unfounded. On my behalf please contradict such unqualified reports."

The SPOKANE (Wash.) REVIEW says

The question is not so much whether censorship is needed as who is fit to do the censoring. Certainly not the sort of person who is likely to be appointed to a state board at a $10 per diem rate. Whatever the sins of the movie producers, they ought not to be subjected to as many standards as there are states, with all the implied possibilities of political animus, sectional prejudice and individual bigotry.
Blue Law and Censorship Fight Raging in Missouri

Reformers Declare That Shocking Styles Worn by the Women Are Due Directly to the "Scandalous Scenes" in Films

(Jefferson City, MO, Feb. 8.—The fight in the Missouri state legislature for the enactment of measures compelling Sunday closing of theatres and a rigid censorship of films is on full-blast. Sponsors of their movement in their pleas before the house committee on criminal jurisprudence declared that the shocking styles worn by the women in all the cities in Missouri were directly due to the "scandalous scenes" in films which have been shown in various towns despite the fact that of the last thirty-six productions, nineteen were tabooed by the Pennsylvania board of censorship.

Two Men and One Woman on Board

Lansing F. Smith, president of the Committee of Fifty; the Rev. Howard Billman, secretary; E. V. P. Schneiderhahn, chairman of the legislative committee, and George Schuler of the Federation of Catholic Societies, formed the St. Louis delegation.

As outlined, the censorship board will consist of two men and a woman, each drawing salaries of $3,000 a year. Before any film can be exhibited in the state it must be approved by the board. If the producer is not satisfied with the decision of the board member who reviews a production, he has the right of appeal to the entire membership. Should the picture suit fail to pass the censorship, the producer can, as a last resort, appeal to the circuit court.

The censorship bill would impose a charge of $2 for each 1,200 feet, and $2 for each additional 1,200 feet reviewed, with a fee of 25 cents for each slide.

Many prominent ministers of various denominations have publicly voiced from their pulpits their antagonism to the proposed movement in Missouri. A movement is on foot in St. Louis to organize a body of ministers of Catholic, Protestant and Jewish faiths to fight the proponents of the censorship and blue Sunday laws.

Churches Oppose Liberal Censorship

(Baltimore, MD, Feb. 8.—The Baltimore Federation of Churches and the Women's Civic League have written to Governor Ritchie protesting against any movement to permit censorship to become more liberal. The two organizations claim to represent more than 50,000 persons.

Regulatory Bill Up in Oklahoma

(OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA., Feb. 8.—E. P. Hill has introduced in the senate a bill providing for state censorship. Provision is made for a board of three members appointed by the governor.

Ministers Urge Barring Sex Films

(Galveston, Tex., Feb. 8.—Creation of a board of censorship and barring of all pictures in which the sex theme is used "to an extent deemed vulgar or immoral" are advocated by the Galveston Ministerial Alliance.

City Commission Considers Measure

(Owosso, Mich., Feb. 8.—The city commission is considering an ordinance which would prohibit the exhibition of crime films in the motion picture theatres here.

Council Will Revive Riverside Censorship

(Riverside, Calif., Feb. 8.—City council here has reached a decision to revive the censorship board. Members of the board receive as compensation passes to all theatres.

Hodkinson in L. A. At Dial Conference

(Los Angeles, Feb. 8.—W. W. Hodkinson has arrived in Los Angeles, where he will confer with Director T. Hayes Hunter and Otto Bollman, president of the Dial Film Company, which is converting Irving Bachelors's novel, "The Light in the Clearing," into film form.

Rocky Mountain Club Elects H. E. Huffman President for Year

(Denver, Colo., Feb. 8.—H. E. Huffman was elected president of the Rocky Mountain Screen Club at its recent annual election. Other officers chosen were:

W. E. Scott, first vice-president.
Charles Gillen, secretary-treasurer.
M. C. Gearhart, Fort Collins, vice-president.
F. Fairchild, Boulder, vice-president.
F. R. Kelly, Salida, vice-president.
J. T. Lynch, Laramie, Wyo., first vice-president.

Ray Picture Without Subtitles Is Signal Achievement in Films

No accomplishment in recent production equals in potentialities the successful making of Charles Ray's First National attraction, "The Old Swimmin' Hole," without use of subtitles or substitutes therefor. The complete lucidity of the story as pictured is convincing proof that narration exclusively by means of pictures is entirely practicable.

Further differentiation between the screen and all other mediums of expression, universal appeal and interpretation, greater freedom in the selection of subject matter for production, intensified dramatic realism and a new independence for the art form are among the benefits that may be expected to follow general adoption of the method.

In the Ray picturization of James Whitcomb Riley's poem, the cast of characters and the names of director, etc., are displayed upon a schoolboy's slate. A boy writing in his diary in the picture proper marks the only descent to the word form and this in no sense a substitute for subtitles. The triumph over what has been widely regarded as an insurmountable is genuine, an achievement of signal significance to the industry and to the world of art.
Public Censorship Hearing Is Called at Behest of Crafts
For Feb. 28, at Washington

Representatives of the Film Industry, Civic Bodies and Churches Will Be Invited to Participate in Meeting

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 8.—A public hearing on censorship in the District of Columbia will be held by the board of commissioners on February 28.

The hearing was called at the request of Dr. Wilbur Crafts of the International Reform Bureau, following the hearing held some time ago at which the subject was presented but not fully discussed.

Will Welcome Suggestions

Representatives of the motion picture industry, civic organizations and the churches will be invited to attend the hearing and make suggestions as to the best method of regulation.

"While most films exhibited in Washington have passed some sort of censorship, this has not been rigid enough to prevent the exhibition of some very objectionable films," the board of commissioners announced in calling the hearing. "In order to afford an opportunity for a full and free discussion of this matter, both on the part of those engaged in the motion picture industry and those representing the citizenship of Washington, the commissioners have decided to hold a public hearing.

Think Regulation Needed

"The commissioners believe there is need of some further regulation or censorship of motion pictures exhibited in the District of Columbia. Under an act of Congress approved March 1, 1901, the commissioners are authorized to terminate the license of any theatre or other place of amusement whenever it shall appear to them that, after due notice, the person holding such license shall have failed to comply with such regulations as may be prescribed by the commissioners for the public decency.

Can Extend Regulations

"While no specific regulations governing exhibitions of motion picture films have been made, there are regulations prohibiting other performances offensive to public decency.

"The commissioners have no doubt that they have power to extend these regulations to govern the exhibition of films which violate decency. They have no desire to do anything that will work an undue hardship on those engaged in the motion picture industry, but they feel their responsibility to the people of Washington to see that what is shown on the screens does not violate the regulations which they have adopted."

Congress Won't Send A Man to Mars Nor Adopt Any Blue Laws
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 8.—Denouncing efforts of reformers to obtain passage of blue law legislation in various parts of the country, the Rev. Henry Russell Talbot, canon residentiary of the Washington Episcopal Cathedral here, declares:

"I have as much use for blue laws as I have for a pig in a poke. However, there seems to be a great deal more agitation than necessary about such laws. There is no more danger of them being passed than there is of congress commissioning a man to make a trip to Mars."

"We hear a great deal of stringent laws in Washington, such as one to prohibit the use of tobacco. Even if they were enacted, they would be dead letters, because the people would not be in back of them."

Hildinger, Reade and Hirshfield to Erect
Big Trenton Theatre

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

TRENTON, N. J., Feb. 8.—A $500,000 cinema palace to seat 3,000 persons is to be erected in East State street, between Montgomery and Stockton streets. Razing of the building now on the site will begin on May 1.

Promoting the project are Charles C. Hildinger of Hildinger Amusement Enterprises; Walter Reade of the Trent and Capitol theatres, and Milton Hirshfield of the State Street theatre.

The house is known as the Temple of the Motion Picture. Thomas W. Lamb of New York is the architect.

Charge Violation of Fire Prevention Law

(From a Staff Correspondent)

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., Feb. 8.—Fred B. Leonard, president of Lenwood Amusement Company, operator of Lenwood and Rialto theatres, and Roland Adkins, manager of Union Traction Company's freight depot, have been charged with violation of the fire prevention ordinance. The latter is charged with storage of films in the depot office and Leonard is charged with storage of 17,000 feet of film behind a board between the operating booth and the wall of the theatre.

Civic Society Conducts Show to Keep Children
"From Chasing Around"
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

SIOUX CITY, IA., Feb. 8.—The Morning-side Planning Commission is operating a public picture show in the Paramount theatre for the purpose of keeping the children of that community "from chasing around at night" and for the "mental, moral and economic uplift" of the people of Morning-side.

Family and season tickets are sold. Ten cents admission is charged. Sponsors of the show declare that it is not intended to make a profit.

Productions shown at Morning-side also will be exhibited by the Planning Commission of Lees, the West junior high school and at Onawa. By circuit playing the pictures will be obtained at a lower cost.

Michigan City House Destroyed by Blaze

(Michigan City Herald)

MICHIGAN CITY, IND., Feb. 8.—The Garden theatre, the best in the city, was destroyed by fire last week at a loss of $100,000. The origin of the fire is undetermined. The theatre was sold a few days ago by Columbia State Theatre Company, of Chicago, to Abe and Jacob Wallerstein. The loss is said to be covered by insurance.

The seating capacity of the house was 1,500. Only a few persons were in the theatre at the time of the fire. No one was hurt.

Bill Would Bar Sale of S. R. O. Tickets

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

SALEM, ORE., Feb. 8.—A bill has been introduced in the house of representatives which would make it unlawful for any theatre or place of amusement to sell any ticket or charge any admission to any performance, play, lecture of other entertainment, including motion pictures, when the price of amusement has no seat left to accommodate the patron. The penalty for violation would be not less than $25, nor more than $250, or imprisonment not to exceed thirty days, or both.

Teachers to Review
Tourneur Production

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 8.—D. Walter Potts, superintendent of schools at East St. Louis, Ill., and censorship agitator, has called a meeting of the 101 teachers in his city to be held on February 12 to witness Maurice Tourneur's "The Last of the Mohicans" and an Associated Producers' publication.

The picture has been criticized locally for so-called gruesome scenes. C. D. Hill, St. Louis manager for A. P., will ask for unbiased opinions following the screening. The attitude which the East St. Louis board of education assumes in the fight for or against censorship will depend on the consensus of opinion.

The LOS ANGELES EXAMINER Says

No woman uses a certain brand of baking powder because the pure food experts recommend it. No man buys a collar because it bears any formal imprint of official approval. State or national approval of those things which provide entertainment are equally negative in their ultimate, however vexatious they may be in the immediate foreground.

Loew to Expand With Theatre at Davenport
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

DAVENPORT, I.A., Feb. 8.—Marcus Loew will build a combination picture and vaudeville theatre here this summer. It is expected that it will be located in Third street, west of Brady street. For the present Loew will put on entertainments at the Liberty theatre.

Surmises Blue Law Agitators May Have Placed Odor Bombs

Four South Side theatres in Chicago—the Jackson Park, Harper, Woodlawn and Metropolitan—were emptied Sunday night when odor bombs were placed in the houses.

B. E. Wheeler declared that he would not "be surprised to find that the perpetrators are some of the blue law agitators who want the movies closed on Sunday. You know it hurts those blues to see anybody happy."

One week ago Sunday, odor bomb attacks were made on three theatres on the North Side—the Newberry, Buckingham and Clermont.

Griffith Completing Another Big Picture; "Dream Street" Title
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEW YORK, Feb. 8.—D. W. Griffith, whose production, "Way Down East," is now having extended runs in the leading cities of the United States, is completing another big feature.

"Dream Street" is the title. It is a Burke Limehouse story, but it is said to have a distinct comedy relief. No announcement has been made as to its distribution.

Tyrone Power, Carrol Dempster, Ralph Graves and Porter Strong are prominent in the cast.

Similar Arrangements Prevail in Other Big Cities of the State—Petitions Signed for Presentation to Council
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

TRENTON, N. J., Feb. 8.—Exhibitors here are circulating petitions asking for Sunday motion picture shows. It is planned to have 50,000 signatures for presentation to the city commission.

The plan of the exhibitors, if they are successful in their movement, will be to turn over the net profit of such performances to charity. In this way the law prohibiting operation of a business on Sunday for private gain will not be violated.

Theatre men declare they will agree to any arrangement the city officials may make as to the manner in which the accounting shall be made to charitable institutions.

It is the contention of exhibitors that like arrangements prevail in other cities in New Jersey, and that Trenton is virtually the only large city in which the shows are closed on the Sabbath.

Should the movement not be successful the exhibitors declare no effort will be made to open their houses on Sunday. Initial steps in the movement were taken at a recent conference of exhibitors, attended by the following:

Charles C. Hildinger, of Hildinger Amusement Enterprises; Walter Reade, of Trent and Capitol theatres; Milton Hirshfield, of State street theatre; Isaac Levine, of the Centre street theatre; Pierson (Pop) Huime, of the City Square theatre; John Bella, of the B. & B. theatre, and William J. Vernon, of the St. Regis and Broad street theatres.

What Exhibitors Are Saying About—EXHIBITORS HERALD

"Exhibitors Herald is a godsend to the small town exhibitor. In fact, I don't see how they get along without it and would bet dollars to doughnuts that if they took it for six months, they never would get along without it as long as they were in the picture business."—C. H. Thomas, manager, Community theatre, Galva, Ia.

"You are putting out a mighty good magazine and I get more pleasure and profit from it than from any of the other trade magazines."—Alvin S. Frank, manager, Jewel theatre, Lafayette, Colo.

"I am thankful to be a subscriber to Exhibitors Herald. Don't ever stop it coming as it is worth twice the subscription price to any exhibitor who reads it and stops to think."—B. L. Hubbard, manager, Hub's theatre, Bishop, Tex.

"Exhibitors Herald is a valuable motion picture magazine."—M. J. Cline, manager, Starland theatre, Aberdeen, Wash.
M. P. T. O. A. Behind Cohen In Controversy With Brady

Omaha Exhibitors Wire President of M. P. T. O. That They Object to Head of National Association Appearing There

(From Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, Feb. 8.—Organized exhibitors in several states have assured Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, absolute support in the organization’s controversy with the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. Mr. Cohen states:

Wires from organized exhibitors of Minnesota, Wisconsin and Michigan contain assurance of absolute support in the stand the M. P. T. O. A. has taken at Chicago. The letter denounces Brady’s speech before the Chicago Common council. Exhibitors of Omaha object to Brady appearing in their state. In the Michigan letter is this phrase: ‘Brady dare not come here. Believe he would be tarred and feathered after our campaign.’

Exchange Managers Protest Against Action

“National Association members have been deluged with telegrams from exchange managers protesting against telegrams been sent to exhibitors urging them to join the National Association. The Motion Picture Theatre Owners resent this absurd recruiting move on the part of Brady, et al., as a gratuitous insult to their organization and leaders. Presumably all state organizations will take appropriate action and you may look for a nation-wide wave of angry protest.

“A full report is being sent to all exhibitors of the country at which time the efforts of the National Association to disrupt the M. P. T. O. A. will be properly resented. The tactics of some members of the National Association are bound to strengthen and solidify the exhibitors everywhere.”

Says Statement Harmful

“Brady’s statement made before the Chicago common council that children under 16 should not be admitted to motion picture theatres is being freely quoted in the hostile press. This statement of Brady’s will work more harm as time goes on.

“Thinking members of the National Association believe that Brady’s immediate recall from his dismals mission is imperative in the interest of the entire industry.”

Warning Sent Exhibitors

According to a letter received by Cohen from the Michigan association, a special delivery letter has been sent to every exhibitor in the state. The letter warns theatre men to be on their guard against a concerted effort being made to disorganize exhibitors of Michigan.

Samuel Goldwyn Says

“Decrease in Actors’ Salaries Inevitable

(From Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, Feb. 8.—Samuel Goldwyn returned yesterday from the Coast. He expresses extreme interest in three phases of production, namely:

The lengthening of time element in production.

The inevitable drop in actors’ salaries.

The replacing of the spectacle with convincing and original stories with human characters.

Goldwyn, president declared that actors’ salaries had reached the top and now were on the decline. While this decrease would not affect the cost of production to any great extent, Mr. Goldwyn believes it will affect the quality of production. He says that under the present salaries production must be rushed.

In the future the story would be the spectacle instead of massive sets, the producer says.

Blackton and Kane Affiliation Formed

Producer Sails for Europe to Make Films Starring

Diana Manners

(From Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, Feb. 8.—J. Stuart Blackton, accompanied by his family and Felix Orman, literary editor, and Almon C. Whiting, art director, left here on the Aquatania Thursday for England, where Mr. Blackton will produce.

On the eve of sailing Mr. Orman was bound to representations from producers and daily press at a farewell dinner. Mr. Blackton, who was present, said that his first production would require six months to make.

The American end of his business would be handled by Arthur S. Kane, the producer added. He also stated that he retained a one-third interest in Vitagraph.

Blackton first will produce a series of productions featuring Diana Manners. Through his affiliation with Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation the latter will direct the distribution of the pictures in the United States and Canada.

Gore Heads First National Organization in Southwest
Fifty Prominent Arizona and California Expositers Attend Convention Held in Los Angeles—Lesser Is Elected Vice President

(From Staff Correspondent)

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 8.—More than fifty prominent Southern California and Arizona expositers attended the convention of Associated First National franchise holders of the southwest, held in Los Angeles last week. The gathering was called by General Manager David Bershon, of the Los Angeles Associated First National exchange, in order that the district organization might be completed. The following officers were elected:

MICHAEL GORE, Los Angeles, President.
SOL LESSER, Los Angeles, vice-president.
DAVE BERSHON, Los Angeles, secretary.
WALTER JENSEN, Pasadena, treasurer.

On the advisory board are M. Barnes, Barnes, Fillmore, Cal.; A. E. Johnson, Coliseum, Santa Barbara, Cal.; J. F. Borchet, Capitol, Calexico, Cal.; J. L. lizard, Royal, Los Angeles; J. S. Lustig, Starland, Los Angeles; J. Math Alvarado, Los Angeles; Glenn Harper, Apollo, Los Angeles.

The feature of the convention was a luncheon presided over by Lesser and attended by exhibitors, exhibitors, and producers. Lesser explained the effort being put forward by the First National executive committee to insure a fair medium and protection for the producer and the exhibitors, and his address was enthusiastically received.

Albert A. Kaufman, producer of Allen Holubar's "Man, Woman and Marriage"; Louis B. Mayer, president of the Anita Stewart and John M. Stahl productions; Pete Smith, Marshall Neilan's representative, and B. F. Fineman, vice-president of Katherine MacDonnell Pictures Corporation, then addressed the meeting.

Stars Send Messages
The salient points advanced were that the producer and the exhibitor are partners. The producer is absolutely dependent upon the exhibitor for success. The motion picture industry can never retrograde so long as an organization of the type of Associated First National, with the door always open to artistic independent effort, is in existence.

Mr. Lesser read telegrams of good will from Anita Stewart, Marshall Neilan and Katherine Macdonald. He then announced that to F. L. Titus fell the honor of being the first exhibitor to sign a franchise during the convention. Titus owns the Fairyland Theatre in Los Angeles. He stated that over 80 per cent of the southern California and Arizona territory had been sold.

Visitors at the luncheon included: LOUIS R. MAYER, Mayer, Pasadena, Cal.; John M. Stahl Productions; FRANK BENJAMIN, Mayor's personal representative; FRANK HUTTON, attorney for Associated First National Pictures, Inc., of Southern California; D. S. HARRISON, attorney for Associated First National Pictures, Inc., of Southern California; ALBERT KAUFMAN, producer Holubar and Sidnee Franklin Productions; PETE SMITH, representative for Marshall Neilan Productions; B. F. FINEMAN, producer Katherine Macdonald Productions.

New Oklahoma City
Orpheum Is Opened
Combination House Declared To Be One of the Finest In the Southwest

The new Orpheum theatre, owned by John and Pete Sinopaulo, has been opened.

Considered one of the finest in the Southwest, the house seats 2,000 persons. It is beautiful in decorative scheme, gold and ivory predominating. Gorgeous silk draperies and panels and columns of Greek design give an artistic finish to the theatre.

Theatre Cost $500,000.

An expenditure of $500,000 is represented in the new playhouse, which will run a combination bill. The latest in theatre construction has been incorporated. The Typhoon ventilation system is used. The projection room is a mark of modernity.

Access to the balcony and lofts is by means of runways. On the mezzanine floor is located the woman's rest room. Recent innovations in theatre lighting have been installed. In the great dome, which measures sixty feet in diameter, are 300 colored globes. These are regulated from the stage and many color schemes can be obtained.

The personnel of the theatre follows: Pete Sinopaulo, manager; Mrs. George C. Adams, cashier; George C. Adams, electrician, and Mrs. C. R. Hackett, director of the orchestra.

Hoover Ball at Los Angeles
Nets Thousands of Dollars

Society and Filmdom Turn Out Strong—Vaudeville Program Is Arranged by Sid Grauman

(From Staff Correspondent)

TAKING in thousands of dollars for starving children overseas, the great Herbert Hoover motion picture ball and entertainment for the starving children of Europe, held Wednesday night in the ballroom of the Ambassador hotel, Los Angeles, proved a brilliant success.

Society and filmdom turned out en masse and at 1 o'clock the distinguished audience was still watching the enticing program which Sid Grauman had arranged with such eclect.

Besides the vaudeville program which Mr. Grauman arranged, the world premiere of "The Inside of the Cup" was presented.

Elmer Glyn "dressed in black" opened the classic program, giving a democratic talk in an appeal for the still helpless little ones who are going hungry in Europe today.

Mildred Harris also gave a brief but moving appeal for this charity, while Thomas Meighan and James Kirkwood, who introduced Sid Grauman to the audience, were among the favorites of the evening.

Walter Hiers, in a comedy monologue:

Lyons and Moran, in a snappy personal act as well as in their latest cinematic success, "Blue Sunday"; Maybelle Burch, in vocal solos; Agnes Ayers, the Griffin twins, dancers; Theodore Keken, in a Russian dance; the Tivoli Quartette; the Metropolitan Quartette; Mischa Guten-son's quartette; Hans Hanke, pianist; Lillian Bowles, soprano; Margaret Loomis, in a series of Oriental dances; a group of the Ruth St. Denis dancers; George Hastings; the Gamut club quartette; Beatrice Ringo, soprano; Henry Murtanich, pianist; a group of Mexican dancers; Leon Rice, tenor—these were all among the most applauded and praised acts of the evening.

* * *

Then there were also Adam Hull Shirck, Lasky publicity chief in a modern magic act; Max Fisher and his jazz musicians and the popular cinema stars, Lois Wilson, Conrad Nagel and Jack Holt, in little acts. Speed Hansen's "Bobby" proved most enjoyable while many other brilliant stars contributed their bit for charity.

"The Inside of the Cup" proved the sensation of the program, being acknowledged by critics as being one of the great cinematic productions of the era.

Engagement of Keaton
And Natalie Talmadge Is Confirmed in N. Y.

(From Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, Feb. 8.—Natalie Talmadge is to marry Buster Keaton.

The news leaked out at Palm Beach, where Miss Talmadge, her mother, her sister, Norma, and her brother-in-law, Joseph Shekond, are visiting, when the Metro star's telegraphic proposal and the wired acceptance of the youngest of the Talmadge sisters became known.

Confirmation of the Palm Beach story was received at the Talmadge studios here.

Miss Talmadge met Buster Keaton four years ago when the latter was a member of the Roscoe Arbuckle company in New York. They have not seen one another in two years.

Her sister, Constance Talmadge, was married to John Pielou, December 26.

The wedding probably will take place in June.

Eugene Zukor Goes
Abroad on Business

Will Seek Reciprocal Plan of Distributing Paramount Films in Europe

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEW YORK, Feb. 8.—Eugene Zukor, assistant treasurer of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, sailed last Thursday for Europe.

The purpose of his trip is to extend the exportation of American productions. He will investigate the possibilities of entering into a reciprocal agreement with foreign producers.

Will Visit Studios

He will go into foreign studios, consult with directors and outline to foreign producers plans for producing motion pictures of the quality demanded by American audiences.

"European producers cannot expect to distribute their pictures in this country unless these productions measure up to the American standards," said Mr. Zukor before sailing. "We shall make more than welcome, however, foreign productions that will satisfy American motion picture patrons and shall give these productions every opportunity for extensive distribution through our organization, since we realize that only through such methods of reciprocity shall we be able efficiently to circulate American-made pictures in foreign countries.

Tours Several Countries

"I shall assure European producers that America is not trying to monopolize the motion picture industry throughout the world; and shall attempt to combat the prejudice that has sprung up in some quarters abroad against American films. This prejudice has been caused, I believe, entirely because of reports that America was unfriendly toward the distribution of foreign films in the United States."

After conferring with officials of the London office of Famous Players, Mr. Zukor will make an intensive study of conditions in England, France, the Scandinavian countries, Italy and Czechoslovakia.

Outlook for U. S. Films in England Bright

THAT the outlook for American-made films was never better in the British Isles is the opinion of Major A. P. Holt, chairman of Standard Film Company, Ltd., of London, who recently paid a visit to the southern California film colony to make a survey of the production situation with the idea of ascertaining what pictures will be available for foreign distribution in 1921.

During Major Holt's visit to the film capital, business meetings of United Artists Corporation were in progress at the Douglas Fairbanks studio and a number of conferences were held between 'Doug' and the major for the purpose of discussing market conditions abroad with respect to the availability of the Big Four pictures in the British Isles.

Major Holt, whose firm is the holding company for Provincial Cinematograph Theatres, Ltd., controlling seven British theatres and several distributing companies, was able to supply Mr. Fairbanks with information invaluable to United Artists regarding theatre conditions in England, Scotland and Ireland, as well as on the continent.

This information was turned over to Mr. Abrams, president of United Artists, who, with Dennis F. O'Brien, secretary of that organization, was in California at the time, outlining production schedules and new foreign distributing affiliations with Mr. Fairbanks, Miss Pickford and Charlie Chaplin.

* * *

While in the United States Major Holt is making a close study of motion picture theatres for the purpose of getting ideas for the new theatre his concern is building at Brighton, England, at a cost of more than $1,000,000. This cinema palace, with a seating capacity of 2,400, will be the largest in the British Isles. It is scheduled to open next June. Major Holt expressed a desire to open this theatre with a picture of one of the United Artists' stars and also said he hoped a plan would be worked out whereby it would be possible for this house to play all United Artists features.

Interested with Major Holt in various British film enterprises is Lord Beaverbrook, brother of Lord Northcliffe, celebrated British newspaper magnate.

The major said that the rapid building of new picture houses in the British Isles would tend to relieve the present congestion of American films there.

William Hodge May Make Patriotic Film

A group of film men have been in Chicago for the past week endeavoring to secure the signature of William Hodge to a contract to make one of the most unusual pictures ever conceived by a producer. Mr. Hodge, who is now appearing at the LaSalle theatre in "The Guest of Honor," has so far resisted offers of the motion picture makers and has given no sign of accepting this new offer.

The advancement of the idea is interesting, however, in that it indicates that historical pictures are being considered again and Mr. Hodge's insistent suggestions in creating a peculiar American type in acting are considered necessary to the same.

It is proposed to make a picture which would have for one character Thomas Jefferson, in the Revolutionary epoch of American history, then as Stephen Decatur in the middle period of our history previous to the Rebellion, then as Abraham Lincoln and finally as Mark Twain in the nineties.

Mr. Hodge is believed to be the only man who could portray the various roles in question and put them over upon the screen.

Clark Here to Survey Industry, Not Produce

(From Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, Feb. 8—George Clark of George Clark Productions, London, will not produce in America, as was reported when he arrived ten days ago. His purpose in coming here was to visit his family and to study film conditions. He will return to London next week, after making a trip to Palm Beach.

Miss Lelia Lewis, who is handling the publicity for the company in England, also will leave next week. She is here to arrange for a cooperation plan of publicity. George Clark Productions are distributed here by Stoll Film Corporation of Mr. Clark's brother, who is in charge of the organization. Guy Newall is in charge of production.

Vitagraph to Produce Another Curwood Film

David Smith, director of "The Courage of Marge O'Doone," is beginning production of another James Oliver Curwood story for Vitagraph. Philip Whittemore and Jeanne D' Ancambal will play the principal roles in "Flower of the North." Many of the scenes will be shot in the Hudson Bay district.

Publisher Declares Stories Should Receive First Consideration

Eugene V. Brewster, president of Brewster Publications, Inc., and editor-in-chief of Motion Picture Magazine, Motion Picture Classic and Shadowland, has entered the producing field. He already has made several productions, including "Love's Redemption," "Ramon, the Sailor," and "From Faro to Fame," all of which are what he calls simple, modest productions.

He has thus far declined to enter into competition with what he calls the "big productions," believing that they are merely a passing fad. "There will always be a demand for super feature things with stupendous settings and costly fittings," he says, "but they will be the exception and not the rule.

Story Is the Thing

"The masses occasionally like to see how the very rich live, and no longer can we say that one-half the world does not know how the other half lives. But there has been too much of this sort of thing, and it has been grossly exaggerated. The poor are getting a very wrong impression of the rich, and it tends to increase the already too large army of the discontented.

"Spectacles are all very well, but every picture should not be made a spectacle. The story is the thing. Next should come acting and characterization, and next art.

Lavishness Unnecessary

"The story should be told first dramatically and second artistically, but we must not confuse art with cost. A hit can be and should be artistic. And the producer should not be forced into creating extravagant, costly sets when they are not necessary, merely to give class to the production and to create the impression of bigness. It is this lavish and unnecessary display that has made pictures so costly to the exhibitor, and driven capital away."

Educational in March Will Hold International Meeting

Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., this week notified its thirty-seven exchange managers in the United States and Canada to make arrangements to attend its first international convention at either Chicago or Cincinnati some time in March.

It is said that this will be the first time that any motion picture distributing organization has held such an important meeting before the first year of its existence was ended. The first publication through an Educational exchange was made on June 20, 1920.

Results Are Pleasing

Late in the fall a convention of the Eastern exchanges was held at the Hotel Astor and the results were so pleasing that the general meeting was immediately planned. In the meantime Henry Ginsberg, domestic sales manager, has made a tour of all offices and special trips to different territories, while President E. W. Hammons, who is now on his way to visit the producing units on the Coast, will visit most of the offices going or on the return trip. In addition, practically all of the managers have made trips to the home offices to get in closer touch.

Await Hammons' Return

Definite announcement of the date of the convention awaits the return of Mr. Hammons since he announced before he left that he would probably have some interesting announcements to make concerning future business. He always has pursued the policy of talking directly to the various sales representatives and giving them the fullest light on all developments.

Heads of all the principal departments will be present from the home office, and in addition representatives of all the producers distributing through Educational will tell of their plans and hear suggestions from the sales force as to how they can make their product even more pleasing to the exhibitor. According to the home office some new and far-reaching specialization plans will be announced.

Tom Terriss Finishes "Heart of Maryland" As Vitagraph Special

Tom Terriss has completed the actual production of another Vitagraph special, "The Heart of Maryland," the famous Belasco play of Civil War days. William B. Courtney provided the continuity.

The cast is headed by Catherine Calvert, as the heroine, with Crane Wilbur as her leading man. Others are Felix Krembe, William Collier, Jr., Ben Lyon, Bernard Siegel, Henry Hallam, Arthur Earl, Warner Richmond, Master Russell Griffin, Jane Jennings, Victoria White and Marguerite Sanchez.

The picture is undergoing final editing.

Jans Moves Offices

To Godfrey Building

Headquarters Occupy Entire 49th Street Side of Structure

Herman F. Jans, president of Jans Pictures, Inc. and Jans Film Service, Inc., has moved into his new offices in the Godfrey building at 729 Seventh avenue, New York City.

Mr. Jans will occupy in these new quarters probably as lavishly appointed and scientifically equipped offices as any in the country. The suite, which is at 1005-6, 729 Seventh avenue, occupies the entire Forty-ninth street side.

Growth Necessitated Change

The growth of Mr. Jans' enterprises has long necessitated the change which he has finally made. The suite is furnished and fitted in mahogany. Mr. Jans' own office is panelled in the same wood. The floor is covered with a luxurious taupe rug and the tone of the ceiling carries out the same harmonious expression.

From the reception lobby a long hall reaches to Mr. Jans' office and off from this hall extends the offices of the staff and auditing department. At the rear are the poster and film renovating departments and vaults.

Has Artificial Lighting

The entire suite is remarkably well lighted with windows to such an extent that this part of the building is called "the daylight side." In addition, Mr. Jans has equipped his offices with a beautiful artificial illumination, believing that everything should be bright at all times regardless of cloudy weather.

Mr. Jans has produced "Madonnas and Men," "Wings of Pride," "A Woman's Business" and "Love Without Question."

District Managers of Famous Convene for Annual N. Y. Meeting

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEW YORK, Feb. 5.—The district managers of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation convened this week at the home offices for their annual meeting. The call was sent out by S. R. Kent, general manager of distribution. Plans for distribution during the coming months are being discussed.

Those attending are: Herman Wober, San Francisco; Louis Marcus, Salt Lake City; H. P. Wolfberg, Chicago; E. C. Lilea, Kansas City; H. A. Ross, Detroit; H. H. Buxbaum, New York; W. E. Smith, Philadelphia; J. D. Clark, Philadelphia; Joseph H. Glidby, Kansas City; Philip Reisman, Minneapolis; George Schaeffer, Boston; Mr. Pratt, Atlanta, and Mr. Dent, Dallas, representing Southern Enterprises, Inc.

The WHEELING (W. Va.) REGISTER Says

Censorship of moving pictures is not for the state. To establish a commission on censorship would only cause embarrassment to those who have hundreds of thousands of dollars invested in a business that affords the public means of enjoyment and enlightenment of value. Whatever censorship is necessary should come from the people.
EXHIBITORS ADVERTISING

A DEPARTMENT OF MOTION PICTURE EXPLOITATION

Any Exhibitor's Stunt

PATRICK HARMON, proprietor of the Dreamland dancing academy, Chicago, the greatest institution of that nature in the city, concluded on February 3 one of the most spectacularly successful advertising stunts in recent amusement advertising history. The stunt is one which with slight if any modifications will serve any exhibitor in the country.

At this time the exact measure of benefit derived from the enterprise cannot be determined, but if only the patronage of something like five thousand couples on February 2 and 3 is considered the idea is one of impressive proportions. With the additional profit in the form of popular comment and newspaper publicity which cannot be definitely computed Mr. Harmon's accomplishment takes on even greater significance.

Every theatre man should read the story of the stunt and make use of the practical suggestion that it presents.

THE standard advertising of the Dreamland consists of straight copy posters on every elevated railroad station platform in the Chicago system and single column space in the newspapers measuring up to and seldom beyond 4¼ inches. Upon these medium Mr. Harmon depends chiefly for the publication of his copy, copy of remarkable continuity and forcefulness.

At the opening of the present dancing season Mr. Harmon centered upon Elgar's orchestra, a sixteen-piece organization, as the dominating Dreamland attraction. Billboards and newspaper copy carried new messages weekly, all written in the intimate style that makes for conviction and all stressing the great merit of Elgar's music.

The stunt under discussion was really started when a reward of $100 was offered for information leading to the discovery of a musician of any kind that could win equal favor in popular contest against a musician in the Dreamland organization. One such musician was discovered, according to the advertisements, and the reward was paid, the musician being added to the orchestra.

This incident passed, the Dreamland copy took on added significance to those who see it daily. The statements made concerning the orchestra were given additional credit because of the proof of managerial confidence therein that had been established.

In almost every instance the reward was mentioned. The impression that a studious search for better music was in constant progress was thoroughly implanted. Newspaper stories concerning the institution also gave out that suggestion.

Business was good at the Dreamland, and when Mr. Harmon prophesied early in the Winter, taking a chance that not many would contemplate seriously, that the weather would be mild through the season, thus calling attention to the natural floral decorations of the Dreamland, business increased, maintaining volume as his prophecy was borne out.

NEWSPAPER announcement was made several days prior to the date set for the event that one "Husk" O'Hare, leader of a sixteen-piece orchestra of wide renown, had challenged Elgar's organization to a contest of supremacy. The date set for the contest was February 2, and Mr. Harmon published a statement that in the event of O'Hare's victory he would employ that organization and dispense with Elgar's services.

Advertising copy and newspaper statements carried a convincing note which had added strength to the previously given proof of Harmon's sincerity.

The Dreamland was filled to capacity on the night of February 2, and the applause by which the decision was to be made was so evenly balanced that it was decided to give the orchestras a final test on the succeeding evening. Again the attendance was of capacity proportions.

IN the advertisement through which Mr. Harmon announced the outcome of the contest his characteristic style of direct continuity copy was used. The same, in straightforward form, tells the rest of the story. It follows:

ELGAR SHADES O'HARE. When the "Husk" O'Hare orchestra clashed with Elgar's combination Wednesday and Thursday nights the public agreed that the music beat everything in history.

FIRST ROUND—WEDNESDAY. Elgar's sixteen kings of syncopation opened, filling Dreamland with music in defiance of O'Hare's challenge. "Husk" O'Hare's sixteen joy merchants countered with a shower of "Blues" that set the dancing mob crazy. Honors even and everybody keyed up to high "C" for the final.

DECIDING ROUND—THURSDAY. Everything set for the muss. O'Hare opened. Elgar right back with his "Creole Blues." Dreamland shakes with applause. Elgar wins by a shade.

"Husk" O'Hare says (not as an alibi either) that Elgar's three years' continuous playing together was too much of a handicap.

Dreamland likes a game loser and will give him his opportunity. Elgar stays at Harmon's Dreamland, meeting all comers.

MR. HARMON'S success with the Dreamland dancing academy can be duplicated by every theatre manager with his musical organization, whether it consists of a fifty-piece symphony orchestra or a single organist or pianist. The essentials of the stunt are adaptable to each.

The merit of the stunt is obvious. As a single advertising stunt it will doubtless pay for itself in directly drawn additional patronage. As a publicity feature it will create extensive comment among all to whose attention it is brought.
Showmanship Suggestions in the Stills

The above scene from "The Passion Flower," Norma Talmadge's forthcoming First National attraction, suggests a stage feature in which but one performer need be employed and which requires no unreasonably expensive setting. A dancer of the type indicated, introduced at the proper moment and with advantageous lighting and musical arrangement, should produce excellent results. Where it is deemed advisable to elaborate upon the feature no ingenious showman will find it difficult to improve suitable action.

For presentation of "The Tavern Knight," the Stoll feature, the transition from modern times to the period of the play may be effectively bridged by use of a stage feature in which a reader costumed after the still suggestion may give one of the many colorful dramatic recitations characteristic of the literature of the period. With the audience properly prepared by such a feature the costume film production always scores a more satisfactory impression than otherwise.

The "School Days" act which endured for years upon the vaudeville stage can be revived or recreated for feature use with "Hey Rube," a Christie comedy to be distributed by Educational. To insure best results and a great volume of newspaper publicity, it may be advisable to use local talent exclusively in the feature, advertising for volunteers, offering prizes, etc., and obtaining the co-operation of merchants and the school board in providing props and suggestions, respectively. The stunt is one which should produce precedential patronage if followed through in detail and extended over a considerable period of preparation.

One of the comedy stunts in "The Nut," Douglas Fairbanks' next United Artists production, is easily adapted to street exploitation purposes. The construction of the thing is familiar to the majority of showmen and essentially simple. A man sent out on the street equipped as indicated, with policemen in pursuit, should attract sharp attention anywhere in the world. An occasional "arrest" by the policeman, in which the hidden character comes to light bearing a label designating him "The Nut," should perfect the identification of the stunt with the picture.
Mission Theatre Breaks Box Office Record With World Premiere of "Small Town Idol"

A new box office record was established at the Mission theatre, Los Angeles, when "A Small Town Idol," Mack Sennett's initial feature for Associated Producers, Inc., was given its world premiere at that theatre. The engagement was in many respects what is commonly and somewhat vaguely termed "an event."

The scale of prices charged, 25 to 85 cents for matinee and 55 cents to $1.50 for evening performances, is far from the least interesting detail of the engagement.

The exploitation conducted in behalf of the engagement was designed to appeal to the classes rather than the masses, the type of stunts usually employed for comedy features being disregarded and newspaper copy dwelling upon the magnitude of the production being used instead. Window displays that were obtained for the purpose were modeled in like manner.

The presentation feature was likewise simple. Miss Cecil Marsh, costumed to represent a "small town girl," singing "Small Town Mary," a song composed by C. Sharpe-Minor, organist at the Mission, which is to be published nationally by Remick bearing a dedication to the picture.

The showing opened on Wednesday night, and the big attendance of the opening night was increased upon the three following evenings, the house

Among those present during the early portion of the engagement included Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Hiram Abrams, Charlie Chaplin, Harry Leon Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. Ben Turpin, Phyllis Haver, Katherine Macdonald, B. P. Fineman, Thomas H. Ince, Larry Semon, Sol Lesser and Mayor Snyder of Los Angeles.

The "Write-a-Title" contest being conducted by the Chicago Evening American possesses qualities which few like enterprises have evidenced. Its chief direct effect, aside from the circulation stimulant it should prove, is to direct to the theatre advertisements carried in the newspaper the critical attention of every reader.

Beginning with front page announcements following a series of teaser drawings in two-column width scattered through the paper, the contest offers prizes aggregating $1,000 for contestants who contribute at the end of the 31-day period of the contest the correct titles for the 62 drawings presented, two each day, during that time. The drawings are suggested by titles appearing in the editions in which they appear and the contestant refers naturally to the theatre advertisements in determining the title upon which the drawing, which is not a reproduction of a still or otherwise directly related to the motion picture production, is based.

Newspapers everywhere can use the idea in like manner. Exhibitors, working in a group, should present it for adoption.

Stick!

Theatres that have won outstanding success fall naturally into two classifications with regard to program policy. Novelty, constant change of program content and order, has produced big business for some of the most widely known playhouses. Exactly the opposite policy, unvarying maintenance of established offerings in accustomed order, has been found as profitable by others.

Numerous arguments might be advanced in support of either policy. The explanation of the apparently inconsistent parallel successes lies in the fact that patrons who like novelty go to the novelty house, while those of opposite preferences go to the theatre which gives them what they want.

If there is an advantage it lies on the side of the novelty exhibitor, for by the nature of his performance he obtains publicity and discussion which the other theatre does not. But that is not the important point.

The essential reason for both successes is the strict adherence to the policy settled upon. Consistency is the explanation of prosperity in each instance.

Select either policy. Then—Stick!

An identification contest was conducted by the Schine Theatrical Company of Gloversville, N. Y., and the "Gloversville Morning Herald" in behalf of "The Man Who Lost Himself," William Faversham's Selznick vehicle, the first four persons identifying the pedestrian who posed as the man who lost himself being properly rewarded.

Edith May, winner of the National Salesgirl Beauty Contest, was an added attraction recently at the New Strand theatre, Milwaukee, Wisc., her "act" consisting of a story of her experiences during her visit to New York as winner of the contest.

Frank Hammond, manager of the River theatre, Atlanta, Ga., obtained a double-page spread in the Sunday edition of the "Atlanta American" by use of the title "To Please One Woman."

Practical Test of Admission Question
Feature of Record Exploitation Stunt

"Madame X," the Goldwyn production, broke the record of the Sun theatre, Omaha, Neb., recently, being held over for a second week. An exploitation stunt that can and should be adopted by all exhibitors, for this or another production, gives the event special importance.

The story of the advance campaign conducted by Harry and Sam Goldberg, owners of the theatre, and N. N. Frudenfeld, publicity director, should be read by every exhibitor.

The advance campaign was started four weeks before the opening day of the run with the posting of 100 8-sheet posters reading, "Should that great photoplay, 'Madame X,' be shown in Omaha at $1 or at 35 cents a seat?" For two weeks these posters were left standing while 50,000 dodgers asking the same question and newspaper teasers bearing like copy made their appearance.

At the end of that time a newspaper announcement was made that the Sun theatre had booked the attraction, that $1 had been charged elsewhere and that the Sun management, under great expense to obtain the production, had decided to leave the fixing of the admission price to the public.

Then a special midnight showing was given to an invited audience representing all walks of life, blanks being given them upon which they might indicate their opinion of the admission question. The returns showed that 35 cents was the figure considered advisable by the majority, and announcement that that figure would be charged was made forthwith through every available medium.

The newspaper critics, who had been present at the advance showing, gave the coming attraction great publicity. And the billboards of the city were given more attention, those already standing being carded with an announcement of the price to be charged and other boards and windows being posted with specially prepared paper.

The lobby was then cleared of everything that could be moved and a sign provided to explain that it had been enlarged to accommodate the crowds expected. The exterior was decorated in the thorough manner characteristic of Sun theatre display, flowers suggestive of Mother's Day being used.

The showing opened to precedential patronage, daily and weekly attendance records being broken, and at the 10:30 performance a special presenta-

"Down Home" Lobby Stunt Produced for Ten Tickets

O. F. Wells, manager of the Lincoln theatre, Chariton, la., staged one of the most effective and practical exploitation stunts in recent history in behalf of "Down Home," the Irvin Willat production distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, the accompanying illustration showing the theatre front during the period of the stunt's operation. Mr. Wells' description of the enterprise, which is its own story of the enterprise, follows:

"I am sending you a picture of my lobby display used on "Down Home," which played here Jan. 21-22. Here is how I worked it out.

"I went to the merchants from whom I wanted to get props and gave each a comp for what I took. I clothed the fellows who were dressed as farmers the same way, and the total display cost me the sum of ten comps.

"They started to sing about fifteen minutes before each performance, and then they played checkers during the performance and cracked farmer jokes. They also went around the town and got the people asking what they were doing in the make-up, which caused curiosity.

"The display helped me out quite a bit for what it cost, and my advice to brother exhibitors is to do more of it, as it always pays.

"I also wish to say the first thing I look at in your trade paper is the displays that managers are making.

Lawrence F. Stuart, manager of the Old Mill theatre, Dallas, Tex., employed a jazz band of nine pieces for the exploitation and presentation of "Go and Get It." The regular theatre orchestra accompanied the picture except during the first reel, and the jazz band gave hourly concerts on the sidewalk in front of the house, attracting such satisfactory business that it has been made a permanent feature of the theatre.

Presentation for Short Subject Is New Noble Policy

Paul E. Noble, manager of the Liberty theatre, Portland, Ore., has again demonstrated his grasp of theatre progress and advance, his most recent innovation being the adoption of presentation for short subjects, an innovation which readers familiar with the past work of Mr. Noble will watch with interest because of the marked skill in stagecraft which he has exhibited.

"Wet and Warmer," Henry Lehrman's First National two-reel comedy, was the attraction given the first short subject presentation at the Liberty, and the accompanying photograph shows the setting, obtained by use of a single specially painted drop. The players engaged in dialogue characteristic of the fiction knight of the road and worked steadily up to the climax, which was the screening of the picture to an audience put in proper receptive mood by the stage humor.

Mr. Noble's action in thus taking the lead in work which should be undertaken by every exhibitor is characteristic of the man, long considered one of the most progressive and resourceful theatre men of the country. An example set by a man of his standing in the theatre field cannot be of other than desirable effect.

A young man in straw hat, overalls, boots and with his coat over his arm walking leisurely down the streets of Creston, Iowa, brought attention to the fact that "Peaceful Valley" was being exhibited at the Strand theatre.
Local Talent Presentation Demonstrated Practical at Chambers' Anniversary Show

Stanley Chambers, manager of the Palace theatre, Wichita, originator of some of the best newspaper advertising tactics in general theatre use, recently turned his attention to exploitation and presentation. The result, as was to be expected of such a man as Mr. Chambers' work has stamped him, has been successful in the extreme.

Two of Mr. Chambers' recent enterprises are pictorially reproduced herewith and described in the following story. Mr. Chambers' successful use of local talent in presentation demonstrates the practicality of the practice frequently advised in this department.

The Palace Anniversary Week was the occasion for the use of local talent in presentation. "The Charm School," the Paramount production, was booked for the week, and in addition to the male quartette seen in the illustration violin and piano soloists were rehearsed in a feature called "A Night at the Club," the whole being staged by P. Hans Flath, musical director of the Palace, whom Mr. Chambers describes as "one of the best in the country in this capacity."

The feature ran for half an hour and constituted, to again use Mr. Chambers' words, "a real treat for all music lovers."

"The Testing Block," a recent Paramount-Hart production, was advertised through the stunt illustrated in another accompanying reproduction. The horse used was obtained from the Kansas National Live Stock Show, held in Wichita, having been brought from the West Coast and represented as Hart's original Pinto pony. Concerning the stunt, Mr. Chambers writes:

"The photograph is of a party named Bush, whom we imported to impersonate Bill Hart, riding a horse which they claim is Bill Hart's original Pinto pony. Personally I do not think it is Hart's horse, though the Stock Show claims that it is, for I have tried to compare the markings of this horse with those of Hart's and find they do not agree. Nevertheless the idea and the resemblance brought us great returns.

"We did not advertise that the impersonator was Hart or not. We just let the public worry it out for themselves. When anybody approached him he would simply hand them a card which reads, 'Wis. S. Hart. Now appearing at the Palace theatre in "The Testing Block."

Both enterprises have the unmistakable qualities of expert showmanship. They are characteristic of their producer, than whom American theatredom offers no finer representative of progressiveness and executive ability.

Letters from First National stars endorsing their current vehicles as the best of their making have been utilized to good advantage in newspaper advertising by E. G. Stellings, manager of the Grand theatre, Wilmington, Del.
Costume Convicts Figure In Superba Exploitation

EXHIBITORS have seldom looked forward to the opening date of an attraction better equipped in advance for the exploitation man than "Outside the Law," Universal's starring vehicle for Priscilla Dean. In the comparatively brief public life of the production it has been accorded publicity and exploitation seldom paralleled in a similar period.

The New York premiere, launched with special Sunday performances at four legitimate theatres, was recently described and pictorially represented in this department. The magnitude of that event was such as to assure the attraction a ready-made audience in a great portion of the East.

The teaser campaign conducted with 24-sheets in various large cities has been made the subject of Universal advertisements.

From Los Angeles, the Superba theatre of that city reports business justifying an extended engagement, the accompanying photograph showing the theatre front during the third week and the means which was utilized to impress that fact upon passers-by. It is a fact which cannot be stressed too strongly.

The photograph also discloses a method of exploitation which can be adapted to the requirements of exhibitors everywhere who play the attraction. The convict costume is easily procurable, or can be made up especially at little expense. The idea may be confined to the dressing of house attendants in this or elaborated upon at will.

The story printed in this department several weeks ago for a New York engagement of "Good References" revealed methods of exploitation by use of convicts which are readily applicable to the present production. An actual duplication is, of course, not advisable, but the most limited imagination easily produces at the association of the two events countless possibilities.

As a climax to a teaser campaign of whatever style is utilized the convict idea seems to fill every requirement. It will no doubt be utilized by exhibitors in every section of the country.

Convict exploitation for "Outside The Law" was maintained throughout the third week of the run at the Superba theatre, Los Angeles.

Merrill Cutouts Suggest Action of Fairbanks Film

H. M. ROUDA, manager of Ascher's Merrill theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., obtained the effect of action with a still cutout composition for interior lobby use in connection with "The Mark of Zorro."

Ascher's Merrill theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., obtained the effect of action with a still cutout composition for interior lobby use in connection with "The Mark of Zorro."

Mr. Rouda's description of the display follows:

"The background was of amber color, with red and amber lights overhead and blue lights to the extreme left, to give the setting a sort of sunset effect.

"A cutout figure of Douglas Fairbanks in a jumping position suspended in mid-air between the two houses. These houses were built of beaver board and stand out very prominently in the display.

"To the right there was a hay stack and also a little cart filled with hay. Figures in the foreground were painted and cut out to represent men chasing Fairbanks, with swords in their hands. Two figures on the roof, to the left, same as those in the foreground."

"Without the colors described the display loses some but by no means all of its effectiveness. The black and white reproduction is sufficiently informative for the exhibitor who sees fit to adapt the Milwaukee style of lobby decoration when he plays the attraction.

Where it is impossible to incorporate the same elements in newspaper advertising, and perhaps to duplicate the pictured "leap for life" as a mobile exploitation stunt, utilizing the hayrick once popular with circus clowns and still encountered in vaudeville, exceptionally good results may be obtained.
Brooklyn Strand Popularizes Trade Mark
With Special Produced Stage Features

Among the enterprises through which E. L. Hyman, managing director, has brought the Brooklyn Strand theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., into a dominant position among American motion picture playhouses since his identification with that institution, none have shown more clearly the wisdom of his showmanship than the specially staged feature illustrated upon this page which has been used to popularize the trade mark of the theatre. There is, back of the enterprise itself, the type of management that makes the exhibitor the dominating figure of the motion picture industry.

The trade mark of the Brooklyn Strand has been used over a long period in newspaper advertising and otherwise. It has not been adhered to when occasion proved that course arbitrary to best results, but a distinct effort has been made to keep it before the eyes of the Strand clientele a major portion of the time.

To further impress upon patrons the important fact that it is the Strand trade mark, and that it is nothing other than that and can never be identified with any other institution, a huge figure of the girl featured in the design was made up and placed in a dominant position upon the stage. An idea of the size of this figure may be gained when it is made clear that within the metal ball which she is represented as holding a soloist stands upon a platform and sings the number which is considered for use in that connection.

The whole psychology of the trade mark might be gone into in connection with the Strand innovation, but such length is neither desirable nor of purpose. The value of the trade mark, to a theatre or any other institution or product, is impressed upon all automatically by the trade marks with which daily contact is experienced.

The motion pictures that are shown in American theatres bear the trade marks of their makers. It is obviously true that the exhibitor should have a trade mark for his theatre itself as well as for the products that he exhibits.

Mr. Hyman shows his appreciation of this fact when he goes to the indicated length to impress the trade mark of his institution upon the consciousness of his patrons. Too few exhibitors have made proper effort in this direc-

It is to be hoped that many will follow the example presented.

It is to be hoped, also, that many will follow Mr. Hyman's example in presenting short subjects, as illustrated in the case of "Training Manhandlers at West Point," an Arrow Sport Pictorial, recently presented with an epilogue.

The photograph reproduced shows the setting used, the exterior of a cantonment. The subject was so arranged that the last scene showed men in uniform marching, and the curtain was raised to show the setting at the conclusion of the reel. Four well known barracks songs were then sung by a trio, and the bugler blew "Retreat" at their conclusion as the spotlight picked out the national emblem flying above the scene, hitherto in darkness.

Here is better presentation of short subjects than is in the majority of theatres accorded feature attractions. There is something amiss when such conditions are permitted to exist for long. But they will not exist for long. The American exhibitor is not so constituted as to permit it.
Anderson Proves Merit of Consistent Serial Policy

John Anderson, manager of the Princess theatre, Boone, Ia., and a motion picture pioneer, has tested the serial form of entertainment and a consistent policy of presenting that type of attraction perhaps more thoroughly than any theatre man in America. The accompanying illustration, a reproduction of a photograph taken after the first performance of the initial episode of "King of the Circus," the Universal serial, is convincing proof of his wisdom in the course pursued over a period of eleven years.

The photograph is not one made possible by extraordinary advertising or other exceptional methods employed to produce precedential patronage for the single occasion. A practical duplicate of the photograph might be made upon any afternoon when a new serial is being given its first showing at the Princess.

Mr. Anderson, who entered the motion picture field at a time when a two-reel production was considered impractical and shared with practically every theatre man the belief that "What Happened to Mary?" the first serial produced, was a monstrosity of some sort that could not be taken seriously, applied his present consistent serial policy as soon as that production had scored its remarkable success and similar ones were placed upon the market.

Saturday has been, from that time until the present, "Short Subject Day" at the Princess. Except for a period when an attempt was made to combine a five-reel production with the short subject program, there has always been a serial and two or three comedies or other short subjects upon the Saturday program of the theatre.

Citizens know that. Farmers within traveling distance of the city follow each serial as steadily as the townpeople. And at the beginning of every new serial a condition very similar to that pictured herewith exists.

If there is in any quarter concern as to alleged waning popularity of the serial form of entertainment, the fact that Mr. Anderson planned to run "King of the Circus" at matinee performances only and was forced by popular demand to include it in the evening program should serve as convincing evidence to the contrary.

Mr. Anderson's consistent serial policy has been demonstrated a policy of success. Theatre men in every part of the country should profit by his excellent example.

"Go and Get It" broke records, which is the proof of the stunt.

Barry's Freckles Suggest Stunt for "Go and Get It"

Jacob Alpert, manager of the Victory theatre, Putnam, Conn., followed in the footsteps of other exhibitors in utilizing Wesley Barry's freckles for advertising purposes in connection with "Go And Get It," the First National attraction, to the point of actual duplication, when a new angle of effective novelty was introduced. The illustration shows graphically the stunt employed.

After the two weekly newspapers of Putnam had been provided with teaser copy, after the city had been flooded with printed cards bearing the same and similar wording, the boy appeared upon the street coincidentally with the public announcement of details of the engagement.

"Go And Get It" broke records, which is the proof of the stunt.

It Pays!

A visitor to the Woodlawn theatre, Chicago, on Sunday, Feb. 6, was asked the usual, "How did you like the picture?"

"Midsummer Madness" was the feature, there were good supporting subjects, and the highly efficient Woodlawn orchestra gave one of the "talking machine concerts" which have been developed to a high degree of excellence at this playhouse.

The first phase of the performance commented upon, however, was neither the feature nor the short subjects, though these and the concert came in for extended discussion afterward. The reply was, "They didn't show any advertising. Not a word about what was coming for the rest of the week."

It pays.
Los Angeles and Minneapolis Engagements Characteristic of “Kismet” Presentation

“Kismet,” the Robertson-Cole production of Otis Skinner’s stage success, gives promise of gaining a place of its own in theatre history as the greatest presentation picture of its time. So consistently have exhibitors labored in behalf of the picture that the trade question, “Did they put it on right?” is no longer asked when an individual engagement is mentioned.

Los Angeles and Minneapolis, Minn., where the production is most recently reported as producing extraordinary patronage, have followed the custom established in earlier showings.

At Tally’s theatre, Los Angeles, a top price of $2 was charged, and the presentation was in keeping with the admission. Gates were constructed to take the place of the front curtain and opened upon a harem scene in which five dancers gave Oriental numbers, the dimming lights properly darkening the house as the grand presentation of the picture was disclosed. Usurers and other attendants were costumed in keeping with the occasion and Oriental lighting effect was maintained throughout the theatre.

Charles C. Perry, manager of the New Lyric theatre, Minneapolis, was even more thoroughly in his treatment of the production. The paintings and hangings borrowed for lobby use are said to have been worth something over $40,000. Pages were dressed as Turkish peasants and met the patron in the foyer.

The interior of the theatre was decorated in like manner, and the stage was lighted with Oriental effect. Blue lights in the foreground were turned upon the audience while the setting, a harem interior, was prepared and the dancers, eleven of which participated, took their positions. Reversal of the lights threw them into vision and they danced before the divan throne of their mistress, increasing pace in accordance with the stimulated tempo of the music until they fell in seeming exhaustion upon the stage floor as the picture reached the screen.

Business reports from both theatres are of the kind that has characterized all reports thus far received upon well managed presentations of the production. There is in the nature of these reports important proof of the value of presentation. Were the sole mission of the production to stimulate theatre men in this work it could not be regarded by serious thinkers in the industry as other than a great success.

“Kick!”

An editorial quip in the Indianapolis (Ind.) News reads: “It takes a keen eye nowadays to distinguish between the advertisements of underwear and those of motion pictures.”

Exaggerated for the sake of humor, as the comment is, there is occasional foundation for it. The tendency to seek to attract attention, and sometimes patronage, by emphasizing unduly some incident in a play that presents one or more characters in slight attire is not one of the best currently in operation.

Judgment is the advertiser’s sole dependable guide in this as in every other phase of his work. The effective “kick” for which every copywriter and designer strives may be obtained by many methods more desirable and infinitely more effective than by that indicated.

It is doubtful, it may also be pointed out, if the biggest sellers in underwear are those most daringly advertised. There are methods which defeat the ends for which they are employed.

JACK LANSONE, manager of the Bristol theatre, Bristol, Conn., believes that a picture that is not too old to play is not too old to advertise, as his window display for "The Idol Dancer," the First National attraction, indicates.

FRANK LACEY, a master of lobby decoration and manager of the Majestic theatre, Portland, Ore., utilized methods pictorially described above in advertising a hold-over engagement of First National's "Dangerous Business."

W. R. FERGUSON, Goldwyn headquarters exploitation representative, went to Washington, D. C., to arrange for the lobby display and other advertising of the Criterion theatre for "The Revenge of Tarzan." Live animals were displayed in a cage not visible in the photograph.

TO THE sixteen-piece concert orchestra which has been maintained since the opening of the Hippodrome theatre, Napa, Cal., a city of 6,000 population, is credited by the management the splendid support which the house has received.
Accompanying reproductions of photographs taken by an Exhibitors Herald representative of Brooklyn, N. Y., theatre activities reveal less clearly than his written report the results of management methods in force which should be adopted in considerable degree by exhibitors everywhere. The dominant advertising thought among Brooklyn exhibitors is for the advertising of the theatre primarily, the attraction being given second place in the majority of cases.

S. L. Whiting, manager of the Ridgewood theatre, shown in accompanying illustrations, gave evidence of this tendency in his 4th Anniversary Week, in progress at the time the photograph was taken. Though "The Mark of Zorro," Douglas Fairbanks' most recent United Artists production, was the attraction, the theatre and the anniversary were brought most prominently into the foreground in practically all publicity efforts made.

The policy is thoroughly commendable in almost every respect. There lies in the adoption of such a policy a single danger, the possibility that an attraction of unusual merit may be given less than its due amount of advertising and the engagement therefore yield less than its potential profit, but that danger is one which should not give pause to the man who realizes as every man should realize that it is by his theatre rather than by attractions exhibited therein that he must succeed or fail.

The possibility is easily avoided by an extension of budget limitations to accommodate extra advertising for the theatre itself rather than to pay for it out of the general advertising budget. Brooklyn exhibitors display sound showmanship in thus focusing attention upon their theatres. Theatre thought of the day evidences a remarkably unified movement toward improvement in that direction. The service of the leaders in this movement is a genuine one which should not be permitted to pass unappreciated.

STUNTS

The Alhambra theatre, Los Angeles, added novelty to the exploitation campaign for "Love Honor and Behave," the First National attraction, by admitting free of charge couples married in 1921 and all persons who presented divorce degrees or alimony checks.

Arthur Wenzel, press representative of Grauman's theatres in the same city, scored an innovation during the same week by persuading Lois Weber, Jack Holt, Conrad Nagel and Lila Lee, all important figures of the production, to sell tickets at the Rialto during the extended run of "Midsummer Madness."

Specially designed cards, the chief decorative element of which consisted of playing cards pasted in the proper order to augment the title, were employed with good effect throughout Evansville, Ind., in behalf of the Criterion theatre engagement of "A Full House," the Paramount production.

R. G. Gary, Paramount exploitation man, published a volume, supposedly by Wallace Reid, titled, "What I Know About Women," during the run of "The Charm School" at the Strand theatre, Omaha, Neb. The "volume," which was distributed at the theatre, was in four pages, the inner two bearing the single word, "Nothing."

A camel and a donkey have been borrowed from "Mecca," the stage production in engagement at the Auditorium theatre, Chicago, for use in the lobby of Barbee's Loop theatre during the run of "Immortality," a foreign-made attraction.

"Sunkist" oranges, on sale throughout the country, are wrapped in ordinary tissue paper made extraordinary by reason of the cooking recipes printed thereupon. Of a dozen wrappers inspected no two bore the same recipe. Housewives save them. There may be a more effective way of insuring preservation of theatre house organs, but it is not in common use. A page of "Household Hints" should prove a valuable addition to any programme.
Exhibitors Looking for Biggest Year Declares MacMeekin Following Tour

Predictions that 1921 would prove one of the best years, if not the banner year, in the history of motion pictures are being justified, according to John N. MacMeekin, Realart's special representative, who has just returned to New York after a six months' tour of a large part of the United States. Mr. MacMeekin talked with exhibitors in the key cities he visited and found them practically united in the opinion that the present year would be an exceedingly prosperous one for the industry. Traveling from the Atlantic to the Pacific, Mr. MacMeekin obtained first-hand information regarding the 1921 outlook.

Exhibitors Are Optimistic

"What impressed me particularly," said he yesterday, "was the optimistic attitude of exhibitors. This cheerful outlook is not confined to certain isolated localities, for my tour embraced key cities from one end of the country to the other.

"I spent some time in Kansas City and found local exhibitors in an optimistic frame of mind. Frank Newman of the Newman theatre was particularly cheerful over the outlook. Mr. Newman deprecated the suggestion of lowering admission prices. In his opinion that would be nothing less than folly. Sam Harding of the Liberty theatre, also in Kansas City, expressed the same cheerful optimism over the business outlook generally."

"In Omaha, Nebraska. A. H. Blank, who controls a dozen or more theatres, said that his managers all report splendid business. He felt that the present season would shape up as a good one for motion pictures. And Realart, he told me, is proving one of his best bets for the year.

"Montana and Washington are, like the middle West, in fine shape. Seattle alone has opened two new first run houses, the Blue Mouse and the Winter Garden. Both of them are playing to capacity business. John Hamrick has just secured the Realart star franchise for his Blue Mouse theatre. He, too, seems more than pleased with this year's outlook.

New Theatres Find Backing

"To me, one of the best indications that this year is destined to be a big one for our industry is the fact that projects for needed new theatres can always find ready backing. The new theatres, I have observed, always open to big business and continue to play to capacity audiences."

"Denver, Colorado, is a close contender with Kansas City on optimism and progressiveness. It is reported that two new first run theatres are to be added to Denver's list in the next six months. That city is in excellent shape and motion pictures are certainly coming into their own."

"The same thing is true, I found, in Montana, Missouri, Billings and Great Falls, among others, are doing great business. Exhibitors in those towns are most optimistic both as to the present and the coming season."

"Among other exhibitors with whom I talked regarding conditions was Stanley Chambers of the Palace theatre, Wichita, Kansas. Mr. Chambers is a Realart Star Franchise holder. 'Not only am I pleased with Realart,' said Mr. Chambers, 'but I always try to book the pictures on their current release dates. It is possible that chambers also told me that he found business generally building up right along and said he could see no reason why this shouldn't be a happy year for the industry. With new theatres opening and the public's interest in pictures increasing, it looks as if they're through it would prove a banner season."

"This spirit of optimism and confidence is shared by H. E. Sherman by the Bee theatre, Albuquerque, New Mexico. In his estimation 1921 will round out a record to be proud of. "Buffalo is coming right along, too, as well as Chicago, where the theatres are doing good business and exhibitors are confident that they will continue to do so."

Same Story in Oregon

"Out in Portland, Oregon, G. A. Metzger of the Rivoli theatre had practically the same story to tell. Better pictures, he felt, are bringing bigger crowds, and with so many important pictures are being produced, the industry, as he saw it, is enjoying a prosperity it has not known before. He, too, spoke of the building boom, referring to it as a sure sign that the appeal of motion pictures is widening.

"Remarkably," concluded Mr. MacMeekin, "my trip has strengthened my firm belief that this is destined to be one of the biggest years our industry has known. I'm mighty glad to find that so many exhibitors throughout the country share that belief."

Specialty to Handle Hallroom Boys Films

Joe Brandt Closes Deal on Comedies During Recent Trip to Canada

Joe Brandt, president of C. B. C. Films Sales Corporation, has returned to New York after a trip to Canada, where he closed with Specialty Film Importing, Ltd., for distribution of Hallroom Boys films in Toronto, Calgary, Vancouver and St. John.

Mr. Brandt's sale of Hallroom Boys comedies for Canada is a direct follow-up of the showing of "A Doggone Mix-Up," one of this series, for a week at the Strand theatre, New York, which served as an illustration to state righters that there is a demand in the most exclusive markets for independently produced comedies.

Before returning to New York, Mr. Brandt also stopped off at Boston, where he contracted for the sale to Michael Thomas Company of "Star Ranch Westerns," the series of twenty-six two-reelers which C. B. C. is distributing. This particular feature on this series is to be a star featuring C. Edward Hatton, C. B. C. having backed an innovation by purchasing from Mr. Hatton four pictures produced by him on a cooperative basis.

The sale of "Star Ranch Westerns" to Boston marks the second sale of this New England territory. In this company in two weeks, the Michael Thomas Company having contracted for the handling of the new Hallroom Boys comedies in its territory.

Big Crowds Attend Trade Showing Of Fox’s “A Connecticut Yankee” Production Has Been Running Seven Weeks at One Theatre in Los Angeles—Predict Longer Engagement in New York

The reputation of “A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur’s Court,” which is having a pre-release run of several weeks in Los Angeles, traveled clear across the continent and brought great crowds to the trade showing at the Broadhurst theatre, New York, according to Fox Film Corporation.

It was to prove the “pull” of this Mark Twain masterpiece among all classes of people that William Fox introduced it on the west coast and then took it east. It has been running seven weeks at one theatre in Los Angeles and will go ten, it is believed, from the enthusiasm aroused by the trade showing the New York run, if this is Mr. Fox’s plan, will be even longer.

Congratulate Company

Following the trade showing many messages of congratulation were received at Fox offices.

William Fox has made of “A Connecticut Yankee” a film that is at once a gigantic spectacle, a funny comedy and a gripping drama. It would be a worthy successor to “Over the Hill” if “Over the Hill” needed a successor, which it does not.

The production of “A Connecticut Yankee” at mid-season fulfills the promise made by Mr. Fox last summer, when he announced his plans for the season’s big special production. It is in many respects the best thing Fox Film Corporation has done.

Directed by Flynn

As readers of Mark Twain know, “A Connecticut Yankee” tells the story of a New Engander who had an opportunity to compare the old times with the new, and the adventures of this very modern young person in the medieval court of King Arthur are extremely humorous.

A notable feature of the production is the sumptuousness of the settings. Emmett J. Flynn, the director, is noted for his accuracy in matters of detail, and he has made a picture that should satisfy the most critical and most literary lover of Mark Twain without losing a fraction of the exquisite humor of the thing.

Radiosoul Issues Latest Publication, “You and I”

“You and I,” with Victor Stastrom as star and director, also featuring Edith Eraston and Lillian Walker, based upon the book, “Byword of the Hills,” the original drama of which is now being played at the Greenwich Village theatre with Margaret Wicherly in the lead, has been lately published by the Radiosoul Films, Inc.

Pioneer acquired the picture for the city and state in New York and northern New Jersey. Eastern Feature Films signed up for New England; Southeastern Pictures Corporation for the seven Southeastern states; Crescent Theatres for the Pacific Coast. Ohio and Kentucky have been disposed of to Pioneer. Tucker Amusements signed up for Oklahoma and is negotiating for the balance of their territory.

FREEDMAN'S "SUCCESS FORMULA"

Well Known Cleveland Exhibitor Declares His Keeping On the Lookout Continually For Something Better Has Brought Him to the Front Rank in the Theatre Field

"Give the best you have always, and in the most pleasing manner, and keep continually on the lookout for something better."

That is the policy which is explanatory of the impetus which has carried A. L. Freedman of Cleveland, O., in six years from a person who had never had anything to do with a motion picture theatre to one who holds a picture theatre second to none as a successful purveyor to the public of cinema entertainment. Six years ago he decided to enter the exhibiting field. Today he is vice-president of Associated First National Pictures of Ohio, secretary and treasurer of the Metropolitan Cleveland Company and secretary-treasurer of the Atlas Amusement Company. The last two companies control the Metropolitan, Knickerbocker, Lakewood and Colonial theatres in Cleveland. The Metropolitan and Knickerbocker are among the city's finest first-run houses.

"Were I to attempt to point out the mistake most frequently made by exhibitors who have come under my attention," said Mr. Freedman, I would say that it was the one of paying too much attention to precedent. The art of motion picture presentation to the public at the present time looks to be pretty well developed, but I venture to predict that within ten years at least 60 per cent of the things that are now a part and parcel of a show will be obsolete—replaced by things that are just beginning to be done now or other things as yet unthought of.

"Exhibitors who have been longer in the game than I have know how many times the millennium in presentation has been reached. Every time some exhibitor brings forth something new and novel, something appealing, it is accepted as being the last word by the majority. The minority, however, realize the truth—that the purveying of motion pictures to the public is an art of which hardly the rudiments are yet known. Progress will keep up in the future as rapidly as it has in the past, and it is up to any exhibitor who has an idea—no matter how radical—to try it out not only for the sake of his own progress, but for the development of the whole of the craft."

"Naturally there are many ideas that will look good on paper that when tried out will prove themselves worthless. There are others, however, that may not look so good in theory, but which may work out 100 per cent in practice. The only exhibitor who is really stagnant is the one who won't try out his own ideas because it has never been done before."

Mr. Freedman has "been trying the new stuff" ever since he entered the field. His first venture was six years ago, when, with E. Mandelbaum, now president of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., of Ohio, he took charge of the Knickerbocker. Large orchestras and the other paraphernalia which is now naturally a part of a first-class theatre were then to be talked about. Some thought it would be a good thing and some thought it wouldn't. Mr. Freedman didn't know, but he gave the plan a thorough try-out, with the result that the Knickerbocker is the pioneer in Cleveland of "larger" presentations. Through this fact the house has gained a place among fans that makes it one of the most valuable properties in the West. It has been associated with the best in motion picture so long that it is affectionately known as "The Knick" and has a patronage all its own.

It was not in connection with the Knickerbocker, however, that Mr. Freedman became known in the Ohio film circles. The Metropolitan, the second of the big first-run houses which he controlled by the companies with which he is connected, is the theatre which made its name for him. The Metropolitan was originally constructed by two enthusiastic lovers of grand opera in Cleveland. There were not enough in the city who appreciated opera to make the venture a paying one and the Metropolitan was soon on the market. Freedman enterprises. Nearly everything in the amusement line was tried out in the big house without success and the fine large edifice was soon given the name of a theatrical "Lemon."

Then Mr. Freedman leased it for motion pictures. The anvil chorus started, but after it had been opened a few weeks under the new management the "knocking" was very subdued. He had employed the same orchestra which had filled the Knickerbocker, that of "giving the best he had," which meant an orchestra large enough to fill the far corners of the big house, in every "grand opera" presentation. Clevelander's have responded to the call of big pictures presented in a big way and the Metropolitan has been paying from the day it was opened as a motion picture house.

Russell Going West

To Form New Units

Capital Will Have Five-Part Comedy-Dramas to Issue Within Short Time

W. D. Russell of Capital Film Company leaves Chicago on February 15 for Hollywood, Calif., to complete negotiations for three new producing units to supply product for Capital distribution.

A series of five-part comedy-dramas featuring a well-known feminine actress and a series of five-reel melodramas of rural type, also featuring a feminine star, will be added to Capital's distribution schedule.

Promise Thirty-six Films

The three new units will supply Capital with thirty-six additional publications annually. The names of the stars obtained will be announced shortly. Production will begin immediately Mr. Russell arrives on the Coast.

Mr. Russell only recently returned from the West, where he made preliminary arrangements for the new producing units. During this trip he had opportunity to investigate the production situation. He says:

Declares Rumors Baseless

"There are rumors of slumps, unemployment and other disagreeable situations being carried through various channels to those concerned in the motion picture industry. I have personally discovered a great deal of this propaganda and a great deal of these rumors are unfounded.

There is no slump. But there is a plan to take a fresh look at the situation on new roads to build up a finer industry on a more stable foundation. Every person in the industry should applaud himself a committee of one to fight the creeping propaganda."

Robertson-Cole Opens New Home In Its Thirteen-Story Building

Handicap of Limited Space Is Removed by Taking Over Top Six Floors of Modern Structure—Quarters Now Meet All Needs

Robertson-Cole is the recipient of scores of wires and letters of congratulation on its removal to its new home, 723 7th avenue, New York City. The process of arranging offices in the new thirteen-story home office building is now completed and the company, during the past week, has been receiving countless friends in the various lines of motion picture work who have united in congratulating it upon the appearance and practicability of the new structure.

Robertson-Cole is one of the first distributing companies to occupy its own home office building. It is also one of the first companies which houses all the executive and administrative branches of its business in the same building. Work on the new structure was begun late last spring. Of the thirteen floors in the building six are occupied by Robertson-Cole. The rest will be rented to various commercial concerns which are now bidding for space.

Layout Is Announced

Robertson-Cole occupies the building as follows: On the eighty-eighth floor is situated the Robertson-Cole New York Exchange, which distributes film for this territory. The ninth floor is also situated various clerical offices. The tenth floor is devoted to the executive offices, including those of R. S. Cole, head of the organization, and of Mr. S. Kirkpatrick, vice president and general manager of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation. On the eleventh floor are situated the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation offices and offices of the publicity department and those of the auditing department.

On the twelfth floor the foreign department of Robertson-Cole has its offices. On the thirteenth avenue side of this floor are situated various company film pictures which will be projected for the pleasure of buyers and for the purpose of the exchange. The fourteenth floor is devoted to a stock department, where supplies and accessories of all sorts are stored.

Three of the latest high-speed passenger elevators serve the building. They are situated on the north side and are reached through the 7th avenue entrance. The freight elevator is situated on the east side of the building and is reached through the 45th street entrance.

Has Been Cramped for Space

For many months, in fact, throughout its existence, Robertson-Cole has been forced to struggle under the handicap of certain home office difficulties. It has been evident that the company, if it was to be able to continue on the business of distributing the best possible pictures now that it occupies its own home office building, the plans were laid out with the need of the company in mind, and it will be ideally situated henceforth to give a maximum service to the exhibitors who are playing its pictures. The New York exchange in particular will be better equipped henceforth to care for the needs of its extensive patronage.

The new Robertson-Cole building is entirely fireproof. Its materials were concrete, steel and other building metals. Every precaution known to modern building art is taken to make it safe. There is a Universal sprinkler system and the film vaults are surrounded by a special room which renders them absolutely impervious to fire.

The great need of the Robertson-Cole building was seen again and again during the past few months as departments became crowded and new ones were created. This handicap is eliminated through the great amount of space which the completion of the new building makes available for the company.

Neilan Finishes His Spectacular Production Of Parrish Story

Marshall Neilan has finished shooting on the most spectacular production he has ever attempted, "Bob Hampton of Placer," an adaptation from the Randall Parrish book. Reports indicate that this film is the most artistic offering staged by Mr. Neilan.

In this picture the director has a plot that is of particular dramatic intensity and, in addition, calls for unusually beautiful natural backgrounds. In order to get this atmosphere, he took his entire producing organization to Glacier Park, Montana, and later to Fort Huacheca, Arizona.

A cast that might well be termed an all-star aggregation includes James Kirkwood, Wesley Barry, Marjorie Daw, Pat O'Grady, Walt Byrd, Dutch Critten- den, Charles West, Tom Gallery, Priscilla Bonner and other popular artists. The work of cutting and assembling is progressing under Mr. Neilan's personal direction, with the assistance of Marion Faxon, assistant editor, and George Grey, film editor. It will be turned over to Associated First National on February 15 for publication in March.

"The Price of Silence"

First Sunrise Pictures Will be Published Soon

To go with the first Sunrise Pictures Corporation publication, "The Price of Silence," will be "The Price of Silence," taken from the novel, "At the Mercy of Tiburien," by Augusta J. Evans Wilson, author of "St. Elmo." Will be other oil paintings of the star, Peggy Hyland, in addition to many other accessories that usually come with a film production of this caliber.

Because of the delay in the arrival of the negative from California, bookings which have been made by S. Rubenstein, New York exchange manager, are being temporarily held up.

Educational Obtains Second Hines Series Distributing Company Claims Larger Sums Are to be Spent on Pictures

E. W. Hammons, president of Educational Films Corporation of America, this week authorized the announcement that a contract had been signed with Master Films, Inc., whereby Educational acquires, a second series of Torchy comedies, made from the stories by Sewell Ford and starring Johnny Hines. This will be the second year of the distribution of these pictures through Educational exchanges.

The current February Torchy publication is Torchy's Night Hood," the eighth of the series, while the ninth and March issue, "Torchi's Big Lead," already has been delivered to Educational. Work has been started on the tenth picture, which completes the first contract, and on April 1 the initial delivery under the second contract for twelve pictures will be made.

According to Educational, the new contract calls for the expenditure of larger sums on the production of these comedies than in the past. Charles C. Burr is president of Master Films, which controls the entire screen right to the Sewell Ford stories through the publisher, E. J. Clode.

The initial general publication of "Torchy," the first of the series, was made through Educational Exchanges on July 11, though it has been given a pre-release showing at the Strand theatre, New York, some weeks previously. It was followed by "Torchy Comes Through," "Torchy in High," "Torchy's Millions," "Torchy Turned Cupid," "Torchy's Double Triumph" and "Torchy Mixes In."

Manilla Martens to Tour Nation Making Anti-Censorship Speeches

C. B. C. Film Company Backing Effort to Enlist Theatre Fans in Fight Against Threatened Legislation in Many States

Independents will fight tooth and nail the curtailment of all privileges of freedom, an end toward which legislators are steadily tending.

With Sunday blue laws and drastic film censorship the issues of the day, the film industry is marshaling all its powerful forces, and announcement comes from the offices of the C. B. C. Film Company that it stands ready to do anything and everything in its power to uphold the cause of personal liberty.

Star Will Make Tour

By way of proof of this, it is announced that Manilla Martens has arrived from the west coast this week and is soon to start on an extensive tour planned by Joe Brandt, president of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, to appear personally in theatres throughout the country in connection with the subject of film censorship. Miss Martens, who is the well known and popular heroine of the super-serial "A Son of Tarzan," will tell audiences of films of theatre just what censorship will mean to them, and to secure first-hand information on their reaction toward it.

This, according to Mr. Brandt, is a new angle on the question and one that will bear close and intensive study. According to Mr. Brandt it has heretofore been the exhibitor's side of the question that has been most closely considered and it is his belief that, since the public is, after all, the ultimate consumer of motion pictures, it should know exactly what censorship will mean, and its wishes and views should be taken into full account on the matter.

Miss Martens, therefore, has planned to establish close personal touch with theatre audiences. It is planned that in several of the theatres in which she is to appear, a vote will be taken in which the real sentiment of the audience will be learned. This, it is believed, is the real weapon with which to fight drastic censorship.

May Take Straw Votes

Miss Martens arrived from the coast on Monday and makes the initial appearance on her tour February 20 at Philadelphia. With this tour the second gun in this phase of the fight against curtailment of liberties under the supervision of Mr. Brandt will be fired, since it was he who made it possible for Franklin Farnum to accomplish the excellent work he is doing by appearing personally to talk against the proposed Sunday blue law legislation.

"This is no time for waiting," says Mr. Brandt. "There are too many bug-bears springing up in the film world for any of us to be wasting time."

Fox Is Introducing Goodwin As a Star

The elevation to stardom of Harold Goodwin by William Fox is being announced to the film world by Fox Film Corporation through a folder devoted to pictures and reading matter about the new star.

The folder carries as well the announcement of Goodwin's first starring vehicle, which is called "Oliver Twist, Jr.," and is a modernized and Americanized version of Dickens' immortal story.

Superba Comedies to Eliminate Suggestive Productions Will Be Issued by Celebrated Players Film Corporation

A series of one-reel comedies will be presented by Superba Comedies, Inc., under the general management of Jay Hunt, who is supervising and directing these pictures.

While these comedies will be full of laughable situations to please the general public, it is guaranteed that nothing offensive or suggestive will be introduced that might offend the finer taste of a cultured audience.

Hunt Is Well Known

Jay Hunt, well-known comedian, has been connected with the film industry for the last ten years and was for a long time a director for Thomas H. Ince.

Seeing the increasing need of clean-cut domestic comedies, Hunt and his associates of Superba Comedies Corporation are busy with production at their studio, 6040 Sunset boulevard, Los Angeles.

Stories by Bennett

Most of the stories are written by Frederick Bennett, well-known war correspondent and newspaperman.

The Superba company, with I. B. Reuben as its president and N. Nathan as general manager and vice-president, will distribute through Celebrated Players Film Corporation.

Goldwyn Sales Force in Readiness for Big Drive

Under the direction of A. S. Aronson, vice-president and general sales manager of Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, the Goldwyn sales organization, operating from twenty-two branch exchanges, is keyed up for an energetic sales drive on the Winter and Spring issues of this company.

Operators Suffer Burns In Theatre Fire in East

PITTSBURGH, PA.—Two men were burned and patrons thrown into a panic when a fire flare-up recently during a show at the Pastime theatre, 62 Herron avenue. Emmett Serena and Robert Kosmel, who were trapped in the operator's booth, were the victims of the burns. The damage amounted to about $500.
Use Radiophones to Interchange Music

Omaha Theatres Attract Wide Interest During “Heliotrope” Run

By using radiophones for orchestration in two houses under one management, John Loveridge of the Rialto theatre, Omaha, Neb., established an innovation for motion picture theatres and added another chapter to the growing list of exploitation devices by which the public can be enticed into a motion picture theatre.

Executed by R. C. Gary

The stunt, which was worked in cooperation with the exploitation campaign planned and executed by R. C. Gary, exploitation representative for the Omaha territory of Paramount Pictures, created a distinct sensation. The radiophones were installed from the stages of the Rialto theatre, which was showing "Heliotrope" and the Strand theatre. Amplifiers had been connected to every seat in the two houses.

The orchestra played alternately at the two theatres, but by means of the radiophones and amplifiers it was possible for both audiences to hear the music constantly, first directly before the seats and then from the other theatre.

Novelty Brings Crowds

The big value of the idea, of course, lay in the exploitation possibilities of such a novelty. Manager Loveridge and Gary had discounted this in advance and their paper and newspaper advertising for days in advance had played up the fact that this would be the first time such an experiment had been tried in a theatre in Omaha. The novelty angle alone brought large crowds to the house.

WINSTON CHURCHILL’S VIRILE NOVEL SCREENED

Pathe’s January Returns Compare Well With Records of a Year Ago

Declares Receipts Show That if There Was Slump The Latter Part of 1920 That Condition No Longer Exists in Industry

Pathe reports that returns for January of this year indicate that any slump which might have prevailed during the latter part of 1920 no longer exists.

In checking up the returns for January, the various departmental sales managers find a very favorable comparison with the records of the same month last year. As a matter of fact, the January returns, including all short subjects, features and serials, were so gratifying as to brook no doubt that the upturn certainly was reached in the first month of this year.

High-Class Films Issued

From all sections of the country this cheerfulness is reflected.

High-class productions have been responsible for Pathé’s fine January record, it is believed by the company. No other period in Pathé affairs can show a more formidable array of features than was published during January, and will be issued during February.

Beginning with "That Girl Montana," a Blanche Sweet production, this period is marked by the issuance of such attractions as H. B. Warner in "When We Were Twenty-one"; Edgar Lewis’ “The Sage Hen,” and Benjamin B. Hampton’s "The Killer.”

"The Devil" Published

First publication on the Pathé schedule for February is the screen version of the famous stage play, "The Devil," in which Associated Exhibitors introduces George Arliss as a screen star. This production was slated for distribution on February 6.

Three weeks prior to that date it began to prove its box office power. First records went at the Strand, New York; then at Shea’s Criterion, in Boston, where great success was held over for the second week’s showing.

Also in February Associated Exhibitors publishes through Pathé the Edward Jose production, “What Women Will Do.” Early indications are that this vivid melodrama will win more success for Associated Exhibitors.

Advance Booking Heavy

Advance bookings on "The Avenging Arrow," the Ruth Roland serial for March publication, have been heavy.

"Double Adventure," the new Charles Hutchison stunt serial, made its debut on January 23 and is another strong factor in the indications of the new upturn of business.

New subjects that had a big share in the January returns were the Tom Santschi Westerns and the Holman Day series of Maine woods dramas.

Horizon Pictures Offers

Norma Talmadge Features

With a suite of offices on the second floor of the Times building, New York, Horizon Pictures, the new company headed by Franklyn E. Backer, has opened operations.

The first pictures announced are a series of fourteen Norma Talmadge two-reelers, to be issued one every two weeks beginning at an early date and available to independent exchanges. Hopp Hadley, who is in charge of re-editing, avers that they present Norma Talmadge in some of the most interesting roles she has ever played.

Arrow Ready With Second

Jack Hoxie Five Reeler

The second Jack Hoxie five-reel western feature, "Cyclone Bliss," has been issued to the independent state right exchanges. The third Jack Hoxie feature is under course of production and will be delivered to Arrow within the next two weeks. There will be four pictures in this series and the two that have been delivered have been received with enthusiasm, according to Arrow, by all the exchanges who have contracted for the series.

Selznick Endeavoring to Make News "Greatest in the World"

Company Declares That Latest Publication Shows Evidence of Efforts Being Exerted in This Direction

Selznick Enterprises points out that Selznick News No. 10-B has evidence of the tremendous efforts being exerted to make the news, edited by E. V. Dur- ling under the supervision of Alyn and David Selznick, "the greatest news weekly in the world." In the eleven pictorial items that comprise the reel practically everything of interest to picture patrons has been edited with extreme care and in the trend of unfolding each succeeding item enhances the value of that which preceded it.

Shows Democratic Conference

The first news shows enthusiasm about Shrewsbury River, New Jersey, ma- nufacturing old-fashioned sail- propelled ice boats, dozens of which New Englanders prefer the modern, up-to-date aero sled. The second pictorial offering reveals a group of Democrats, including Chicago Governor Cap in speech- making and discussing matters as guests of A. Mitchell Palmer. In the next scenes a Selznick cameraman, by the use of a clever trick, shows officials of the city of Cambridge how a letter "H" will look in front of the entrance to Harvard College.

Pictures Georgette Cohan

Who's who in the news brings to light Georgette Cohan, daughter of George M., and Judge Florence Allen, the only woman judge in America on the bench. Miss Allen's first act was to sentence a man for life.

Other interesting items include scenes of a fifty-pound baby born to the popular society matron, Mrs. Yak; the seven Russian children recently adopted by mural McCulley, paying a visit to Josephus Daniels; New York society de- ciding to call a halt on sensational cos- tumes, with the result coming in appearing at an exclusive affair of Cupid's ball: America's new national game of golf in full swing; St. George golf courses; notable trans-Atlantic trav- elers, Sir Ernest Shackleton, antarctic explorer, and Mrs. Sheridan, who made her voyage to America; the first views of a $3 tailor made suit, which will mark the final blow to protruding tailors, and the spreading of the Buddhist religion in America.

Universal Is Preparing To Make More Comedies To Meet Growing Demand

Universal recently has increased its short comedy output by several hundred per cent, reports from Universal City de- clare.

Instead of the one-reel Star comedy which heretofore has figured in the Uni- versal weekly schedule of publications, four comedies now are under way at Uni- versal City.

Universal's first move to build up its comedy output was the installation of a new chief comedy man, Bert Hatton. His first job is to get the most out of every scenario. He is William Lord Wright, well known as an author of books on the motion picture. A new comedy unit was organized with William Beaudine at its head, as supervisor and director, aided by Frank Roland Conklin, writer, and W. Scott Darling, scenarist. The new two-reelers being made by Lyons and Moran are also an added feature, the Universal comedy program, while Joe Martin is again before the Universal camera for a series of short comedies.

Famous Players Lists Eight Productions for Publication This Month

S. R. Kent, general manager of distribution for Famous Players Lasky Corporation, announces eight features for publication in February. They are:

"Kismet" Makes Record in Chicago at the Ziegfeld

Having swept America from East to West, and broken records from the Strand theatre, New York City, to Tally's theatre, Los Angeles, "Kismet," the Rob- erson-Cole special starring Ottis Skinner, is making a record in Chicago, where it has been shown at the Ziegfeld theatre. The business which completely overflowed the theatre. After his opening, Roderic Loston of Ziegfield wired to Robertson-Cole as follows: "'Kismet' went over so big that my only regret is that Ziegfeld theatre is not five times as big. It broke my heart to see people waiting away. Got wonderful publicity from all news- papers. Ziegfeld theatre never saw such crowds since it was built. Police men on the beat had a hard time keeping the automobilies in line. Best wishes."

Hatton Makes Features On Cooperative Basis

C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation has purchased four new two-reel Western pictures featuring C. Edward Hatton, produced on the West Coast.

With retribution the watchdog in the form of Pat Murphy, C. B. C. Hatton conceived the idea of cooperation in risk and reward as the probable solution of difficulties. Gathering about him a group ofpicture men agreed to act without pay until films were sold, he rented studio space and expended enough money to cover mechanical necessities. On this basis, they made four two-reel pictures. The first of these will shortly be issued as part of the series of "Star Ranch Westerns" being handled by C. B. C.
Laemmle and Cochrane Together in West First Time in Several Years
Arrival of Two Important Officials Indicates That Universal Is Entering Upon a Larger Schedule of Production

For the first time since the opening of Universal City eight years ago, both Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, and R. H. Cochrane, vice-president, are at Universal's West Coast studios together. It marks the first time Mr. Cochrane has been to Universal City in several years.

The presence of the important film men on the West Coast indicates that Universal is entering upon a larger picture making schedule in preparation for next season's film needs. In the opinion of the Universal heads, next fall will see the business in a new prosperity peak.

Arrive Simultaneously
Mr. Cochrane timed his arrival in Los Angeles to correspond with Mr. Laemmle's arrival from Cuba, where the latter has been watching the work of Eddie Polo's serial company. The Universal vice-president was accompanied west by his family, and intends to remain at Los Angeles for a considerable length of time. Mr. Laemmle will remain at Universal City all winter.

The presence of Mr. Cochrane in California marks a new departure in the management of Universal. Hereafter, either Mr. Laemmle or Mr. Cochrane will be at Universal City nearly all the time. When Mr. Laemmle is in the East, Mr. Cochrane will be in the West, and vice versa. This will absolutely assure complete and economical production end of the Universal organization and the executive and distributing ends. This arrangement, it is believed, will assure 100 per cent efficiency at the West Coast plant and make for better pictures.

Special Nears Completion
It is expected that Mr. Laemmle and his chief aid will be together at Universal City during the completion of the next big Universal-Jewel production, now approaching its final phases—the costly and elaborate photodrama of Monte Carlo, "Foolish Wives," written and directed by Erich Von Stroheim.

This picture is said to be the biggest thing by far ever attempted by Universal. It is expected to rank foremost among the pictures of all times. One million dollars is being invested by Universal in the film, it is said. The sets alone have cost in the neighborhood of half a million.

After "Foolish Wives" the Universal studio staff will turn its attention to two new Universal-Jewel productions, "False Colors," the Edwin Levin story in which Priscilla Dean is to be starred, and "Fanny Herself," by Edna Ferber, with which Tod Browning will follow his latest success, "Outside the Law," the big Dean melodrama.

It is announced that the following will contribute to the film: Charles Dana Gibson, James Montgomery Flagg, Thomas L. Masson, Oliver Herford, Carolyn Wells, Wallace Irwin, W. A. Masson, George Ade, Irvin S. Cobb, Don Marquis, Meredith Nicholson, Dr. Frank Crane, Maxfield Parrish, Raleigh Enright, Elliot Keen, Coles Phillips, Frieh, Montague Glass, Glynus Williams and others to be announced from time to time.

"Sunset" Jones Proving Popular; Claims American

The popularity of "Flying A" specials as box office attractions is being demonstrated by the advance booking reports on "Sunset and Jones" received by the American's Chicago headquarters from all their branches, the distributors report.

The photo play is said to lend itself readily to exploitation. The intrigues are daring train holdups, that have been so prevalent of late, the subject upon which the theme is based. This story of fast action is laid in the West. A special book containing press matter and exploitation suggestions, together with a general outline of the advertising material will soon be off the press ready to send to the exhibitors.

Hampton in Reply to Cohen Says Public Dictates Type of Pictures

Benjamin B. Hampton, whose recent article in a national magazine on "Too Much Sex Stuff in the Movies" created wide comment within the motion picture industry, has replied to Sydney S. Cohen, president of the M. P. T. O. A.

He declares that the public, and not the exhibitor or producer, selects the type of picture to be shown, adding that he is unalterably opposed to political censorship and other so-called "reform measures" from without the industry. His reply in part is as follows:

"The big point I am trying to drive home in my magazine article is this: motion picture producers and exhibitors are servants of the public. The entire responsibility rests on the public, if the public wants sex pictures they must have them, and they will have them. If the public does not want sex pictures they will not get them. The theatres and producers will respond promptly to the demands of the public. I deal extensively with this point in a long telegram to Wilbur F. Graffs, copy of which is attached hereto.

"The second big point is this: the motion picture art and industry is a factor of incalculable value in American life. Sincere, intelligent reformers, animated by high motives, not animated by desire merely for notoriety will work earnestly to strengthen, broaden and deepen the power of motion picture theatres. They will do this solely for common good, and for the benefit of mankind. Again I refer to my telegram to Mr. Graffs.

"We have nothing to apologize for. There is no reason why we should shrink around in secret and try to be covert and subtle in our actions. We are public servants. We are ready and willing to use our producing facilities to make none but clean pictures, and our theatres are willing to exhibit none but clean pictures, if and when the public tells us they want this class of product. No new laws are needed. No attacks from reformers are needed. All that is needed is intelligent and earnest expression of opinion from theatre patrons to theatre owners.

"Let us lay aside, at least temporarily, all the small internal disagreements. Let us forget the petty incidents of trading between producers, distributor and exhibitor. Let us present a united front to the elements that are laboring to obtain legislation that will cripple us or ruin us."

Fox Transfers Men

(STORY TO EXHIBITORS HERALD)

ST. LOUIS, MO., Feb. 8.—Walter D. Shafer, manager of the William Fox Liberty theatre, has been transferred to the managership of the Detroit Washington, also under Fox control. Joseph McDonald of Detroit is scheduled to assume charge of the Liberty. The change for the sudden transfer could not be ascertained.

“MAN—WOMAN—MARRIAGE” DREW CROWDS

Thousands braved the zero weather of Jan. 24 to see the Allen Holubar-First National production at the Regent theatre, Paterson, N. J., on the first night of the showing.

31,741 Patrons See Allen Holubar’s Latest During Its Paterson Showing

“Man, Woman, Marriage,” starring Dorothy Phillips, the Allen Holubar contribution to Associated First National Pictures’ first group of Big Five productions established a city record for attendance during its week’s premiere at the Regent theatre in Paterson, N. J. In the eighteen performances during the six days’ run the box office registered an actual paid attendance of 31,741 people.

The previous record of attendance for the Regent was 31,198 during a six days’ showing on the previous special exploitation was used in establishing this earlier record and nearly twice the amount of money was spent in advertising as was used on “Man, Woman, Marriage” in bringing the attendance up to the figure which falls short of the record established by the Allen Holubar production by over 300 admissions.

Advertise for Week

The advertising given the Big Five production started with a full page in the theatre program for the week preceding the opening. The newspaper advertising, which started on the Wednesday preceding the opening and consisted of eight or ten small teaser ads each one column and varying in size between an inch and an inch and a half. On Friday display advertising two column, six inches in size was used in all of the papers. Saturday the space was increased to quarter page size.

A special rotogravure section was used in the Sunday Chronicle, two pages of which were devoted to the production, and in addition a half page of display was used in the theatrical section. The picture opened the following day when the last large display advertising was used in the one evening paper on Monday, a quarter page in size. For the week of the run small two-inch one-column readers were used in all of the newspapers.

Use 100 One-Sheets

The outdoor advertising consisted of the regular 100-one-sheet stands. In addition to this, Manager Charles L. Dooley employed ten 24-sheet stands. His first billing on these were special printed yellow and black sheets merely announcing: “The World’s Greatest Picture Is Coming to Paterson.”

Watch This Space for Announcement of Dates.

He left these in place until five days before the opening, when they were replaced with the special 24-sheet posters prepared by M. Leone Bracker, the noted illustrator.

Ad Expenditure, $478

Two thousand tack cards featuring the milestone insignia of the production which distinguished all the newspaper advertising. The special facsimile lobby display of the seven Bracker posters prepared especially for the production completed the advertising given the picture. Mr. Dooley used $478 in advertising. The Regent is a 2,200-seat house, and the admission prices are from 10 to 30 cents.

Open Arkansas Playhouse

CAMDEN, Ark.—Work on the Hauber-Gen. Camden’s new $25,000 picture playhouse, is practically completed, and the house will be formally opened on January 23. O. C. Hauber, of Pine Bluff, is head of the company, which also owns theatres in Conway and England.

Transfer Theatre Outfit

PEARL RIVER, N. Y.—La Forest Hopper of Pearl River and A. R. Keuhn of Pearl River, who built the Westwood theatre, have purchased the Casino at Westwood and moved the outfit to Pearl River theatre. There is rumor of a new theatre to be opened here soon.

Super Picture Will Stimulate Interest In Southern Plan

Plans are now well under way toward the completion of the stupendous Stone Mountain memorial to the Confederacy in Atlanta, and the latest scheme unfolded is the production of a super-motion picture to be filmed in and around Atlanta and Stone Mountain.

Stone Mountain is located about fifteen miles from Atlanta, and is the largest solid rock on the face of the earth, not excluding Gibraltar. Its area is more than a mile high and several miles around the base. It is of the finest gray granite, and the proposal to carve out of the solid core, has been announced by one of the directors to the Confederacy was made in 1913.

With the return of Autonz Bordgum, sculptor, to take over the work, accompanied by Prince Alfonso Louis de Bourbon, famous patron of arts and half brother to the King of Spain, interest has been renewed.

Prince de Bourbon plans to produce a gigantic motion picture embodying the tragedy of the “Lost Cause,” and releases not only for the financial gains but chiefly to arouse interest in the memorial. He has written the story and it will be directed by one of the most distinguished directors in the business with a cast of established motion picture players. It is estimated that the cost of this production will run to from $65,000 to $70,000 and work is expected to start in the near future.

“Our Mutual Friend” to Be Presented in America

“Our Mutual Friend,” the Nordisk production of Charles Dickens’ quaint familiar story, has been received at the offices of Chester Beecroft, 501 Fifth avenue, New York, where its production for American presentation is under way.

This picture is acclaimed the outstanding success of the current season in Europe. It has met with the same extraordinary degree of success in London, Paris, Vienna, Prague, and Athens, with its variously translated titles, as it did in Copenhagen, where it was produced. Beecroft has arranged with best known directors and has the picture for its New York showing.

Texas Exhibitor Given Anniversary Greetings

Gus Peterson of the Strawn opera house and the Cozy Corner theatre of Strawn, Texas, recently celebrated his tenth anniversary as a 100 per cent Universal exhibitor. He was the recipient of congratulatory letters and telegrams from officials of Consolidated Film Company, which distributes Universal, and from officials of the Universal home office in New York.

DIGEST of PICTURES of the WEEK

"I DO not think," a Washington, D. C., distributor recently declared to a Sunday Star reporter, "that children's morals are being corrupted by photoplays to the extent claimed. Statistics gathered by the industry show conclusively that the motion picture houses draw an almost infinitesimal amount of their support from the patronage of children. In cooperation with a worthy woman's organization aiming to educate and uplift children through the pictures, the experiment was tried of showing pictures at a certain house free on one or two days of the week, at a five-cent rate on others and at a ten-cent rate on others.

"On the free days we had capacity audiences, with long waiting lines in the street; on the five-cent days the lines disappeared and the audiences were not so compact; and on the ten-cent days it was difficult to find a child in the audience. When Johnny can get something for nothing Johnny is on hand, whether he wants it or not; but when Johnny has to surrender his nickel or his dime, Johnny has something else within his craving than a wicked photoplay."

And what holds good for Washington is pretty much the same the country over. The majority of children throughout the country attend picture shows with their parents and the exhibitor, realizing that if he offends them he is bound to lose their trade, is watching his step and booking only productions which he knows are wholesome, clean entertainment.

"THE MONEY CHANGERS" (Pathe) offers a gripping and stirring melodrama of high grade having to do with the marketing of opium among the Chinese by an American merchant. Intensely interesting and entertaining. A difficult theme handled delicately. Human and at times humorous. A good picture.

"PRINCESS JONES" (Vitagraph) offers a new star, Alice Calhoun, an ingénue. The story of a village maid mistaken for a Russian princess. Tepid of plot, but pleasantly presented. Modicum of entertainment value. Star pretty and graceful, but not particularly compelling.

"A SHOCKING NIGHT" (Universal) is the last of the quintet of five-reelers Lyons and Moran have made for Universal. The hackneyed bedroom-mixup plot, developed with only a fair degree of fun. Attractively staged and well acted.

"IMMORTALITY" (Goebel) is an Italian production that tells the story of the life of Christ. A beautiful production, highly artistic and reverent, skillfully enacted. A superior production and worthy of lavish commendation. A good Sunday or Lenten feature.

"WORLDS APART" (Selznick) is the latest Eugene O'Brien feature. A society drama, strong of opening situation and development to climax, but weakening in conclusion. Star good looking and skillful, and one who has wide drawing power everywhere. Good entertainment value.

"LOVE, HONOR AND BEHAVE" (First National) is feature length Sennett slapstick of the best type. It surpasses "Married Life" in plot and incident appeal. Charles Murray and Ford Sterling have done no better work than in the present production, and where Sennett comedies are popular or elsewhere the feature should prove thoroughly satisfactory in entertainment and box office power.

"THE KENTUCKIANS" (Paramount) adapted from John Fox, Jr.'s popular novel of the life of Kentucky mountaineers loses much of its charm by being transferred to the screen. Monte Blue has the leading role and while it has some beautifully photographed backgrounds, there is a redundancy of subtitles that detracts from the story's value.

"THE BIG PUNCH" (Fox) is a western romance with Buck Jones in the role of a circuit rider. A splendid cast appears in his support and the picture should please as a program offering. It is well directed and the very well acted story contains elements of popular appeal that are sure fire.

"THE BRANDED SOUL" (Stoll), a melodrama based on the dual identity idea. The story, while improbable, is interesting because of the unusual treatment. It was adapted from the novel "The Iron Stair." Reginald Fox essays the role of a roysterer and his twin brother a minister.
CHARLES RAY IN OLD SWIMMIN' HOLE
(First National)
This is a typical Charles Ray production and one of the most humorously appealing features presented for some time. Simple of trend and ordinary of events, but certain to strike response in the heart of the picture-going public.
Directed by Sam de Grasse.
Charles Ray scores again in "The Old Swimmin'-Hole." It is typically Ray, typically Riley and a regular, wholesome boy's story.
There, in brief, you have the character of this feature. It was suggested by the James Whitcomb Riley poem and it is presented in a manner to enhance all the charm of the Riley rhyme. The introduction of character is made in a school boy's irregular spelling on a slate. There are no subtitles in the picture. This marks an advance in film making. Their absence is not realized for some time after the feature has proceeded, a certain indication that it has been skilfully welded together without them and their place supplied by good acting.

The theme of the picture is a light one—just the pleasant little love story of a country schoolboy and girl in the era of the youth of Tom Sawyer.
Ezra Hull, the lad so inimitably impersonated by Ray, is one of a band of boys who play and scrap together, with a background of charming country scenes, roadways, timberland, brooks and "the old swimmin'-hole." Ezra fishes in the brook, robs an orchard and throws suspicion upon his pastor for the deed; he courts a pretty little girl in a school-time campaign that is captivating, and is in turn lost and longed for by a pig-tailed damsel of ten years. He "speaks a piece," the while a white mouse cavorts about his clothes. He connives against the teacher, who expels him from school. He is one of a band of "pirates" and learns to smoke in a weirdly lighted cave. He is the center of wild disporting about the swimming hole and is led into a series of lively adventures at the school picnic. All of these happenings he comments upon in his diary, a touch of by-play that is an exceedingly clever one.

Children will laugh with elders over the fun it purveys. There will be an unqualified challenge to the youth that still lives in every adult to dislike this picture if they can! Cynical they must be to do that. It is a thoroughly artistic, thoroughly refreshing picture of things commonplace but dear to the heart of the whole American nation, and it is safe to prognosticate that this will be one of the Ray pictures longest remembered.

SPECIAL CAST IN THE BRANDED SOUL
(Stoll Film Corp.)
A melodrama based on the dual identity idea and while improbable, is nevertheless interesting because of the unusual treatment. It conforms to the Stoll standard.
If the cry for plausibility isn't raised in the case of this picture, "The Branded Soul" will be voted an interesting bit of entertainment. Its improbability lies in the projection of two characters, a roysterer and a minister, who, being twin brothers, look so much alike that were it not for their garb it would be impossible to distinguish one from the other. Both love the same girl, with the roysterer the favored suitor. And because the roysterer is the favored one, the minister deliberately and maliciously "frames" his brother, thus sending him to prison and clearing the way for his own marriage to the girl. It is asking considerable of one to believe that there can be two men so much alike that the girl in the case cannot tell them apart; but it is going the limit to ask the spectator to accept a character who would deliberately send his own twin brother to the penitentiary.
Yet, withal such improbability, the picture has a good measure of entertainment value, since it is well handled and is given an interesting twist. This twist comes into being when the convicted brother escapes from prison only to meet the remorseful minister. They change places, but the grafting chief warden becomes aware of the substitution and threatens to expose the roysterer, who has fallen into his brother's footsteps and become a minister. Suspense is added by reason of the fact that while the criminal is alive the two lovers must remain apart. The obstacle is removed when the prisoner kills the warden and then himself. So the moral that the evil doer must inevitably bear his punishment is achieved.
Production, direction, continuity, acting, all have been looked after in a workmanlike manner. The scenes of Dart—morrow prison are particularly effective, as are the shots taken in a heavy fog.

Reginald Fox essays the dual role of the happy-go-lucky brother and the minister, and is supported by Madge Stuart, Frank Petley, H. Agar Lyons, J. Edwards-Barber, D. D. Lyall and Dalton Somers.

The story is an adaptation from the novel, "The Iron Stair," by Rita. F. Martin Thornton wrote the scenario and directed the production.

ALICE CALHOUN IN
PRINCESS JONES (VITAGRAPH)

A tale of youth and love, light as this-ledown in weight of plot, but pleasantly performed, forms the first vehicle for this new ingenue star of Vitagraph, Alice Calhoun. It has a moderate degree of entertainment value and is pleasingly presented, although there is a trite trend throughout and many of the stock-in-trade plays and by-plays are employed. The star plays gracefully, but is at no time particularly appealing, the while she is sweet and winsome. The role is one demanding a different personality from hers. Vincent Coleman as the young lover is likable and plays well. Helen Dubois as Mathilda, an elderly spinster, does creditable work, as does Joe Burke as the girl's uncle. Sada Mullen appears as the real princess of the story to good advantage.

The story is that of Princess Jones, a little village girl, whose mother gave her the odd surname because of her conviction that she "should have been a princess." To her home there comes one Arthur Arlington, seeking material for his masterpiece of the brush in the village quietness. A worried father employs a detective to trace the youth and learns that he has been buying an expensive gown and paying for rooms at an exclusive hostelry for "Princess Jones." She, insisting upon her vacation, is being mistaken for a real Russian princess. Father and son meet in her apartment, and the showdown comes with the capture of the Princess by plotter against the Russian. The usual happy ending tops this off.

SPECIAL CAST IN
THE MONEY CHANGERS (PATHE)

Here is a feature above the average in many ways. Primarily, its plot is so well developed, with its action speeded along at such satisfying rate, that the interest is caught at the beginning and held to the final flash. Also, its cast plays with a naturalness and moderation of dramatic skill, even in the most stirring moments, that its work is to be highly complimented. It is high class melodrama, well modulated, smooth-flowing. Important scenes are set in society backgrounds in a Chinese eating palace and about a settlement house. Surroundings, are at all times interesting and attractive.

The story concerns Hugh Gordon, owner of a drug corporation which is marketing drugs among the Chinese, with a chop suey palace the distributing headquarters. Lucy Hegian, a society girl, who has active interest in welfare work. Also, comes the slum, in Gordon's fiancée. The latter spends much time with Mary Holmes, an habitue of the Chinatown joint. Robert Martin, a reporter, conducts an investigation of the drug trafficing and loves Lucy. Monk Mullen, a reformed gangster, is made the tool of Bordone, but doublecrosses him and gives the evidence into Martin's hands that convicts Gordon. There is aitating climax and tragic ending and Martin wins the love of Lucy.

Clyde Adams plays the part of Lucy Regan with commendable poise and naturalness. Robert McCall is well cast in the role of Gordon, and Roy Stewart is a particularly good choice for the reporter. Audrey Chapman, Betty Bryce, Pauline Petri, Gladys Webb, Harvey Clark, Stanton Heck and Gertrude Claire are others of the cast.

High spots of humor color the feature throughout and relieve the intensity of the dramatic in the by-play that centers about a colored youth employed about the settlement house. An analysis of headquarters that he stages, with scenes from "Uncle Tom's Cabin," will bring the heartiest of laughter. Jack Williams, negro comedian, plays the part.

CLYDE COOK IN ALL WRONG (FOX)

Clyde Cook, who so precariously risked his popularity in "The Huntsman," has come back strong in "All Wrong." He puts over some of the most thoroughly original and laugh-provoking bits that have ever been offered. There is less of the contrivance—which some of it is very cleverly done at that—and more of the real comedian. As a soldier he represents a character that will afford endless fun for the ex-soldier and get wave after wave of laughter from others. Scenes in which he drills as a "rookie", those wherein he appears as a guard with a gringo on the Mexican border and runs into a gang of bootleggers, will get a shout. A baize that alternately rests in Mexico as a legitimate business and then in the States as a "blind pig," is another hit. The whole is one of the best slapstick comedies available at this time.

SENNETT PLAYERS IN
ASTRAY FROM THE STEERAGE (PARAMOUNT)

Louise Fazenda, Billy Bevan and the clever Sennett youngsters supply the bulk of the lively fun in this comedy. In two reels take the three from the time of their landing as emigrants until they attain sudden wealth in the form of a reward for catching a liquor smuggler. There are many humorous stunts with the baggage aboard the boat and on the express wagon which carries it to the place where the family expects to be employed as servants. The baby supplies some of the best fun. The work of Miss Fazenda is particularly praiseworthy and the whole is clean and snappy.
LIDA LYS IN IMMORTALITY
(GOEBEL)
The story of the life of Christ reverently and very artistically told in picture story. The best presentation of the New Testament theme that has yet come to the screen. Rare artistry is combined with stage skill and beauty of surroundings. An excellent picture.

Here, in the reviewer's opinion, is the best religious film that has come to the screen in all its history, Passion Plays and other great spectacular Bible plays not excepted. It is a superior picture, and the exhibitor who books it should hear nothing but praise of it. He can promise a great deal for it and meet his expectations.

It affords vast opportunities for exploitation, but care should be made to keep them on the high plane of the feature itself. Music will have an important bearing on the appeal of the feature, and if a program of sacred songs and familiar hymns is played on the organ throughout, as it followed the showing of the picture at Barbee's Loop theatre, Chicago, it will add a great deal to the performance. A tie-up with religious institutions should bring good results and mutual satisfaction.

The picture has many merits. Chief among these, the performance of the actor that tells the story of the life of the Matter is faithfully kept in continuity that binds the whole in a smooth-flowing series of events. They are told largely with the apex of important scenes suggested by or reproduced from the old masters. The Annunciation, the Last Supper, the Transfiguration and other scenes are enticingly lovely in their tasteful, delicately charming presentation after this plan. Scenes were taken in Egypt and Jerusalem on the original spots where the events, according to history, transpired. They are always caught by the camera with a high degree of artistry. Costuming is graceful of line and harmonious of color.

The picture is an Italian production Lida Lys, acclaimed the "Mary Pickford" of that country, doubtless earns her title more by reason of widespread popularity than by any resemblance she may hold to the American favorite. She is of the Madonna type and is very beautiful. The part of the Saviour is taken with the most satisfactory interpretation and appearance. Picture an actor who can ever brought it to. There are hundreds of excellently directed people in the big scenes—caravans, mobs scenes and the like. The camel trains, the pyramids and palms, sphinx and desert sands of Egypt make some of the most charming of the backgrounds.

SPECIAL CAST IN THE KENTUCKIANS
(PARAMOUNT)
John Fox, Jr.'s novel of Kentucky people reproduced on the screen in a talky, spiritless form.

The big thing in the novel, "The Kentuckians," was the keen understanding of the author, John Fox, Jr., of the psychology of the Kentucky mountaineer. This should have been the big thing in the picture, but the spirit of the book was missed by a wide margin, thus making the picture nothing more than a listless tale with only occasional touches of dramatic life, told with the aid of innumerable sub-titles. And these titles are by no means a paragon of the title writer's art. Many of the quoted titles are unnecessary while those of the descriptive sort are written in a manner so stilted that it jars. Even if the titles of the latter classification were taken bodily from the author's text they are out of place in the picture because the spirit of the picture is different than that of the book.

The theme of the story is the good influence of woman upon man. Inspired by the daughter of the Governor, an ambitionless assemblyman with proud antecedents is transformed into a purposeful man; while a mountaineer, with the spirit of feudal f-actions in him, becomes a champion of law and order. The incidents leading to these conclusions being involved besides listless never really seize one. Only once does one respond to any extent and that is during the march of the band of mountaineers to the jail to free one of their number. Though but fairly well done it is the most effective bit in the picture. It is an incident that will always hold a share of popular appeal.

In one respect the picture is uncommonly fine. Its exterior backgrounds are beautiful and the photographic composition delightful. It is to be regretted that because of obvious painted backgrounds the sum total of this phase could not have been one hundred per cent.

The picture is a Charles Maigne production. Monte Blue plays the mountaineer; Wilfred Lytell, the Blue Grass scon, and Diana Allen the Governor's daughter.
BUCK JONES IN

THE BIG PUNCH

(FOX)

A Western romance with the star relinquishing his cowboy role to play a circuit rider in a story of tried and proven popular values. A good standard program offering.

In forsaking his familiar cowboy role to portray the hero of this Western romance, by Jules G. Furthman, Buck Jones isn’t likely to lose any friends. The vehicle selected for his assumption of a character somewhat new to him is of such texture that the star’s success in making the change was pretty well assured at the start.

“The Big Punch” is material that has been tested and found to possess popular appeal. The story has served the screen with variations before and though convenience is often resorted to to carry it to the desired outcome, the inherent values are not to be denied. Workman-like direction, even continuity and good acting help the retelling considerably.

The story is of a youthful Western rancher, who falls into the meshes of the law when he tries to effect the escape of a drunken brother and two pals, sought for murder. In this act he is prompted by his love for his mother, whom he wishes to shield from the far-reaching consequences of the crime. On the way to the penitentiary he meets a Salvation Army lassie, who is coveted by “Flash” McGraw, the owner of a gambling hall. A romance springs up between them. Soon after the rancher’s term expires, the brother and his two pals escape from the penitentiary. The rancher, now a circuit rider, takes them under his wing and gradually brings them back to manhood. Coming to preach in his home town, the rancher is jeered by McGraw and his satellites. The Salvation Army girl is lured into McGraw’s room. She is being attacked when McGraw’s discarded woman carries the message of the lassie’s plight to the circuit rider. There is a fight, the discarded woman proves that McGraw was the perpetrator of the murder, and the strands are tied together for a happy ending.

Besides Buck Jones, the cast includes Barbara Bedford, George Seignmann, Jack Curtis, Jack McDonald, Al Fremont, Jennie Lee and Irene Hunt. “The Big Punch” should please as a program picture.

SENNETT PLAYERS IN

LOVE, HONOR AND BEHAVE

(FIRST NATIONAL)

Five reels of compactly assembled comedy. Mack Sennett at his best. A travesty upon matrimony and divorce presented in a form that is its own safeguard against the giving of offense to the most hypercritical. Typical American humor, healthy, robust, pointed.

The feature length comedy slapstick is shown at its best in “Love, Honor and Behave.” The production provides exhibitors with exactly the material required for a genuine test of the entertainment form, a test which should be made.

Charles Murray, Ford Sterling and Phylis Haver are the principals. Murray as a judge on the bench, relating to a young married couple seeking a divorce; a colorful narrative of an incident in his own life which convinces them that they should abandon their mission, scores repeatedly in incidents and situations surpassing in humorous appeal anything that he has done in the past. Ford Sterling, as an erring husband, contributes almost an equal measure of good comedy. Phylis Haver has less to do, but does it capably, while supporting members, many of whom score individual triumphs, are altogether as the most exciting would have them.

Stripped of its humorous elements, the plot is one of former body and better construction than many that serve producers of feature drama. Clothied with these, and many innovations are disclosed in the footage, the plot serves a better purpose.

It is difficult to conceive of a theatre wherein the production, plainly represented as Sennett comedy in advertising, should not prove considerably more than satisfactory entertainment.

LYONS AND MORAN IN

A SHOCKING NIGHT

(UNIVERSAL)

The final five-reel feature made by this pair of funsters for Universal. Only moderately amusing, although well staged and well acted. Action and fun drag too much to be effective. Will please Lyons-Moran admirers and offer a fair degree of entertainment to others.

Directed by the stars.

A quartet of young people, impersonated by Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, Alta Allen and Lillian Hall, with a Montana “wild cat” in the person of a vigorous elderly bachelor, in reality Lionel Belmore, furnish the humor for this farce comedy. It is played with liveliness and grace, but lacks the pep that would make it snappier and brighter.

The important situation is made the bedroom mixup employed so often and in this instance it is drawn out to an extent that will be tiresome to the average viewer. The feminine members of the cast are pretty, wear clever clothes and play with much skill. The work of Belmore is more appealing than that of the stars, although their contribution is in no way displeasing.

The story has to do with the changed positions of two couples—the Harcourts, who are married, and Elizabeth Lane and Richard Thayer, who are engaged. To aid him in putting over a contract for financial backing with a Montana millionaire, Harcourt persuades Thayer and Elizabeth to pose as himself and wife while he and his wife take the places of discharged servants. Complex situations begin with the coming of the man from Montana, but all is straightened out in the end.

STAR AND TWO WELL-KNOWN SUPPORTING PLAYERS

Left to right—Mahlon Hamilton, male lead; Louise Glaum, starring in “I Am the Woman,” and Ruth Stonehouse, engaged to support her in the J. Parker Read Jr. production for Associated Producers.
New York Notes About Film Folk

By J. B.

NEW YORK CITY, Feb. 5, 1921.

"Jim" Grainger is now "kidding" the exhibitor for Charlie Chaplin. He says the contracts are coming in so fast that it requires night work to keep track of them.

"The Lone Wolf of Broadway" isn't the only hungry advertising solicitor nowadays. You should see the pack fight for a bone. It's a regular gang fight most of the time.

Joe Sameth doesn't begrudge Abe Lincoln his birthday but he thinks any day but Saturday would have been better. Me too.

Roy McCareel is cutting "Our Mutual Friend" for Chester Beergrot. This picture will soon be advertised so I will refrain from showing the hand at this time.

Nat Vinegar of Long Branch, New Jersey, blew into town last week to look things over. Nat runs the Grand down at the Branch and runs it well. He's a regular showman and is full of ideas which he puts into practice.

Edie Bons, Commodore of the Alamo Boat Club and special representative of C. L. Chester, when he is not yachting, is back in San Francisco. The Commodore will remain at the Golden Gate City for one week and will then head south for the city of the angels.

JOSEPH SEIDER took a leading part in the Hoover drive. He served 291 1/2 theatres free of charge, during the drive and aside from his free delivery service he gave the entire proceeds of the LeRoy and Pearl theatres to the committee. Good work, Joe!

FRANK O. MILLER, who has been doing important things in the way of selling plays for screen purposes for the Century Play Company, is doubling in brass just now, officiating as business manager for the Chicago Opera Company at the Manhattan Opera House, which he formerly managed for several years.

Captain CLAUDE COLLINS of the U. S. aviation service, zoomed down and captured LILA LEE. Lila confirmed the report and further stated that the wedding wouldn't take place for a year. Probably wants to see if the captain can keep his feet on the ground.

CUPID recently shot his dart into the heart of BUSTER KEATON and fell on the neck of NATALIE TALMADGE. He whispered "Will you be mine?" And she said, "Yes," Just like that. She is to become a June bride.

GEORGE KONINGSWALD and S. MARONDI are to be seen lunching together most any day at a fashionable restaurant on Seventh avenue. Both like a good horse race but it looks Koningswald to beat the Edison Electric Company in a sprint run in the Brooklyn courts not long ago.

The sale of two territories for "The Woman Undone," Elmer J. McGovern's production, which is being sold on the west coast rights market, is reported. F. & R. Film Exchange, the new Finkelstein and Ruben exchange, and the Exchange, the exchange for the states of Minnesota, North and South Dakota, which happens to be the first feature this new company has taken and Mr. Cubberly, manager of the F. & R. exchange, announces that he intends to make this picture his first release. L. C. Baxley of the L. C. Baxley Attractions of Dallas, has the rights for the states of Texas and Arkansas.

COURTENAY FOOTE, the distinguished stage and screen actor, was engaged playing the lead in "The Bronze Bell," a forthcoming Thomas Ince production, is now filming opposite Natalie Talmadge in "The Passion Flower," which he directed. Courtenay Foote plays the part of "Estaban," a Castilian peasant and stepfather of "Alecia," a role which will be played by Miss Talmadge. Eulalie Jensen plays "Raimunda." It is said that Herbert Brenon, who is directing the picture, those Courtenay Foote for the role of "Estaban" after considering thirty or forty applicants for the part. This Spanish story of love and jealousy is in striking contrast to "The Bronze Bell," an adaptation of Louis Joseph Vance's novel which a few years ago was rated as one the year's six best sellers. Courtenay Foote plays a dual role in this picture—an Indian prince and a venturesome American. The story is laid in India and offers an unusual opportunity for lavish production.

Not so long ago HARRY NICHOLS, the Exhibitors Herald field representative, was chasing his car through a quiet little hamlet totally disregarding the signs which read "Incorporated village, speed limit twelve miles." All of a sudden a razor-back cow-calf flagged Nichols and handed him a summons. In the morning Harry breezed into court and as he approached the bench he put on his Chesterfield manner and said, "Good morning, Judge." The judge said, "Fine, twenty-five dollars."

"Inside of the Cup" Opens Fifth Week

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEW YORK, Feb. 8.—Paramount's "The Inside of the Cup," the Cosmopolitan production based upon the sensational novel by Winston Churchill and directed by Albert Capellani, entered upon the fifth week of its engagement at the New York Criterion in February 5, having proved to be one of the biggest box-office successes that the Criterion has yet presented.

So steadily has popular interest in this picture been maintained and so strongly has this interest been reflected in the receipts, Paramount says, that all plans for the picture have been held in abeyance by Managing Director Reisenfeld and "The Inside of the Cup" is likely to be emblazoned in electric lights on Broadway and 44th street for a long time to come.
In the Camera’s Eye

Maurice Tourneur making a good Indian out of Wallace Beery for “The Last of the Mohicans,” his Associated Producers, Inc., feature.

Mahlon Hamilton, popular young leading man now appearing in Goldwyn pictures. Once upon a time, he was upon the stage, supporting Maxine Elliott, and he has appeared in serials for Pathé.

“One trouble with trying to support rambunctious kids,” says Pat O’Malley, the Marshall Neilan player, “is they won’t stay put.” “Dinty” Barry is holding Pat’s head for him which makes it more difficult.

Lady Diana Manners, whom the noted English artist, E. O. Hoppe, declared to be the most beautiful woman in England, has accepted a contract with J. Stuart Blackton to become a film actress.

American

Associated Producers

The Last of the Mohicans, a Maurice Tourneur production.—Wonderful picture. Drew big for three days. Third day bigger than the first. Patrons stated they were more than pleased.—Max Pear, Avon theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Forbidden Thing, an Allan Dwan production.—This is good. Good, clean story. Good acting. Good moral.—W. W. Woltz, Star theatre, Lake City, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

First National

Yes or No, with Norma Talmadge. —It will please, but is not the picture A Daughter of Two Worlds was. Average business.—W. L. Ugo, Crystal theatre, Burlington, Wis.—General patronage.

Peaceful Valley, with Charles Ray.—Very good picture. Played it two days to good business. Repeated on first run—opposition in my territory.—H. Gerhauen, Eden theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y.

What Women Love, with Annette Kellerman.—This is a grand picture. Pleased them all that saw it. The water scenes are wonderful.—Oscar Troyer, Lyric theatre, Rugby, N. D.

The Fighting Shepherdess, with Anita Stewart.—Extra good picture. Anita surely gets me the business. Full house and 100 per cent satisfaction.—G. F. Rediske, Star theatre, Ryegate, Mont.—Small town patronage.

In Search of a Sinner, with Constance Talmadge.—Good entertainment. Weather against me, so did not do what I expected, but not the picture’s fault.—E. C. Brexlinc, Faust theatre, New Richland, Minn.

Passion’s Playground, with Katherine MacDonald.—Best-liked picture Katherine ever appeared in. One cannot get wrong on Katherine and First National.—W. B. Sweezy, Dortha theatre, Manville, N. Y.—Neighborhood patronage.

Bill Apperson’s Boy, with Jack Pickford.—A very good picture. Story laid in the Kentucky backwoods. Good program picture.—J. G. Varnell, Princess theatre, Piedmont, Ala.—Small town patronage.

The River’s End, a Marshall Neillan production.—What we have always wanted and seldom found. A clean, wholesome, exciting, enjoyable plot. Beautiful scenes. Every part splendidly acted, and Marjorie Daw a little sweet-heart. A fine orchestra played to the screen and made a two-night howling success at 50 and 25 cents.—Philip Rand, Rex theatre, Salmon, Idaho.—Small town patronage.

Heart o’ the Hills, with Mary Pickford.—Mary always seems to please and draw for us. This was a very good one.—C. Hales, Lyric theatre, Orange City, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Family Honor, a King Vidor production.—A real picture. A picture that will please 100 per cent.—E. C. Brexlinc, Faust theatre, New Richland, Minn.

The Inferior Sex, with Mildred Harris.—Good program picture. Top price 25c.—Giacoma Bros., Crystal theatre, Tombstone, Ariz.—General patronage.

Go and Get It, a Marshall Neillan production.—This is some picture. Packed them in for two days. Will make anybody money.—Oscar Troyer, Lyric theatre, Rugby, N. D.

Tarzan of the Apes, and The Romance of Tarzan, with Elmo Lincoln.—These are fine. The best business-makers I ever had. Most of my patrons expressed their preference for The Romance of Tarzan.

Heart o’ the Hills, with Mary Pickford.—Some good entertaining picture. Some said it was her best picture, and it sure will please. Big crowd and went away pleased.—A. J. Steggal, Opera House, Fayette, Ia.

Daddy Long Legs, with Mary Pickford.—Our first Pickford picture and pleased at 15c and 25c. Same day.—Dewhirst, Beverly Picture theatre, Beverly, Kan.—Small town patronage.

Tarzan of the Apes, with Elmo Lincoln.—This is sure some picture. Got the business and pleased. Patrons asking that we hurry the showing of The Romance of Tarzan.—C. N. Bartow, Opera House, Medora, Ill.—Small town patronage.

Fox

Drag Harlan, with William Farnum.—Farnum’s best. Drew top heavy house for us.—Hackett & Krauss, Hackett’s theatre, Port Gibson, Miss.—Neighborhood patronage.

Blind Wives, with a special cast.—Opened to biggest business in history of Ridgewood. Continuous capacity business. Hundreds turned away daily. One hundred per cent picture.—S. P. Whit- ing, Ridgewood theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y.

While New York Sleeps, with a special cast.—A good eight-reel special. Drew well and seemed to please everybody.—William Tougat, Star theatre, Carlisle, Ind.—General patronage.

Partners of Fate, with Louise Lovely.—A cracking goodea story that pleased a big crowd so well I held it over an extra day.—Ralph Crocker, Star theatre, Elgin, Ill.—Neighborhood theatre.

The Feud, with Tom Mix.—Would have been a great picture with a real actor like Farnum in the lead, but Mix spoiled it. He can ride, shoot and do stunts, but when it comes to acting he is a joke.—H. Daspit, Atherton theatre, Kentwood, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

Molly and I, with Shirley Mason.—This is very good, as are all of Shirley Mason’s. I ran Her Elephant Man and The Little Wanderer and they were all good.—Elmer B. Peterson, Elk Horn theatre, Elk Horn, Ia.—Small town patronage.

If I Were King, with William Farnum.—A cracking good special, but did not draw as well as expected.—E. A. Baradel, Palace theatre, McGehee, Ark.—Small town patronage.

The Texan, with Tom Mix.—Another one of Mix’s good Westerns. A splendid Western picture.—J. G. Varnell, Princess theatre, Piedmont, Ala.—Small town patronage.

Prairie Trails, with Tom Mix.—Best Mix picture ever run yet, and I have had some good ones.—William Tongate, Star theatre, Carlisle, Ind.—General patronage.

The Deadline, with George Walsh.—Not very high class. Top 25c.—Giacomo Bros., Crystal theatre, Tombstone, Ariz.—Neighborhood patronage.

Beware of the Bride, with Eileen Percy.—This is a good comedy and pleased everybody.—Adolph Kuhn, Pastime theatre, Granville, N. Y.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Orphan, with William Farnum.—Good. Please them all. Fair crowd. He does not draw any extra business, especially adults. Gets out all the kids.—G. F. Rediske, Star theatre, Ryegate, Mont.—Small town patronage.

The White Moll, with Pearl White.—Not a very good picture. Did not please my patrons.—William Tongate, Star theatre, Carlisle, Ind.—General patronage.

Beware of the Bride, with Eileen Percy.—A nice little comedy-drama of about average entertainment value.—George E. Taylor, Idle Hour theatre, Dunlap, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Last of the Dunes, with William Farnum.—A typical Farnum Western. Full of action and will go big where they like their Westerns red hot.—Harold Daspit, Atherton theatre, Kentwood, La.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Flame of Youth, with Shirley Mason.—Good program picture.—William Tongate, Star theatre, Carlisle, Ind.—General patronage.

The Orphan, with William Farnum.—A dandy. You will make no mistake by booking this one. It will please your patrons, and they will tell you so.—Adolph Kuhn, Pastime theatre, Granville, N. Y.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Orphan, with William Farnum.—Another of this star's pictures that is a good Western but not a high class one. Will not go very well with the ladies.—H. Daspit, Atherton theatre, Kentwood, La.—Neighborhood patronage.

Heart Strings, with William Farnum.—It is a good picture, but our patrons like Farnum in a Western.—O. R. Haus, Scenic theatre, Hastings, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Tattlers, with Madlaine Traverse.—Just a program picture. Another one of those dream stories.—A. J. Steggall, Fayette, la.

Goldwyn

Stop Thief, with Tom Moore.—A very good comedy. Moore gets me in a chuckle and gets me business.—W. L. Uglow, Crystal theatre, Burlington, Wis.—General patronage.

The Girl With the Jazz Heart, with Madge Kennedy.—Excellent picture. Star very much liked here, and this picture went over great. Goldwyn pleases the big majority here.—B. F. Sharp, Tumble-In theatre, Sinton, Tex.—Rural patronage.

The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come, with Jack Pickford.—An excellent picture. Will please all classes.—William Tongate, Star theatre, Carlisle, Ind.—General patronage.

Jinx, with Mabel Normand.—A very big picture, presenting Normand in a most pleasing role. Big business for two days. Brought it in a one-day turnover engagement to big business. Book this real box office attraction.—Fred S. Meyer, Palace theatre, Hamilton, O.—Transient patronage.

Jubilo, with Will Rogers.—A crackerjack, brother exhibitors. Goldwyns are nearly always good.—Preston Bros., Emmerich, Neb.—General patronage.

JES CALL ME JIM, with Will Rogers.—I got my cue from "What the Picture Did For Me." The best I ever have run. The people of London say it's "Just good."—Don C. Reed, London theatre, London, Idaho.—Small town patronage.

Jubilo, with Will Rogers.—Very good. Liked by all. Rogers a favorite. Josie Sedgwick does some good acting and if given the chance I think she would make good as a star.—J. H. Hooks, Palace theatre, Thomas, Okla.—Neighborhood patronage.

Sink or Swim, with George Walsh.—Mattine benefit for Hoover Relief Committee didn't do much. Town had been worked too hard by local committee. This one sure starts with a whirlwind and ends with a whiz bang. Go the limit on advertising: it will please any red-blooded American audience. It's a humdinger.—Dr. F. M. Childs, Cozy theatre, Villisca, la.

The Deadline, with George Walsh.—Picture absolutely unsuitable for my town on a Sunday night. I am trying to make Sunday nights pay, not lose money. No business and pleased only the roughnecks. A picture full of suggestiveness does not go at all.—G. F. Rediske, Star theatre, Ryegate, Mont.—Small town patronage.

The Spirit of Good, with Madlaine Traverse.—A good show and well acted by star.—O. R. Haus, Scenic theatre, Hastings, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Orphan, with William Farnum.—A handsome. You will make no mistake by booking this one. It will please your patrons, and they will tell you so.—Adolph Kuhn, Pastime theatre, Granville, N. Y.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Girl From Outside, with a special cast.—This is a fine production. Intense and interesting. Patrons expressed their pleasure in seeing it.—Mrs. James WEBB, Cozy theatre, Union, Ore.—Small town patronage.

The Misfit, Earl, with Louis Ben尼斯on.—Here is a "Joe Dandy" comic drama. Clean in every way and ought to please anywhere.—E. S. Beynon, Cozy theatre, Lake Crystal, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Blooming Angel, with Madge Kennedy.—If they want to kill Kennedy just put her in a few more pictures like this one. Sure is a box office fliver.—Fred S. Meyer, Palace theatre, Hamilton, O.—Transient patronage.

The Brand, a Rex Beach production.—Good Northern picture. A little rough in places.—Oscar Troyer, Lyric theatre, Rugby, N. D.

Help Yourself, with Madge Kennedy.—Will hold for one night only. Personally I thought it good, but second night tells the tale. No business. Play a good comedy with it.—Dr. F. M. Childs, Cozy theatre, Villisca, Ia.

Cupid the Cowpuncher, with Will Rogers.—All the Rogers pictures please. To average business.—W. L. Uglow, Crystal theatre, Burlington, Wis.—General patronage.

The City of Comrades, with Tom Moore.—Very good picture.—Alvin S. Frank, Jewel theatre, Lafayette, Colo.—National patronage.

The Fear Woman, with Pauline Frederick.—The very kind of picture you need when your audiences are fed up on the light pictures. I have passed this one over with my patrons.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy theatre, Winchester, Ind.

The Woman and the Puppet, with Geraldine Farrar.—I had a hunch this was a poor show, and it sure was terrible. I would rather forfeit the deposit than play it.—W. L. Uglow, Crystal theatre, Burlington, Wis.—General patronage.

The World and Its Woman, with Geraldine Farrar.—A good picture, but it failed to go over. Local fans don't seem to like Farrar. Bad business three days.—Fred S. Meyer, Palace theatre, Hamilton, O.—Transient patronage.

Jinx, with Mabel Normand.—Was a fair program at one time. Nothing to rave over at all.—C. Hales, Lyric theatre, Orange City, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

Hodkinson

The U. P. Trail, with Roy Stewart.—Best picture we have ever run. Book it.—Watt & Simons, Bijou theatre, Crookston, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Lord Loves the Irish, with J. Warren Kerrigan.—A good program and one that is sure to please any and all admirers of Kerrigan. Good business two days.—Fred S. Meyer, Palace theatre, Hamilton, O.—Transient patronage.

Sex, with Louis Gaum.—A true to life picture. Splendidly acted. Louise is a wonder.—Watt & Simons, Bijou theatre, Crookston, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

Metro

The Misfit Wife, with Alice Lake.—Fine picture, but should not be classed as a special. Will please any audience. Business fair.—O. E. Pierce, Theatorium theatre, Portland, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Cheater, with May Allison.—Good drama. Well cast. Picture pleased large audience.—Hackett & Krauss, Hackett's theatre, Fort Gibson, Miss.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Best of Luck, with a special cast.—This very clever laughs thrills aeroplane, motorcycle, big seaplane, deep sea diving, excellent photography. Is interesting and educational. My patrons loved it and said so. Ten cents and tax 1 cent; 15 cents and 2 cents.—Dr. F. M. Childs, Cozy theatre, Villisca, Ia.

The Mutiny of the Elsinore, with a special cast.—Rare fine pictures. Pleased all of them.—O. R. Nation, Strand theatre, Davis, Cal.—Small town patronage.

PARLOR, BEDROOM AND BATH, with a special cast.—Since the days of "Si Hopkins," "Ole Swanson" and Old Virginia Cheetos I have followed parts from J. C. Jenkins of Nelgich, Neb., and I never found this old scout of the sand hills off the trail. His censor dope had the kick and they came through rain and sleet and laughed and joshed as they grabbed the pastebills. But listen. It has a thrillwind start, not whiz bang finish. It's as tame as a settin' hen in a wood box. If you use Jenkins' hypo add a nifty two-reeler within the girls kick up your audience will leave as mine did, like from the funeral of a dear departed friend. Prices as usual.—Dr. F. M. Childs, Cozy theatre, Villisca, Ia.

Shore Acres, with Alice Lake.—My patrons made special effort to see me and tell me it was the best show I had ever put on. If you don't use it you are missing a good one.—W. L. Beebe, Opera House, Manitou, Ill.—Small town patronage.

The Right o' Way, with Bert Lytell.—A very big production that gave universal satisfaction. Lytell does start acting in this picture. A sure money-getter. Big business three days.—Fred S. Meyer, Palace theatre, Hamilton, O.—Transient patronage.

The Right of Way, with Bert Lytell.—This picture slow, and a little druggy, but it will have to be classed with the best production of the month.—Mr. and Mrs. James Webb, Cozy theatre, Union, Ore.—Small town patronage.

The Walk-Offs, with May Allison.—Fair.—E. A. Baradel, Palace theatre, McGehee, Ark.—Small town patronage.

Blackmail, with Viola Dana.—Fine picture from all angles, and the boys and girls had a great time.—Mrs. James Webb, Cozy theatre, Union, Ore.—Small town patronage.

Shore Acres, with Alice Lake.—A 100 per cent picture. Do not be afraid to boost it strongly. Patrons liked it and expressed themselves in a way that showed their sincerity.—Mrs. James Webb, Cozy theatre, Union, Ore.—Small town patronage.

The Misfit Wife, with Alice Lake.—One of the best pictures played here. You make no mistake. Book it.—Hackett & Krauss, Hackett's theatre, Portland, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Best of Luck, with special cast.—Just a fair picture. The chief cost of production must have been the gowns, as they sure were beautiful.—W. L. Beebe, Opera House, Manitou, Ill.—Small town patronage.

Please Get Married, with Viola Dana.—A very pleasing program offering. A good box office attraction. Gave entire satisfaction to big audiences two days. By all means book it.—Fred S. Meyer, Palace theatre, Hamilton, O.—Transient patronage.

The Misfit Wife, with Alice Lake.—A picture you can boost to the sky. Raise admission and do most anything. It will please.—F. S. Baradel, Electric theatre, Rockwell City, Ia.

Blackie's Redemption, with Bert Lytell.—Old but good program at that. Lytell always good.—W. C. Whit, Home theatre, Anderson, Cal.—Small town patronage.

The Mutiny of the Elsinore, with Mitchell Lewis.—Fine picture from all angles.—Mitchell is too homely to ever become a great star. They like the 'he' dolls. Business fair.—O. E. Pierce, Theatorium theatre, Portland, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Walk-Offs, with May Allison.—A very ordinary offering. May Allison is popular here, but picture didn't appeal to her many admirers. Fair box office returns.—Fred S. Meyer, Palace theatre, Hamilton, O.—Transient patronage.

Shore Acres, with Alice Lake.—A 100 per cent picture. Do not be afraid to boost it strongly. Patrons liked it and expressed themselves in a way that showed their sincerity.—Mrs. James Webb, Cozy theatre, Union, Ore.—Small town patronage.

special cast.—Good comedy-drama, but not as good as Fair and Warner. Fair business.—O. E. Pierce, Theatatorium theatre, Portland, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

Nothing But the Truth, with Taylor Holmes.—A fair picture to fair business for two days. Nothing to rave about. Just a fairly good program offering.—Fred S. Meyer, Palace theatre, Hamilton, O.—Transient patronage.

Paramount

The Village Sleuth, with Charles Ray.—Good, clean stuff. Ray and plays very popular hero. Top price 5c.—Giocomo Bros., Crystal theatre, Tombstone, Ariz.—General patronage.

The Sins of St. Anthony, with Bryant Washburn.—Washburn great in this picture, and he draws well for us.—Hackett & Krauss, Hackett's theatre, Port Gibson, Miss.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Egg Crate Wallop, with Charles Ray.—Very good. Ray is always good. You cannot go wrong on Charles Ray.—Charles Dale, Topic theatre, Fairair, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

HUCKLEBERRY FINN, with a special cast.—Yes, indeed, a great many who had fought shy of the "movies" just couldn't resist taking a peep at Tom, Huck, Widow Douglas and Aunt Polly. These same laughed the loudest and enjoyed it most. A fine and full evening's entertainment. 10 and 15 cents.—Philip Rand, Rex theatre, Salmon, Idaho.

His House In Order, with Ette Ferguson.—High class.—M. P. Labree, V. I. A. theatre, Crescent City, Fla.—Neighborhood patronage.

Guilt of Love, with Dorothy Dalton.—Opinion on it was favorable. It's a heavy drama with some nice human touches, but Dorothy Dalton can make better pictures.—Alvin S. Frank, Jewel theatre, Lafayette, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Excuse My Dust, with Wallace Reid.—Some of my patrons kicked on this, but I consider it a good picture, and a gratifying change from the general run of pictures, though there is lots of automobile stuff in it.—J. G. Varnell, Princess theatre, Piedmont, Ala.—Small town patronage.

Double Speed, with Wallace Reid.—One of Reid's best pictures. Will please everyone.—Bert Norton, Kozy theatre, Evureka, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Half an Hour, with Dorothy Dalton.—A very good program picture which pleased big business. Top price 25c.—Giocomo Bros., Crystal theatre, Tombstone, Ariz.—General patronage.

The Roaring Road, with Wallace Reid.—A good picture of its kind with plenty of excitement, but the ladies will not go wild over this one.—H. D. pit, Atherton theatre, Kentwood, La.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Make-Believe Wife, with Billie Burke.—Good comedy-drama.—W. Beebe, Opera House, Manito, Ill.—Small town patronage.

The Market of Souls, with Dorothy Dalton.—Everyone said it was the best Dalton picture they ever saw.—W. C. Whit, Home theatre, Anderson, Cal.—Small town patronage.

Her Husband's Friend, with Enid Bennett.—If producers would only get into the frame of mind that would allow them to see beyond the end of their noses and give us more pictures of this kind, sweet as a nut and clear clean through, the woes of the country exhibitor at least would be halved over, and say, "Ain't it a grand a glorious feeling?" A real high class picture, logical story, lots of comedy relief, fine photography, a picture that makes you glad you are an exhibitor.—R. L. Hensler, Bijou theatre, Carrolton, Ill.

The False Road, with Enid Bennett.—Say, brothers, if you want a real honest-to-goodness picture, one that don't care if your patrons are rich or poor, they will like this. The best crook picture we have had for months. Very interesting.—Ed L. Weger, Lyric theatre, Valley Junction, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

Alarm Clock Andy, with Charles Ray.—A star made just for his picture. Our patrons as Forty-Five Minutes From Broadway; in fact, more laughs. Played this with Semion comedy, Passing with the Buck.—O. R. Haus, Scenic theater, Hastings, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

STEPPING OUT, with Enid Bennett.—Boys, here is a grand program which carries a moral. It sure deals with everyday life, and positively will be a treat to your patrons. Niles Welch deserves credit also for putting over this picture. This department is a wonderful help to the small exhibitor, so let's hear from some of you guys.—Raymond Schneider, Midget theatre, Metamora, Ill.—Small town patronage.

The Girl Named Mary, with Marguerite Clark.—Splendid performance of the heartstrings. If they produced more like this one there would be no censorship or agit- ations against moving pictures.—E. N. Biddle, Strand theatre, Paoli, Ind.—Small town patronage.

An Adventure in Hearts, with Robert Warwick.—A splendid picture, but the star does not draw here.—C. H. Thomas, Community theatre, Galva, Ia.—Small town patronage.

The Lucky Man, with Wallace Reid.—You can't go wrong on this picture. It's a wonderful comedy, some very interesting scenes and an army of people at the box.—Raymond Schneider, Matamora, Ill.

Double Speed and Excuse My Dust, with Wallace Reid.—Both good pictures. Wallace a good bet, Frank Allen, Rose theatre, Byron, Ill.—Small town patronage.

The Cradle of Courage, with William Sharfert.—Something different. A Westerner, but a crackerjack. Please everybody.—Royal theatre, Lehi, Utah.—Neighborhood patronage.

Pathé

Half a Chance, with Mahlon Hamilton.—Boys, here is a real special. Splendid picture.—Alvin S. Frank, Jewel theatre, Lafayette, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Other Men's Shoes, an Edgar Lewis production.—Take a tip, brother exhibitors, and book this one. Your patrons will come out and tell you it's the biggest picture they ever saw; or if it's not, certainly a good dandy picture.—Adolph Kohn, Pastime theatre, Granville, N. Y.—Neighborhood patronage.

Established Reputations, with Dolores Cassanelli.—This is the first time this star has been seen here, but she made a hit and the picture pleased 90 per cent of those that saw it.—H. D. pit, Atherton theatre, Kentwood, La.—Neighborhood patronage.

Help Wanted; Male, with Blanche Sweet.—Good. Best Sweet picture yet.—E. Gailey, Crystal theatre, Wayne, Neb.

The House of the Telling Bell, with May McAvoy.—Good picture. Splendid Star draw, more than well for us. Real good attendance.—B. F. Sharp, Tumble In theatre, Sinton, Tex.—Rural patronage.

Smoldering Embers, with Frank Keenan.—Please all. Rain kept crowd
Realart

The Snob, with Wanda Hawley.—Here is a splendid production, with a splendid cast. Business was great. This is a very popular novel and everyone will like it.—James D. Kennedy, Alhambra theatre, Indianapolis, Ind.—Downtown patronage.

Something Different, with Constance Binney.—A good average picture. Did good business on this one.—A. B. Anderson, Pastime theatre, Stratford, S. D.—Neighborhood patronage.

Miss Hobbs, with Wanda Hawley.—Good picture. Pleased nearly all. Book it.—E. E. Gailey, Crystal theatre, Wayne, Neb.

Sinners, with Alice Brady.—A good picture for grown-up people.—M. P. La Bree, V. I. A. theatre, Crescent City, Fla.—Neighborhood patronage.

Something Different, with Constance Binney.—A very, very dreary piece. Nothing worth while in it, but star registers in some mighty pleasing scenes. Can see no excuse for making picture as poor as this one with production as good and as fine a cast as the director had.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy theatre, Winchester, Ind.

Sweet Lavender, with Mary Miles Minter.—A splendid, well-directed picture that pleased a full house. The censor cramped all so this one and you wouldn't so much as get a squawk out of one of them.—F. E. McMillan, Royal theatre, O'Neill, Neb.—Small town patronage.

Anne of Green Gables, with Mary Miles Minter.—One of the best pictures I have seen.—M. P. La Bree, V. I. A. theatre, Crescent City, Fla.—Neighborhood patronage.

Eyes of the Heart, with Mary Miles Minter.—Poor for Minter. Pack 'em in.—O. E. Pierce, Theatreatorium theatre, Portland, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

Heart of the Long Haul, with Wanda Hawley.—A very good picture. Star supported by Harrison Ford. One hundred per cent satisfaction.—H. J. McBeth, Gem theatre, Ord, Neb.

Everslie Susan, with Constance Binney.—Splendid.—M. P. La Bree, V. I. A. theatre, Crescent City, Fla.—Neighborhood patronage.

Oh, Lady, Lady, with Bebe Daniels.—Good as You Never Can Tell. Same type of picture. Pleased 100 per cent. Carry business.—O. E. Pierce, Theatreatorium theatre, Portland, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Luck of the Irish, with a special cast.—Everything and more. Plenty of comedy.—C. H. Johnston, Merriman theatre, Merriman, Neb.—Small town patronage.

Robertson-Cole

The Tong Man, with Sessee Haya-kawa.—This was a good picture. Patrons well pleased.—E. T. Craige, Pastime theatre, Sedevilley, Ind.—Small town patronage.

Big Happiness, with Dustin Farnum.—Those who came to see it thought it a good picture. Star took double role and he sure acted his part good. Poor crowd, but on account of cold and snow.—O. R. Haus, Scenic theatre, Hastings, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Fortune Teller, with Marjorie Rambeau.—Big house. Pleased. Another of the right kind. Top price $5c.—Giacoma Bros., Crystal theatre, Tombstone, Ariz.—General patronage.

The Love Call, with Billie Rhodes.—I did not see it, but comment on it was not favorable. As a rule Billie is good.—Alvin S. Frank, Jewel theatre, Lafayette, Colo.—General patronage.

Poor Relations, with ZaSu Pitts.—Very good. Small towns especially will do well to use such a program.—Mrs. James Web, Cozy theatre, Union, Ore.—Small town patronage.

Beckoning Roads, with Bessie Barris-cale.—Fair picture. Do not have any crowds on R.-C. pictures.—William Tongate, Star theatre, Carlisle, Ind.—General patronage.

The Heart of Twenty, with ZaSu Pitts.—Poorest stuff we get on our program is R.-Cole. Why at this date and age don't they junk this stuff and be up to date? I think this one was staged in Hiram's pasture.—C. Hales, Rivoli theatre, Alton, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

Who's Your Servant? with a special cast.—It's a picture everybody won't like.—O. R. Haus, Scenic theatre, Hastings, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

Selznick

The Figurehead, with Eugene O'Brien.—A very good picture and pleased all. Played to good business.—E. C. Breleim, Faust theatre, New Richmond, Minn.

The Woman Game, with Elaine Ham-merstein.—Good all the way through. We like Miss Hammerstein.—F. E. Sabin, Majestic theatre, Eureka, Mont.—Neighborhood patronage.

His Wife's Money, with Eugene O'Brien.—O'Brien is very popular, but picture is awful. Very ordinary business two days.—Fred S. Meyer, Palace theatre, Hamilton, O.—Transient patronage.

The Point of View, with Elaine Ham-merstein.—This is a very good picture and will please everybody. Had many favorable comments.—Adolph Kohn, Pastime theatre, Granville, N. Y.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Daughter Pays, with Elaine Ham-merstein.—The finest acting that I have had in any picture for some time. The entire cast coming up to expectations. Elaine Hammerstein is what I call an honest-to-goodness girl, and I bill her that way.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy theatre, Winchester, Ind.

Sooner or Later, with Owen Moore.—A very pleasing program offering that gave good satisfaction to fair business for two days.—Fred S. Meyer, Palace theatre, Hamilton, O.—Transient patronage.

A Fool and His Money, with Eugene O'Brien.—A good program picture. O'Brien makes better pictures than this Johnny Hines and support in a scene from "Torchy Mixes In," a new Torchy comedy being distributed by Educational.

One: Fair crowd.—B. F. Sharp, Tumble In theatre, Sinton, Tex.—Rural patronage.

The Poor Simp, with Owen Moore.—Best of this star’s work.—Frank Allen, Rose theatre, Byron, Ill.—Small town patronage.

The Flapper, with Olive Thomas.—A good picture that pleased. Ladies, of course, like one like this more than the men.—Adolph Kohn, Pastime theatre, Granville, N. Y.—Neighborhood patronage.

Greater Than Fame, with Elaine Hammerstein.—A good picture, and good photography. Pleased all.—E. C. Breilie, Faust theatre, New Richland, Minn.

Whispers, with Elaine Hammerstein.—Hammerstein deserves better vehicle to star in. Plot rather tame. Poor business.—E. A. Baradel, Palace theatre McGehee, Ark.—Small town patronage.

Whispers, with Elaine Hammerstein.—A good picture, and pleased my audience.—Adolph Kohn, Pastime theatre, Granville, N. Y.—Neighborhood patronage.

Coax Me, with June Elvidge.—Good comedy-drama.—Harold Daspit, Athen- ton theatre, Kentwood, La.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Isle of Conquest, with Norma Talmadge.—A good picture that gave universal satisfaction. Presents Norma in very pleasing role. Good business three days.—Fred S. Meyer, Palace theatre, Hamilton, O.—Transient patronage.

The World to Live In, with Alice Brady.—Patrons did not like this picture. Fair program picture.—E. C. Breilie, Faust theatre, New Richland, Minn.

Daughter of the West, with Edythe Sterling.—Played in conjunction with “Circus Imps” and packed them in for two days. Advertised as a wild west show and circus.—H. Bachmann, Kos- suth theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y.

She Loves and Lies, with Norma Talmadge.—Very good in every way.—H. H. Billings, Pleasant Hour theatre, Pine Island, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Road Through the Dark, with Clara Kimball Young.—The worst frost I ever had. Was a good picture a few years ago, but war stuff don’t go now.

Many left mad and had me refund their money.—George Eberwine, Auditorium theatre, Marblehead, O.—Small town patronage.

Just Outside the Door, with Edith Hallor.—A very good picture that pleased a fair-sized Saturday crowd.—Adolph Kohn, Pastime theatre, Granville, N. Y.—Neighborhood patronage.

Universal

Rich Girl, Poor Girl, with Gladys Walton.—This picture will give satisfaction anywhere. Miss Walton plays the dual role very nicely. The story is of the “Prince and Pauper” style.—Ed. L. Wegener, Lyric theatre, Valley Junction, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

Once to Every Woman, with Dorothy Phillips.—Best Universal picture I’ve played, but did not draw as much as The Devil’s Passkey.—O. R. Nation, Strand theatre, Davis, Cal.—Small town patronage.

Once to Every Woman, with Dorothy Phillips.—I don’t see how Universal can class this as a special.—W. L. Uglow, Crystal theatre, Burlington, Wis.—General patronage.

Wanted at Headquarters, with Eva Novak.—Fair picture. Could be better.—E. E. Gailey, Crystal theatre, Wayne, Neb.

Wanted at Headquarters, with Eva Novak.—Just an ordinary program picture. One you can play, but do not boost for if you do you will disappoint your patrons.—Spalding Bros., Gem thea- tre, Taylorville, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Under Northern Lights, with a special cast.—Good picture. My patrons liked it.—F. E. Sabin, Majestic theatre, Eureka, Mont.—Neighborhood patronage.

Locked Lips, with Teuru Aoki.—This was a good picture. Drew well and pleased my patrons.—E. T. Graffis, Pastime theatre, Seelyville, Ind.—Small town patronage.

The Girl in 29, with Frank Mayo.—Another good evening wasted. Forget it.—Philip Rand, Rex theatre, Salmon, Idaho.—Small town patronage.

Pink Tights, with Gladys Walton.—This is a wonderful production with a big story that will appeal to everybody. Gladys Walton made a big hit, and I believe with proper direction she will be- come as popular as Mary Pickford. Advertise Pink Tights to the limit, for you won’t disappoint a single patron. Give us more pictures like this one, for these are the kind that break box office rec- ords.—G. W. Evans, Mystic theatre, Madrid, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

Blue Streak McCoy, with Harry Carey.—Leave it to Carey for good pictures.—E. S. Bryon, Cozy theatre, Lake Crystal, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

Marked Men, with Harry Carey.—We believe this an excellent picture, and it caused more talk than any we have run. No matter how good or bad a person is, this picture will make him better.—J. E. Craven, Crystal theatre, Kellogg, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

Overland Red, with Harry Carey—

RICHARD BARTELMESS
Who will play the leading role in "Ex- perience," famous stage drama to be made for Paramount by George Fitzmaurice.

Very good. Pleased 100 per cent. There is some sense to good, clean comedy-dramas of this type.—Alvin S. Frank, Jewel theatre, Lafayette, Colo.—Neigh- borhood patronage.

The Heart of Humanity, with Dorothy Phillips.—This was some picture. Packed the house matinee and night. Patrons well pleased.—E. T. Graffis, Pastime theatre, Seelyville, Ind.—Small town patronage.

The Weaker Vessel, with Mary Mac- laren.—Good picture. Star well liked here.—Lang & Smith, Cobb Opera House, Cobb, Wis.—Neighborhood patronage.

Vitagraph

Dead Men Tell No Tales, with a special cast.—Drew well. Played two days. Very fair picture.—Gus Stamates, Classic theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Courage of Marge O’Donne, with a special cast.—A very good special, but a little too strong a theme. Not as good as The River’s End.—Bert Norton, Kozy theatre, Eureka, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Vengeance of Durand, with Alice Joyce.—Nothing to rave over. We booked it as a special, but it was merely a program picture.—Hackett & Krauss, Hackett’s theatre, Port Gibson, Miss.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Vengeance of Durand, with Alice Joyce.—It is the best picture Alice Joyce ever made, and she sure is beautiful to look upon in this. She looked better as the mother than as the daughter. Took a double role.—O. R. Haus, Scenic theatre, Hastings, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

Dead Men Tell No Tales, with a special cast.—Wonderful picture. Played two days to capacity. Patrons well pleased.—H. Bachmann, Kossuth theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Williams a finished actor.—W. H. Bren-ner, Corner theatre, Winchester, Ind.

Too Many Cures, with Gladys Leslie.
—Just an ordinary picture, but pleased.
—Hackett & Krauss, Hackett's theatre, Fort Gibson, Miss.—Neighborhood patronage.

Specials

Girls Don't Gamble (D. N. Schwab), with David Butler.—Good picture, E. A. Baradel, Palace theatre, McGehee, Ark.—Small town patronage.

Fickle Women (D. N. Schwab), with David Butler.—A very good picture. Everyone will enjoy it. David Butler is a second Charles Ray.—James D. Kendey, Alhambra theatre, Indianapolis, Ind.—Domestic patronage.

—Neighborhood patronage.

Hell's Oasis (Pinnacle), with Neal Hart.—This is a big Western full of pep. If your people like a fast one for a change, this is good.—E. A. Baradel, Wisner theatre, Eldora, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

Smiling All the Way (D. N. Schwab), with David Butler.—Fair program picture that has great appeal and well received.—E. A. Baradel, Palace theatre, McGehee, Ark.—Small town patronage.

Skyfire (Pinnacle), with Neal Hart.—This picture packed my house and caused more favorable comments than any feature in last six months. Advertised the Northern Lights and the picture will surprise you.—Ralph Crocker, Star theatre, Elgin, Ill.

Serials

King of the Circus (Universal), with Eddie Polo.—A real serial with a con-Sistent story. Gets the money, as they like the circus atmosphere. Eddie is a best serials ever made, and we've run a few. A few adults as well as children will enjoy it.—O. H. Haus, Scenic theatre, Hastings, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

Short Subjects

Rolin Comedies (Pathé), with Snu Pollard.—Great. They don't make them any better. Give the little negro credit for his share in making them popular.—E. N. Biddle, strand theatre, Paoli, Ind.—Small town patronage.

Get Out and Get Under and High and Dizzy (Pathé), with Harold Lloyd.—Best comedies I can buy. Worth double re-cipts when Lloyd is on the bill. If you have a religious clientele, book Lloyds for clean comedy.—B. L. Hubbard, Hub theatre, Bishop, Tex.—Neighborhood patronage.

You'll be Surprised (Universal), with Joe Martin.—We ran this with Jinx and it's the only thing that saved the day. Otherwise we'd give back their money.
Joe is O. K.—C. Hales, Lyric theatre, Orange City, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

Seven Bald Pates (Educational), with a special cast.—Some liked this and some didn't care so much for it. I consider it a real good comedy.—J. G. Varnell, Princess theatre, Piedmont, Ala.—Small town patronage.

High and Dizzy (Pathé), with Harold Lloyd.—It's a world-beater. Certainly gets the hearty laughs.—Alvin S. Frank, Jewel theatre, Lafayette, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

London Bobby (Pathé), with Snu Pollard.—This is a good comedy and will get the laughs. Young and old enjoy this one.—G. B. Spalding Bros., Gem theatre, Taylorville, III.—Neighborhood patronage.

Pathé Review.—To my notion the best single on the market. Almost everyone liked it. The slow motion is a novelty not often seen outside a review.—W. C.
Whitt, Home theatre, Anderson, Cal.—
Small town patronage.

Four Times Poole (Educational), with a special cast.—A comedy in every sense of the word. It cannot be beat. Bring on some more.—E. C. Breillean, Faust theatre, New Richland, Minn.

An Eastern Westerner, with Harold Lloyd.—Lots of new stuff in this. Lloyd gets the laughs. A good, clean play worth having.—Clay C. Caperton, Harwood theatre, Harwood, Tex.—Small town patronage.

Edgar's Sunday Courtship (Goldwyn), with Johnny Jones.—A very fine juvenile comedy offering that sent our patrons out talking. Edgar comedies are all good. Booth Tarkington knows human nature and, what is more, he knows how to portray it on the screen.—Fred S.
Meyer, Palace theatre, Hamilton, O.—
Transient patronage.

The Scarecrow (Metro), with Buster Kenton.—Can't be beat. Have run all of Lloyd's, but this is the best ever seen here.—W. L. Beebe, Opera House, Manito, Ill.—Small town patronage.

A Fly Ball (Jester), with Twede Dan.
—This is a good one. You can boost it.
Went big. Somewhat dark in places.
—William Thacher, Royal theatre, Salina, Kan.

Convict 13 (Metro), with Buster Keaton.—A dandy. Went over as good as One Week, or any comedy I have used.
—W. L. Beebe, Opera House, Manito, Ill.
—Small town patronage.

With the Procession in Los Angeles
By Harry Hammond Beall

Miss Katherine Prosser, motion picture editor of the Kansas City Star, is here in the interests of that journal and will spend a month at the studios interviewing motion picture stars.

Anna Yezierska, author of "Hungry Hearts," the picture rights of which have been purchased by Goldwyn, has arrived at the studio to assist in the production of her photoplay.

Elinor Fair, who is being commended for her excellent work with Otis Skinner in "Kismet," has been engaged by Vitagraph to play opposite Earle Williams in a new production temporarily entitled "Lot of the Night."

Lewis S. Stone has been chosen by David Hartford for the leading masculine role in "The Golden Snake," a First National feature, which Hartford is now engaged in making near Truckee, Cal.

Tom Santosschi has completely recovered from the effects of an operation for appendicitis and is at work again on the two-reel "westerns."

The first showing of Catherine Curtis' screen production of Ralph Conover's "The Sky Pilot" was held recently when the picture was pre-viewed by Sol Lesser, western Associated First National chief, and King Vidor, who directed the picture.

Malcolm St. Clair has been signed to a contract by the Comique Film Company, producers of the Buster Keaton Comedies, according to an announcement made this week by Lou Anger, production manager of the firm. St. Clair is to alternate with Eddie Chue in directing Keating. The trio also will collaborate in the preparing of the scripts.

Many prominent screen celebrities attended the formal preview of "The Fire Cat," which was given at Universal City before the picture was shipped to New York for its premier. Edith Roberts, the star of the production, and Norman Dawn, who directed it, entertained their guests at a supper at the Universal City cafe following the showing.

Glenda Walton, Universal's youngest star, who has just finished "The Bobbed Squaw," under the direction of Rollin Suggs, has gone to Coronado to spend a week before returning to Universal City to start work on "A Kentucky Cinderella," F. Hopkinson Smith's well-known romance of the mountain country.

Hoot Gibson is turning out another vigorous two-reel western photodrama at Universal City, under his own direction. It is entitled "The Bronco Kid." Gertrude Olmstead is the leading lady.

Mary Miles Minter has returned from a three-weeks' visit to New York City.

Edward Bennett, former Ince star, has been signed for the leading role in the next picture to be made by the Rockett Film Company. Lloyd Ingram will direct and Ross Fisher will be the cinema photographer.

March 17 may be a lucky day for the Irish, but it is liable to be an unhappy one for Herb Daniels, for that is the date that has been set for her trial in Santa Anna for violating the speed laws of Orange County. Justice Cox of Santa Anna has so far never deviated from his rule of sending those autists who "step on it" to the tune of more than fifty miles an hour to the city bastile for at least ten days. Army and Navy officers, well known politicians and others have tried to escape his clutches, but so far without success, and the eyes of all filmdom will be centered on the activities of the little justice court in the small California town on the date when the Realart star is halted before the court.

Ford Sterling is enjoying a temporary vacation from the motion picture camera and is spending most of his time taking pictures with his still camera. Rosemary Theby is sitting for a series of photographic art studies which the comedian is making and which will be exhibited in New York and abroad. It is a well known fact that Ford Sterling has won innumerable awards for his camera studies and is one of the leading art photographers in America.

Dwight Cleveland, at one time manuscript editor at Universal City, and recently scenario chief at the Jesse R. Hobson studios, has been added to the working staff of the Willits Productions, Inc.

Edward Laemmle is concluding "The Range Rider," a two-reel Western screen play starring Jack Perrin. His chief support is Louise Lorraine.

Little Breezy Eason, the kidde who has become phenomenally popular among the vectorites, will be starred in "Patches," a Universal photodrama which will be directed by his father, Reeves Eason.

Urges Industry Aid in Timber Conservation
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEW YORK, Feb. 8.—That the threatening timber famine and the question of nation-wide reforestation are matters of vital importance to the motion picture industry, was the substance of the theme presented by Hugh P. Baker, secretary of the American Paper and Pulp Association, before the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at the weekly meeting at the Cafe Boulevard, New York, recently.

Asserting that many of the problems of the trade paper, the publicity and advertising departments and the industry as a whole are dependent upon a solution of the paper situation, He declared aggressive methods were necessary to meet the crisis. He urged support for some remedial measure before congress. The measure he specifically advocated is the Snell Bill which has been endorsed by the American Paper and Pulp Association, the A. N. P. A., the United States Chamber of Commerce and other influential organizations for the conservation and recreation of forest supplies.

Remodel in Fond Du Lac
FOND DU LAC, WIS.—The Bijou theatre is undergoing remodeling and redecorating.
Equipment Progress

That the pipe organ has a permanent place in the motion picture theatre is an established fact. It has become even more popular since its possibilities as an augmentation to the symphony orchestra have been learned.

When an exhibitor has gone to the expenditure of several thousands of dollars to equip his house with this instrument, he should then use every means at his disposal of capitalizing this feature with his patrons.

Many exhibitors have done this through obtaining the services of noted musicians to preside at the organ—through making a part of their regular entertainment program an organ recital.

But some of these have made the mistake of over-publicizing the musician, losing sight of the fact that while musicians come and go, the organ is the permanent feature.

The Rialto Theatre at Portland, Oregon, has struck the happy medium in this regard, giving equal prominence to the player and the organ. In this case it is the Wurlitzer organ which is used and the theatre in its publicity lists this part of its program as "popular Wurlitzer concerts."

Undoubtedly the managers of the Rialto are on the right track. They have sold the public on the idea of "Popular Wurlitzer Concerts" and if necessity requires a change in organists, it can be accomplished with much less public notice.

The make of organ is unimportant in this regard—popularize your house and your equipment, not individuals.

The Electric Sign; Its Effectiveness With the Public

Best Evidence That Value of Electrical Advertising Is Appreciated Is Wide Usage

BY C. B. GRAVES

General Sales Manager, Federal Electric Co.

To tell moving picture theatre owners that electric signs will increase their business is like telling geologists that the world is round. It is a truth which is generally recognized, and I doubt if there is any moving picture theatre owner who would dispute it.

The best evidence that the value of electrical advertising is appreciated by moving picture theatre owners is that there are few moving picture theatres of consequence that are not equipped with electrical signs. As merchants of entertainment, one of the first requirements of a successful theatre owner is that he know the psychology of the public mind as related to amusement. A theatre manager who lacks this understanding of the public mind could not hope to be successful.

Let us consider first the attitude of mind of persons attending moving picture shows. Why do they go there? The first reason which would cause them to leave their homes and expend money to enter the theatre would be to be entertained. What then constitutes entertainment to the average individual? It is to relieve his mind from the monotony of every day existence and to permit it to wander in fancy, to live for the time being in a different existence. To state it colloquially, the theatre-goer "wants to get away from himself."

Made Prohibition Possible

The moving picture theatres with their light, music and depictions of romances and adventures, accomplish this. It has often been said, and most persons will agree that there is some truth in it, that moving picture theatres made prohibition possible, because they supplied the craving for relief from every day worries which John Barleycorn supplied as long as his influence lasted. Of course, the ultimate effect of the two forms of diversion are radically different. The moving picture offers diversion in an educational and healthy and often inspiring manner, whereas the result of John Barleycorn's diversions was often harmful.

In filling the public craving for entertainment, which is highly developed in the more complex and thickly populated communities, moving pictures supply a very important public want.

You may ask what all this has to do with electrical advertising. It is this:

Light Attracts People

One of the prime motives governing a person going to a motion picture theatre is to seek cheerfulness, and there is no power which gives cheer quicker than light. Light has always been associated with cheerfulness—as gloom has always been associated with darkness. One of our most primitive instincts is our attraction for light. Various primitive races have worshiped the sun. Poets always sing cheerfully of dawn and sadly of dusk.

A fire built at night during the hottest period of summer will attract persons to it, showing that they are not drawn to its heat, but to its light. All places of amusement have traditionally been associated with light. All public places of amusement have always been illuminated, even before incandescent electric lamps were invented. There still exists in some of the smaller European cities signs lettered in gas jets.

The famous World's Fair held in Chicago in 1893, attended by millions, was a most brilliantly illuminated fair. Throughout the world in all cities, it is always the most brilliantly illuminated streets which draw the greatest crowds and in the streets it is the best lighted shops, cafes.
and theatres which have the greatest attendance.

Electric Sign's Advantage

An illuminated electric sign in front of your motion picture theatre draws the public to it by the mere force of its illumination, but it also has another advantage. You can outline in dazzling letters the name of the star of the play and the name of the play itself. A sign of this kind suspended over the sidewalk can be seen for several blocks on either side. All persons passing by within several blocks' radius can read the name of the star and the play, and if the star is one who interests them or if the play appeals to them, they are then drawn towards the theatre. Arriving in front of the theatre or in its lobby, they will find posters or reproductions of the scenes of the play as well as an inviting warmth caused by the brilliant electric illumination. This gives them the impulse to enter.

The sign served the theatre in two ways. It drew prospective members of the audience by outlining at a distance the name of the star or a play that attracted them, and furthermore, it drew them to the theatre because of its light.

Another great advantage of electric signs for moving picture theatres is that it forms the connecting link between the newspaper advertising and the theatre. That is, a person may read the announcement of a moving picture play in a newspaper, and forget all about it until he sees outlined in illuminated letters the name of the play which he had read about.

One of the best signs for moving picture theatres is the changeable letter sign which outlines the name of the star and play in silver ray letters. This sign has smooth raised letters of milky white gloss on a background of dark steel. The letters are encased in square steel sheets which are quickly and easily moved to build any name. There is an electric bulb behind each letter and the letters are located on either side of the sign. Such a sign, because of the distance at which it can be seen, has a large circulation. The moving picture theatre obtains the most direct and therefore the most valuable advertising at a relatively small expenditure. The silver rays of these signs flash the suggestion of a comfortable, cozy, entertaining theatre to the hundreds and thousands who see it.

THEATRE SEATS PROBLEM

Du Pont Official Declares Leather Substitutes Stand Wear and Tear in Better Shape

Leather substitutes are adapted to the requirements of motion picture theatre seats, and in the opinion of F. W. Wilson of E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., go a long way toward solving the problem of the exhibitor in this regard.

"Seats in the motion picture theatre are subjected to more severe wear, in all probability, than are the seats in any other type of public building," he said.

"These theatres are open nearly every day in the year, including Sundays, in many cities; they are open from noon—sometimes from 10 a.m.—until nearly midnight.

"Children Damage Seats"

"Patrons frequently come in out of the rain in wet clothing. The shows are largely patronized by children who wriggle around in the seats, subjecting them to unusually hard wear.

"All-wood seats, of course, are the most durable, but they are not satisfactory to the fans; they demand a comfortable, upholstered seat except in the cheaper theatres.

"Tapestry and velour seats must frequently be reupholstered because they soon grow shabby and even wear out. This generally means closing the house while repairs are being made, subjecting the proprietor to considerable loss.

Leather Substitute Advantage

"Pyroxylin-coated fabrics (leather substitutes) are especially adapted to the requirements of motion picture theatre seats. Wet clothing does not affect it; wriggling children cannot scuff it or tear it. It is germ-proof and sanitary because it can be washed as easily as a wooden seat. It will probably outwear any other material except wood.

"Theatre owners will find it worth their while to investigate the merits of this material when building, rebuilding or refurbishing."

Akon, O.—Menches Brothers will remodel their Liberty theatre.

Typhoon Extends Its Service
Has Now Established Branch Offices, Factories and Warehouses Throughout the Country

Considerable hardship has confronted the manufacturer of theatre equipment during the past year, principally due to the demoralization of the railroads with the resultant delays in the movement of manufactured materials once they were ready for the consumer.

When it was found that this condition was one not soon to be overcome, the Typhoon Fan Company of New York, manufacturers of the well-known Typhoon cooling and ventilating system, decided immediately to establish branch offices, factories and warehouses throughout the country, so as to overcome not only the long delays in delivery, but also to make it possible to procure raw materials more promptly.

Branch Offices Established
As a result of this action on the part of the Typhoon Fan Company there was established during the past year, offices in Philadelphia, Los Angeles, Chicago and Raleigh, N. C. The year previous saw the establishment in New Orleans, a factory fully equipped to turn out any amount of Typhoon system on short notice.

So far this year new offices have been opened in Chattanooga, Tenn., while others are soon to open in Dallas, Texas, and Atlanta, Ga. Fortunately today for the Typhoon Fan Company, through the addition of these new offices and warehouses, they are in a position to deliver any size equipment on a few days' notice.

Theatre Contractors Delay
For many years there has been a falling amongst theatre building contractors to delay the ordering of certain kinds of theatre equipment and as a result when orders are finally placed delays occur.

The Typhoon Fan Company, however, has anticipated this and are stocking their warehouses with motors and complete equipment, so as to be in a position to make prompt shipment.

Already, it is said, wide awake contractors and theatre owners are beginning to order their Typhoon equipment, leaving the company arranging to take deliveries now, so as to avoid any delay.

It is strongly urged by the company that those contemplating the installation of equipment for use during the summer, secure their Typhoon system, that they take no chances in any possible delays and get their orders in at the earliest possible opportunity.

PROGRESS IN LOBBY ART
Menger, Ring & Weinstein Predict Even Greater Strides in This Important Field

Menger, Ring & Weinstein, pioneers in the manufacture of lobby display frames, who were recently awarded a $25,000 contract at $25,000 contract at Fabric's, Hartford, and a $6,000 contract at Fabian's, Newark, are firm believers that the ultimate in their particular branch of equipment manufacturing has not yet been reached.

Recount Progress Made
In support of this contention they point out the wonderful strides accomplished in the past few years since lobby display frames became an important feature of the theatre.

Take a glance in the arrangement and the manner of display frames and posters in an up-to-date lobby and foyer of a theatre, they say, "and you will at once be impressed with a pleasing richness and uniform arrangement of all display frames on the walls. Posters and photographs being set off with as much care as a well-furnished home would frame its cherished objects of art to bring about artistic atmosphere and harmonize with its surroundings.

The Typhoon lobby Displays Planned
"The architect no more designs a thin metal strip frame to fit into a recess of any old size (neither fitting a proper layout of photographs nor any standard poster size), but he carefully studies the spaces to be devoted for a proper display, and selects the most modern period designs to be part of the decorative scheme of the theatre.

"What a difference when you visualize a lobby of only six or seven years ago. No more mixture of cheap-looking brass and wooden standing frames 'stood up' and 'hung up' anywhere and everywhere. The exhibitor no more depends on the film distributor for the loan of a display board manufactured in large quantities, but orders frames to be manufactured to his very own measure and individuality, having the name of his theatre in raised letters surrounded by beautiful carvings."

E. & J. LANDS BIG CONTRACT
The E. & J. Electric Installation Company has been awarded the contract for the design and installation of the complete equipment in the new automatic developing and printing plant of the Sen Jacq Film Print Company at Fort Lee, N. J.

Work has already been begun by the company on preliminary details and it is expected that the design for the actual work will be completed within a short time.

Can You Qualify for Screen Authorship?

A national educational institution to train photoplaywrights by correspondence during spare time at home has been established in Los Angeles to meet the needs of the motion picture industry.

This institution is directed by experienced writers sponsored by Cecil B. DeMille, Thos. H. Ince and other prominent producers.

The field for photoplaywrights is lucrative and applicants drawn from every walk of life respond to the call.

Only persons naturally endowed with the gift of creative imagination and dramatic insight, however, can hope for success in this profession, and applicants must be selected accordingly.

All applicants, therefore, are requested to apply by mail to Frederick Palmer, Director of Education, for the Palmer Home Test Questionnaire to determine their fitness to undertake this course of vocational training.

This questionnaire, scientifically compiled by Professor Malcolm Shaw MacLean, A.M., formerly a Northwestern University instructor of English composition, in collaboration with H. H. Van Loan, noted photoplay author-producer, is the first test of its kind ever adopted by an educational institution.

The purpose of this questionnaire is to help applicants determine the degree of creative imagination possessed by them and consequently their eligibility to enroll in this curriculum.

If successful in making this home test, the Palmer Plan of Instruction in Photoplay Writing is available to you. Address all inquiries to

Arrow Star Makes Personal Appearances While En Route to California

Ruby De Remer, who is en route to California to make a series of pictures, stopped off in Chicago Feb. 4 and made two personal appearances at loop theatres.

Miss De Remer has just completed two features in the East—"The Way Women Love" and "Luxury"—for the Arrow Film Corporation, and is going to take a short rest at her home in Denver, before proceeding to Los Angeles. The Van Ronkel of the Favorite Players exchange, which is handling the distribution of the Arrow pictures in this territory, and the Arrow company's special representative, J. C. Jossey, together with Ralph Kettering, of Jones, Linick & Schaerer, Louis Frank, state righter, and several trade and newspaper representatives met the film star.

Miss De Remer was recently declared to be the most beautiful blonde in America by the famous French dry-point artist, Paul Helleu. She was accompanied on her trip West by Miss Rose Mints, a screen player, whose home is in Denver, and Miss Grace Parker, also a strikingly pretty blonde. Miss De Remer wore a large diamond engagement ring but would not disclose the lucky one's name.

Restaurant Man to Build Loop Theatre
James Roder, owner of the Union restaurant on Randolph street, a popular Ridita resort, has leased from the Henry Kohn estate the ground and four story building at 10-12 South Clark street, across from the Morrison hotel, and will erect thereon a 300 seat motion picture theatre.
The new house will be known as the Adelphi, and will be remodelled at a cost of $75,000 from plans drawn by Architect K. G. Foster. Mr. Roder expects to open his new theatre about October 1. The theatre proper will be 24 feet by 120 feet and the net rental with taxes and insurance will aggregate $700,000 for the term of twenty-five years from May 1, 1921.

Radio Comes in Handy
The New York office of Universal Film Mfg. Company, desiring to get some information from Acting Manager Morris Hellman, last Friday, in a hurry, used the wireless between the two cities and in exactly six minutes had Mr. Hellman's reply, the message being telephoned to the Consumers building from the Chicago radio station and an answer was immediately dispatched.

Reichenbach in Chicago
Harry Reichenbach, who has been doing special exploitation for "Outside the Law," an Universal-Jewel feature in which Priscilla Dean stars, was in Chicago from Thursday to Saturday last week, arranging preliminary details. He returned to New York Feb. 5 but will be back again Feb. 11 to start his campaign.

Vitagraph Moves
E. F. Tarbell, local manager for Vitagraph, has sent out a neat announcement that on and after Feb. 7 the Chicago exchange will be in the company's new building at 39-43 South Wabash ave. The announcement contains a picture in colors of the new exchange.

Shuberts Pay Big Bonus to J. L. & S. To Retain Theatre
An important loop theatre lease transaction, which caused considerable comment among real estate men, was consummated last week between Jones, Linick & Schaerer and the Shuberts, by which the latter again gai possession of the Garrick theatre on Randolph street for a number of years. The deal cost the New York firm $50,000, however, and thereby hangs a tale.

For a number of years the Garrick theatre has been leased to the Shuberts, at a yearly rental of $45,000. In January, 1920, however, the owners raised the rent to $75,000. The Shuberts demurred, and accordingly the theatre was leased to Jones, Linick & Schaerer, who proposed using it for pictures and vaudeville, while rebuilding the McVickers theatre.
The J. L. & S. lease was for twenty-five years beginning Sept. 1, 1923, at $75,000 a year. The Shuberts have now decided they should retain the Garrick, having but two houses in Chicago, the Garrick and the Princess, and as a consequence will have to pay the film-vaudeville firm $98,938 a year rental, or an aggregate rental of $3,91,503 from Sept. 1, 1923, to April 29, 1945.

In other words the delay in taking the lease offered them a year ago means a loss of $316,000 to the Shuberts. The deal was put through by Aaron J. Jones.

SHOTS AND MISSES

By Mac

We note for the present, at least, that Ab Powell is no longer of the exhibitor fold. Understand the New Rex theatre has been taken over by the syndicate that controls the De Luxe theatre of old street.

The old Loop was busy last week giving the "welcome to our city" greetings to our pal Jack Haag, former manager of the Handbow theatre. Jack tells us he has just disposed of his business (Woodworth competitor) at Rockford, where he has been located for the past three years and expects to don the exhibitor managerial roles, directly pending negotiations are closed.

James Saller, veteran sales representative for the local Vitagraph, resigned last week to become city representative for the Educational Film exchange.

Frank Ishmell, popular Robertson-Cole representative, is busy arranging for his coming birthday anniversary this month. He admits with noticeable modesty to twenty-seven years. Been tough if that natal day had occurred Feb. 28, say us.

Bill Brimmer and Ed Lassing have volunteered their services to Manager E. F. Tabell in the removal of the equipment of Vitagraph to the palatial quarters on South Wabash avenue. Congratulations, boys, very effective method to reduce the waistlines. Incidentally, this duo of petites admit the new fifteen picture contracts, three pictures to a star, are going over like a raging flood.

With the wedding of Miss Bertha Schorrenstadt to Harry Lindenthal at the Hotel Blackstone, Feb. 2, a happy honeymoon, pater Schorrenstadt gave another bit of information to thrill the assembled guests by announcing the engagement of Arthur Schorrenstadt to Miss Dorothy Humann, of 4679 Ellis avenue.

Harry Weiss, president of the Superior Screen exchange, announces his company has acquired some five ones from the Gaumont Company and the Security Pictures Corporation for early release.

James Mulhauser, special representative to Mack Sennett, has been hibernating about the Associated Producer exchange for the past week assisting Manager Sin Goldman in the exploitation of "A Small Town Idol," the premier comedy release for A. P.

The two modest young members of the local Fox exchange, Stan Kelty and E. Loe, claim their company's big feature, "Blind Wives," is practically set in every theatre in Chi. To us it looks as though E. P. Grothe must have had SOMETHING to do with final results.

We just received a confidential tip-off that the chique interests of America are about to boost the price of their product. Better get busy, Clyde Eckhardt, and make arrangements with William Wrigley for your 1921 supplies. Looks like a hard winter is before us.

L. Maynard Schwartz tells us, the "Wedding Blues" and Annette Kerlman in a slow motion film will share the screen with "Dangerous Business," the latest "Connie" Talmaud feature, for the opener at the new Tivoli theatre. With the J. L. & S. chain and Barbee's theatre playing the comedies of the Educational, State-Lake, Majestic and Pastime theatres playing the new Kino-Granis for week runs, seems like this live manager has things coming and going.

Harry Granoff, who receives the cash flow from a string of Illinois theatres at his official headquarters, Orpheum theatre, Rockford, Ill., breezed into the city Feb. 4, and kept the local managers all hyped up on how much better the Rock features are than the other fellows. We give up, Harry. Which are the best?

Harry Reichenbach, that exploitation wizard, and W. S. Deutsch, advertising and publicity manager for Universal, were seen with their heads together for a three hours stretch last Friday, devising plans for putting over "Outside the Law" at Barbee's theatre. Ought to be something good. We shall see what we shall see.

Roderick Ross, who put on "Kismet," the big Robertson-Cole spectacle at the Ziegfeld theatre, is so well pleased with the results thus far obtained at the Mich bowl that he will renew his lease. Which only goes to show that if you concentrate you can put over a good picture and make a lot of money. Which Roderick is doing.

Richard Robertson, Eastern representative for Independent Films Association, had a busy week between New York and Chicago, having been called to the home office on business.

W. VanGelder, who has been connected with the sales staff of Pathé for the past four or five years, has joined the Gollos Enterprises to handle the Indiana territory. Mr. VanGelder is an older-timer in the field, having been with Frank J. Flaherty a year and previous to that was with General Film Company for four years. He will cover the key cities for Gollos Enterprises.

Jossey Is Back

J. C. Jossey, special sales representative for Arrow Film Corporation, who has been in the East since Christmas, returned to Chicago, Feb. 1. He expects to remain in the Central West for some time, handling the two latest Arrow features, "The Way Women Love" and "Luxury."

Lillian Walker Coming

Lillian Walker, who gained fame as a screen star under the Vitagraph banner, is to appear at the Rialto theatre, Chicago, Feb. 14-21, in a short sketch written especially for her. Years ago Miss Walker appeared on the speaking stage as an ingénue in "The Little Organ Grinder" in which Maurice Costello was the leading man. She also appeared in "Ziegfeld's Follies of 1910." She has been in pictures eight years.

Representatives Here

Among the notables who stopped off in Chicago last week were James Mulhauser, Mack Sennett's special representative; C. E. Hauenstein, of the Pacific Film Company, and Jerome Lewis, Vic Kremer's representative.

Frank in Manhattan

Louis Frank, who controls the rights to "The Menace of the Moron" left on Feb. 6 for New York where he will look over several state right features for this territory.

Three of the greatest and most popular box office successes playing at this time in the leading motion picture theatres of the nation, are:

Thomas H. Ince's wonderful production, "LYING LIPS."

Mack Sennett's successor to "Mickey," "A SMALL TOWN IDOL."

Maurice Tourneur's greatest achievement, "THE LAST OF THE MOHICANS."

All three came through one organization—Associated Producers, Inc. All three established standards that all others will find it hard to follow or excel.

When the American Balloonists first reached human habitation in Canada, Educational supplied all the leading newspaper syndicates of the country with still photos of Moose Factory.

EDUCATIONAL alone HAD THEM!

Hundreds of big metropolitan dailies showed Educational's still photos and credited Educational with them!

There has been created a tremendous national interest in this great North Country, where all four of the Hudson's Bay Travel Series were filmed!

No event since the Great War has been given so much newspaper space as the "Lost Balloonists."

The press of the country has focussed national attention on the Northland.

The Hudson's Bay Travel Series combines the up-to-dateness of a news reel with the human interest of a feature and the beauty and grandeur of a scenic!

"THE SERVANT IN THE HOUSE"

PICTURE OFFERS RICH ENTERTAINMENT IN EVERY DEPARTMENT

It has been some time since Charles H. Hays's spiritual drama, "The Servant in the House," first appeared upon the stage. The production, which is now being given in the picture, is a work of tremendous importance because it maintains its original weight, clearness of purpose, and sense of aim in the adaptation of the story to the screen. It is rich in the values of world literature and will be enjoyed to its fullest extent by anyone who has never seen the original. The picture is produced for screen presentation by H. O. Davis, and its sincerity is beyond question. The action is admirably portrayed, especially that of the priest, while the leading role is played with great distinction by the Rev. H. O. Davis. The entire cast is splendidly typed. The production is a big success and will be enjoyed by all who have seen the original.

AN UNUSUAL ATTRACTION
ONE FOR A REAL SHOWMAN TO HANDLE

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The day of the spiritual picture and of pictures with the spiritual touch seems to be here. "The Servant in the House" is positively one of the greatest dramas ever conceived along such lines, and in its transfer to the screen it becomes one of the greatest of picture entertainments—entertainment with a gripping theme backed by it.

In fact there is no doubt about the entertaining power of this picture. It remains merely for the exhibitor to handle this to the best advantage. It is understood that the Federated Film exchanges of America are sure to play this as a road show in some quarters while they will also release it through their own exchanges with the option that they control the method of actual distribution. But if it cannot within reach what it certainly ought to make it, it is nothing far out of the ordinary and something in the way of entertainment that will really send the crowds out feeling better.

Contracts and Play Dates

By MARTIN J. QUIGLEY

The exchanges now face one of the most serious distribution problems that has occurred in the history of the business.

We refer to the existing situation in which practically every distributor, large and small, has sold quantities of product under contract which have not yet reached the theatres because exhibitors have withheld play dates.

The situation is resulting in great confusion in the offices of distributors. Bookings which in the ordinary course of the industry represent product sold have come to be largely meaningless. Instead of being able to gauge future production on data revealed by his booking sheets, the distributor finds himself floundering about without any exact guidance.

The condition has been created largely through the fact that a great number of exhibitors have contracted for a quantity of product which they have been unable to use within the time limit assumed by both the exhibitor and the distributor when the contracts were signed.

The situation is unreasonable and unsound and something must be done to correct it. It remains as a threat to the stability of the business because if the producer is compelled to wait until pictures are actually exhibited he is unable to execute advance plans which will provide for anticipating the requirements of the market and the tastes of the public.

For the stability of the entire industry and for the protection of the various branches of the industry booking agreements cannot be regarded as scraps of paper to be ignored at will. When a picture is contracted for it must be set in for exhibition within a reasonable time limit. Contracting for product that cannot be used may for a time keep it out of the opposition's theatre, but such procedure is so unsound basically that we cannot believe but that it will be found eventually to be a dangerous and unprofitable business.

There is one feature of this matter which is now building up a heavy expense item on the shoulders of the exhibitor. In order to move product it has become necessary for many distributors to undertake what amounts substantially to a secondary selling campaign. Facing a situation in which exhibitors neglect to set in play dates on product that has been contracted for these exchanges have seen it necessary to go out over the territories in a new effort which involves practically the same expense as the original selling campaign. In some instances new departments have been created by distributors for the single purpose of getting into theatres product that has been booked.

The exhibitor of vision will immediately see in this a tendency to higher rentals and the additional cost to him will be an utter economic waste. Distribution costs are of course included in the film rentals bills and this new expense which exchanges are undertaking must eventually fall on the exhibitor.

This situation flies directly in the face of the imperative demands of the times for conservation and more economic administration. It is creating a new and thoroughly unreasonable burden of expense for the industry to shoulder. It is a regrettable backward step coming right at a time when conditions cry for the introduction of sane and reasonable economies.

We do not attempt to fix the responsibility for this situation but merely to point out that the problem is here and that it must be faced and mastered.

It is one of the really grave questions of the moment and we leave it to the good judgment of those in a position to put forth and effect a remedy.
The Associated First National Pictures, Inc., issues a significant statement relative to the Cohen-Brady controversy. Because of its widespread exhibitor affiliations its declaration on this subject is doubly important. This company repudiates the charge that it is a party to any opposition, organized or otherwise, against the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

This statement comes as the first declaration from any company which has been alleged to have been identified with the supposed organized opposition to the theatre owners’ organization. There is no surprise to us in the pronouncement from this group that it is in full sympathy with all legitimate exhibitor organization movements, whether of a national or of a local character. To give credence to the existence of any other attitude would be assuming the absence of common-sense direction in the affairs of the company.

The statement is made on behalf of the Associated First National Pictures that its single aim is to effect a unity of action within the industry in the fight against censorship in order to escape the inevitable fall that is the result of a house divided against itself. If this statement reflects the attitude of the other members of the National Association—and with certain possible exceptions we believe it does—no time should be lost in effecting a working agreement between the various branches of the industry that will actually work.

This publication has steadfastly maintained over a period of years that the one conclusive victory over censorship can only be won in the offices of the producers. A close study of the output of studios during recent years leaves no doubt but that there has been only a very little of the subject matter of pictures that could in any reasonable way be considered objectionable even when viewed from the most strict standards. But it has been this small quantity which, in no way justifies censorship, yet supplies to the advocates of censorship the material with which to keep the agitation alive.
A. H. Woods Organizes Chain
In Five Principal Cities to Exploit Only Feature Films

Announces That Theatres in New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Boston and Detroit Comprise Circuit

MAY INCLUDE PITTSBURGH, LOS ANGELES

The dominant figure in the theatrical world who is sponsoring the circuit of big theatres for the exploitation of costly feature photoplays is A. H. Woods.

While in Chicago last week Mr. Woods confirmed the story published exclusively by EXHIBITORS HERALD on February 12 announcing formation of the circuit and acknowledged his association with the project.

Incorporation papers have been taken out in Delaware under the name of the Theatrical Enterprises of A. H. Woods. Capitalization is for $2,000,000. Mr. Woods is president and Walter Moore of Miner Lithograph Company, is vice president.

The financial backer of the venture is Robert McCormick of McCormick Plow Company of Chicago, and a member of the McCormick family which controls International Harvester Company.

Plans for operation of the circuit as given to EXHIBITORS HERALD by Mr. Woods are in brief to have theatres in the five leading cities of the country, New York, Chicago, Detroit, Philadelphia and Boston. Only productions of high calibre will be booked.

Matinee prices will range from 25 cents to $1. Evening prices will graduate from 50 cents to $2. Fourteen performances a week will prevail.

After complete establishment of the circuit in the cities mentioned in a preceding paragraph, Mr. Woods announced that he would extend his operations to Los Angeles, Pittsburgh and Cleveland. Unless conditions warrant further expansion will not be made, he stated.

In Chicago Woods theatre will be devoted to the silent drama. D. W. Griffith's "Way Down East" is now having a successful run there. In Boston, Philadelphia and Detroit new theatres to seat not less than 1,600 patrons and representing an expenditure of from $500,000 to $650,000 on each will be erected. Mr. Woods stated that he was negotiating for the lease of a large New York house. Speculation has it that the acquisition is either the Lyric or the Forty-fourth Street theatre.

Percentage booking will be the policy of the circuit.

No confirmation is forthcoming of the rumor that D. W. Griffith is associated with Mr. Woods in the enterprise. It is believed that his "Way Down East" will be the first photoplay to make the circuit.

Heraldfore Mr. Woods has confined his activities to the production and exhibition of stage attractions. In his chosen field he has been considered one of the shrewdest of showmen. In assigning the causes for his deviation in part from the field of legitimate attractions he stated:

"The success of 'Way Down East' at Woods theatre in Chicago was one factor entering into my decision to organize a circuit of theatres in the big cities to play nothing but feature photoplays.

"Also, I have discussed the proposition with several of the big men in the motion picture industry and all agree that the time is ripe for just such an enterprise. "Only recently two big producers came to me desirous of obtaining Woods theatre for the exploitation of two exceptional features.

"With my circuit in operation the producer of big features can get a run for his money. Heretofore a producer has built up a patronage at a legitimate house and after seven or eight weeks he has been compelled to book into another theatre and as a result build up a new patronage all because of an existing contract for the use of the former house.

"Such a condition as this will not exist on my circuit. Operation will follow the general scheme of legitimate booking on a percentage plan."

Asked what the policy would be should no feature photoplay be available, Mr. Woods stated:

"I don't believe that such a condition will arise. There is a sufficient number of big pictures being made today to warrant the formation of such a circuit."

That Mr. Woods' venture will meet with the approval of producers is evident from the previous announcements from various manufacturers that certain costly productions would not reach the motion picture theatres until after a lapse of two or three years. A more radical step is noticeable in the advertising for "Way Down East" which reads that it never will be shown in a motion picture theatre.

Another condition which forecast the formation of such a circuit was the inability of some producers to obtain legitimate houses for premiers on big specials.

In the past the policy of playing features only in dramatic houses has met with disfavor among the exhibitors. Looking at the situation from a different angle, Mr. Woods virtually places himself in the field as an exhibitor, specializing in the exhibition of the more costly pictures as other exhibitors specialize in short subjects, Westerns and the like.

Mr. Woods' name will go down as the pioneer in this phase of exhibition, which marks another step in the advancement of the motion picture.
Jenkins' Tin Can "Vote" Deals Blow to Reformers

Nebraska Exhibitors Present Petitions With 100,000 Signatures to Legislators

It was just an ordinary tin can—covered with the canary yellow and blood red label of a chicken lice powder—but with it containing the vote of the people of his own home town on the subject of censorship, J. C. Jenkins of the Auditorium theatre, Neligh, Nebraska, dealt a blow to the "profiteers in morality" sponsoring the bill for censorship of motion pictures that will tell when the day comes to count the sentiments of the various legislators in the state.

It was 11:30 on Tuesday night when Jenkins called on the phone by Stuart Gould, business representative of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Nebraska.

"Daddy Jenkins, I want you down here in Lincoln on Thursday night at 7:30 o'clock to address the joint committees of the house and senate regarding the censorship bill," said Gould.

"I can't do it," said Jenkins. "My business needs me, it's an eight-hour trip from here to Lincoln by train, and I couldn't make a speech anyway," he continued.

"Now, Daddy," pleaded Gould, "you never failed me yet and we don't want oratory. All we want is for you to tell these people what the truth about the small town exhibitor and his ideals for better and cleaner pictures. I want you to appear to show these people that the exhibitor is not nearly as black as he has been painted."

Gould added the voice of A. R. Pramer, president of Nebraska exhibitors' organization, to his own on the phone, and Jenkins agreed to be there.

"What in the world will I tell those fellows," thought Jenkins. "And the next morning he went to the printer in Neligh and got an Australian ballot on the subject of censorship printed.

He took the now statewide known tin can and went to talk to his friends. He got a slit in it and down the street he went.

Every man and woman he met knew Jenkins, knew that his vote was as safe on Jenkins hands as it was on election board of the country's greatest men. They voted. Every business man voted. Just went to publish his way and obtained the vote of the town's one man who was really actively engaged in howling for censorship—that of one of the ministers.

Then he came to Lincoln.

He was given as the basis of his speech the voice of 100,000 Nebraskans as they were enrolled on an immense stack of petitions that the Motion Picture Theatre Owners had obtained.

Jenkins presented them with the simple words "There, gentlemen, is the voice of the people of Nebraska on censorship."

"And here, gentlemen, is the voice of the people of my own home town, Neligh, on censorship of motion pictures," and Jenkins produced the can.

That can might have been filled with nitroglycerin. The big gallery and the hearing committee sat up and craned their necks. Not a soul would touch it.

"If 50 per cent of the people of Neligh, Nebraska, want censorship, I'll withdraw my objections to it and ask you gentlemen to vote for it," said the exhibitor of that town. "If 40 per cent want it, 'I'll advocate it, and I believe I would if 30 per cent want it," cried Jenkins in a ringing voice.

There was silence. Then a storm of applause.

Representative J. Reid Green, chairman of the house committee whose attitude toward the exhibitors and exchange men who spoke was that they were all convicted criminals, all through the proceedings, arose and wildly demanded that such evidence be not admitted. He made an attempt to get the newspaper men present to promise to publish a vote of certain churches on censorship, that he and C. L. Prevey, a backer of the bill, had gathered.

But the committee, the representatives present, and above all, the newspaper men present, refused to be kept from a count of that vote, which was 96 to 25 against censorship.

The "tin can" vote was the topic of discussion over the state the next day when the press accounts came out. It's novelty and it's direct appeal made many a man in every town a thinker on the subject and what was more important brought home forcibly to the men in the legislature that possibly a vote of the plain everyday business man in their town was not a 100 per cent call for censorship or control of motion pictures as had been presented to them by the reformer.

Other speakers of the evening were Stuart Gould, a representative of Pathe; Sidney Meyer of Fox; A. R. Pramer, and W. W. Hughes of David City, an American Legion member and former V. M. C. A. man.

Indiana Measure Would Impose Fine of $500 On Sunday Exhibitions

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., Feb. 15.—A bill introduced in the house by Representative Johnson of Morgan county would prohibit exhibition of motion pictures and baseball for profit on Sunday. For violation of the law a fine of from $25 to $500 would be collected from theatres and a fine of $25 for each player in a baseball game.

Holubars May Head Separate Companies

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 15.—That Allen Holubar and Dorothy Phillips may someday professionally, is the statement of Al Kaufman. Holubar ranks high as a director and Miss Phillips has always been a drawing box-office card, and it is quite possible, he states, that each will head their own productions.

"Going Over the Top"

NEW YORK, February 15.—The motion picture industry is going over the top in its drive to raise $3,500,000 for the Hoover Fund. The total achieved will not be known before the end of the month, however, as checks are being received every day, according to C. C. Pettijohn, chairman of the national committee. A complete report will be issued then.

Brady Continues Trip for Harmony Within Industry

Executive Committee of the National Association, Gratified With Results, Requests That President Completes His Tour

(From Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, Feb. 15.—William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, will continue his tour of the country to "effect closer affiliation between all branches of the industry" and to fight against censorship and other impending unfavorable legislation, according to a statement issued today by the National Association.

Mr. Brady's decision was made, it is stated, "at the earnest request of the executive committee of the National Association, which is highly gratified with the work Mr. Brady has already accomplished on tour."

Committee Requests Him to Continue Trip

The executive committee's wire requesting Mr. Brady to continue his tour reached him at Lincoln, Neb., for the first time, and he agreed to go through, although the decision means personal sacrifice of his own business interests. "If extension of the trip is for the welfare of the industry," Mr. Brady wired in reply, "I will continue it, although I have many personal business problems in New York." Jack S. Connolly, Washington representative of the national association; is also to make the Coast trip.

The extension of the tour takes Brady to Pierre, S. D.; Bismarck, N. D.; Helena, Mont.; Seattle, Wash.; Portland, Ore.; San Francisco, Sacramento and Los Angeles, Cal., and he will also stop at Salt Lake City, Utah; Denver, Colo.; St. Louis, Mo.; Indianapolis, Ind.; Cincinnati and Columbus, O.; Wheeling, W. Va.; Pittsburgh, Pa., and Buffalo and Rochester, N. Y.

Censorship Bills Pending

Censorship measures are pending in practically every state which will be visited by Brady, and many of these hostile measures have been introduced in the state legislatures. In other states organizations and individuals are active in efforts to restrict the freedom of the screen and are preparing to introduce measures calling for state censorship.

The executive committee, according to information from the association headquarters, feels that Brady's presence in the West is essential at this time both to establish a closer bond of unity between the various factors of the industry and to present facts of the censorship evil before legislators and others interested in the proposed legislation.

In each state visited President Brady will be met by committees which are conducting the fight against censorship. Arrangements are being made in advance for mass meetings for exchangesmen, exhibitors and others interested in the welfare of the industry. In Denver he will be met by Murray W. McCracken of the Intermountain Film Board of Trade, and G. H. McCracken and Louis W. Marcus of Famous Players.

In the Northwest C. S. Jensen and Von Herberg will cooperate with the association head and probably accompany him on the visit to Helena, Seattle and Portland. In Seattle J. A. Koepel, Goldwyn representative, acting under the late Harry S. Koerpel of the national censorship committee of the National Association, and Harry Sigmund of the Northwest Film Board of Trade, will receive Brady.

Pathex Exchange Obtains Complete Distribution of American Pictures

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEW YORK, Feb. 15.—Pathex Exchange, Inc., has assumed complete distribution of the product of the American Film Company, Inc.

The new arrangement was disclosed in an announcement today by Paul Brumet and S. S. Hutchinson.

Under the former arrangement the American company maintained its own selling force in the various Pathex branches and availed itself of the offices and the shipping facilities of the Pathex exchanges. Effective today the distribution of American pictures will be handled on the same basis with the Pathex features and features of the Associated Exhibitors, Inc.

The new arrangement affects all American productions that have been issued and also future productions including pictures starring Margaret N. O'Neal, William Russell, Charlotte Walker, Seena Owen and Helen Jerome Eddy.

The home offices of the American company are located in Chicago and its studios are at Santa Barbara, Cal.
Campaign for Censorship in Indiana Branded as Political Discord Arises Over Creation of Special Board to Review Productions Brought Into State—Groups of Women Oppose Movement

(From Staff Correspondent)

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., Feb. 15.—The censorship movement in Indiana has been branded as "political."

Three measures have been introduced in the legislature and another is being drafted. Two of the bills would place the responsibility of censorship in the hands of a special board. The state board of education would function under the provisions of the third.

Dissension Crops Out Among Agitators

Dissension in the ranks of the reformers has been created as a result of a variance of opinion on the question of who should constitute such a board. The opinion seems to prevail that political pressure has been injected into the movement.

"The whole movement is political," states Mrs. David Ross, chairman of the Indianapolis Board of Indorsers of Motion Pictures, "and I'm going to work against the bill in the state legislature. I do not believe in it. I think pictures can be cleaned up without increasing their cost, and censorship, with its fees, is bound to increase the cost of admission."

Endorsement Is Withheld

Both the Parent-Teachers Association and the Indianapolis Indorsers, which are affiliated with the Legislative Council of Indiana Women, have withheld endorsement of the censorship bills. Other factions in the Legislative Council, including the W. C. T. U., are demanding legal regulation. Associated with the W. C. T. U. in the fight for adoption is the Indianapolis Church Federation.

Mrs. Royal McClain, representing 26,000 parent-teachers in the state, declared at a hearing on censorship that the people outside of Indiana do not want legal regulation.

At a public hearing at the state house Robert Lieber, president of Associated First Nation; Leo Rappaport of the Circle theatre, and Frank Rembusch of the Ohio theatre represented the industry.

Reformers Are Ridiculed

Representatives of the Legislative Council, the Church Federation and other reform bodies were ridiculed by members of the Parent-Teachers Association and the Indorsers, who declare that legal regulation is unnecessary and unpopular.

The third bill to be introduced would prevent the exhibition of films that are "obeisne, indecent, immoral, sacrilegious, unpatiotic, cruel and inhuman, or such that they could tend to debauch or corrupt the morals of children and adults, or incite to race hatred or the commission of crime."

The penalty for violation would be a fine of $25 to $500 or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.

St. Louis Labor Urges Defeat of Censorship

ST. LOUIS, MO., Feb. 15.—Defeat of the censorship and blue law measure now in the legislature is urged in resolutions adopted by the Central Trades and Labor Union, representing 120,000 workers of St. Louis.

"Every one of our 120,000 members are heartily opposed to any movement to deprive us of our one day pleasures each week," Secretary David declared to a representative of Exhibitors Herald, "we will fight any action which seeks to instill an alleged religious reform by suppressing our Sunday amusements."

Ray Leek President Western Advertisers

Organization Not Formed A Chapter of A. M. P. I. of New York

(From Staff Correspondent)

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 15.—The Western Motion Picture Advertisers was the name decided upon by the organization of Pacific Coast publicity men formed recently at a dinner at the Ambassador hotel.

A telegram of felicitations was received from the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, made up of the Eastern advertising and publicity men, but it also contained the request that the Westerners adopt a name of their own, rather than become a chapter of the Eastern organization.

The following officers and directors were elected.

President—Ray Leek, Metro. Vice-President—Arch Reeves, Lasky. Treasurer—Roy Miller, California theatre.

Secretary — John McCormick, First National. The board of directors are: Pete Smith, Marshall Neilan; Richard Spier, Kimena theatre; Adam Hall Shirk, Lasky; Bradley Smolem, Vitagraph, and Mark Larkin, Mary Pickford.

Calls Mass Meeting for Relief Workers Feb. 25

(From Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, Feb. 15.—February 25 is the date set by S. L. Rothafel, chairman of the Greater New York Committee of the Motion Picture Committee of the American Relief Council, Herbert Hoover, chairman, for a mass meeting of the Greater New York workers who participated in the Hoover drive. The meeting will be held at the Capitol theatre. Mr. Rothafel will present his report of his committee's work. Senator Walker is scheduled to make an address.

Ransomed Captive Seen at Grauman's

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 15.—Sid Grauman scored another coup for his "Million Dollar Theatre" when he obtained the personal appearance of Mrs. Gladys Withercell, who was kidnapped and held for $30,000 ransom. In addition, Nick Harris and his staff of detectives, King and Oaks, and Deputy Sheriffs Lips and Anderson, all of whom were instrumental in saving Mrs. Withercell and bringing her abductors to justice, appeared on the Grauman stage.

Tax Gain of Nearly $1,000,000 Shows Growing Theatre Business

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 8.—Despite the cry of poor business by merchants and business men, the motion picture houses continue to operate at capacity, according to taxes paid to the government, a gain of more than $750,000 being registered in December over the same month of 1919.

The total of admission taxes collected by the government in December was $8,363,708, as compared with $7,982,248 in November and $7,533,985 in December of 1919. For the six months ended with December admissions netted the government a revenue of $44,984,227, as compared with $34,766,764 during the corresponding period of 1919.

During December, also, $451,375 was collected from the rental tax, as compared with $383,542 in November and $435,454 in December, 1919, and $30,000 from the seating tax, as compared with $39,588 in November and $37,406 in December, 1919. All told, direct taxes levied upon the theatrical industry brought to the treasury department in December $8,845,083, as compared with $8,405,378 in November, and $8,006,845 in December, 1919.

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 15.—Tom Moore, Golden star, was married Sunday noon at his home in Beverly Hills to Rene Adore, a member of his company and a former New York musical star. Mabel Normand was maid of honor and Jack Pickford was groomsmen. The bridal pair have gone to Honolulu on their wedding trip.
First National Explains Its Attitude on "The Kid"

Says It Will Live Up to Letter of Existing Contracts if Exhibitors Insist After Entire Situation Is Explained to Them

In a statement to Exhibitors Herald, Associated First National Pictures, Inc., states that it has no intention of doing anything but live up to the letter of existing contracts for the Chaplin production "The Kid," if the exhibitors "insist upon it after the unfairness of such a requirement is made plain to them."

The statement follows the action of the New York Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce recommending that members of the body "comply with the terms and condition of the contract with First National" and that it "call upon First National to do likewise."

Says Exhibitors Are Cheerfully Waiving Contracts

First National officials declare that the action of the New York Chamber of Commerce is "an insult to any exhibitor's sense of square dealing and fair play." It states that exhibitors throughout the country have cheerfully agreed to waive existing contracts, adding that B. S. Moss, Nicholas Schenck, acting for Marcus Loew, and Ben Levine, for William Fox, agreed to new price arrangements for their respective circuits of theatres.

The statement of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., which is of interest to every exhibitor, is as follows:

As to the Original Contract

"The original contract with Charles Chaplin called for a specific number of pictures (eight) of a specific length (two reels) for a specific price per picture—$125,000."

"When 'The Kid' in six reels was presented to Associated First National Pictures, it was instantly recognized that to expect Mr. Chaplin to deliver this picture to First National on the terms of the original contract would be manifestly unfair to Chaplin, and at variance with the spirit animating First National as an exhibitor organization — namely, the spirit of offering all possible encouragement, in the form of an open market, to independent producers at all times to make the best product of which they were capable."

"Believing that it was the desire of its exhibitor members to obtain, first of all, the best pictures possible, and realizing that in 'The Kid' Chaplin had produced one of the greatest money-makers in the history of motion pictures, First National agreed to pay Mr. Chaplin a price for 'The Kid' which would be fair to him, and which— as is being demonstrated at the box offices of the theatre where it is being shown—the exhibitors could afford to pay because of increased volume of business 'The Kid' would bring to their theatres."

"Associated First National Pictures is not asking the individual exhibitor to do anything which it has not been willing to do itself, as shown by the manner its franchise holders have agreed to increased rentals on 'The Kid.' It is merely asking the exhibitor to observe the same spirit of fairness and justice in regard to the rental price of the picture that its Purchasing Committee exercised when obtaining the production for the benefit of its franchise and sub-franchise holders."

Explains Increase Provision

"There is, in the existing Chaplin contracts, a provision for a 25 per cent increase in rental price for each possible additional reel in any Chaplin production. An examination of the circumstances will show how totally inadequate this provision would be, if applied to 'The Kid.'"

"The 25 per cent increase clause was intended simply to protect First National, (Concluded on page 68)"

What Exhibitors Are Saying About EXHIBITORS HERALD

"I don't want to miss a single copy of EXHIBITORS HERALD. Running a picture theatre without the HERALD is like a ship without a sail or a shirt without a tail. You can't make much of a showing without it."—H. H. Pfluuger, manager, Opera House, Pfluergerville, Tex.

"Enclosed find a check renewing our subscription to EXHIBITORS HERALD. We have only been subscribers a year, but we find we could scarcely do without it."—C. N. Davidson, manager, Gem theatre, Kenney, Ill.

"For some reason I did not receive a copy of EXHIBITORS HERALD for January 31. Its omission from our mail is nearly as much of a calamity as if the operator failed to come for the evening show. Please rush it."—Preston Brothers, managers, Empress theatre, Rockwell City, Ia.
THE SITUATION IN NEBRASKA

Films Get First Place
In List of “Enemies” of Lord’s Alliance
(From Staff Correspondent)
NEW YORK, Feb. 15.—Motion pictures are given first place in the ranks of “enemies” to the Lord’s Day Alliance of the United States in an official bulletin just made public here by Dr.
Harry L. Bowby, general secretary.
The bulletin charges the film interests with having the objective of “wiping out every vestige of laws protecting Sunday from the statute books of every state in the Union” and of “the procuring of legal sanction for their Sunday business.”
Sporadic and business interests and commercialized amusements are also listed among the “enemies.”

The Lord’s Day Alliance is opposing the so-called commercialized Sabbath.

Nine Drastic Anti-Film Bills
Before Nebraska Legislature Seek Oppression of Industry
Reformers of State Indicate That Complete Control of Business Is Their Final Purpose FIGHT CENTERED ON CENSORSHIP
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)
LINCOLN, NEB., Feb. 15.—Nebraska is a hothouse of reformers.
Coactive legislation in the form of nine bills is sought by agitators in the senate and house of representatives.
Exhibitors in no other state perhaps have encountered such activity on the part of that element which seeks to burden and oppress the film people.

Two Measures Would Create Censorship
Of the nine measures introduced two would create censorship; two are misdemeanor bills; two deal with construction of booths and fire prevention and carry jokers specifying the number of operators for each machine; another would eliminate sensational titles, while still another would bar children from theatres unless accompanied by parents.
The ninth is a resolution asking congress to adopt national censorship.

The reform element in this state is extremely radical. A. H. Staley, superintendent of schools at Hastings and a censorship agitator, voiced the aims of his clique when he disclosed that the day would probably come when the state would go further in the control of motion pictures and might take them over under the direction of either the church or the school.

Welfare Body Backs Bill
This doctrine is considered dangerous by the exhibitors. Publication of it has casted the Nebraska division of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, with headquarters in Omaha, to exert every effort to quash the activities of those holding this dogmatic principle.
Censorship seems from all apparent indications to have as its sponsor the Child Welfare Code Commission. It has been freely expressed that this commission is desiring of assuming the duties of censorship.

Conduct Publicity Campaign
The legislative committee of the Nebraska exhibitors organization now is working with the committees in charge of the various anti-film measures. A. K.
Pramer of Omaha is president of the state association. Special attention is given to the two censorship bills.

In campaigning against censorship the theatre men have obtained hundreds of digned petitions; they have had prominent citizens voice disapproval of the measures, and they have conducted a comprehensive publicity drive through the newspapers.

City Opposes Erection Of Exchange Building
(From Staff Correspondent)
ST. LOUIS, MO., Feb. 15.—The City Plan Commission has handed down a decision opposing the proposed plans for the erection of an eighteen-story film exchange building. Construction would have necessitated alteration of the zoning law. President Barney Pegan of the Film Board of Trade said that a new site would be decided upon.

Friedman Re-elected President of Federated at California Meeting
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., Feb. 15.—J. L.
Friedman of Celebrated Players Film Corporation of Chicago, was re-elected president of Federated Film Exchanges of America at its convention at Byron Hot Springs. H. C. Harmon of Cleveland was elected vice president; J. E.
Pearce of New Orleans, secretary and Samuel V. Grand of Boston, treasurer. Marion Kohn and D. J.
Chatkin were named
Coast representatives.

Seventy-five film men representing exchanges in every large city attended the convention. Opposition to enactment of censorship and blue law legislation was voiced. Each member was urged to conduct a campaign in his respective city against such legislation. It was the consensus of opinion of those present that this would be the greatest year for the industry.

A two year contract was signed with C. L. Chester for fifty-two short reel subjects a year. Arrangements also were made for twenty-six productions with Greene, Fitzpatrick and McElroy. Daily sessions were held from February 7 to 11.
N. A. M. P. I. Says It Has 2,200 Exhibitor Members
First National Urging Sub-Franchise Holders to Join for Censorship Fight Only—A. A. A. of Chicago to Affiliat As Individuals

Twenty-two hundred theater owners in the United States have joined the exhibitors' division of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, according to the statement of Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary.

The Associated First National Pictures, Inc., is urging holders of its sub-franchises to join. The Allied Amusements Association, one of the two exhibitors' organizations in Chicago, has adopted resolutions urging its entire membership to affiliate with the N. A. M. P. I. for the purpose of fighting censorship on a national scale. It says that if it had any reason to believe the exhibitors' division of the N. A. M. P. I. was intended to supplant or put out of business any local, state or national exhibitors' organization, it would withdraw its support.

The action of the Allied Amusements Association of Chicago was taken at a meeting of the board of directors held February 11, at which Peter J. Schaefer presided.

Seek United Front
In writing Frederick H. Elliott of the action taken, Sam Atkinson, vice-president and manager, said in substance: "We feel that producers, distributors and exhibitors should present a united front against all opposing forces. We feel that each branch of the industry should cooperate with all of the others."

The Allied Amusements Company includes within its ranks Jones, Unic & Schaefer, Ascher Brothers, Balaban & Katz and Lubliner & Trinzi, as well as Andrew Karzas, Max Hyman, Marks & Greenman, George Hopkinson, Maurice Choyne and H. H. Gundle.

First National's Statement
The statement made by First National in commenting upon the present situation is as follows:

"Associated First National Pictures cannot speak for the other companies who are members of the National Association, but so far as this organization is concerned it has no interest in seeing any of its members join the Exhibitors' Division of the National Association save for one purpose, fighting censorship on a national scale in the most effective way possible.

"If First National had any reason to imagine for one moment that the Exhibitors' Division was intended, now or at any other time, to supplant or put out of existence any local state or national exhibitors' organization, First National would have nothing whatever to do with the Exhibitors' Division, and would solemnly advise all its sub-franchise holders to keep clear, for their own good, of such an entanglement.

Could Carry Fight Alone
"Associated First National Pictures is at this moment in a position to undertake and carry on a nation-wide fight against censorship and the blue laws, without reference to the National Association or the Exhibitors' Division of such a body. "But it is recognized that success in such an undertaking, which is for the good of the entire industry, can only be definitely assured if all branches of it, and all existing organizations, join forces for the one purpose of defeating the common foe."

"For that reason, and for that reason alone, First National has, in entire good faith, and acting solely in the interests of its members, set aside any individual campaign it might have undertaken, and urged upon First National sub-franchise holders to join the Exhibitors' Division of the National Association.

Cooperation Is Needed
"Three armies, under one general command and working on the basis of a common strategy, can accomplish more than the same armies out of touch with each other and working at cross purposes against the enemy. Such would be the condition if First National prosecuted its own campaign against censorship, while the National Association undertook on its own initiative and still a third was carried on by any national exhibitors' league."

"But only by absolute harmony and unity of action can the object be achieved, by an Exhibitors' Division of the National Association, or by any other body.

"And First National serves notice here and now, that if politics, personal animosities, petty jealousies and undignified squabbling spring up now or at any other time in the formation and functioning of this Exhibitors' Division, this organization will have no further part in the Exhibitors' Division. We shall furthermore be prepared to denounce it to our exhibitor members as an imposition upon their good faith and an insult to their whole-hearted willingness to lend their screens and their strength to the defense of the entire industry."

"First National is prepared to cooperate to the limit of its resources in such a campaign as this against censorship. But it will not permit itself to be made a party to any warfare upon any existing exhibitors' organization. Unless the Exhibitors' Division is confined to serving the purposes for which First National believes it is being created—to combat censorship—and unless it can serve such purposes without friction and strife, First National will repudiate it and proceed to carry on its own fight against censorship in its own way."

Predict Censorship Defeat in Colorado State Representative Claims That Error in Bill Should End Its Existence
DENVER, COLO., Feb. 15.—Defeat of the censorship bill introduced in the state legislature is forecast by members of the house of representatives.

The legislators declare that the measure was introduced without the enacting clause and that this should end its existence. It is believed, however, that authors of the bill will make a fight for its passage despite the oversight.

A board of three members, each to draw a salary of $3,990 annually, is provided in the measure.

Columbus Wants Local Regulation
COLUMBUS, O., Feb. 15.—Plans of reformers to create local censors in addition to the existing state regulation have been halted for the present in view of the possible contradiction to the laws of the state and therefore unconstitutional. Introduction of the ordinance in city council has been postponed.

David P. Howells Opens New Company In Domestic Field
NEW YORK, Feb. 15.—David P. Howells has formed Howells Sale Company, Inc., which will handle sales and distribution on all Howells productions that will go on the domestic market. Offices have been opened at 729 Seventh Avenue.

The officers are David P. Howells, president; Benjamin F. Howells, vice-president; and treasurer; William Fait, Jr., secretary. The management of the organization will be in direct charge of Mr. Fait.

For purposes of concentration in selling and service it will be the policy of the company to put out only one production at a time, and the pictures offered to state right buyers is "The Hope Diamond Mystery," a fifteen-episode serial.

City Commissioners Establish Censorship
GRAND RAPIDS, MICH., Feb. 15.—The city commission here have ordered the establishment of film censorship under the direction of the city welfare department. A man or a woman will be employed to do the censoring.

Synchronized Music Service To Be Available by April 1

Complete Announcement of Plans Verifies Early Statement That Scores Will Be Practical for Theatres of Every Size

With exchanges in all of the principal centers of the United States, the Synchronized Scenario Music Company will begin active operations late in March. The date has not been definitely set, but preparations are now so far advanced that it is certain service will begin not later than April 1, and possibly as early as March 15.

Opening of the exchanges will mark the first great advance in photoplay music since the score was introduced.

Will Be of Service to All Theatres

Complete announcement of the company's plan confirms its earlier declaration that the service will be practical for every motion picture theatre in the United States from the largest houses supporting symphony orchestras down to the smallest theatre with simply a piano.

The first production for which the company has prepared a musical score is "The Kid," Chaplin's latest picture. This has been printed and is already in use.

Offered on Weekly Basis

Complete printed scores for all of the productions published by the national distributing organizations will be available to exhibitors who subscribe for the service. It is probable that scores will also be provided for the larger of the independent productions.

The service will be given theatres on a weekly basis, the scores being shipped a day or two ahead and returned by the theatre after being used.

The company estimates that it will issue 1,800 scores each week, 150 scores each for the twelve productions which are published by the national distributing organizations.

Scores Are Simplified

A central theme will run through all scores. The music will be simplified so that all musicians can readily play it.

The scores are timed. On the margin appears notes of the change of scenes and all of the subtitles, so that a leader can follow the film closely. This is expected to be of special value to cities where a film has been censored, as notations on the margin will make it a simple matter to bring the orchestra up to the film when an elimination is noted.

Black arrows on the margin call attention to an approaching subtitle. Other warning notations serve similar purposes.

Other Advantages Enumerated

The scores for the time being will be written for twelve-piece orchestras—the piano, the organ and ten other pieces.

Officers of the company declare the scores will make it possible for the smallest theatre to raise its standard of music several hundred per cent, doing away altogether with recourse to two or three old familiar tunes.

In the larger theatres, where special effort is now made to score productions, the work of the orchestra leaders will be greatly simplified and improved. Even where an orchestra leader does not wish to adopt the entire score, its suggestive value will save many hours of preparation and avoid several rehearsals.

Experts Prepare Scores

Arrangements have been made with all of the national distributing companies for the reviewing of pictures three months in advance of publication. This gives ample time for careful preparation of the scores.

The scoring will be done by Carl Edouard, director of music at the Strand theatre, New York city; James C. Bradford, for seven years director of music at the Broadway theatre, New York, and the composer of 300 scores for the large distributing companies, and C. J. Brell, composer of the musical score for "The Birth of a Nation."

The scores will be edited twice before going to the printer. An arrangement with music publishers makes all popular music available to the company.

Will Enlarge Staff Of Detroit Censor

DETROIT, Mich., Feb. 15.—Acting Mayor John C. Lodge is to enlarge the staff of the censor of motion pictures. No change in censorship policy is planned. Lieutenant Baker of the police department is in charge of regulation.

Neilan to Produce Next Film in East

Colleen Moore and Technical Staff With Producer on Way to New York

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 15.—Marshall Neilan was producing his next picture, a story of New York City, in the Eastern metropolis, and has temporarily suspended operations at his Hollywood studios following the completion of "Bob Hampton of Placer," a spectator subject of the American frontier.

Assisted in the making by his technical staff, Mr. Neilan left Los Angeles last Friday. Work on the new production will be started immediately and it is understood that some of the scenes will be taken in Florida.

Colleen Moore in Cast

In one of the leading roles Colleen Moore, who recently signed a long term contract with the producer, will appear. Miss Moore and her mother left Los Angeles with the Neilan party. This will mark Miss Moore's first appearance before the camera in New York. Other members of the cast will be engaged in the East.

For the past year and a half Mr. Neilan has confined his producing activities to Western locations, and the forthcoming picture is the first staged in the East since the formation of his own company.

New Picture Ambitious

"Bob Hampton of Placer" will be Mr. Neilan's next First National release, and it is understood that this film will be published in the middle of March. Undoubtedly the most ambitious production yet attempted by this producer, this adaptation of Randall Parrish's novel is expected to prove one of the biggest First National offerings of the year.

Harry Dean Manager Of George Kern Co.

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 15.—Harry El¬lis Dean, at one assistant district attorney of Los Angeles county, has been made manager of George H. Kern Productions, succeeding E. W. Dustin, who resigned because of ill health.

Opera Adapted From Paramount Picture

Paramount announces that for the first time in history a grand opera has been adapted from a motion picture. The production being Cecil B. De Mille's "The Cheat," by Hector Turnbull. The premiere of the opera, the music of which will be created by the late Camille Erlanger, was given at the Opera Comique in Paris on February 5. It is an outgrowth of the opera in "Forfeiture," Paul Millet and Andre Lourde wrote the French libretto.
THIS panoramic view, snapped from an airplane, gives a clear idea of the vastness of the new studios just completed by Robertson-Cole at Hollywood, Cal.

The new plant covers sixteen acres of ground, with a frontage of 1,300 feet on Gower street. In the enclosure are eight large stages, the executive offices, a large gymnasium, an emergency hospital, a theatre, and buildings to house the cutting, editing, publicity and other departments.

It is said that the plant is one of the most complete in the country, every facility for production purposes having been installed.

Separate buildings containing the dressing rooms occupy sites of easy access from all the stages. The lower floors of these structures are used for office purposes and for the stars.

A complete electric system covers the ground. A line of 15,000 volts enters five 20-ton transformers, which reduce the current to 2,200 watts. Lights of every description are in readiness at all times.

Behind the stages is a paved roadway. This leads into the ground and then branches out to the various sections. On the other side of the roadway are located construction and service buildings, including a large mill, machine shop, storeroom, property department, paint shop, etc.

The studios were begun last spring. Several months ago parts of the plant were in use, but only recently has it housed the entire producing organization.
Robertson-Cole Open New Studios at Hollywood, Cal.

Plant Proper Covers More Than Sixteen Acres of Ground—Eight Large Stages and Other Structures Occupy Site

The new studios of Robertson-Cole at Gower and Melrose streets, Hollywood, Cal., have been completed. The plant now houses all of the company's producing units and is functioning practically throughout.

Only last week the company announced the occupation of its new home office building at 723 Seventh avenue, New York.

Studio One of the Most Complete in U. S.

The studios were begun last Spring. Sections of the plant were operating several months ago. The studio is considered one of the most complete in the country. Sixteen acres fronting on Melrose and Gower are occupied by the studio proper, and other structures stand.

The studio has a frontage of about 1,300 feet on Gower street. The executive building is "U" shaped, built around a large portico, with a long flight of white stone steps leading to it. A colonnaded stairway leads from the reception hall to the second floor of this building. Here are the executive offices, the exploitation department, a large modern theatre for the screening of pictures and a private dining room and kitchen used by the executive and studio staff.

Stages Are Enclosed

On the lower floor, a corridor on the left leads to the telephone exchange, the purchasing department and the general accounting departments, while corresponding on the right will be found the production department, the art and technical department, the employment bureau and the scenario and research departments.

There are eight enclosed stages with a floor space ninety-five feet wide, 175 feet deep, and varying in height. Each stage is a large concrete tank that can be used for water scenes or for such scenes that require a stairway leading down from the level of the action that is being photographed. A scene dock furnishes ample space for the storage of scenery and the properties required during the making of a production. Near the front of the stage is located the director's office and offices for his assistants, together with a dark room and repair shop for the men. Each stage has its own cutting room and projection room located in a separate building between the stages.

Install Five Transformers

A 15,000 volt line comes into the grounds. Five 20 ton transformers reduce this current to 2200 watts and spread it out to the two generator stations that are located at convenient points between the stages. In each of these generator stations, three synchronized 300 kw. generators reduce to 10 volts of direct current and each station is connected with each of the stages which makes it possible to throw any amount of power up to 900 kilowatts on any stage.

A large building for the electrical department has been constructed. Lights of every description are in readiness at all times. There are no dressing rooms on the stages proper. A dressing room building stands directly in front of each of the stages. The upper floor of these dressing room buildings contains ample dressing rooms for the cast and the exchange talent, including the executive suite at one end.

Mill Centrally Located

Behind the stages is a paved roadway, twenty-eight feet wide which leads from the freight entrance in Melrose directly through the center of the studio. On the other side of this roadway are the various construction and service buildings, including large machine shops, electric building, machine shop, store room, property department, paint shop, wardrobe, emergency hospital, gymnasium, auto sheds, etc. There is also ample space for the many exterior settings such as streets. Centrally located is the mill and carpenter shop which covers a floor space of 13,440 feet. Here the rough timbers are brought in from the lumber yard and cut to the proper sizes and shapes as they proceed first in a direct line toward the carpenter shop, where they are used in the making of scenery, furniture or whatever is required.

There is a wardrobe building, a large gymnasium and an emergency hospital on the lot.

Goldwyn announces that Manager Dolle of the Alamo theatre, Louisville, Ky., was so pleased with the record made at his house with "Earthbound" that he made out a check for $250 above the rental price and mailed it to Jack Stewart, Cincinnati manager for the company.

The photo play broke all records for receipts in the history of the Alamo theatre. In the home office concerning this most unusual action of Mr. Dolle's, Mr. Stewart says:

"It may interest you to know that Mr. Dolle played "Earthbound" and broke his house records for all time with this production. Mr. Dolle has given me a check for $250 additional over and above the contract price on the strength of his appreciation of Goldwyn's masterpiece."

First National Issuing Other Foreign Films Featuring Pola Negri

NEW YORK, Feb. 15.—The phenomenal success of the European-made "Passion" has attracted attention to the two other pictures bought by First National along with "Passion." The two unrelated subjects are the lower star Pola Negri, the stellar figure of "Passion," and were made under the direction of Ernst Lubitsch, to whom much credit for the success of the first offering in the group is given.

"Carmen" is the present title of one of the two forthcoming subjects, while that of the other is kept secret.

No release dates have been set, it is declared, although in all likelihood "Carmen" will be the first to find its way on the screen.

Industry Asks Congress to Encourage Film Exportation

Urges Retaliatory Measure Against Countries That Are Endeavoring to Shut Out Pictures Produced in the United States

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 15.—Recommendations for retaliatory measures against countries which permit only a limited importation of American motion pictures are contained in a brief submitted to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, last Thursday, by Saul E. Rogers, on behalf of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

Calls Attention to the Movement Abroad

The brief, which outlines the power of the motion picture, calls attention to a movement abroad that takes on the "aspect of insidious criticism against the American films."

At least 30 per cent ad valorem duty is needed on raw films, according to J. E. Brulato of New York, in order to protect American producers from competition from European manufacturers.

He told the committee that unless a duty is put upon raw films the big manufacturers here will not be able to compete with foreign goods, and it is feared that free films or a low duty would result in large quantities of film being dumped on this market.

Foreign countries are beginning to attempt the shutting out of American motion pictures, the committee was told by Saul E. Rogers of Fox Films, who represented the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, and we should take steps to accord such countries similar treatment. England especially is concerned over American films and several attempts have been made to create in London a world distributing center.

Urges Import Restrictions

Restrictions upon the importation of merchandise from countries that restrict the importation of American goods were urged by Mr. Rogers, who said he would furnish a draft of legislation along that line which the films men are anxious to have incorporated in the new law. The power to impose such restrictions would be vested in the President or in some appropriate agency determined by Congress. This provision, he said, would serve to clear up conditions in Germany, where regulations prohibiting the importation of films were recently amended so as to permit the receipt of 600,000 feet of film from all countries, provided a like amount of film was exported.

Judge Holds Sunday Shows Undefensible

SPECIAL TO EXHIBITORS HERALD

PRINCETON, IND., Feb. 15.—Judge R. C. Baltzell, of the Gibson circuit court, in continuing a temporary restraining order against United Theatres and Amusement Company of this city, to prohibit Sunday motion picture shows, has held that the contribution of net proceeds of a Sunday picture show to charity is an "act" of charity rather than a "work" of charity and hence not defendable under the state law. The court continues an order issued by the Posey circuit court last December during the absence of Judge Baltzell.

The defendant company, through its principal officers, Ancil J. Cassidy and Joe Heston of Princeton, had contended that Sunday picture shows, of which all or a part of the proceeds went to charity, should not come under the operation of the Sunday closing law. In this contention they have been opposed by the Law and Order League of Princeton, which has employed special counsel and collected an "emergency fund" with which to prosecute its cases in court.

The News, The Whole News—and Nothing But the News

EXHIBITORS HERALD believes that the time is opportune for the declaration of certain editorial principles and policies that have been in effect and will remain in effect in the production of this publication.

In explanation of the extraordinary readers’ interest that is now generally attributed to this publication we point out that a fundamental principle of our editorial policy since the inception of the publication has been to print the news, the whole news and nothing but the news.

We have never been reconciled to the belief that the reams of futile, vain and meaningless publicity matter that has received publication elsewhere in this industry has ever served any good purpose; we believe those at whose instance this matter has been printed have been invariably more harmed than benefited by its publication.

We believe that the exhibitor, the man for whom the legitimate trade paper is produced, has been overwhelmingly nauseated by having had cast before his eyes weekly long, verbose articles extolling in superlative terms the merits of this man or that product. He has been surfeited with encomium, boast and promise until a very natural revolt ensued wherein these very ambitiously written press notices, instead of serving the purpose intended, merely serve to annoy and irritate the reader and as a result belittled and stultified the subject.

EXHIBITORS HERALD believes that in accepting an exhibitor’s subscription it likewise accepts a trust; and in the proper discharge of this trust it does not believe it is privileged to include in its columns any matter that does not accurately tally with the highest standards of news value. This publication does not envision its function as a common carrier of press notices which no sane man, intelligently informed in film matters, can take seriously. On the contrary it believes that its function is to cause to be published only such matter as constitutes a legitimate chronicle of events in the film industry, written briefly on the assumption that the exhibitor is a busy man and has no time to waste in wading through extraneous matter that serves no purpose other than puffery.

The result of this policy has been that there has been carried home to the minds of the readers a conviction that every item printed is for the reader’s information and for no other purpose. This has won the confidence and reliance of readers, making every item printed and instrument of influence and has gained the respect and good will of its clientele in a manner and in a degree that cannot be matched where any other policy obtains.

This policy, exemplified by EXHIBITORS HERALD alone in this industry, having received the approbation of the trade, will be carried on.

The columns of this publication will continue devoted exclusively to the news, the whole news and nothing but the news.

Brady and Berman Agree
On Board of Arbitration

Joint Debate Before Exhibitors of Nebraska at Omaha, February 9, Reported to Clear Way for Amicable Agreement

EXHIBITORS HERALD below presents a complete report of the Brady-Berman meeting at Omaha, February 9, as received from its staff correspondent which indicates that the apparent misunderstanding between the two great organizations of the motion picture industry is nearer adjustment than is generally believed.

OMAHA, NEB., Feb. 15.—William A. Brady and Sam I. Berman renewed and amicably settled all their differences of opinion between Mr. Brady and Mr. Berman and Mr. Cohen as to the advisability of a great national organization in a four-hour session before the exhibitors of Nebraska and the exchange men of Omaha, at the Fontenelle Hotel in Omaha, February 9.

A national board of executive powers to handle all matters of common interests and to act as a board of arbitration was agreed on by both men as the closing words of the session.

Brady and Berman Speak at Length

Following Mr. Brady's appeal to the exhibitors of Nebraska for a united front against censorship and for their careful consideration of his proposed plan for all exhibitors to join themselves as exhibitor members of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, Mr. Berman arose and gave his story of how the Motion Picture Theater Owners of America had unsuccessfully attempted to obtain cooperation from the producers and manufacturers.

The meeting seemed destined to end in nothing until Stuart Gould, business representative of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Nebraska, rose to make known Mr. Berman if there had been any attempt made to have the national organization of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners join in a body with the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

Mr. Berman said "No."

Gould Brings Agreement

"Will you take the exhibitors' association in a body, Mr. Brady?" asked Mr. Gould, after conferring with A. R. Pramer, president of the Nebraska organization.

"That's what I want," said Mr. Brady, "and I request you, Mr. Pramer, to ask every exhibitor to keep his membership in the Motion Picture Theatre Owners.

"Will you take in the 9,000 members of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in a body?" asked Gould.

"Yes," came back the answer like a shot.

"What do you say to that proposition, Mr. Berman?" asked Gould.

"I agree, fifty-fifty on everything," said Mr. Berman, and Brady echoed "Fifty-fifty."

Pramer Urges Arbitration

A. R. Pramer, president in Nebraska, then made the definite proposition that the exhibitors should have an independent body—that the producers and manufacturers should have a separate body, and that there should be appointed a board of four men, two from each organization; and that these elect a fifth man to act as chairman of this general executive and arbitration board.

Both Mr. Brady and Mr. Berman agreed.

Both promised to go to New York as soon as possible—to cease working at cross purposes in attempting to attain the same end, and to try and get a national body that could hold a giant convention of the motion picture industry so as to meet the problems that face all alike together. The board of five should settle any points between distributor or producer and the exhibitor.

Brady in Pledge to Berman

Mr. Brady gave his personal word to Mr. Berman after the meeting that he would continue his trip in the interest of fighting censorship with the idea in view that there was practically established a national unity of exhibitor and distributor—invited Mr. Berman to continue with him if he could. Mr. Berman pleaded an urgent call home, but stated that he could be counted upon for his aid in every way to make the tentative plan a success.

Following the Omaha meeting, Mr. Brady, accompanied by Mr. Connelly and Stuart Gould, left for Lincoln, where Mr. Brady was scheduled to appear before the legislative committee to speak against censorship.

In his talk at Lincoln Mr. Brady promised the legislature that the producer himself, through him as their representative, would solemnly promise to see that the product of films was made that the next legislative meeting in Nebraska these could be no talk of censorship or regulation of motion picture shows. Backed up by a similar promise made one week previous by A. R. Pramer in the name of the Exhibitors of Nebraska, Mr. Brady's statement will have a great deal to do with the defeat of the proposed measures.

Fight Sunday Opening

Organized factions in both Evanston and Wilmette, north shore suburbs of Chicago, are putting up a determined fight against the opening of motion picture theatres on Sundays. The vote of Evanston will take place April 5. A strong sentiment in favor of opening the theatres is being manifested.

Finkelstein & Ruben Refute Charges That Trust Exists

Official Figures of State Fire Marshal Indicate That Minneapolis Company Controls 33 Per Cent Of Seating Capacity in City

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

ST. PAUL, MINN., Feb. 15.—Official figures of the state fire marshal were read before the house investigating committee to refute charges that Finkelstein & Ruben control theatres in Minneapolis and St. Paul which represent 80 to 85 per cent of the seating capacity of the houses in the Twin Cities.

Control 33 Per Cent in Minneapolis

The fire marshal's list revealed that the company controls only 38.4 per cent of the seating capacity here and 33 per cent in Minneapolis. The total seating capacity of the theatres in the two cities is given at 96,039.
In Minneapolis Finkelstein & Ruben control 18,313 out of 55,362 seats while in St. Paul their theatres represent a seating capacity of 15,627 out of a total of 40,677.

The special committee was appointed to investigate charges that a monopoly exists in the motion picture field in the Twin Cities.

One of the early witnesses before the committee was Joseph W. Cohen, former owner of the theatre in Minneapolis. Cohen testified that he had been forced out of business by the company and declared that he had brought suit before the alleged monopoly.

"Control Exhibition Field"

It was Cohen's contention in his testimony that Finkelstein & Ruben control the exhibition field in the two cities.
He held that they own all of the important theatres representing 80 to 85 per cent of the seating capacity and the most desirable theatre sites.

He stated that Ascher Brothers of Chicago obtained a theatre at Hennepin avenue and Eighth street, Minneapolis, and by booking through their Chicago office they were in a position to break the alleged monopoly. The Chicago corn, he declared, was given $100,000 or more to stay out of the territory.

Says Two Forced to Close

W. W. Cutter, former exhibitor and at one time connected with Universal, told the committee of the organization of Associated First National and Twin City
Amusement Trust, Inc. He testified that the amusement company, a Finkelstein and Ruben concern, holds the local franchise in First National so that in practice it is buying pictures from itself or putting money from one pocket into another.

Mr. Cutter declared that neighborhood houses cannot get first run pictures.
When asked to cite specific instances in which theatres had been compelled to close because of unfair competition he named the Minneapolis auditorium and the Nicollet in Minneapolis. J. N. Bergstrom, former owner of the Nicollet, testified that M. L. Finkelstein and Fred Cubberly, manager of the First National exchange, had told him that the new Loring had not been planned with any idea of unfair competition.

Censuring the Censor

Defense

Officials of Los Angeles county at Springfield, Mo., have given the opinion that motion pictures play but little part in shaping the character of the American youth. They stated that in a majority of the cases where pictures are held responsible for the misconduct of juveniles improper home environment is the cause. In the majority of cases called to the attention of the local juvenile court the delinquent child shows a distinct lack of home training.

family comes from good, honest-to-God Puritan stock, I am strenuously opposed to inflicting upon this generation any of the old foggy, absurd blue laws which tied the apron strings of my ancestry over two centuries, and I am emphatically opposed to the enactment of any law that is not compatible with that catholicity of thought which was so splendidly exhibited by the framers of the declaration of independence."
Metro's production of Vicente Blasco Ibanez's famous novel is said to be one of the most impressive spectacles of the present season. Thousands of "extras" were used in its production and many massive sets were built and destroyed in its making.
“Four Horsemen” Directorial Triumph

The first million dollar motion picture to reach the screen is Metro's "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," based on the Vicente Blasco Ibanez book of the same name, the most widely read of all contemporary novels. In view of such an unprecedented expenditure of money a prodigious production is naturally expected. And such an expectation is gratified. "The Four Horsemen" is a picture of tremendous proportions, so tremendous in fact that it leaves an ineradicable impression of vastness upon the mind of the spectator.

The Ibanez story was worthy of an extraordinary production. No book on the war contains such a profound thought and such a wealth of vital dramatic material as this. And, in general terms, the material has been utilized to well express the thought.

Transferring the original story to the screen must have been a delicate undertaking, one fraught with innumerable yawning pitfalls, and it is commendable that the director, Rex Ingram, and the scenarist, June Mathis, avoided them. True, these creators have stumbled occasionally, and, stumbling, they have at times come near the brink of the pits that would engulf them. But avoid the actual traps they did. And so, though perfection has not been attained, a high mark of merit, one that will be held up for many to shoot at, was reached.

As told on the screen, the story deviates from the original. The main title announces the picturization as an interpretation by Metro. The first half of the picture is purely dramatic rather than spectacular, although the spectacular element exists in an impressive degree. Yet the drama is so sincere, so vital, and so portentous that everything else gives way before it. The groundwork here is excellently laid. It portends overwhelming dramatic crises—paves the way for the consummation of great dramatic moments with much the same effectiveness that the ominous drum beat in the distance predicates the approach of the vanguard of a cruel and feared conqueror. And as the terrible uncertainty in the mind of the conquered individual increases as the drum beat comes nearer and louder, so do the developing dramatic incidents presage upon the equal measure. In fact, the spectacular element dominates over the dramatic. It is dwelt upon at the expense of the development of the dramatic situations to the full height of their inherent values.

Thus the promise laid is not entirely fulfilled. The overwhelming dramatic crises, so expectantly awaited, have weight when they do arrive, but not the weight anticipated. This regression is the chief drawback to the achievement of a triumph.

The battle scenes, the most important of the spectacular phase, are decidedly ambitious, yet big as they are they have not reached that point of greatness that they can be entirely and satisfactorily substituted for the expected momentous dramatic conflict. Some of the incidental shots, the more virulent in hatred, might be advantageously eliminated. In fact, judicious pruning tending to shorten the picture, which is now in nine reels, to more compact form, appears to be advisable.

The picture has an unusually large cast. Acting honors go to Rudolph Valentino and Joseph Swickard. Valentino's performance is of the kind that lifts a player from the ranks to the plane of stardom. Swickard's delineation of the elder Desnoyers is scarcely less effective.

"The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" is a sincere effort to achieve the finer things in motion picture production. Though perfection was not attained in it, the picture, for its sincerity, its bigness, is a most commendable work, one that is worthy of praise. With cutting there is no doubt but that it will be one of the biggest box office attractions of the day.

Orchestra Hall to Be First National House

Max Goldstine, who operates Orchestra Hall, Michigan Avenue, Chicago, as a high-class motion picture theatre during the summer months, will play First National pictures during the coming season, according to an announcement from the First National home office.

The Albert Kaufman production, "Man, Woman and Marriage" has been publicly commended by Mr. Goldstine and it is expected he will open the season with this production on May 30.

Gloria Swanson
Becomes a Paramount
Star in Her Next

For Some Time
Featured Player Has Taken Leading Roles

GLORIA SWANSON

Gloria Swanson a star!
This featured player, who for two years has been carrying leading roles in Cecil B. DeMille productions, is to realize her ambition when she steps onto the lot to make her next Paramount picture,
"The Great Moment."
The promotion is one well earned and richly deserved.
Exhibitors have watched an increasing interest on the part of the public in Gloria Swanson, and sensing the popular verdict as to her capabilities, they have expressed freely and frequently to Adolph Zukor, Jesse L. Lasky and other Paramount executives their well-fortified opinion that she was a real star and worthy of the name.

So a star she is, and surely no screen player ever entered stardom with brighter prospects of certain success.
It was a little more than two years ago that Miss Swanson, then a recent graduate from the ranks of two-reel comedies, was appearing in dramatic screen productions of decidedly limited distribution. Cecil B. DeMille saw her in one of these pictures and recognizing her possibilities engaged her for his production,"Don't Change Your Husband." Her debut in a DeMille picture was generally regarded as an experiment and her advent was unheralded.
In the role of the fickle Leila Porter she played opposite Elliott Dexter. Her success was instant. Here was a girl possessed of beauty of face and figure, who could wear clothes and who gained the sympathy of her audience at the very beginning and held it to the last foot of the film.

Then came "For Better, For Worse," in which she played the more emotional role of Sylvia Norcross, and was received with even more enthusiastic plaudits than was accorded on her previous performance. Following this she was given the still more difficult part of Lady Mary Lasenby in "Male and Female," the aristocratic young snob who fell in love with her butler.
Her next part was that of Beth Gordon in "Why Change Your Wife?" and then as Ruth Anderson in "Something to Think About."
These were great roles and it was with full knowledge of Miss Swanson's beauty, versatility and distinctive charm that Elinor Glyn, the famous English novelist, came over here and wrote "The Great Moment" especially for her. Monte M.
Katterjohn prepared the continuity, and with Sam Wood chosen to direct the production will start under most favorable auspices.

Lewis Goes to Brunton
Studio to Adapt First
Rudyard Kipling Story
(From Staff Correspondent)
NEW YORK, Feb. 15.—Randolph
Lewis of Pathé, and M. C. Levee, vice-president of the Brunton studios, left here last Thursday for the Coast, where the Brunton studios will make the first Rudyard Kipling story, "Without Ben-

Mr. Lewis advised with Mr. Kipling in writing the story and, having spent three months with the author, his advice is valuable. He will work with the Brunton organization throughout production. It has not been decided who will serve as director, nor has any mem-er of the cast been chosen.

“Lying Lips” Forceful, Appealing Drama

THOMAS H. INCE’S latest production, “Lying Lips,” is a singularly forceful and appealing melodrama. It is splendidly produced, brilliantly acted, and moves rapidly and convincingly through a series of effective dramatic incidents.

As a box office attraction “Lying Lips” ranks very high in a definite manner. It is based on a love story of compelling interest and of a type having universal appeal. The unfolding of the story is dotted with several powerfully dramatic and spectacular incidents which are produced on a big and lavish scale.

This is not a spectacular melodrama of the type wherein are found spectacular incidents loosely joined together. On the contrary each of the big moments has a valid place in the telling of the story and they contribute importantly to the unfolding of the narrative.

The leading feminine role portrayed by Florence Vidor, is one of the finest performances of recent date. Miss Vidor is delightfully wholesome and appealing and throughout the performance she contributes a sincerity and genuineness of characterization that is a very big factor in the unquestioned success of the picture. House Peters, playing opposite, does some of the best work of his career in a role well suited to his personality.

Several of the big scenes of the production are dramatic bits enacted between Miss Vidor and Mr. Peters and in each instance they register an emotional appeal that will cause this picture to linger in the memories of the theatre-going public.

In this production, supervised by Mr. Ince and directed by John Griffith Wray, the material has been selected with careful regard to the result of attaining a picture of outstanding calibre. There are beautiful scenes about a fine old English

Foreign Progress in Production Is Unbelievable

American Market Is Goal of Film Manufacturer in Europe

Says DAVID P. HOWELLS

TO the American who makes a trip through foreign film centers the most striking impression he will receive is the wonderful way in which the cinema industry is getting down to work and the almost universal goal possessed by each producer to turn out pictures that will go in the American market. America to the producer of films in foreign countries holds the same position as it does to every other manufacturer in Europe—the richest market that the world affords.

Production in Europe of motion pictures is speeding up to a point which is almost unbelievable. Studios idle since 1934 have been remodeled and brought up to date. Other buildings have been converted into workhouses and producers have their casts, their directors and the complete service for turning out films.

Despite the haste with which this has been accomplished there is none of the haphazard production usually developed by a hurry-up system. Money is too valuable in Europe at the present time to be wasted and the producers are making haste slowly.

It is not a matter of parsimony, either. The men working in the foreign countries know that they cannot slip on production and hope to get away with their productions in the American market, and it is the American market that they are all aiming at. Stories that have only a local appeal are discarded. Types of actors and actresses that have been found to be lacking in appeal to American audiences are out of work.

Whether they will reach their goal is a question which remains to be answered. The phenomenal success of "Passion," the Associated First National release starring Pola Negri and directed by Ernst Lubitsch, is both a warning and an assurance. It is a warning as to what can be done in Europe, but the fact that thus far "Passion" is the one foreign picture since the war that has seized the fancy of the American people is assurance that other European producers have not yet reached the stage where they can compete in the American market against American-made films.

But the main point must be borne in mind that European producers are serious in their intention of reaching the American market. Their activities are increasing every day and already I know of at least two other Lubitsch productions with Pola Negri that are equal in every respect to "Passion." Other European directors will solve the problems and will find their casts and there will be more.

At the same time this increase in foreign productions is going to make it more and more difficult for the American films to make their way in the other countries of the world. While it is true that German producers are fighting to keep American films out because they fear the competition of the American article, even when the bars are entirely down, not more than 20 per cent of American pic-

Prosperity for 1921

"Prosperity for 1921" was the keynote of the address made before the Chicago chapter of the American Institute of Banking by W. P. G. Harding, governor of the Federal Reserve Board.

"Business is rapidly adjusting itself," he said, "to the new levels, and while there is much unemployment just now that condition is only temporary. Numerous signs of a better feeling, signs that business is getting ready to proceed on a saner basis, are appearing, and we all feel that we have ahead of us a time of real, solid prosperity such as we did not have in the boom days that are gone."
EXHIBITORS ADVERTISING
A DEPARTMENT OF MOTION PICTURE EXPLOITATION

Anniversary

IN the two years elapsed since the inauguration of this department of EXHIBITORS HERALD notable progress has been made in every branch of exhibitors' advertising. Out of comparative chaos has come definite order. Theatre advertising has ceased to be looked upon as a sort of necessary nuisance breaking in upon the office time of the exhibitor and is presently regarded by many of the best thinkers in the industry as the logical instrument for freeing the motion picture from persecution and oppression by self-chosen guardians of a grossly underestimated public.

THEATRE advertising of two years ago would not have been considered as of more than contributory usefulness in this connection. Consisting for the most part of make-shift assemblings of catchlines, descriptive phrases and unrelated illustrations culled hurriedly from press books, the advertising of that period lacked the organized forcefulness that today gives it rank second only to the screen itself as a medium for the enlightenment of the masses upon the all-important matters of censorship and kindred threatening evils.

Two years ago a teaser campaign of any scope was a novelty and a tribute to the daring of the man who conducted it. Today the man who hopes to create comment by such means must evolve a new and decidedly novel "angle" or concept of execution. It is significant that the innovations of 1919 are the staples of 1921. In his quick, sure grasp of ideas, in his consistent, determined development of potentialities, the exhibitor advertiser has displayed pioneer characteristics. His success is altogether in keeping.

THEATRE advertising of today suffers in comparison with that of no other business institution. The conservative bank copy, the informative department store text, the bizarre automobile composition, though developed through a vastly longer period than has elapsed since the opening of the first motion picture theatre, average materially less effective than the peculiarly distinctive motion picture copy. American newspapers, with a rapidly diminishing number of exceptions, have given incontestable evidence of their judgment by a gratifying disposition of theatre advertising space.

IN exploitation even more remarkable advance has been recorded. The so-called "little exhibitor" has learned that he can employ the more spectacular methods of attracting patronage as effectively as the manager of the larger theatre to whom he formerly conceded a clear field in this work. And from the smaller cities has come report of some of the most practical and productive campaigns in recent exploitation news. As a consequence of this expansion of activity in the realm of advanced advertising national patronage has increased materially and the industry has prospered accordingly.

PERHAPS the most convincing proof of the efficiency developed in exhibitorial advertising lies in the fact that the industrial readjustment materially affecting older businesses has been entirely without influence upon the national box office. The exhibitor has succeeded, through judicious use of advertising space, in maintaining a steady volume of patronage. That accomplishment has enabled other branches of the industry to proceed undisturbed along accustomed lines of progress. None can fail to give the theatre men of the nation credit due for this essential achievement.

PRESENTATION, logically considered a phase of advertising, has improved in pace with other branches. "Kismet," Robertson-Cole's picturization of Otis Skinner's stage success, has brought out perhaps more forcibly than any production of recent publication the fact that an increasing percentage of exhibitors are giving earnest thought to the modern program arrangement. Such obstacles as lack of stage facilities, incomplete lighting equipment and dearth of talent are being overcome by exhibitors in every section of the country. One of the outstanding developments of the coming year undoubtedly will be increased activity in this field of endeavor.

INTERCHANGE of ideas is an essential in mass development. In facilitating this exchange of views and experiences by providing space wherein exhibitors may discuss with other exhibitors showmanship methods which they have tested in actual practice EXHIBITORS HERALD has contributed a genuine service to the trade. Through the agency of this department profitable advertising policies have been made known to theatre men generally. Adaptation of these policies to local conditions has resulted in marked progress toward standardization of exploitation methods and the obvious consequent unification of effort.

DEVELOPMENTS of the future will be no less spectacular than those noted. Theatre thought has become national rather than individual. Future advance will be accordingly swift. Any judicious forecast as to the form future advertising triumphs will assume would in all probability fall short of actualities. That a power fit to cope with any and all emergencies which arise to menace the motion picture will be attained is obvious in the light of past development.
Showmanship Suggestions in the Stills

THE stage feature utilized by Joseph Plunkett for the presentation of "The Devil," the Associated Exhibitors production, at the Strand theatre, New York, and recently described in this department, was practically an exact duplication of the scene shown in the above still from the picture. The setting is easily contrived, opera and semi-popular music files contain a great variety of satisfactory compositions for the purpose, and the players required should be procurable with little difficulty in almost all instances. Mr. Plunkett's experience demonstrated convincingly the effectiveness of the prologue.

THE character portrayed by George Arliss in Associated Exhibitors' "The Devil" is one admirably suited for adaptation in street exploitation of superior quality. A second figure, garbed as is the devil of tradition, may be successfully used in collaboration.

"BOYS WILL BE BOYS," Goldwyn's forthcoming Will Rogers production, presents that star in the character depicted in the accompanying still. An exploitation impersonation should not be difficult to produce, nor should it be difficult to obtain a local boy for the other character represented. The street exploitation conducted by these may be amplified in effect by using them also for presentation purposes, a short stage feature in which they appear exactly as upon the street offering obvious advantages.

THE success of exploitation based upon Wesley Barry's personality in advertising "Go And Get It" may be duplicated by following the suggestion registered in the above still from "Bob Hampton of Placer," Marshall Neilan's forthcoming First National attraction.
HARRY SWIFT, Paramount exploitation representative at the Albany, N. Y., exchange, obtained brilliant results with window exploitation in behalf of "Behold My Wife," the Paramount picture, during its engagement at the Avon theatre, Utica, N. Y. Windows of the Fraser department store were curtained throughout certain hours, bearing signs calling attention to a great event which was to take place therein at a scheduled time. Elsie Stevens, employed for the occasion, appeared in the windows in costumes impersonating characters in the photoplay and held the attention of crowds attracted by the teaser advertising.

Two-Part Exploitation Window Playlet Forms Climax of Utica Teaser Campaign

Window exploitation has been advanced to its present high state of development by steady driving toward that end by many advertisers, the exploitation men in the Famous Players-Lasky organization displaying marked activity in this field. A certain significance attaches to the latter fact when it is announced that perhaps the greatest window exploitation stunt of all time was conducted by Harry Swift, exploitation representative of the Albany, N. Y., Paramount exchange.

Utica, N. Y., was the scene of Mr. Swift's remarkable accomplishment. Photographs reproduced upon this page were made during the progress of the exploitation.

Two days prior to the opening of "Behold My Wife" at the Avon theatre two of the windows of Fraser's department store, one of the best locations in Utica, were heavily shrouded in drapes, a condition practically unknown in the history of that institution. Upon the window curtains an announcement card was placed calling attention to a "big surprise" which would be disclosed in the windows at 7:45 the following evening.

At that hour a crowd had collected about the window and the curtains were raised to disclose one window dressed to represent a forest scene, the other a modern display.

Miss Elsie Stevens, sent from the home office of Famous Players-Lasky for the occasion, appeared in the first window dressed as an Indian maiden. Against the background provided, lighted in color and given realism by addition of natural pine and camphor flakes representing snow, she moved through a pantomime in which she displayed articles of Indian apparel, lighted a campfire, cooked an Indian meal and disappeared into the tepee.

Almost immediately she reappeared in the other window, this time in modern garb, where she displayed modern apparel against a background representing an English drawing room.

It is reported that her appearance in the second window was greeted with applause from those on the sidewalk, which is entirely in keeping with other reports of exploitation wherein the window playlet has been utilized.

Another excellent stunt employed for the picture adds to the general fund of contest exploitation data. A newspaper was persuaded to run several photographs showing rear views of pedestrians taken without their knowledge. Passes to the theatre were offered those who identified themselves from the photographs. Several called for the tickets and another news story was obtained through this means.
"Women of the Ages," the prologue used for "Lying Lips," at Barbee's Loop theatre, Chicago, staged in exact accordance with the working script furnished exhibitors in the January number of "The Silver Sheet," the Thomas H. Ince house organ. Left to right the characters are: Modern Woman, Mme. Pompadour, Salome (seated), Cleopatra, Helen of Troy, Lucrezia Borgia and an announcer. The prologue is described in detail in the story beginning upon the opposite page.

Stromberg Successes

A PAGE of exploitation stunts responsible for the record-breaking Chicago premiere of "Lying Lips," at Barbee's Loop theatre.

Exceptional importance attached to the elaborate presentation given "Lying Lips" under Mr. Stromberg's direction, due to the recent absence of such features at Barbee's Loop theatre and throughout the loop district generally. In addition to the dignified announcement reproduced above, newspaper advertising stressed this program element and amusement writers on the daily newspapers gave the prologue special stories.

Thomas H. Ince's personal message to the public was artistically mounted and given prominent position in the middle lobby.

Three illuminated transformation photographs, disclosing as the viewer shifts position six scenes from the picture, were mounted directly in front of the box office and drew attention from all who passed within range of visibility. The first use of illuminated transformation stills as lobby exploitation, the remarkable drawing power attested throughout the elapsed portion of the run, makes adaptation of the idea certain.
THE stage of Barbee's Loop theatre, Chicago, with rehearsal of "Women of the Ages," the prologue to "Lying Lips," in progress. William S. Barbee, proprietor of the theatre, is seen at the left, while Hunt Stromberg, director of exploitation for Thomas H. Ince, extreme right, is seen directing the player who impersonated Mme. Pompadour. The costumes required are kept in stock by any costumer and but two of the players need be professionals. A solid color drop, a spotlight and colored stage lights are the only mechanical requisites.

"Lying Lips" Breaks Loop Theatre Record
As Ince Exploitation Expert Directs Run

"Lying Lips" is making exploitation history in Chicago.

On Feb. 13 the Thomas H. Ince Associated Producers production entered the second week of an indefinite run at Barbee's Loop theatre, existing box office records having been surpassed by a wide margin during the first week of the engagement.

To Hunt Stromberg, exploitation director for Thomas H. Ince, whose remarkable exploitation and presentation is described in the following story, Wm. S. Barbee, owner and manager of the theatre, frankly accords the major portion of credit for the success of the engagement.

UPON arrival in the city Mr. Stromberg outlined his plans for the engagement to Mr. Barbee, to the newspapers, to the city at large through newspaper advertisements and announcements, and applied himself to the business of preparing the theatre for the run.

An orchestra dispensed with during the past several months was reinstalled; seven performers were employed and rehearsals for the prologue begun; the lobby was decorated in keeping with the 75 cent admission charge and a mailing campaign was started, cards bearing teaser copy and so constructed as to present when held to the light two scenes from the play in actual film being used.

Pedestrians in the vicinity on the opening day were attracted by a carriage canopy extending to the curb. Beneath this, directly in front of the box office and on a level with the eye a box draped with green hangings presented an innovation in lobby display which is responsible for the cluster of the curious which has endured since the opening.

Transformation photographs of the type used by opticians in window displays, in which the scene changes as the viewer moves to left or right, thus changing the angle of observation, were so arranged that the three frames presented six scenes from the play. Each frame being illuminated in a different shade and the total display effectively arresting the attention of all within range of vision.

Further examination of the front disclosed brass and glass frames containing portraits of the star, scenes from the play, the personal message of Thomas H. Ince to the public and the announcement of Society Night, Friday, Feb. 11, when a section of the theatre was reserved at $1.50 per seat.

Entering the theatre, the pedestrian, now a patron, was shown to a seat by girl ushers in white duck trousers, yellow blouses and dark jackets. An orchestral concert worthy of the widely misapplied term, effect of which was heightened by graduation of shades in auditorium illumination, marked the opening of the performance. A news weekly followed, after which the curtains were drawn and the orchestra played the introduction.

to the prologue. “Women of the Ages,” staged in exact accordance with the script published in the Ince house organ, “The Silver Sheet.”

A male soloist appeared before the curtain and spoke the introductory lines. The curtains parted and girls impersonating Helen of Troy, Cleopatra, Salome, Lucrezia Borgia, Madame Pompadour and Modern Woman appeared in that order, each to music characteristic of the period represented and rhymed introduction by the man.

The curtains closed for a moment, then parted again as the picture opened, orchestral accompaniment successfully effecting the transition.

At that point the pedestrian who had become a patron ceased to appreciate consciously the efforts made in behalf of his entertainment. He did not know that the rain storm in the early footage seemed the most realistic he had ever witnessed because fans concealed at vantage points throughout the house and turned on at low speed created a mildly disagreeable current of air which momentarily chilled him. He did not know that the shipwreck was more convincingly real than any he had seen before in pictures because an elaborate system of stage effects made it so. Nor did he realize that the love passages stood out from the story proper because during each the orchestra repeated softly the song sung in tenor and soprano duet at the first meeting of the lovers, “I Found a Rose in the Devil’s Garden.”

The box office records show, however, that he liked the show and talked about it, though Mr. Stromberg did not entrust the success of the engagement to word-of-mouth advertising.

On Saturday of the first week 25,000 newspapers, duplicates of that reproduced at one of the high points in the play, were distributed by newsboys as extras.

On the preceding Thursday the Chicago Herald-Examiner carried a long distance telephone interview with Florence Vidor at Hollywood, the success of the picture being the subject of the reported conversation which ran almost a column and was illustrated with a two-column portrait cut of the star.

On Monday night of the second week the Junior League, a society organization, bought out the house and auctioned the tickets for charity at a specially arranged tea.

On Tuesday a detachment of sailors from the Great Lakes Naval Training Station paraded Michigan Boulevard and the loop district bearing a huge banner stating that the navy had aided in the production of the picture.

A side-light of more than ordinary significance is presented with the announcement by Mr. Stromberg that the distinctive newspaper copy used throughout the campaign was taken without alteration save for purposes of local identification from the press book supplied with the picture. Actual demonstration of press book practicability is in itself an achievement.

A greater achievement is Mr. Stromberg’s in successfully engineering a record-breaking loop engagement at record loop prices, in introducing exploitation methods of almost infinite possibilities, and in providing for American exhibitors who use the attraction an advertising campaign and presentation policy tested and demonstrated practicable.

Colorful Poster Is Basis of Effective Shamokin Lobby Set

The practical value of good coloration in posters is demonstrated with difficulty in black and white photography, but the display used by Chamberlin Amusement Enterprises, Shamokin, Pa., reproduced herewith, is convincing testimony. Though the display was used during the holiday season, its tardy arrival does not detract from its sheer attraction power or the artistry of its general composition.

The cutout from the paper supplied with “While New York Sleeps,” the Fox production, has been used widely for similar purposes.

THE SEASONS BEST

While New York Sleeps

Though utilized for the holiday season, the combination of white and green for lobby advertising of “While New York Sleeps,” in conjunction with the colorful cutout, is effective at any time.
Few American exhibitors have developed the science of lobby exploitation to the degree of effectiveness attained by Louis K. Sidney, managing director of the William Fox theatres in Denver, Colo., whose work in behalf of attractions playing those houses has made of their respective lobbies active selling forces for the pictures. Above is seen (left) the Rivoli front as it appeared during the engagement of “Blind Wives,” the Fox feature, and (right) the single huge cutout of Charles Ray, which was mounted atop the box office for the engagement of “Peaceful Valley,” Charles Ray’s First National attraction.

Stilled-Action Lobby Decoration Proves Vigorous Box Office Exploitation Force

Comparison of attendance at the motion picture theatre and the art gallery is convincing proof of the power exerted by the element of motion. In advertising it is no less potent than in entertainment.

The advertising picture, whether it be in poster, still or newspaper space, is most effective when most suggestive of action. Louis K. Sidney, managing director of the William Fox theatres in Denver, Colo., has perfected a system of stilled-action lobby display which merits the attention of all advertising exhibitors.

When Mr. Sidney played “Blind Wives,” the Fox production, he used the lobby display pictorially reproduced herewith. It is not an exceptional composition for the Rivoli theatre, but it is exceptional as compared to the lobby displays encountered in the news of the week.

In addition to the lobby advertising Mr. Sidney used a fashion show in connection with the picture and, to use his own words, “We broke every record of the Rivoli with this picture for one week.” He continues:

“Used a fashion show displaying the latest Spring creations. The show was staged in artistic manner and scored a great hit. The music for the exhibition of each gown was different. If a girl had a ‘vamp’ costume we played ‘The Vamp’ for her. For a blue gown we played ‘Alice Blue Gown’—and the show was a riot.”

The store which supplied the gowns was thoroughly covered with “Blind Wives” advertising, and newspaper copy for both store and theatre brought out strongly the details of the engagement.

Other lobby decorations reproduced upon this page are characteristic of the Sidney workmanship. That employed for “While New York Sleeps” is distinctive. In composition and effect it is obviously the result of time and money generously expended.

“Peaceful Valley,” Charles Ray’s First National attraction, was corded similar treatment, though in this instance less extreme methods were used, the huge cutout of the star in character being the strong point of the display.

The important phase of the whole is the clearly evident proof that a lobby display may with a little work and thought be made a vigorous exploitation force rather than an idle and rather futile approximation of “atmosphere.” Exhibitors who strive to make their lobby advertising that will find the efforts put forth productive of highly gratifying results.

Harry Rose, vaudeville actor, appearing currently in New York theatres, has introduced a song titled after “Over the Hill,” the Fox production. Though the song itself is not a direct tie-up, the comedian has introduced a patter chorus bearing upon the picture, which is now showing at the Broadhurst theatre.

Five reels of film, described by banner as worth $250,000 and represented as “The Life of the Party,” the Paramount production, was utilized by Oscar A. Doob, Paramount exploitation representative at Chicago, and Saul Optner, manager of the Hyde Park theatre, to acquaint patrons with the fact that the picture is not a two-reel comedy, the film in its container being displayed in the lobby and chained to the wall.

“Ace,” special writer for the “Kansas City Post,” devoted his entire space recently to a comic description of the exploitation used by Loew’s Garden theatre for “Down on the Farm,” the United Artists production, the story constituting better advertising than money could have purchased.
Artistic Photographs Made For Allan Dwan Production

One of the 11 x 14 lobby photos by Alfred Cheney Johnston prepared for Allan Dwan's "A Perfect Crime."

Lobby stills of a quality not often offered the exhibitor are to be available for the advertising of "A Perfect Crime," forthcoming Allan Dwan picturization of the Saturday Evening Post story for Associated Producers, Inc., the 11 x 14 specimens reproduced herewith being indicative of the excellence attained.

Alfred Cheney Johnston, long regarded as one of New York's foremost photographers, went to the West Coast to make the photographs while production was in progress.

The originals received are entirely worthy of the enterprise which made them possible. The depth and detail far surpass that of the photograph come to be regarded as the "average still," the quality of the whole being such as to warrant special means of display.

Where reluctance to cooperate in window advertising has been met with on the part of merchants approached, the present stills may be found of material value in overcoming this prejudice. Their presence is certain to prove an adjunct to any purely mercantile display, and it is entirely possible that if left unaugmented save by a line or two identifying the picture and the playhouse the stills will overbalance the merchant's appeal.

Great as is the benefit to the theatre man of stills possessing genuine merit, it is less significant than the fact that it was considered worth while to bring Mr. Johnston to the studio to make the photographs. There may be seen in support of that policy a definite appreciation of exhibitors' problems and a determination to do all that may be done to aid in solving them.

The attitude is the correct one for all concerned in any motion picture activity. Upon the exhibitor's ability to sell motion picture entertainment at a satisfactory profit depends and will always depend the welfare of the entire industry.

With the possible exception of advance in production methods there is no improvement to which the entire industry can better devote time, thought and investment.

Songs of Long Ago Contest Big Winner

J. C. Hewitt, manager of the Strand theatre, Robinson, Ill., has instituted a series of "Songs of Long Ago" contests which he reports as sensationally successful. "We are so enthused over the results that we are passing the idea along to other exhibitors who we know can always use good stunts, which come few and far between."

The original contest was announced upon the cover of the Strand house organ. Upon the first three nights of the week the organist was to play ten songs that had been "hits" years ago. Complimentary tickets good for one month, two weeks and a single week were offered as prizes for correct identification of the numbers given and cards were distributed for the convenience of patrons in submitting lists.

Expectations were surpassed when 249 answers were received the first evening, and it was thereupon decided to make the contest a permanent feature, using it the first three nights of each week to stimulate patronage during that normally dull period.

For the guidance of exhibitors who decide to adopt Mr. Hewitt's excellent idea the following titles of old songs taken from the card which won first prize in the initial Strand contest are presented:

Five Words Tell It All

COMPRESSSION of meaning in copy produces amplified appeal and concentrated effect. The pictorially expressive posters prepared by United Artists for "The Nut" convincingly demonstrate the point.

Starting with the reproduction of the 24-sheet at the top of this page and reading clockwise, the posters might be titled as indicating characteristics of the typical Fairbanks picture—"Novelty," "Adventure," "Suspense," "Farce," "Speed" and "Romance."

And five words tell it all.
Pantheon’s Foyer Setting
Rich Promise to Patrons

Foyer advance exploitation at its best, a well composed and artistically lighted display used by the Pantheon theatre, Chicago, in behalf of “The Mark of Zorro.”

The accompanying reproduction of a photograph showing the foyer of the Pantheon theatre, Chicago, prior to the engagement of “The Mark of Zorro,” Douglas Fairbanks’ United Artists production, serves excellently in calling attention to the good purpose to which a foyer may be put without in any way detracting from the usefulness thereof as an accommodation for patrons. The present general trend of theatre activity is not markedly in the direction of improvement as concerns this particular branch of advertising.

The Pantheon setting depended largely upon lighting for effectiveness. To the left, behind the trees, a 500-watt bunch light threw a red glow over the set. On the opposite side a blue bunch light contrasted with this, in such a manner as to create the general impression of a sunrise scene. The display drew marked attention. Patrons entering the theatre, and those leaving it as well, were all but compelled to stop and give consideration to the exceptionally rich promise held forth for the coming attraction.

That is the one purpose for which the foyer may be utilized as other than an architectural feature of theatre construction. There is no loss of dignity when the display is artistically composed and left to score solely upon its artistic merit. There can be no antipathy toward such advertising methods on the part of the patron, and the impression scored is certain to operate to the best interest of the theatre box office.

Where the method is employed with due care there is in it the added merit of the novelty which it provides for steady patrons, the break in monotony of house appearance, and monotony is unavoidable whether the theatre represents an expenditure of one hundred thousand dollars or a million.

For straight, out-and-out smash advertising the foyer may not be employed to complete satisfaction. There is a place for everything, as the adage begins, and the place to sell a patron entertainment is not in the foyer, where he is met just prior or subsequent to an actual purchase. The psychology of the proposition is clear.

Exhibitorial thought is not vitally concerned with foyer advertising at this time. Newspaper and the more sensational forms are being given the most intensive study at this time. But every branch is important in proportion to its yield, and the yield of the Pantheon setting is reported gratifying.

Twelve solid pages of advertising and publicity were obtained by Joseph Hopp, general manager, and Oscar A. Doob, Paramount exploitation man, when the Fort Armstrong theatre in Rock Island, Ill., was opened. A mayoral proclamation asking citizens to support the new business institution, and resolutions by the Rotary Club and the Chamber of Commerce were also published.

THE accompanying stills from "Lessons In Love," Constance Talmadge’s forthcoming First National attraction, are submitted by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., for the guidance of exhibitors who wish to prepare in advance plans for a prologue to be used in presentation of the production. All well equipped theatres have the required scenery, and where it is necessary to construct special settings for the purpose these will be found a valuable addition to the stock stage fixtures. A young couple to impersonate the star and her leading man in the picture constitute the sole additional expense, and the advance reviews of the attraction, or the press sheet, will give the necessary information for rehearsal of the prologue.
Motorcycle Combines Mobility and Realism In Effective Street Exploitation Device

The most admirably executed exploitation stunt is of little merit if provision is not made for the bringing of attention to its existence. Frequently, and paradoxically, the advertising of advertising is more difficult than advertising itself.

B. G. Salvini, manager of the Lyceum theatre, New Britain, Conn., not only uses good exploitation, but makes sure that its effect will be brought to bear upon the greatest possible number of the citizens of that city. Two cases in point are illustrated upon this page.

WHEN "Bullet Proof," Harry Carey's Universal production, was exhibited at the Lyceum theatre Mr. Salvini made use of a well-constructed imitation of a tank such as was used in the great war. The illustration shows the striking realism gained in designing the vehicle. What the illustration does not show is brought out in Mr. Salvini's letter concerning the enterprise, which states that a motorcycle was used for the instrument of mobility. No superior imagination is required to appreciate the effect thus produced. The staccato exhausts of the motorcycle engine are not altogether unlike those given in the genuine tank, and the combined effect of optical and auricular illusion cannot have been otherwise than beneficial in influence upon those to whose attention it was brought.

A less spectacular but commendable enterprise was shown in exploiting "Lady Rose's Daughter," Elsie Ferguson's Paramount production, which stunt is illustrated herewith also. Four high school girls were sent about the city with a ribbon banner bearing the title of the play, which at first blush was not recognizable as such to those unfamiliar with the picture.

Each girl carried a number of portraits of the star, upon the reverse side of which was printed the important information concerning the engagement. These were passed out to pedestrians, due to the fact that the girls were local children and undoubtedly familiar to many whom they met, the cards were read with careful attention.

Both enterprises are typical of the type of showmanship which is good for the industry, for the theatre men, for the motion picture as an institution of popular entertainment, and for the public in that it brings sharply to their attention the fact that good entertainment is available at the local theatre. Mr. Salvini worked well in each campaign.

A teaser campaign centering about the head of the ape man in "Go and Get It" so aroused citizens of Knoxville, Tenn., that the editor of the "Sentinel," which printed the advertising for the Riviera theatre, refused Manager Drumbar's copy on the second day and published an editorial apology for the alarming warnings printed, which because of a recent series of outrages by an uncaptured criminal had caused the misinterpretation. Mr. Drumbar capitalized the incident by incorporating the editorial in a quarter page advertisement in which he shouldered the blame and announced the First National attraction.
Exploitation Stories Showing the Trend of Advertising Activity Recorded by the Lens

“THE KID,” Charles Chaplin’s First National attraction, opened on January 30 at Kunsky’s Madison theatre, Detroit, Mich., with crowds as seen in the photograph drawn by characteristic Kunsky advertising.

STARTLING realism was attained in the lobby display made up for the run of “Shipwrecked Among Cannibals,” the Universal production, at the Leader theatre, Washington, D.C., when a huge pot given central position was represented as boiling, with models of two human feet projecting over the edge.

HARRY SWIFT, exploitation representative of Famous Players-Lasky, obtained this window display for “Civilian Clothes” in Pittsfield, Mass., the picture passing the “Humoresque” record at the Union Square theatre.

WEEKLY and daily box office records of the American theatre, Salt Lake City, Utah, are reported broken as a result of the exploitation efforts made in behalf of “Kismet,” the Robertson-Cole production of Otis Skinner’s stage success.

A WINDOW display installed four doors from the Rex theatre, a neighborhood house of Denver, Colo., reported as having nullified to great extent the detrimental effect of bad weather during the run of Paramount’s “Why Change Your Wife?”
The imperishable association of ideas linking feminine love of dress with the marital estate was relied upon in constructing the window display advertising the engagement of "Behold My Wife," the Paramount production, at the Palace theatre, Burlington, Ia. The effectiveness of the logic underlying this type of advertising has been demonstrated in hundreds of instances.

The camera does scant justice to the lobby display used by W. E. Drumbar, manager of the Riveria theatre, Knoxville, Tenn., in behalf of "Go and Get It," the First National attraction. The cutout was so constructed that back lighting produced gleaming green eyes and a scarlet mouth for the ape man. Other lobby lighting was arranged to cast a deep red glow over the entire front.

Frank Bligh, manager of the Liberty and Bligh theatres, Salem, Ore., has developed marked ability in lobby advertising. The above reproduction of a photograph showing the display made up for "Nomads of the North," the First National attraction, is typical of Mr. Bligh's products, picturesque, realistic, strong in suggestive power and artistic as a whole. First National characterizes the display the best used in behalf of that production.

Another composition by Frank Bligh, showing the striking effect that may be gained by intelligent use of materials within the reach of all. "Go and Get It," Marshall Neilan's First National attraction, is a newspaper story. What more logical than a newspaper lobby? The materials used are at the disposal of every exhibitor. Every exhibitor knew before playing date that the picture was a newspaper story. Mr. Bligh was the only man to use the obvious lobby.

There is no age limit as concerns exploitation. "What's Your Hurry?" the Paramount picture, illustrates the point. The American theatre, Terre Haute, Ind., recently used the automobile campaign successfully.

An elaborately constructed stage dragon was featured in Joseph Plunkett's prologue for "The First Born," Sessue Hayakawa's Robertson-Cole production, during the showing of that production at the Mark Strand theatre, New York.
Personal Note Dominant
In Theatre Advertising

CONFIDENCE

"Heart-to-heart" copy, direct communication via advertising space with the public that, in the last analysis, pays for it, has long been one of the most neglected instruments at the exhibitor's disposal. Recent tendencies toward a general adoption of this effective means of building up permanent patronage and stabilizing the box office indicate growing appreciation of the advantages thus obtainable.

Two reproductions presented here-with are characteristic of the copy that is appearing with more frequency than at any previous period throughout the country. Both merit the attention of everyone concerned in motion picture theatre advertising.

Another reproduction shows the direct manner in which H. G. Ramsey, manager of the Royal theatre, El Dorado, Kans., informed his patrons of "Heliotrope," a picture which obviously aroused his deep admiration and which was presented to the buying public for consideration backed by his personal recommendation.

As is natural, use of the copy has resulted in formulation of a distinctive style of advertisement. It is altogether in keeping with the nature of the matter, a certain dignity in harmony with the personal endorsement of the exhibitor being attained.

The direct beneficial influence of thus intimately communicating with those to whom the exhibitor desires to sell his wares is of considerably more than passing moment. The effect of confidential advertising is not confined to a single engagement, but extends over a protracted period. With consistent use of the method it is not at all beyond the limits of reason to expect in surprisingly short time a condition wherein the exhibitor's description of attractions playing his house is taken without the traditional "grain of salt."

Benefits following upon that condition need not be enumerated. No theatre can attain a better estate than that to which it is elevated by the process indicated.

A neat four-page folder, with the back page designed for advertising purposes and a hole provided for hanging, is printed monthly by E. S. Beynon, manager of the Cozy theatre, Lake Crystal, Minn., carrying an announcement of the month's attractions in single-engagement data, pictures and star. "Our way of advertising coming attractions," is Mr. Beynon's note upon the copy received, to which he might truthfully have added, "is hard to beat."

How Often Film Fans of El Dorado

OFFERS picture when you have by letter, film club does a show of interest to entire community and cause me to look at two, three, even four times!" written under the heading of this advertisement in the local newspaper.

SEASON OPENS! Pe. column is preceded by an exciting dream of romance coming into our lives, and reads: "A thrill picture awaited by the thousands for one that a really great picture has arrived."

But sooner a picture has arrived.

A picture of absorbing romance, of genuine thrill of suspense, and of suspense continually kept in suspense! To be viewed time after time with the same interest! A picture you will not want to see — will see again, many times in different form — will be that bigger picture that comes only once in a hundred years.

IT'S A WONDER PLAY, THE ONE BIG FILM EVENT OF THE SEASON, and the pictures you will read about are more effective, more sensational, more varied in thought than any before.

AND IF YOU WILL NOT BE THE FIRST to see this picture you will be one of the few, unless your friends tell you about it. They will repay you by taking you to see this film — the smallest will repay you by taking you to see this picture — the most costly will repay you by taking you to see this picture.

The Minneapolis, Minn., opening of "Kismet," the Robertson-Cole production, recently described in these pages, was no more ably executed than the newspaper campaign which introduced that attraction to the theatregoers of the Twin Cities. J. L. Johnston, advertising manager of the Finkelstein & Ruben organization, instituted in behalf of the picture one of the greatest newspaper campaigns in his active career.

The above reproduction shows the page display which formed the climax of the "Kismet" advertising drive. It is one of the most attractive contributed from any part of the country in connection with the sensational advertising the picture has been given.

The composition is one of the best produced by Mr. Johnston to date, and his endeavors in behalf of Finkelstein & Ruben theatres extend over a protracted period. That it should have been produced in the interests of a picture which has moved to presentation and exploitation exhibitors in every part of the country who had not previously undertaken anything of the sort is significant.

Pictures of that type are of especial value to the trade. They produce good advertising. Good advertising produces volume patronage, and upon that depends the whole future of the motion picture and every individual identified therewith.

A ten-year-old boy of Lima, O., acquired freckles for the occasion when employed to impersonate Wesley Barry in exploiting the Regent theatre engagement of "Dinty." To make them realistic, he painted them on with iodine—and they won't come off.
Country Store Is Feature Of “Down Home” Setting

N. FRUDENFELD, director of publicity for the Sun theatre, Omaha, Neb., achieved gratifying results with the country store prologue pictorially described herewith in connection with the showing of “Down Home,” Irving Willat’s production distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. Better choice of material for presentation purposes is not frequently noted in the theatre news of a week or a month.

The description contributed by Mr. Frudenfeld states that the feature was entitled “Rubetown Minstrels,” and that the dialogue centered around the plot of the picture. On the rise of the curtain red lights were used in the stove and the kettle was steaming. As one member made reference to the heat the stove door was opened and the fire was seen to die down, the steam ceasing to come from the kettle.

No mention is made of the musical numbers or dialogue employed, but any showmen will readily outline these as he studies the Sun setting. The possibilities are obviously great, and perhaps it is just as well that Mr. Frudenfeld does not describe this feature of the prologue in detail.

There are half a hundred songs which may be utilized in such a number, ranging from the classics of yesteryear to the “O, By Jingo” and its companion numbers of present popularity. A satisfactory program is easily made up of these.

Jokes are no less plentiful. Perhaps the antiques will serve the present purpose as well as or better than the newer products. They carry with them the unmistakable atmosphere of the country gathering place.

Dance classics, the “hoe down,” etc., probably will likewise be found most satisfactory. A character in the indicated grab could scarcely be expected to deliver the ultra-jazz steps presently in vaudeville vogue, though a “rube” version or burlesque of these might be found excellent material if the performers employed possess the ability to “put it over.”

The establishment of the rural atmosphere prior to the screening of the picture is the essential thing, however, in this as in every instance. No matter how good a picture may be, it may be made to leave a better impression by use of good presentation. Mr. Frudenfeld’s prologue is an ideal introduction for a picture of the type. It should be widely copied.

STUNTS

Stanley Chambers, manager of the Palace theatre, Wichita, Kans., applied the suggestion made in “Your Picture in the Paper,” the article presented in this department of the February 12 issue, and received a story with cut aggregating considerably more than half a column written by the newspaper’s feature writer.

Money bags were used in decorating the front of the Orpheum theatre, Chicago, during the engagement of “Brewster’s Millions,” Roscoe Arbuckle’s Paramount production. Consideration of the stunt leads to ready formulation of innumerable ideas for elaboration of the original.

A series of six cumulative illustrated teasers which may be grouped in one display for the final announcement is one of the effective stunts suggested in the press book prepared for “Society Snobs,” a Selznick production starring Conway Tearle.

E. J. Weisfeldt, managing director of the Strand theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., used the distorted Harold Lloyd mirrors for lobby decoration in behalf of “Number Please,” that comedian’s Pathe comedy, and staged a prologue in which a set telephone twelve feet in height concealed and later revealed a tenor and soprano who sang a popular song parodied for the purpose. The melody was also played on bells concealed throughout the auditorium.

The Village Theatre Company, operating the Village theatre, Wilmette, Ill., has prepared for distribution among its patrons a six-page folder in which every phase of motion pictures, from studio photography to exhibitorial program selection is carefully and interestingly described and a sample of film is presented. The composition amounts in effect to a liberal education for the motion picture fan, successfully accomplishing the purpose which a campaign of education invariably accomplishes—effective exploding of the censorship theory. The Village Theatre Company will doubtless supply a copy to any exhibitor upon request, and every exhibitor can use the idea with good effect.
First National Explains Attitude on "The Kid"
should any Chaplin release prove to be in, say, three reels instead of two. And it was so fixed because a three-reel picture was still a short subject, from the exhibitor's standpoint, and he would be required to book a feature to round out his program.

"In the case of 'The Kid,' however, it constitutes a feature in itself and makes it unnecessary for the exhibitor to book anything else on the same program, with the possible exception of a short subject.

"As a feature, therefore, its added value cannot be expressed in terms of a percentage of the fixed price of the other Chaplin productions, which could only be regarded as short subjects. Its real value and the fact that the exhibitor, ought, and in most cases, is unwilling to pay for it, must be arrived at by regarding it as a feature, and formulating the price in a special manner."

Asks Reason for Demand

"No exhibitor would expect to obtain any six-reel feature at a rental price equivalent to twice what he would pay for a two-reel comedy."

"Why should any exhibitor make such a demand in this instance?"

"Associated First National has already demonstrated its absolute determination to be fair with the exhibitor, even at the sacrifice of what might be considered a commercial opportunity according to some of the business standards of this field."

Six months ago, if First National had been so disposed, it could have cancelled every outstanding Chaplin contract, returned deposits thereon, and put itself in a position to take advantage of the present situation. It did not so, because First National's experience with its own exhibitor members has taught it that the overwhelming majority of the exhibitors believe in and practice fair play, appreciate it when it is shown to them, and reciprocate it in every instance."

Lesser Elated Over Future of Industry
Returns to West Coast to Fight Against Slump

Propaganda

Irving M. Lesser has arrived in Los Angeles after spending several months in New York City, Mr. Lesser is prepared to make a fight against the "depression" through the medium of the industry propaganda, which has been circulated. According to Lesser, the motion picture industry needs propaganda, as were the case a state of readjustment—something that every standard industry has or will do. That everything is quickly working to an advantageous point of harmony for all concerned is firmly believed by this producer.

"Do not feel any fear concerning the future of the picture world," says Mr. Lesser. "I am a producer and am producing at the present time in Los Angeles. I have just completed 'Peck's Bad Boy,' a five-reel feature starring Jackie Coogan. Within a very short space of time I shall produce two additional producing units under my banner. These also will be in Los Angeles."

According to this film executive, there is little need for sale of his products if these pictures are up to standard.

"There is a big future in store for independent film making in Los Angeles," Lesser added, and he goes further in saying that our big national distributing organizations are willing to contract for independently produced products if they are worthy subjects.

"Three Musketeers"
Next Fairbanks Film
Noted Dramatist Will Write Continuity for Alexander
Dumas Story

The next vehicle for Douglas Fairbanks, following the publication of 'The Nut,' is "United Artists on April 1, will be Alexander Dumas' world-famous story, 'The Three Musketeers."

Dramatist to Adapt It

It is the intention of Fairbanks to engage one of the world's best known dramatists to adapt this tale to the requirements of the screen. According to several of our most famous contemporary authors and playwrights are being considered, among them among Edward Knoblock, who gave to the speaking stage such notable works as "Milestones," "Kismet," "Tiger, Tiger," "My Lady's Dress," and "Shahram," the latter of which Knoblock will be chosen.

Plans are being formulated for the casting of an impressive and capable cast. The assemblage of players being arranged for by Fairbanks will constitute what amounts to an all-star cast.

Director Not Announced

In the beginning it was the intention of Fairbanks to make this picture in Europe. Owing to the fact that so much time would be required for the trip that it would have been beyond their control to complete the 1921 production schedule, this idea has been abandoned. But it is understood that the picture may be embodied by the correct locale, arrangements are being made to send two cameramen abroad, one to England and the other to France, where suitable exteriors will be made and incorporated in the production. Photographs from which sets can be built on the Fairbanks' lot will be taken.

No announcement has been made yet as to who will direct this feature.

Educational Conducts Comedy Appeal Test
Finding That Short Subjects
Are Adaptable to Any Program

For the purpose of determining whether certain of its product is regarded by exhibitors as more desirable for use on the same bill with particular types of pictures, Educational Film Exchanges, has been conducting for several weeks a survey of the use of comedy films used with the first run of unusual features in principal cities.

The result, says Educational, shows the adaptability of the four brands of two-reel comedies to all sorts of programs, and the frequent use of the single reel Varsity and Gayety brands while the feature is considered too long to permit the use of a two reeler. One impressive fact learned is that where the feature is a particularly tense one the better theaters have shown a uniform policy of making room for one of the two reeler even if there is no time to eliminate all other film from the programs.

Various Comedies Used

Here are some of the results: With "Midsummer Madness" at both the Strand, Seattle, and the Euclid, Cleveland, "Ishbel," preferred in Boston, Chicago, and St. Louis, Pittsburgh, has "Flowers," used in the Arcadia, Philadelphia, preferred "Torchy's Double Triumph."

Three theaters which played "The Frontier of the Stars" preferred a Chico comedy to complete the bill, the Broadway Strand, Detroit, using "Dining Room, Kitch & Parlor, while "A Homespun Hero," Denver, "A Homespun Hero," and the Riviera, Chicago, "Going Through the Rye." Two theaters also preferred a Christie with the first runs of "Iolani of Clay," the Walnut in Cincinnati playing "Mr. Fatima," and the Grand and Regent in Pittsburgh "A Homespun Hero.

Chester companies are using with "The Braided Woman" at the Stanton and with "Inside of the Cup" at the Palace, both Philadelphia; "A Homespun Hero" at the Riviera, Chicago; with Mary Pickford in "The Love Light" at the New Grand Central, St. Louis; and with "The Penalty" at the Rex, Pittsburgh.

Adaptable to Any Bill

Torchy comedies showed their suitability to accompany any sort of a picture by appearing with such accompaniments as "The Spenders" at Barice's Loop, Chicago; "Ishbel" at the Civic, Springfield, Paul; "The Furnace" at the Palace, Philadelphia, and "Peaceful Valley" at the Rialto, Pittsburgh.

Other Christsie include showings: "Movie Mad" with "Ishbel" at the Adams, Detroit; "Wedding Blues" with "Ginny Men," at the Grand, Buffalo; "Shuffle the Queens" with "Dangerous Business" at the Strand, Cincinnati, and "Hey, Ruben," with "Outside the Law" at the Rialto, Washington.

Motion Is Over-Emphasized: Ballin

Hugo Ballin, who has just finished his modernized version of "East Lynne," for publication by W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, has demonstrated, he believes, the soundness of his theory that the stress of physical acting and indeed the whole physical element in the production of motion pictures has reached its peak and that the public is turning away from this style of entertainment. He says:

"I believe the time has come when we must readjust the standards of screen values. Because motion on the screen was a sentimental novelty we suffered much from exaggerated motion in the early days of the industry. Indeed we all remember that the first motion pictures aimed at nothing more than the reproduction of motion as such and that to be sure was novel and startling enough. We had galloping horses, express trains, the flight of birds, athletic and gymnastic exercises—in short all those activities which either consisted wholly of motion or accentuated motion.

"It was but natural for us to import this tendency to emphasize motion into our early screen drama—a fact which to my mind accounts quite fully for the immense and sustained popularity of so-called "westerns." From time to time we attempted something of the subtler type. When we started to translate popular fiction into the vocabulary of the screen we began to realize that the over-emphasis of motion was a fatal defect. We all remember that at one time the foreign pictures, especially the picture of Latin or to be specific of French origin had a tremendous vogue.

"Ten years ago the popularity of the foreign picture reached its height. Patrons still looked for plenty of motion, almost for its own sake. From that day forward, i.e., from 1911, the foreign made picture began to decline, and while in 1909 and 1910 at least one-half of the average American motion picture program consisted of pictures of foreign origin, in 1915 the foreign made picture represented a negligible quantity.

"This fact can be explained only in one way—the people who patronized the motion pictures had become tired of the mere novelty of motion and desired something more subtle and refined. The American producer was quick to sense this popular demand, and by responding to it reduced the foreign picture to insignificance. I believe that we are still in the initial stage of this reculsion from the over-emphasis of motion.

"We have, I believe, now arrived at a point where the majority of our patrons enjoy a picture in proportion to the subtlety of its appeal. This means above all things a profound change in the nature and quality of acting before the camera and likewise in the nature and quality of the successful director. Pathos and atmosphere today count for more than ever in the history of motion pictures. Beauty and lavish settings have become factors, though I believe that the latter are very near reaching their peak and will no longer in themselves add much to the value of a picture.

"In 'East Lynne' I have sought to respond to the demand for the more subtle appeal for the more spiritual kind of acting—for the innuendo and intimacy rather than the brash rhetoric of the sub-title.

"The well-known scene in which Capt. Levison abandons Isabel Vane used to be a rather violent affair on the stage—probably it had been burlesqued so frequently for that reason—I have tried to convey the sentiments of the man and woman without recourse to violence. I know it is impossible to photograph thought, but I do not think it is impossible to catch the fleeting yet very real expressions that move the human heart in moments of great distress and depict themselves on the human face.

"I have mentioned this scene because it is typical of my plan to impart more of the spiritual values to the screen. I believe, too, that something must be left to the imagination of the patrons; I know of no more delicate task than a bid for sympathy. If it is overdone in the slightest degree it will react unfavorably. We can hope for little more than a stirring of sympathy and that must always seem to come in the most spontaneous fashion, otherwise we lose our aim. I do most heartily believe in the effect of art and beauty. Here, too, however, the appeal dare not be too obvious. Art and beauty can never be obtruded on an audience; like mercy they must fall upon the hearts like the gentle rain from heaven.

"With these ends in view and fairly confident of the new mood of the public and their changed attitude toward their favorite entertainment I have ventured to depart from many a hoary tradition, and it may be that I have defied time-honored melodramatic rules of conduct and procedure. The verdict of the public will be recorded in due time and none of us may anticipate anything with certainty. There is no doubt, however, that a variation of the dramatic part of the motion picture entertainment is demanded by the public and that the old molds are wearing out. Nothing is constant in this industry, which is both a fine and useful art. Nothing is constant but change. We need a new lure for the public. My version of 'East Lynne' represents my plan to provide this new element."

FIRST AID!
Hospital in Three Months

The making of motion pictures in many instances is a strenuous occupation. Glance at the records of the first aid hospital at the new Paramount studio on Long Island. During the three months that the hospital has operated more than 600 cases have been treated. Most of the cases were minor ones, such as bruises, cuts and sprains.

Probably the most unusual case treated at the hospital was that of sunburn from electric lights. While making "The Teaser," a picture starring Dorothy Dalton, several of the extra girls in the dance hall scenes had to take positions near the big Klieg lights. They wore low neck dresses and the rays from the powerful lamps gave them a better case of sunburned backs than Coney Island and a July sun could ever do.

* * *

Dr. Emanuel Stern, chief physician for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who spends four hours at the studio hospital every day, explained that the first aid station was established to increase the efficiency of the workers at the studio by watching their health as well as to give emergency treatment.

"Our business is to keep the employees fit and give medical attention and advice that will enable them to stay on the job," said Dr. Stern. "Anyone who is incapacitated in line of duty we take care of.

* * *

Dr. Stern, who is now one of the assistant surgeons at Bellevue hospital, is a graduate of New York university and the Bellevue hospital medical school. He also was an interne at the hospital after his graduation and before entering the army where he did reconstruction surgery at Colonia, N. J., and Fort Oglethorpe, Ga.

Dr. Stern has equipped the first aid station at the studio as completely as such a station is equipped in any hospital. Mrs. Mary Mackay Rausch, a trained nurse, is on duty all day at the station and takes care of all minor cases. A daily record of all cases is kept the same as in the first aid room of a hospital.

Week Run Is Policy
Of New Ambassador
Gore-Lesser House Will Be Known As National Art
Theatre of Screen

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 13.—In announcing the policy of the New Ambassador, known as the "National Art Theatre of the Screen," S. Barret McCormick announces that no production will be shown for more than one week. The new Gore Brothers and Sol Lesser house was opened on February 5th. McCormick is in complete charge of the playhouse.

"Passion" Opens House

The prologue which McCormick staged in connection with "Passion," the opening attraction, determined beyond any doubt that Gore Brothers and Sol Lesser have made no mistake in selecting him to guide the destinies of its house.

According to Managing Director McCormick the feature productions presented will be cloaked with the cultural arts in such a manner that all shall be blended into one complete setting.

The influence of light, of music, of poetry, of the ballet and pantomime will be welded into the presentation through inconspicuous channels so that the complete "product" will seem "naturally" complete.

Follows Italian Renaissance

In architecture, the Ambassador follows closely the Italian Renaissance; in spirit, it is the "Little Theatre of the Screen."

Max Weil heads the symphony orchestra. The seating capacity is 550 chairs. Admission prices are, for afternoons 75 cents and $1, plus tax, and, for evenings, $1 and $1.50, plus tax. All seats are reserved. Two performances daily at 2:30 and 8:30 p.m.

Joe Gilday Succeeds Wolfberg at Famous Transferred to the Chicago Office as Manager of Central District

Joseph H. Gilday, veteran of the film business and a former exhibitor, has been appointed manager for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to have jurisdiction over the Chicago territory. Mr. Gilday came to Chicago this week from New York, with Harris P. Wolfberg, who is retiring as district manager to become vice-president and general sales manager of Lake & Export Coal Corporation. Wolfberg will relinquish the reins at the Chicago Paramount office as soon as Gilday has become acclimated. Gilday has been branch manager of the Famous Players’ office in Kansas City, his home town, for the last year. He is one of the pioneers of the motion picture business. He is said to have been the first man in Kansas City to convert a legitimate theatre into a cinema palace. Joe” Gilday is known in the film industry as a man of pleasing personality and unapproachable integrity. He understands the exhibitors’ problems and is known for his ability to deal with personal interests in a way that makes them feel that their interests are being taken in to it that the exhibitors in his territory are aided to prosperity.

Scores of exhibitors are visiting the Famous Players’ exchange to bid welcome to Gilday and farewell to Wolfberg.

"What Women Will Do" Scheduled for Screens

Believing the New Edward Jose production, “What Women Will Do,” to be a notable addition to the list of photoplays which Associated Exhibitors, Inc., have launched under their banner, including “The Riddle: Woman,” starring Geraldine Farrar, and “The Devil,” with George Arliss, this new feature has been selected to headline the Pathé schedule for March 15.

“What Women Will Do” is melodrama, presenting the thrills and romance found in the underworld and cultured society. The gaiety of the cabaret and the excitement of the race track also forms the background against which Charles A. Logue has written this story of a woman's regeneration.

First King Cartoon Ready February 15

The first of Frank King’s animated cartoons, “Gasoline Alley,” will be completed by February 15. Its title is “Leave It to Walt.” The cutting is now taking place on this picture. “Gasoline Alley” tells its story in five hundred feet of film. Upon its completion, “Gasoline Alley” will be given a trade showing, and a screening in several key cities simultaneously.

Pathe Will Inaugurate Boy Adventure Series

“The Adventures of Bob and Bill Series,” a group of one reel photoplays presenting amusing adventures of two boys skilled in wood craft, which Pathe will inaugurale March 6 with the publication of “Trapping the Cat,” offers an interesting novelty in the production of screen entertainment.

Selznick’s “The Highest Law” Wins Favor in Sing Sing and in Church

Following Exhibition of Production Pastor in New York Delivers Sermon Based on Ralph Ince Picturization of Lincoln’s Life

The Selznick presentation of an incident in the life of Lincoln, under the title of “The Highest Law,” a Ralph Ince special, gained unique distinction recently when shown to the inmates of Sing Sing under the auspices of the Special Welfare League simultaneously with the unreeing of another print in the Crawford Memorial church, before a congregation of Methodists in New York City. The incident may be considered as a tribute to the usefulness of the screen in forwarding welfare work in both community and prison.

In both instances addresses referring to the life of the Great Emancipator were in each case an integral part of the entertainment. In the Methodist church the Rev. Lincoln Hollister Caswell, who, it is said, bears a striking resemblance to Lincoln, preached Sunday night following the picture showing. There transpired the remarkable incident of a clergyman recalling Lincoln not alone in personal resemblance but in a sermon based on a film.

Operates Complete Show

Pastor Caswell gives a complete picture show in his Sunday school room—comedy, scenic, news reel, feature and all. He started picture shows for the purpose of centering community interest in his church, taking the screen as a direct method of appeal. He shows pictures Saturday night and on Sunday night preaches a sermon with the photo-play as a text. One thousand persons are an average attendance at the church exhibitions.

There is a regular picture theatre not far from the church run by showmen who work in harmony with Pastor Caswell. Bolte Brothers of the B. and B. theatre, believe that he is showing pictures and are content to get their share of the crowds thus created throughout the week. Bolte Brothers run a slide on their screen announcing the church show. They pick up his films at the exchanges.

Praises Selznick Picture

Frederick Mark, chairman of the Mutual Welfare League’s entertainment committee, wrote to the Selznick organization a letter in which he said, in part: “The special value of ‘The Highest Law’ lies in the fact that it deals with real people, real events and real human emotions. After a long series of fictitious characterizations it is an inexpressible relief to come to Mr. Ince’s ‘Lincoln.’ He makes the man so real, so vivid and so magnificent a figure that the history of his time comes closer home and is more vividly real than would be possible by almost any other medium.”

Pastor Caswell, in his Sunday night sermon, said: “When I talk to an audience, I can tell them much that I say goes in one ear and out of the other, but if I can put anything into the eye it is bound to stick for there’s no way out. This is the power of pictures, and religion must soon seize this mighty power of the moving picture to make people think. The motion picture challenges the pulpit as a regulator and determinator of public morals and the private conscience.”

In a letter to the Selznick people Reverend Caswell said: “The ‘Highest Law’—‘The Selznick people are to be commended on making this type of picture. Their latest Lincoln picture (we have already shown ‘The Land of Opportunity’ in our church) seizes on the moment when Lincoln pardons a soldier who has deserted his regiment to see his dying mother.”

Fritzi Ridgeway to Make Feature Films

Fritzi Ridgeway has graduated from two reel subjects, which she has been making for the last year, and is about to enter into the feature field in a series of five reel features based on well known and widely read books, within the next few months, according to a report from the Capital Film Company.

Corelli Story, "God's Good Man," Issued by Stoll on February 20

Marie Corelli's story, "God's Good Man," will be issued by Stoll Film Corporation of America on February 20. This will be the first motion picture production of a work by the noted author, in which every detail was personally supervised by her.

Elvey Directed Picture

Miss Corelli stated that she had actual living persons in mind when she wrote the book, and insisted that the players who were given the part conform as closely as possible to the originals. When Basil Gill, in his makeup as the Rev. John Walden, appeared for his first scene, Miss Corelli was filled with wonder, for she is reported to have said he resembled the other in the minutest detail.

Peggy Carlisle in Lead

For many of the outdoor scenes Miss Corelli took the whole company to the Shakespeare country, where some wonderful landscapes were shot as charming settings for the absorbing story.

Peggy Carlisle plays the part of Maryllia Vancourt, the petted heiress who tires of the shallowness of life in the big city, and retires to the peace and calm of her country estate, only to find greater real excitement and romance. Others in the cast are Barry Barnard, Julian Henry, Edward Arundel and Kate Gurney.

David P. Howells Obtains Right on Darmond Serial, "Hope Diamond Mystery"

David P. Howells has obtained the rights in the United States and Canada on "The Hope Diamond Mystery," a fifteen-episode serial featuring Grace Darmond.

Work is progressing in getting the picture ready for the market. The Hope diamond is undoubtedly the most sinister jewel in the history of the world. It has an authentic history dating back 1,400 years and it has a story of disaster and misfortune.

In order that the picture may be marketed in a thorough and efficient manner with the maximum amount of service to the states rights buyer and the exhibitor, David P. Howells has created a state rights department which will be separate and distinct from his foreign and export business. This department is under the management of William Fait, Jr. The advertising, publicity and exploitation will be under the direction of T. O. Eltonhead.

First Salient Film Nearing Completion

Trade Showing of Production Starring Muriel Ostriche to be Held Shortly

Announcement is made by Salient Films, Inc., that the filming of the interior scenes for the first production starring Muriel Ostriche has been completed. It is expected to have the exteriors completed within a week. The picture probably will be ready for trade showing within the next two weeks.

Able Cast Selected

Reports from the studio indicate that this picture will prove an unusually attractive production from the independent standpoint, for the reason that an exceptionally able cast has been selected to portray the principal parts and the settings are elaborate. The photography of Paul Allen is said to be remarkably fine.

The picture was directed by J. Charles Davis, 2nd, who was assisted by Jack W. Brown. The principal roles are in the hands of Muriel Ostriche, Walter Miller, Harold Forshay, Jack Hopkins, Helen Courtney and a number of other well-known artists.

Picture Not Named

Immediately upon completion of work on this production, filming of the second will commence. This story will be from the pen of a well-known novelist, and it has appeared in book form. The title of the first picture has not definitely been decided upon. It was produced under the working title of "Shackled." It is an original story written specially for Miss Ostriche.

Wheeler Oakman Stars in Five Part Westerns

After having appeared in featured roles, Wheeler Oakman, husband of Priscilla Dean, will now shine as an individual star. He will make pictures under the Irving Lesser productions banner. He will star in a series of pictures known as the "Bronco Boy" series. That is the character which Oakman made famous in his portrayal of the faro player in "The Spillers.

Other productions that have featured Oakman are "Mucky," "The Virgin of Sambouth," "What's Done is Done," "Ne'er-do-well" and "Outside the Law." The Oakman pictures will be in full five-reeler form.

"Welcome Children" Given

Distribution by National

Arrangements have been made by Charles M. Connent, president of Drasena Productions, Inc., of Los Angeles, for the issue of "Welcome Children," the first feature to be completed by that company, through National Exchanges, Inc.

The picture has been received at the home office of National Exchanges, Inc., 398 Fifth avenue, and is being titled and cut. "Welcome Children" is a five-reeler comedy. It was directed by H. C. Matthews.

Zukor Addresses Gathering

The feature of the evening was the speech by Adolph Zukor, who gave probably the most inspiring talk on organization matters which those present had been privileged to hear. He emphasized the benefits of close relationship of executives with all the individual members of their departments and with each other and stated that he had finally achieved the realization of his fondest dream—that of a completely harmonious organization, all working with the sole and common purpose of promoting the welfare and “enhancing the good name of Paramount.

In conclusion, he proposed the formation of a Paramount Club, where all executives and employees might meet socially on common ground, without regard to their rank in the business organization.

Army Men Reported to Be Keen About “Wonder Man”

United States army posts have been showing “The Wonder Man,” the Robertson-Cole production, starring Georges Carpentier, and some of the greatest enthusiasts over this picture are to be found among the soldiers, producers report.

The recent publicity which Carpentier has been receiving by reason of the debate as to the location of the Carpentier-Dempsey fight, has been of great value to Robertson-Cole in the placing of the feature. “The Wonder Man” is an American society drama. One of the essential parts of it is a four-round bout in which the French battler shows some of his best ring tricks.

Initial Sherman Production Will Be Published on Third Monday in April

No Decision Reached on Title of Picture Which Is To Be Issued on That Date—President Has Completed Plans on West Coast

Sherman Productions Corporation announces that its initial publication date has been set for the third Monday in April. Selection of the picture to be issued then has not been made.

The company now has four productions ready for issue. While original plans were to publish "Man and Woman," the Charles A. Logue picture, President Harry A. Sherman has made no definite announcement.

Sherman Returning East

President Sherman has completed production plans on the west coast and will return East shortly. The consensus of opinion among franchise holders will more or less govern President Sherman in the choice of his first publication.

In announcing the date of the initial publication, Max E. Mazur, treasurer of the company, states:

"With the announcement of the date for our first release, Sherman Productions Corporation has come to the place where it can at last demonstrate to the doubters that the so-called Sherman plan, with its many advantages to the exchange and the exhibitor, which by many was regarded as being too altruistic ever to become a reality, is, on the contrary, an entirely practical proposition.

To Prove Plan's Fairness

"While perhaps it does not serve to standardize picture costs for the exchange and the theatre than any other system yet put into practice, it is so eminently fair and equitable to them that on first examination it seems impractical from the producer's standpoint."

"We are confident, however, that we shall soon prove to the industry that it is the best method yet evolved to give an absolutely fair division of each picture's profits to all concerned, the producer, the distributor and the exhibitor."

"Personally, I look forward to many other independent producing concerns following the lead of Sherman Productions Corporation within a few months after we have blazed the way, for, as a matter of fact, only by so doing can they actively compete with us."

“Madonnas and Men” Has Maximum Of Box Office Value, Says Moore
Jans Sales Manager Declares That Approximately Every State Right Territory Disposed of Within Two Months

Foster Moore, sales manager of Jans Pictures, Inc., 729 Seventh avenue, New York, who has been in the motion picture industry for seven years, declares that he never has seen a production that so near approached the maximum in box office value as does “Madonnas and Men.”

He said he was not surprised at the success of the picture in Detroit where it was given its premiere at John Kunsy’s Madison theatre. Following the success of the picture there Mr. Kunsy bought the four Jans pictures for Michigan.

Allens Buy Rights

Following the Detroit premiere the production was exhibited at Toronto, Canada, and the Michigan success was duplicated. Three weeks capacity business was done. Allen Brothers control the rights to the picture in Canada.

The picture played at the Strand theatre, Newark, N. J. Herman F. Jans, president of the company, announces that a prominent theatrical concern is negotiating for an extended run on Broadway.

Moore announces that within two months approximately the entire country has been disposed of on the production. The only open territory on “Madonnas and Men,” “Love Without Question,” “A Woman’s Business” and “The Wings of Pride,” the last three starring Olive Tell, is Missouri and Kansas.

List Transactions Made

A list of state right buyers who have purchased the four pictures follows:

- Iowa and Nebraska, First National, Des Moines, Ia.
- Minnesota, Wisconsin, North and South Dakota, F. & R. Film Co., Minneapolis, Minn.
- Tennessee, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Florida, W. & S. Film Co., Atlanta, Ga.; Greater

Canada, Allen Bros., Toronto, Canada; Upper New York state, Ben Pitzer, Buffalo; East Pennsylvania, South New Jersey, Masterpiece Film, Philadelphia; foreign rights, Export and Import Co., New York; New England, Federated Exchange, Boston; Ohio and Kentucky, Masterpiece Film, Cleveland; Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Federated Exchange, Dallas; Illinois and Indiana, Superior Screen, Chicago; Louisiana and Mississippi, First National, New Orleans; California, Arizona and Nevada, T. W. Charnburn Enterprises, Los Angeles.

Norma Talmadge Busy on Her Two Newest Features

Norma Talmadge, who is now at Palm Beach, where she has been taking the final scenes for “The Passion Flower,” and also outdoor shots for her next picture, “The Sign on the Door,” which, like “The Passion Flower,” will be directed by Herbert Brenon, is returning to New York on February 14, when she will immediately start work on the interiors for “The Sign on the Door.”

“The Sign on the Door” is by Channing Pollock, and was a successful last year Broadway production, with Margaret Bambeau in the lead. This drama is still playing on the road, in all the more important cities. Lew Cody has been put under contract by Joseph M. Schenck for this next Associated First National production, and is now on his way from the Coast. Charles Richman also has been engaged.

Allan Dwan Finishes Producing Comedy for Associated Producers

Allan Dwan has finished “shooting” the final scenes of “A Perfect Crime” and the film is now being cut and titled. It is scheduled for late February by the Associated Producers.

The story is a departure from the type which Mr. Dwan has lately centered his attention upon. It is a comedy drama. Allan Dwan, of late, has favored melodrama and during the past year scored with such pictures as “The Luck of the Irish,” “A Splendid Hazard,” “In the Heart of a Fool” and “The Forbidden Thing.”

Wilfred Buckland, for the past six years art director for Famous Players-Lasky, assisted Mr. Dwan in the production of “A Perfect Crime” Monte Blue, Jacqueline Logan, Hardee Kirkland and Stanton Heck are the featured players in “A Perfect Crime.” Alfred Cheney Johnson, the Fifth avenue photographer, accompanied Mr. Dwan to the coast to make special stills of the production.

“Affairs of Anatol” In Permanent Title

Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of production, announced yesterday that “The Affairs of Anatol” would be retained as the title of the mammoth super-star production which Cecil B. DeMille is producing at Hollywood from Arthur Schnitzler’s famous play.

Reopen Springfield House

Rand Represents Home Office of United Artists on Pacific Coast

Other Advancements in Organization Announced by Hiram Abrams—Buckley Becomes Manager of Sales at Los Angeles

Walter S. Rand, who has been sales manager of United Artists Corporation's Los Angeles branch since the organization began its operations, has been appointed home office representative on the Pacific Coast by Hiram Abrams, president of the company. His territory will include Seattle, San Francisco, Los Angeles and Denver exchanges.

Mr. Rand's promotion has brought about several other advancements in the exchange personnel of United Artists Corporation.

H. D. Buckley, who has been Kansas City sales manager since the organization of the company, becomes Los Angeles sales manager. T. Y. Henry, who has been sales manager at the Denver office, succeeds Buckley at the Kansas City office. H. D. Cassidy has been appointed sales manager at the Denver office.

Several new offices have also been opened. W. A. Shalti, who has been assistant in the Boston office, has been appointed sales manager at St. Louis and is establishing a new office there.

A new office has also been opened at Montreal, Canada, with E. A. Brown as sales manager. Mr. Brown was transferred from the Toronto office.

Warren Announces Staff Promotions

F. B. Warren, general manager of distribution of Associated Producers, Inc., announces the following changes in Associated Producers' selling organization: William H. Jenner, resident manager in Boston, becomes western district manager, with headquarters in Los Angeles. Mr. Jenner is succeeded in Boston by J. A. McConville. Walter R. Liebmann has been appointed resident manager in Atlanta. He succeeds Frank L. Hudson.

Mr. Jenner, who is the first district manager to be appointed by Mr. Warren, was, until he resigned to become Boston manager for Associated Producers, manager for United Artists in Boston. Previous to that time he was for two years Boston manager for Goldwyn.

Mr. McConville, who succeeds Jenner in Boston, was formerly assistant manager of the Boston office of Paramount. Mr. McConville began his career as a newspaper reporter on the Portland (Maine) Express. He was later press representative of the New Portland theatre, under the management of Hiram Abrams, and eventually became manager of the same theatre.

Mr. Liebmann was for two years Selznick's manager in that territory.

"Peck's Bad Boy" Ready For Cutting by Lesser

Word comes from Irving Lesser that "Peck's Bad Boy," the five-reel feature comedy starring Jackie Coogan, is completed and ready for cutting.

"Peck's Bad Boy" is based upon rural life, and while many episodes of the original Peck volume have been screened, the story in general has been revised to a great extent, bringing it to a more modern stage and revising greatly the characters in the play. In addition to the cast of adults, Director Sam Wood used several dozen talented children from the Hollywood film colony. The film will be in five reels.

Aywon Film Corporation Increases Office Space

Aywon Film Corporation has taken larger offices at 729 Seventh avenue, New York.

Last week Nathan Hirsh, president, and the members of his organization moved from the seventh to the sixth floor. A suite of offices has been taken under the management of Melvin Hirsh, and the business of issuing and marketing state rights films will be attended to in these enlarged quarters.

"Ducks and Drakes" Is Fourth Film Starring Bebe Daniels for Realart

"Ducks and Drakes," starring Bebe Daniels, is scheduled by Realart for immediate publication under its star franchise. The story is by Elmer Harris, playwright and scenarioist and recently appointed supervising director of Realart's West Coast studios. Mr. Harris originally wrote it for the speaking stage. It will not be seen on the speaking stage, however, until after its cinema presentation.

Picture Is Comedy

It is a comedy with Bebe Daniels as the central figure. The action introduces her as Teddy Simpson, a young girl full of life and the desire for romance, excitement and adventure. Through the untiring efforts of her aunt she has consented to marry Rob Winslow. Her aunt, however, is unable to persuade her to set a date for the wedding. The truth is that Teddy dreads the prospect of settling down to prosaic married life. She wants to be entertained and amused. So she hits upon the idea of calling up numbers selected at random in the telephone directory and flirting with every pleasant masculine voice that responds.

Directed by Campbell

In this manner she talks with two men who prove to be club mates of her nance. One day he overhears them in a telephone flirtation and learns what is happening. Realizing the dangers of such promiscuous flirtations he enlists the aid of his friends and they plot to cure her of the habit. An adventure is arranged by the conspirators. Teddy falls an unsuspecting victim to the arrangement and embarks on what proves to be one of the most exciting expeditions imaginable. So successful is the plot that by the time the adventure is over Teddy is more than ready to name a day for her wedding.

"Ducks and Drakes" is Miss Daniels' fourth Realart picture. Jack Holt plays opposite Miss Daniels. Edward Martin del, William Lawrence, Wade Boteler, May Kelso, Elsie And Reason and Maurice Newell are others in the cast. Major Maurice Campbell directed.

First National Believes Walsh Film a Sensation

(Nov Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, Feb. 15.—R. A. Walsh's production of "The Oath," the only picture in the Big Five group not shown at the recent First National meeting in Chicago, has created unsold enthusiasm among First National officials.

The feeling is that "The Oath" embodies the ultra in drama and that the picture will create a sensation. It is in eight reels and has for some of its principal players Miriam Cooper, Anna Q. Nilsson and Conway Tearle. A showing will be held soon.

Reelcraft Playlet Cited by "Judge"

Writer Declares It One of Best Twelve Pictures In 1920

"She's a Vamp," one of the series of Romances of Youth distributed by Reelcraft Pictures Corporation, has been designated by Myron M. Stevens ("Lenzo") of Judge as one of the twelve best pictures of 1920.

Concerning the Reelcraft picture, the writer says: "She's a Vamp." Only two reels, to be sure, and not widely known—but ask someone who saw it. A child picture of real comedy, without a slip from start to finish.

Reelcraft announces that many other words of praise have been received from exhibitors. The series has proven a success.

Arrow Takes Output Of Sceenart Issues For Re-Distribution

Word comes from the office of Arrow Film Corporation that it is handling the distribution for Screenart Pictures Corporation, which has ten features, including the Dustin Farnums and the Kitty Gordon pictures.

The ten screenart pictures will be issued as a series and it will be necessary to contract for the entire series. The first will be Dustin Farnum in the "Light of Western Stars." In addition to the three Dustin Farnum pictures and the two Kitty Gordon pictures, there will be two pictures with Gladys Hulette, one each with Charlotte Walker, Gladys Leslie and Katherine Adams.

These pictures are to be issued with new prints, new paper, new photographs, new press books and other advertising material. It is said that Arrow is selling territory on these pictures on an unusually low basis.

Margaret Beecher Will Make Hemmer Features

Margaret Beecher will be featured by Edward Hemmer in four pictures a year, for a term of five years.

At a recent private showing of "Sunshine Harbor" to the cast and a few friends, Miss Beecher's work was well received and highly commented upon. The distribution plans will be announced later.

"The Devil" Booked to Play Over The Mastbaum and Gordon Chains Production Distributed by Pathe Has Met With Success Throughout the East—Capacity Business Reported in New England

Associated Exhibitors feature production, "The Devil," which stars George Arliss, has been booked over the Mastbaum circuit in Pennsylvania and the Gordon chain in New England.

The dates of presentation in the theaters of the two circuits have not been announced by Pathe, the distributing medium. An early engagement, however, is planned. Comprehensive exploitation of the feature will be prosecuted, along with elaborate presentation.

Pre-Views Are Successful
The successful showings made by "The Devil" at pre-release presentations at the Strand, New York; Strand, Brooklyn; Shee's Hippodrome, Buffalo; Rialto, Lawrence, Mass., and the Strand, Albany, have spread the fame of the picture as one having box office appeal and rare artistic merit.

"The Devil" carried its record-breaking ways into New England after proving its worth in New York. At its pre-release engagement at the Rialto, Lawrence, the photo-play played to capacity throughout the week of January 25, thereby living up to the expectations of Andrew J. Cohe, manager of that house, which he expressed to Pathe in a letter as follows: "We opened with 'The Devil' to the biggest business ever done in this house. The picture went over splendidly and everyone was very much pleased with it. I look forward to a record-breaking week, despite the zero weather."

Traffic Is Blocked
"Blocking the traffic" is an ambition to which many show people aspire and to which "The Devil" at its premiere in Albany. To this achievement the following telegram, dated February 5, to Pathe from Albany bears testimony: "Strand played to capacity all performances today. Traffic blocked for two blocks tonight. Largest crowd since opening of house."

The picture duplicated its success in the New York vicinity at presentations in Cincinnati and Cleveland. The Cincinnati Post recorded the event of George Arliss' appearance on the screen at the Walnut theatre there in a laudatory review which opened with the statement that "George Arliss brings all his superb artistry to the screen in 'The Devil.'" In commenting on the hill at the Metropolitan and Strand in Cleveland, the Cleveland News sums up a review of the picture with the terse but eloquently praiseful statement, "It is recommended."

Apprehend Absconding Treasurer of Theatre
(From Staff Correspondent)

ST. LOUIS, MO., Feb. 15.—After abscinding with $2,500, representing a Saturday's and a Sunday's receipts of the Loew's Garrick theatre, John Thies, 22 years old, who has been acting as treasurer of the house, was apprehended in Milwaukee. Thies was arrested in the company of a vaudeville actress with whom he left St. Louis. The bulk of the stolen funds was recovered.

Popular Film Exchange Takes Larger Quarters

Popular Film Exchange of New York has moved from its former quarters on the sixth floor of the Godfrey building to more commodious offices on the seventh floor of the same building. This is announced by Charles Jawitz, general manager of the exchange.

Jawitz is a pioneer film man. Fourteen years ago he entered the motion picture business, associating at the time with a photographer who has been connected with many film ventures which have embraced the manufacture and sale of motion pictures as well as the management of a chain of theatres.

"Hearts Aflame" to Come From Clark-Cornelius

The first of its 1921 publications which the Clark-Cornelius Corporation will offer on the independent market will be the Jane Novak spectacle, "Hearts Aflame," a six-reel feature. "Hearts Aflame" has been selected by S. L. Rollo, general manager, for the initial offering. It represents the first of a series of meritorious pictures which will find their way to the independent market during the year through this organization.

Ben "Puts It Over"

Visions of a contract! A special police badge! A dash of quick wit! Ben Beadell!

Ben, manager of the Chicago office of Stoll, had orders from his under-secretary, E. C. Davies, to hurry to Champaign, Ill., via the "Panama Limited," to assist in apprehending Gale Meyers of the Park theatre.

The first set-back was at the station. Railroad officials objected to putting a passenger off at Champaign. But Ben fooled 'em. He wore his special police badge. He flashed it. The general manager, the station agent, the red caps and others dusted off their suits and made way for Ben.

The "Panama Limited" stopped at Champaign. Ben alighted. Gale Meyers will play Stoll publications.

"The Grand Passion" Excites Wide Interest, Distributor Reports

"The Grand Passion," which is being distributed on the state rights plan by Robert W. Priest, president of the Film Market, Inc., has been drawing attention from theatre managers. It is considered more important than any picture Priest has ever handled, according to his announcement.

The majority of the inquiries state that they were made on account of the magnetism of the title, "The Grand Passion," but a large percentage of letters are due to the names of the authors.—Robert McLaughlin and Charles T. Dazey, Priest says.

Priest was offered $5,000 for the title alone by a producer who wanted to use it for his own picture, but Priest refused to consider the offer.

"Sunset" Jones" Widely Booked in New York and East, American Reports

"Sunset Jones," starring Charles Clark and Irene Rich, is a sensation off with a rush of bookings, following the first run houses, especially in New York and the East, the American Film declares.

This Western is said to have a beautiful background of mountain scenery and camera shots of wide, open plains. "Sunset Jones" is a man of decision, with the courage of his convictions.

Clary and Miss Rich are supported by a cast including James Gordon, Kathleen O'Connor, Robert Walker, Jack Brann, Alfred Ferguson, William Elmer, Jack Cosgrave, Philip Ryder and Hamilton Morse.

To care of rapidly growing interests of himself and associates, Ernest Shipman has leased a suite of offices on the eighth floor of 17 West 44th street, New York, from which headquarters the activities of Renco Film Corporation, Edward Hemmer Productions, San Gabriel Producing Company, James Oliver Curwood Productions, Inc., and Winnipeg Productions, Ltd., will be cared for.

The other productions controlled or represented by Mr. Shipman will continue to be managed from their present established headquarters. A number of lesser interests have been disposed of so that Shipman and his associates will be in a position to take on new enterprises of a progressive nature.

Ernest Shipman's associates now number twenty-one, to be found among the influential film people of recognized standing, and S. T. King will continue in the capacity of general office manager.

Metro Week to Be Made Annual Event, Is Report

Wholehearted endorsement by the exhibitors of the country of the holding of Metro week, February 27 to March 5, has induced officials of the company to make it an annual institution in booking, it is announced.

The recent announcement of the period set aside especially for the exhibition of Metro pictures only, together with publishing of Metro's national advertising campaign to back it and of the decision of the distributing organization to further support the exhibitor by the issuance free of charge of poster and slides, brought a response from motion picture showmen that even exceeded promises, Metro reports.

American Reports Heavy Bookings on "Gamesters"

"The Gamesters," a "Flying A" special starring Margarita Fisher, is booking heavily all over the country, according to the announcement of American Film Company.

The setting of the story is the intermingling of the free, easy-going life of the West with the artificial social existence of the East. Miss Fisher's interpretation of the character of the gambler's daughter, starting in life under the tuition of a father whose livelihood was made by crooked gambling manipulations, is considered by the producers the best acting of her career.

CHOOSING A NEW MAMMA IS PERPLEXING

"Adventures of Tarzan" to be Made by Numa as Animal Serial Plans Have Been Underway For Five Months—Great Western Producing Company Has Contract to Adapt Burroughs' Story

A new Tarzan serial, adapted from Edgar Rice Burroughs' book, "The Return of Tarzan," is to be placed in production immediately, according to an announcement made by the Weiss Brothers' Numa Pictures Corporation. It will be a fifteen-episode feature and will be of the animal-jungle-thriller type. At the suggestion of Edgar Rice Burroughs it will be entitled "The Adventures of Tarzan.

Plans Are Under Way

Numa Pictures Corporation recently produced "The Revenge of Tarzan," a six-reel feature adapted from one of Burroughs' stories.

At the offices of Numa Pictures Corporation, 1476 Broadway, New York, it was stated that plans for the making of "The Adventures of Tarzan" have been under way for five months. It is planned to make it far more elaborate than any of the Tarzan films heretofore produced.

The continuity is being prepared by a corps of novelists who have all made names for themselves in both the serial and feature fields.

Unlike Other Serials

"We are going to give the exhibitors the greatest serial they have ever screened," claim the Weiss Brothers. "The Adventures of Tarzan' will be absolutely unlike any previous Tarzan production and it will be done in a way which will make every two-reel episode a feature for the very best theatres."

"We are negotiating for a star, who, if we sign him, will make this an actual 200 per cent picture, if ever there was such a thing."

It is stated that "The Adventures of Tarzan" will be produced on the Coast for Numa Pictures Corporation by Great Western Producing Company. No mention is made as to who will direct nor is any thing said about distributing arrangements.

"Blind Wives" in Demand According to Producers

Fox headquarters report an unprecedented booking on "Blind Wives." Among those who will play "Blind Wives" over their entire chains are the Schoenstadt Circuit of Chicago; Lubliner & Trinz, Chicago; Allen Bros, Cleveland; A. S. Black Circuit, New England, and the M. E. Comerford Circuit, Philadelphia.

Corrects Story

H. G. Kosch, attorney for and secretary of Numa Pictures Corporation, has issued the following statement:

"My attention has been drawn to an article appearing in a motion picture paper to the effect that a new Tarzan serial will be put out by Mr. P. P. Craft. This statement about Mr. Craft of the new serial is absolutely without foundation. Mr. Craft disposed of all his rights absolutely to the Nuna Pictures Corporation, or with any rights growing out of this book, nor did he in any manner retain any production rights."

Frank Keenan Scores In Stage Production

Frank Keenan, star of a series of successful pictures recently published through Pathe and now starring in a stage play "John Fergus on" on the West Coast, has repeated his Los Angeles triumph in San Francisco.

San Francisco newspapers in reviewing the premiere there unite in saying that the drama is one of the strongest ever presented in that city and give Mr. Keenan unmitigated praise for his masterly interpretation of the title role.

Negotiations are now pending to have Mr. Keenan take his play to New York.

Pathe Giving Direct Support to Locals in Fights on Censorship

Pathe Exchange, Inc., has issued a statement calling attention to the fact that it has given pictures support to the local committees opposing censorship and the blue laws in Indiana and Indianapolis. Its statement is as follows:

"Word has come to us by wire from Minneapolis, Minn., and Indianapolis, Ind., to the effect that the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry in making its contribution toward the expenses of the fight against censorship in said states has advised the local Committee Chairman that this Company had refused to contribute toward such fund.

"While it is true that this Company since its resignation from the National Association has not made any contribution to the fund raised to fight censorship through the National Association, it has never refused to contribute toward the expenses to oppose any menace to the industry. We have contributed directly to Minneapolis and Indianapolis local committees.

"We have always taken an active part in fights against censorship in the past; are much opposed to censorship in any form today as we have ever been, and any statement to the effect that we have refused either moral or financial assistance toward defeating censorship in any form is false and misleading."

"Outside the Law" Is Booked in Practically Every City in U. S.

Berman Declares There Is a Greater Demand for Production Than for Any Universal Picture Ever Published

"Outside the Law," the new Universal-Jewel production starring Priscilla Dean, has been booked in almost every city in the United States, according to H. M. Berman, general manager of exchanges.

Following his return from a sales conference of Universal exchange heads at Cincinnati, Mr. Berman stated there is a greater demand for "Outside the Law" than for any Universal picture ever issued.

Run Into Hundreds

"Although the picture was not officially released until January 25," he said, "we already have several hundred bookings, most of which are for from four days to a week, and many of which are for two weeks. The picture just completed a five-week run in the Superba theatre, Los Angeles, which set a record in Universal picture success.

"We have been greatly surprised by the demand for 'Outside the Law' on the part of exhibitors who have had no chance to see it run off.

"The unusual amount of advance bookings also has resulted, I am convinced, from the extensive exploitation campaign inaugurated by our company, and which has worked its way down through the exchanges and local publicity men, so that it now is directly benefiting the exhibitor.

Mayer Publicizes Picture

"J. H. Mayer, of our exploitation department, has been in Akron, O., aiding the management of the Allen theatre in the local campaign for the Dean picture. Other exploitation men are in other sections of the country.

"Not only the home office, but the various Universal exchanges have been flooded by letters of commendation on the new Universal-Jewel, in which great credit has been given to Miss Dean and to Tod Browning, the author and director.

Record Is Established

"During the run just completed at the Kinema theatre, Salt Lake City, the picture played to many thousands more than any picture ever shown in that city. Although the house seats less than 1,000, more than 50,000 persons visited the theatre during the two weeks' run. This is a record that is expected to stand in Salt Lake City for some time."

"Among the theatres at which 'Outside the Law' has been booked for a week or more, are the Scooly Square theatre, Boston; Albany, Albany, N. Y.; Grand, Columbus, O.; Allen, Akron, O.; Liberty, Youngstown, O.; Palace or Rialto, Des Moines, Majestic, Jackson, Mich.; Walnut, Louisville; Loughlin, Long Beach, Ca.; Plaza, San Diego, Cal.; Florence, Grand, Cal.; New York, Newark, Newark, N. J.; Strand, Holyoke, Mass.; Moon, Omaha; Rialto, Washington, D.C.; Rivoli, Portland, Ore.; Colonial, Wheeling, W. Va.; Rialto, Tacoma; Liberty, Fresno, Cal.; Liberty, San Jose, Cal.; Franklin, Oakland: Holman, Math Central, Grand, London, Ont., and many others."

Fights Censorship by Unique Public Appeal

William C. McIntire, manager of the Rose theatre, Fayetteville, N. C., has started an anti-censorship campaign which might be copied with good effect by exhibitors in other parts of the country.

To disprove blanket charges against the pictures of today, he selected a list of pictures he felt would appeal to the more conservative type in his community and then personally invited clergymen, school teachers and many prominent men to attend.

"Dinty," the Marshall Neilan production, was the first shown. It was given an enthusiastic reception and according to Mr. McIntire won over many proponents of censorship. He was doubly surprised and pleased by finding that his extra effort gave him the biggest crowd of the year.

DIGEST of PICTURES of the WEEK

EXHIBITORS have a real novelty to offer the public in the latest Charles Ray-First National attraction, "The Old Swimmin' Hole." It is a picture without a subtitle.

There have been many innovations in picture making such as art titles, animated titles, hand-colored and tinted titles, but so far no one has attempted to tell a story upon the screen without resorting to the subtitle. How successfully this has been accomplished can only be realized by viewing the picture.

The James Whitcomb Riley poem presented a particularly strong temptation to use the original and beautifully phrased language of the Hoosier poet which tells the love story and trials of a youthful country boy, and the fact that they did refrain from using the poet's lines when such an opportunity presented itself, speaks volumes for the progressive nature of the producers of this latest Ray screen classic. It marks an important epoch in picture making and one that took no unusual amount of directorial ability to put over.

"LYING LIPS" (Associated Producers), is said to be one of Thomas H. Ince's biggest productions. It is a forceful, appealing drama, told in a straightforward and absorbing style with a cast that was especially fitted for the various roles assigned. This is a feature that will warrant extra effort in exploitation and advertising. (Review on page 51.)

"THE GREATER CLAIM" (Metro), starring Alice Lake, is a virile, dramatic story with plenty of heart interest. It was directed by Wesley Ruggles and in every way is an exceptionally fine picture. A splendid cast appears in Miss Lake's support.

"HEART O' THE RANGE" (Forward Films) is an interesting portraiture of cowpuncher life presented in terms of comedy-drama. It has a special cast and makes a good feature for the exhibitor who looks to the independent market for his pictures.

"OMALLEY OF THE MOUNTED" (Paramount) is another typical Hart picture—a more or less familiar tale of mounted police life. The story was written by the star and directed by Lambert Hillyer. It is up to the usual high standard of William S. Hart pictures.

"COLORADO" (Universal) presents the popular Frank Mayo in a picturization of Augustus Thomas' popular stage success. It is a melodrama with many commendable exterior scenes and a dramatic climax where the gold mine is flooded and the hero vindicated. The subtitles are particularly pleasing.

"A MAN FROM NOWHERE" (Arrow) with Jack Hoxie as the star, is a fast-moving, well told story of the West, with the principal action taking place in a dance hall. It was produced by Ben Wilson.

"THE ROAD OF AMBITION" (Selig) is the latest starring vehicle for Conway Tearle and a very good one. Strong of plot and attractively presented. Tearle as a mechanic and as a millionaire with scenes in and about steel mills offers interesting contrasts. A high grade picture good in every way.

"DUCKS AND DRAKES" (Realart) is a triumph in comedy-drama with Bebe Daniels the star. The story is of an irrepressible flapper and the trouble into which flirting led her. Offers numerous exploitation possibilities. Refreshing of plot and strong of development. An uncommonly excellent feature.

"THE OUTSIDE WOMAN" (Realart) presents Wanda Hawley at her loveliest. Comedy-drama with strong farce tinge. Lavishly appointed and abounding with complex situations cleverly schemed and unraveled. Story of a frivolous wife's attempt to retrieve a valuable possession entrusted to her husband and bartered by her to a peddler. Extraordinarily good.

"FINDERS KEEPERS" (Pioneer) is the tale of a stolen necklace and the mystery surrounding the thief's identity. Moderately entertaining. Stars Violet Mersereau who plays winningly.

"THE MOUNTAIN WOMAN" (Fox) gives Pearl White wide latitude to disport in a series of episodes suggesting hazards of her serials. Star plays the part of a girl wearing a boy's clothes and assuming the responsibilities of a logging camp. Several affairs of the heart lend romantic trend. Beautiful scenery and excellent acting.

"WHY TRUST YOUR HUSBAND?" (Fox), presents Eileen Percy in comedy-drama attractive of setting and moderately amusing. A domestic complication concerning two errant husbands and a French models' hall. Moderately entertaining.

"THE FIRE CAT" (Universal) has a rather conventional story back of it but it is interesting and at times thrilling because of its unique setting. The destruction of a city by a volcanic eruption is realistically presented.

"RECKLESS WIVES" (Independent Films) is a trite story of a faithless wife who becomes infatuated with an artist and besides causing the death of her sister-in-law, almost wrecks the lives of two others. Only an average production holding little interest because of the over-worked plot.
CONWAY TEARLE IN

THE ROAD OF AMBITION
(SELZNICK)

The most artistically ambitious feature of a universally popular star to date. One that will advance his favor considerably. Strongly developed and beautifully staged. A high-grade picture with all the earmarks of the successful feature. William P. S. Earle directed it.

Conway Tearle in the grease and grime of a steel mill foreman plays, in opening scenes of this feature, a role that goes far in making it a success. Its contrast with the elegance of his later life as the polished millionaire is decidedly effective. The whole is the best balanced, most logically sequenced and correctly artistically scened and acted picture that has ever given him opportunity to display his skill. He has been surrounded by a cast that plays with the same clean-cut directness and intelligence that characterizes his art, and the result is truly a meritorious picture.

There is nothing novel about the plot. It has to do with the ambition of Bill Matthews (Tearle) to conquer the making of steel from scale to and win Daphne Van Steer, a young woman of culture who scorns him as a “rolling mill bully.” From the day she visits the steel plant and is a witness to his struggle with an ugly co-worker. Her father’s financial straits compel her ultimate agreement to the marriage with Matthews. He asks nothing more than that she be his wife in name only. He has a rival in Philip Colt, whose attentions to Daphne continue even after the wedding. The climax comes when Matthews finds the two together at his hunting lodge and frees the woman from the unwelcome advances of Colt with the same brute strength that she despised, but finds that she has come to admire.

The two women who play the feminine leads are uncommonly lovely and do excellent work. Florence Dixon is delightful as Daphne and Florence Billings plays the part of May Larabee, Matthews’ social sponsor, who is desirous of marrying him for his wealth, in charming manner. Gladden James was an excellent choice for the insipid Colt.

FRANK MAYO IN COLORADO

(UNIVERSAL)

Popular Universal star in a picturization of Augustus Thomas’ play, “Colorado,” adapted by Wallace Clifton and directed by Reeves Eason.

The picture is frankly melodramatic, characterized by a general mixup in “who’s who” and by haphazard skating on the verge of death in a gold mine that becomes flooded. There are some commendable exterior shots, but for the most part the picture is weighed down with action that tends to become puzzling. This may be due partly to the plot development and the manner of handling it. Frank Mayo is good. He delivers in his usual reliable style.

The plot of “Colorado” is one to appeal to the average picture-goer. It has to do with an army misunderstanding, an escape, the guilty feeling of being a deserter and taking to the wild spots of Colorado. Lieutenant Frank Hayden, played by Frank Mayo, is the man. He changes his name to Frank Austin, saves a thirsty-dying man in the desert, is taken in by him and his family, discovers gold on the farm, becomes a partner, comes face to face with his former captain, who is a blackguard, is forced to sell out his interests, falls in love with the girl, saves her life and the life of the captain when the gold mine is flooded. The captain confesses his sins and vindicates the hero; and there is a happy ending.

The cast is adequate, including: Frank Mayo, Charles Newton, Gloria Hope, Lilian West, Charles Le Moyne and others.

WANDA HAWLEY IN

THE OUTSIDE WOMAN
(REALART)

A delightful, high-grade farce, insuring a corner in laughs wherever shown. Star stunning and cast capable. A lavishly appointed domestic drama, generous with complex situations cleverly coordinated and entertainingly developed. Direction by Sam Wood.

“The Outside Woman” is a picture far above the grade of the average comedy-drama and of the high calibre that is making conspicuous practically every picture play coming currently from Realart.

Wanda Hawley, dainty as a Dresden china figurine and as delicate of person, but lively of movement, is one of the cleverest comedienne yet brought to the screen. There is a novelty of plot with characteristic good development, a liveliness of action that crowds one complication upon another, a cast which plays with a keen appreciation of the play’s possibilities, and backgrounds highly artistic.

The picture is a radical departure from “The Snob.” The part of “Pussikins” Kalsenst, which Miss Hawley plays, is that of a young, frivolous matron, but one whose determination untangles in the end the skin of trouble she innocently weaves about her doctor-husband's affairs. He has been entrusted by an academic archeologist with a valuable relic, an idol. Not suspecting its value, the wife trades it to a peddler for a face shawl. An artist in the same apartment building as the Ralston, possessed of a fiery and jealous Spanish wife, buys the idol from the peddler. The wife learns of its value and invades the artist's apartment to regain possession of it. Before that is achieved, the place is visited by its returned owner, her own husband, her colored maid, the artist's Jap valet and the police. Her escape is made after many hazards and all ends riotously in climax and conclusion of the imaginative sort that makes such farces appealing.

The scenes wherein the colored maid and Jap figure are among the best in the play. Titles are extremely amusing and wittily worded. Clyde Fillmore plays the part of the husband; Sidney Bracey and Roseta Martini are the artist and his wife. All contribute good work.

JACK HOXIE IN A MAN FROM NOWHERE
(ARROW)
A fast moving, well made story of western frontier days which marks the debut of Jack Hoxie, popular serial hero, as a feature star. Principal action in dance hall and card room. Strong heart interest. Produced by Ben Wilson.

Jack Hoxie, who found a short cut to fame through his successful serials, has taken his place as a popular Western feature star as a result of his effort in this line, due in a large measure to the good judgment of Ben Wilson, the producer.

Hoxie is in a role very similar to that which he enacted in his serials—a part which he thoroughly understands and in which he has won his host of admirers. Fred Moore as Duke Fuller, the villain, and Panzy Porter as the girl, feature the supporting cast. The sets, while not elaborate, are sufficient.

Theatres which cashed in on Hoxie's serials have an opportunity in this feature to make capital of his popularity. Other houses, whose policies forbid serial form, have an opportunity to add a "comer" to their list of attractions.

Hoxie takes the part of Clay Norton, a big-hearted Westerner, whose sweet-heart is tricked into believing him unfaithful and elopes with her deceiver. Duke Fuller, a villain, spends several years searching for them, winning the title of "the man from nowhere" on account of constant traveling. He finds the couple in time to save the girl from being compelled to become a dance hall girl in her husband's barroom. In a fight which follows, Fuller is killed by a man he has ruined, leaving the way for Norton to claim his sweetheart.

SPECIAL CAST IN RECKLESS WIVES
(INDEPENDENT FILMS)
Commonplace production given to adaptation of novel, "Separate Paths," the story of a married woman's infatuation for an artist. It was directed by Alidor Prince, who followed the typical society picture formula.

"Reckless Wives" holds but a medium of interest because of the obvious and hopelessly dull plot. No effort has been made to inject originality into the story and the whole is far from convincing. It is the tale of a society vampire who almost wins the innocent young woman away from his country sweetheart. There is not the slightest new twist to the story and the production is so ordinary and commonplace that its place in the halls where it should entertain.

The story has for its central figure Bobette Corbin, wife of a wealthy man, who becomes interested in George Cameron, a young artist. He is in love with Joy Agnes, but becomes enamored of the butterfly wife while painting her portrait. He meets Florence, Bobette's sister-in-law, who falls in love with him. The affair between Bobette and the artist comes to the attention of the husband, who denounces the artist but is led to believe his presence in the house is for his own good. The due to his stories. Their engagement is announced but Florence that night discovers the artist in Bobette's embrace. She kills herself by jumping from a cliff. The artist tries to commit suicide, is saved and nursed back to health by Joy.

Myra Murray plays the role of the butterfly wife with considerably more fervor than finesses. Leslie Austin is the typical artist seen upon the screen but never in real life. Jane Thomas and Helen McDonald complete the cast. The photography is not consistently first-class throughout, and are some pretty excelsior shots. Only an average attraction.

SUNSHINE PLAYERS IN HIS UNLUCKY JOB
(FOX)
A cyclone that sweeps all things before it in this comedy, staged in the West, makes its best scenes. It has to do with an insurance agent who literally blows into town and manages, against great odds, to subdue the community bully, one "Hair Trigger" Harry. Youngsters are given some of the footage in a school scene and supply good fun. The whole is out of the ordinary in several ways and carries a good degree of slapstick comedy entertainment.

WILLIAM S. HART IN O'MALLEY OF THE MOUNTED
(PARAMOUNT)
Typical Hart picture, with star appearing as a mounted police sergant in a familiar story to which Hart touches have been effectively added. Will please Hart followers.

One can guess from the title the nature of "O'Malley of the Mounted," the latest William S. Hart feature. The star plays O'Malley, a mounted police sergant, who has a reputation for never failing to get his man, but who, when he faces the conflicting problem of following either love or duty, decides upon taking the former course.

The story, written by the star, is of a formula that every scenario writer has at his fingers' tips. Time and time again it has been retold on the screen. Yet, having been touched up with his typical business, the star has made it serve sufficiently well to satisfy his regular followers. These touches are represented in fast-moving action generated through chases and fights and in bits of heart interest brought out when the sergant finds that the murderer he has been hunting is no other than the brother of the girl he loves.

There are interesting shots in the first reel of a rodeo and later on of a fight between the star and Leo Willis that is a nip and tuck upstanding affair.

As in the case of all Hart pictures, "O'Malley of the Mounted" has been well put on. The direction, by Lambert Hillyer, is up to the usual high standard of merit; the acting is most satisfactory, the continuity is even, and the backgrounds are of a happy choice. The camera work by Joe August is excellent.

Eva Novak heads the star's supporting cast, which includes Leo Willis, Antrim Short, Alfred Allen and Bert Sprote.

BEBE DANIELS IN
Ducks and Drakes
REALART

Here is a feature which hits the bull’s-eye for entertainment value. His was an ingenious imagination that conceived the story and his was a clever hand that directed it. Congratulations are coming to both.

About the story of a reckless “flapper” and her flirting ways there has been built a noticeably good plot. It sparkles with unexpected situations and incites curiosity from beginning to end. Imagination has been brought into play delightfully in the manner in which four men conspire to cure the young lady of flirting, and their plot and her reformation make a feature of unlimited entertainment value. Everybody will laugh over the swift-moving activities that center about the bewitching comedienne. The feminine patronage will be enraptured with the elegance of the wardrobe displayed by the pretty star and with the beauty of her boudoir, in which the bulk of the scenes are staged. The playing of the quartet of men, all equally important in the cast, is an unusual item. It is admirably achieved by Jack Holt, William E. Lawrence, Wade Boteler and Edwin Martinell.

Mame Kelso in the part of Auntie Weeks, guardian of the irrepressible Teddy Simpson (Miss Daniels), plays with grace and skill. Maurie Newell and Elsie Andread are a charming pair of chums of Teddy’s. The witless of titles with apt and amusing illustration has been employed. The press sheet issued by the producers contains many interesting and valuable expository suggestions — telephone stunts prevailing.

Teddy, held in leash in her room by her Aunt in the hope of a bit of peace, entertains herself by calling up unknown men and flirting over the phone with them. She happens to get a trio of her dance’s best friends on the line, and their discovery of her daring venture leads them to combine to aid her lover to torque her to name the day and bring about the marriage that ultimately subdues her. They pack blood-curdling excitement galore into one merry day for her, and the result is an uproarious comedy.

SPECIAL CAST IN HEART O’ THE RANGE
(Forward Films)

A pleasing portrayal of cow-puncher life presented in terms of comedy-drama. A good state rights picture.

Here is a picture that we believe will be found to be worth while by the exhibitor who looks to the independent market for his source of supply. “The Heart o’ the Range” isn’t a big picture from the standpoint of the cost sheet. The settings are mostly exteriors and the cast isn’t large in number. There are no scenes of a bad man holding up hundreds in a dance hall; no dramatic situations characterized as “crashing” or “gripping.”

Very little of the usual Western subject matter used because it is calculated to possess sure fire audience appeal has been injected into the film. But the film has its appeal nonetheless. Its people are human beings and most of them are likeable because they typify the spirit of the locale in which the story is laid. Their lives are simple and their tragedies and joys are represented in terms of simplicity. There is a cowpuncher who “rustles” yearlings with the help of another disloyal employee. When his game seems to have come to an end, he retorts to holding up the ranch owner’s daughter and the ranch foreman. A forged note make it appear to the ranch owner that the foreman has not only stolen with the money entrusted to him, but his daughter as well and the pursuit begins. The ranch owner threatens to fill the foreman with lead. But the foreman saves both the money and the girl from the rustler and would-be highwayman.

Most of the first two reels are devoted to character drawing done in a vein of comedy, which is spontaneous for the most part. The characters, therefore, catch the interest and hold it when melodrama comes to the fore. The melodrama isn’t overstressed; in fact, the intended effect is sometimes unachieved. However, the picture as a whole leaves a pleasant impression.

BUSTER KEATON IN Hard Luck
(METRO)

The only hard luck about Buster Keaton’s latest two-reel comedy, “Hard Luck,” is that there isn’t more of it. The writer has, unfortunately, missed some of the previous Keaton pictures; notwithstanding, he is impelled to say that in “Hard Luck” Buster Keaton has done his best. Certainly it is difficult to conceive of the comedian having done better.

“Hard Luck” is a scream. The comedy is genuine, as it rises with refreshing spontaneity from clever, original gags. His many efforts to take his life, the opening business of the picture, furnish one healthy laugh after another. The fine pace is maintained when Buster goes fishing, using smaller fish as bait to catch larger fish; next goes on a fox hunt astride a draft horse equipped with rubber stirrups, and after becoming mixed up in a fight with a towering hulk of a man, attempts to demonstrate his diving ability. He misses the pool and goes crashing through a tumbled walk. The scene fades. Years elapse. What was once a sparkling pool has become a stagnant pond. Moss and grass cover the hole in the walk through which Buster disappeared when he made his memorable dive. And then suddenly Buster appears dressed as a Chinaman. After him comes a Chinese boy of several years and then the Chinese mother with another youngster in her arms. It is a riot for a tag.

“Hard Luck” is so funny it ought to make a graven image laugh.

ALICE LAKE IN

THE GREATER CLAIM

(METRO)

Virile, dramatic story with a generous measure of heart interest obtained from the theme of mother love. In every way an exceptionally fine picture. Wesley Ruggles directed.

With a sure-fire story to begin with and to which has been added first-rate direction by a successful producer, well written titles and spirited acting, Alice Lake has in "The Greater Claim," her latest picture, the best thing in which we have seen her as a star under the Metro banner. With pictures such as this her stock will ascend rapidly.

A chaste girl who marries Richard Everett for love, only to be torn from him by the youth's unreasoning father, who brings about an annulment of the marriage after he has shanghied his son, Miss Lake has a part which fits her like the proverbial glove. It is a role which, with her screen equipment, she is admirably qualified to interpret. And she makes the most of her opportunities.

The story strikes a human note when Mary Smith, portrayed by Miss Lake, finds her husband missing, but it unmistakably plays on the heartstrings when, having refused help from her husband's father, she finds it impossible to support longer her infant son, and succumbs to the temptation to send her son by an unscrupulous attorney to her father-in-law. In one night, however, she realizes that her whole world is centered in the child, and when she reads the elder Everett's advertisement for a nurse she applies for the place and among a score of applicants is accepted. Having never been seen by Everett, Sr., she is able to pose as Mary Martin, a nurse. But she is near her son and she is happy again.

The conflict comes when Everett, Sr., relents and orders the unscrupulous attorney to bring his son's wife. Believing Mary Smith to be touring Australia with a theatrical company and seeing an opportunity to make some easy money, the attorney endeavors to the home. Mary endeavors to expose the pair, but having destroyed her marriage certificate she is unable to prove what she says. The timely arrival of the prodigal son saves her. Yet, the impostors have a trump card. They contend the child is not Mary's. But Everett, Sr., has lived many years and by a simple test he learns the truth.

There is a wealth of heart interest in the story, whose dramatic values are well brought out by the director, Wesley Ruggles, and the continuity writer, Albert G. LeVino. The cast is pro-

VIOLET MERSEREAU IN

FINDERS KEEPERS

(PIONEER)

The tale of a stolen necklace and the mystery of the thief's identity. A pleasantly played picture with mystery well sustained and moderate entertainment value. Directed by Otis B. Thayer.

Violet Mersereau, playing the part of a frail little lady who made the innocent victim of a crook and rescued by a chivalrous champion, is the strongest point of appeal in this feature. Its shortcomings are chiefly in the commonplace surrounding of the story, and in the moments of awkwardness in which the plot is developed. However, it offers a moderate degree of humor and will please those to whom West's variety of humor appeals.

PEARL WHITE IN

MOUNTAIN WOMAN

(FOX)

One of the screen's most popular stars in a feature that is a revival of the hazards and stunts of the sort that made her famous in her serial days. Beautiful scenery and excellent work distinguish the feature. A first-class picture. Charles Gilbyn is the director.

Pearl White, with all the appeal of her serial days—an intrepid, fearless, gracefully moving and staunch and steady daughter of the mountains—is here seen in an excellent film. The contrast that it offers to her recent society starring vehicle, "The Thief," will make both of them the more valuable and interesting. She brings into play all of her abilities as a screen artist in this latest offering and succeeds in making it a picture par-excellently. Its action moves swiftly before a background of Kentucky mountains, lands, where scenes are caught with vivid beauty. There is a confusion of characters at times, but this is not so noticeable as to detract from the feature's value. The whole is very well made in every detail.

"Alexandra" is a girl, although she wears the clothes of a boy because of her father's intense desire that she should have been of the other sex. They give her a jauntiness and a virility that makes her charming as a leader of men as well as a sweetheart of her several lovers. Rascally plotters lay siege to her cash received from the sale of logs. Her friends protect and save her, after exciting skirmishes, and in the end she chooses a man "for better and worse."

Several scenes of fires, immense in their destructiveness, color the action of the picture. The tinge of romance is delicately handled. Carliss Giles plays the part of Jerry O'Keefe, the fortunate lover of the lot. Richard Travers, George Barnum, Warren Richman, John Lyle, J. Thornton Raston and Charles Graham are others of the cast. All do excellent work.

SPECIAL CAST IN

THE DAUGHTER OF THE DON

(ARROW)

Early California history combined with romance. Entertaining and educational and picturesque. Effective scenery. Pleasantly played.

History-tinged romance forms the story brought to the screen in this feature. It is moderately entertaining and holds an educational value. It is engaging as it does, with scenes more or less thrilling, the early days of California. Spanish and Indian characters, who form the bulk of the big cast employed, stand out in battle scenes, wear effective costumes and suggest ideas for exploitation. The whole is pleasantly put together and moves with agreeable speed. The battle scenes are interesting and the rescues impel slight thrills. The scenery is unusually pretty and the cast plays well.

The story concerns the affairs of the heart of the daughter of a native Californian. A British agent, friend to both Californians and Americans, conceives the scheme of gaining California for his own empire. He pits the natives against the Americans, and beginning battle, bloodshed and grief. The daughter of the don is loved by an American and by a Brit. She is thrown through a number of situations and experiences that have climax in her capture by the Indians employed by the British agent, and her rescue by her lover.
EILEEN PERCY IN
WHY TRUST YOUR HUSBAND?
(FOX)
A comedy drama with a pleasing star and an appealing plot. Attractive settings and clever titles make this good entertainment. Made under the direction of George E. Marshall.
That patronage which finds fun in the perennial plot having to do with truant husbands will relish especially this comedy dramatic difficulty. It has to do with two couples of young married folks; the wives are sisters. Bring them together for a week-end in the home of one pair, the husbands connive to attend a French models' ball, attempting to keep their plans secret from their better halves. The women learn their whereabouts, disguise themselves and go to the ball. Both are dressed in yama yama costumes, the disguise that they have directed a telephone girl, let into their scheme, to describe as that by which the men shall know her at the ball. A third party, uncle to the girls, is also instructed to look for the costume, and the meanderings of an inebriated guest bring him into the melee of men and women that speed up the farce and fun at the ball. The action drags a bit before winding to a climax and completion, but the whole carries considerable good humor and will entertain.
Eileen Percy plays attractively, although her opportunities are rather limited. Harry Myers plays opposite her and Jane Miller and Hayward Mack impersonate the other couple. Harry Dunkinson, Mills Davenport and Ray Ripley are others of the cast.

EDITH ROBERTS IN THE FIRE CAT
(UNIVERSAL)
A volcanic eruption and the destruction of a city furnish effective thrills for this conventional story written and directed by Norman Dawn. Edith Roberts in the role of a daughter of a grand dame of the Castilian aristocracy.
Many picturesque scenes among the Andes Mountains and colorful scenes in artistic sets representing street scenes in the city of Purisima are employed for background to help out the plot of this slender story. It is the conventional tale of a robbery committed in the mountains resulting in the death of an old lady. Edith's daughter vows tovenge. She goes to the city and eventually overtakes the perpetrators of the crime.
Considerable footage is used to introduce Miss Roberts and the other characters and the scenes depicting the destruction of the city, the crumbling walls, the eruption of Cotopaxi and the flowing lava, while interesting, serve to detract from the main story. Edith Roberts is well suited to the role of Dulce and plays the part with the required vim. Arthur Jasmine gives a splendid portrayal of the wistful, half-caste Indian and Walter Long is true to type as Gringo Burke. There are several melodramatic incidents aside from the destruction of the city, sensational, yet lacking in suspense. The principal appeal is the star and upon her work and the picturesque settings depends the success of the picture.

Betty Blythe, popular all-around screen star, who has just been engaged by Thomas H. Ince to appear in a special feature developed from a C. Gardner Sullivan story. "The Queen of Sheba," a Fox picture, is her latest.

Nature Study Stories to Be Pathe Series Novelty
Pathé has announced March 6 as the date of publication of the first offering in the "Adventures of Bob and Bill" series of single reel stories produced by Cyrus J. Williams and directed by Robert North Bradbury, producer and director of Pathé's "Tom Santschi Series."
"The Adventures of Bob and Bill" series is based on the presentation in dramatic form of real adventure and informative nature studies. The first picture has the title, "Trapping the Bob Cat." The human actors in the play are two boys skilled in woodcraft. They are the twin sons of Bradbury.
The three pictures that will follow are "Trailing the Coyote," "Catching a 'Coon,"' and "Outwitting the Timber Wolf."

Sell Out Territories on Joseph Saneth Pictures
J. Joseph Saneth, whose five-reel Western feature, "Hearts of the Range," was issued only recently, announces that in this record time he has disposed of the following territories: Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota and Wisconsin to Theatre Owners Corporation of Minneapolis; Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas to H. E. Baxley Attractions of Dallas. Negotiations for several other territories are well under way.

Riley Lovers Are Eager To See "Swimmin' Hole"
The list of distinguished exceptions to the rule expressed in the New Testament, "A prophet is not without honor save in his own country," numbers among its celebrities James Whitcomb Riley, the well-beloved author of "The Old Swimmin'-Hole."
This fact is being emphasized now, when people in all parts of the Hoosier State are manifesting an eagerness to see Charles Ray in his current picturization of this classic. The enthusiasm of the Indians is shown in numerous letters which have been received both by First National, which issues his pictures, and by Arthur S. Kane, who presents the star.

Selznick Scenarists Are En Route to West Coast
Mr. and Mrs. R. Cecil Smith, members of the Selznick scenario department, left recently for a month's sojourn to the West Coast.
The first leg of the journey is being made by steamer to New Orleans, from which point they will proceed by rail to Ocean Park, Cal. En route to the Coast they will prepare the continuity of a John Lynch story which will be used for one of the Selznick stars. According to plans they will return East by the first of March.
New York Notes About Film Folk

By J. B.

February 12, 1921

A new combination of talent has just been formed at 2112 Candler building. Renaud & Calvin is the name under which the company will conduct the business. Both partners are reliable and experienced newspaper men and have a large acquaintance among the picture trade. General publicity and advertising of the object of the company. We wish you luck, boys, go to it!

Anna Q. Nilsson, who came East for one of the leading roles in the all-star cast of "The Oath" under the direction of R. A. Walsh, found "The Big Drop" and has been featured in Metro's "Without Limit," the Saturday Evening Post story, which had for its temporary title "Temple Dust," has been engaged by Harry Rapf to produce "Why Girls Leave Home," work on which will start within the next few days.

Joe Sametti is conducting a whirlwind campaign and his latest picture, "Hearts O' the Range," is going over like the proverbial prairie fire.

Fritz Tidgen, who is writing a personal col. for one of the film trade papers, is discovering a lot of new people in the industry. Last week he had Eddie Bonn down as Eddie Barnes and Fritz said he was a "traveller" to California, whatever that is.

A distinct tribute is paid the Louis B. Mayer Studio, Los Angeles, in the fact that two of its men, R. E. Nauman, electrical engineer, and Eugene Shour, head electrician, have been chosen for membership in the Electrical Illuminating Engineers Society. The total membership of the society is twenty-six, and only men thoroughly conversant with electrical science and of proven studio ability are invited into it.

Shortly before Chet Withey sailed for Florida with Constance Talmadge and her company, in order to get exteriors for "Wedding Bells," Bernard P. Arons visited the Talmadge studio where he took a one-reel motion picture de luxe of Miss Talmadge and her director, for the Shadowland Screen Review which is produced in cooperation with the Brewer Publications Shadowland, Motion Picture Magazine and Screen Classics. Constance Talmadge's most recently completed production, "Lessons in Love," which is also a Chet Withey production, will be published on March 21. This is an adaptation of Douglas M. Murry's stage play, "The Man from Toronto," "Wedding Bells" is a picture version of Salisbury Field's play of that name.

Jack W. Brown, associate director for Salient Films, Inc., is one of the few directors who is not afraid of hard work. Jack usually puts in about fourteen hours per day without a kick. His chief, however, Charles Davis, 2nd, is such an untried worker that he seems to inspire the boys, as well as perspire on the long grind.

E. K. Lincoln, accompanied by his wife, sailed for Europe on the "Geotrope." The trip is for pleasure combined with business and will take in England, France, Scotland, etc. Being dog fanciers and owners of the famous Greenacre Kennels at Fairfield, Conn., they will attend some of the dog shows, as well as visit the foremost Chow kennels in England, with the view of purchasing a few choice specimens. The important feature of this trip is to rest up after completing a special production for the International Film Service Corporation, the exteriors for which were taken in the Bahama Islands. Mr. Lincoln will also look over production material abroad, as upon his return he intends making a big special production.

Charles Maigne, special Famous Players director, now directing Alice Brady in "The Tower," written by him in collaboration with Samuel Merwin, is a firm believer in the old maxim, "variety is the spice of life." What with his Charles Maigne special production of "The Frontier of the Stars," with Thomas Meighan depicting life in New York's Bowery district; his serial special, "The Captain," with Montie Blue hopping down to the mountains of Kentucky, and his latest picture, "The Tower," with Alice Brady, having to do with wealthy society folk here in New York—well, it's a great life, that of the director.

Pathé Makes Survey of Serial Conditions
Investigation Made Shows No Depression, According to Company

An investigation of general business conditions as they apply in particular to serials has failed to reveal any evidence in support of recent opinions of an "all-pervading business depression," according to Pathé.

The serial producing and publishing plant will be conducted on the basis by Pathé and with renewed confidence in the outcome of a schedule based on more extensive lines with regard to episode productions.

The quality of production displayed in the first two issues in 1921, "Double Adventure" with Charles Hutchison, and "The Avenging Arrow," starring Ruth Roland, will be standard for the serial offerings of the year.

No peculiar immunity has been claimed for the serial play, which in common with the other forms of screen entertainment, is looking as well as it can with the end of the abilities of the serial to the sustained abilities of the serial to make money, for the exhibitor under existing conditions has been offered by the exhibitors themselves. The box office of a more impressive and interesting authority than comparative figures of bookings for the first month of this year with former ones, even though such figures are such as to confound the most rabid of the calamity howlers.

Nulty Is Slightly Hurt
By Auto in New York

(From Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, Feb. 15.—Though he admits he wasn't feeling quite right for several days, V. A. Nulty, general manager of National Film Corporation of America, vehemently denies the report published in the New York Sun that he is dead. With Harry M. Rubey, president, Mr. Nulty came to New York from Los Angeles to arrange production and publication contracts for his firm. He had not been here twenty-four hours when he vainly attempted to act as a pillar to stop an unerring automobile. The New York Sun said the accident was a serious one, but Mr. Nulty declares the penalty was no greater than a cut lip and ear, a bruised arm and a broken watch. To prove his veracity, he is displaying the evidence; that is, when he's not talking contracts.

"Affairs of Anatole" Finished by DeMille
Paramount Declares Picture Marks "Epoch in Art Of Screen"

With the final scene of Cecil B. DeMille's production, "The Affairs of Anatole," taken and with the film now in the cutting room, everyone about the Lasky studio who took part in the picture and everyone who did not, Paramount says, realizes that the picture marks an epoch in the art of the screen.

It is the first time that such a combination of acting talent has been assembled in one production, and in this respect the claim is made that it represents an undertaking which is unique.

Cast Is All-Star

In the cast are Wallace Reid, Gloria Swanson, Elliott Dexter, Bebe Daniels, Monte Blue, Wanda Hawley, Theodore Roberts, Agnes Ayres, Theodore Kosloff, Dorothy Cumming, Raymond Hatton and Julia Faye. Every one of the players has a record of achievement and with one or two exceptions has been developed under the direction of Cecil B. DeMille.

The scenario of this photoplay, suggested by Arthur Schnitzler's stage play of the same name, was written by Jeanie MacPherson. The connection appreciation is extended also to Beulah Marie Dix, Lorna Moon and Elmer Harris for their literary assistance.

Settings by Tribe

The settings were designed by Paul Tribe, the noted Parisian artist and interior decorator. The several gowns worn by each of the feminine principals were designed by Clarie W. connection appreciation is extended also to Beulah Marie Dix, Lorna Moon and Elmer Harris for their literary assistance.

Harold Lloyd's Newest Picture Ready in March

Announcement of March 18 as the issue date of "Now or Never," Harold Lloyd's first picture under his contract with Associated Exhibitors, Inc., has been made.

This production is in three reels. The contract entered into between Hal Roach, the producer of the Lloyd pictures, Lloyd and Associated Exhibitors last summer, does not remove the Lloyd comedies from the Pathe distribution schedule, as the pictures will be distributed by Pathe, with whom Lloyd has been identified for six years.

Harold Goodwin Finishes First Starring Vehicle

Priest Changes Title To "Supreme Passion"

Original Name Was Used by Another Company About Four Years Ago

Robert W. Priest, president of The Film Market, Inc., has changed the title of the feature picture by Robert McLaughlin and Charles T. Dazey, originally named "The Grand Passion," to "The Supreme Passion."

It was learned after the announcement was first made two weeks ago that about four years ago a program picture was published under the title "The Grand Passion." While recent court decisions would have upheld the use of this title, the story and locale of scenes being different and original, this information led to reconsideration and adoption of the title "The Supreme Passion" as more accurately reflecting the motive of the plot.

The original title, "The Grand Passion," it was thought, would be taken to indicate a distinctively sex production and might irritate the sensitivities of censors. The theme of this photoplay is supreme love in its most exalted sense.

Fox Unit Imperilled By Sierra Blizzard

William Russell Gets Scenes in Mountain Range in California

Word has reached Fox headquarters in New York that the company headed by William Russell, which several weeks ago left Los Angeles for location in the Sierra Mountains, shot their scenes all right, but were in peril when a Sierra blizzard swept down on them, and for four days kept them in suspense as to the outcome.

The spot where the film outfit had their exciting experience is marked on local maps as "unexplored regions," and to this isolated locale went forty-five men and two women.

Before the blizzard started, shots were made in the midst of great snow scenes, and when nature began getting obstreperous the company agreed to take a chance with one of the worst blizzards that had visited those parts, in order that they might register something unusual in the way of snow scenes.

On the fourth day, when the blizzard had abated sufficiently, the company, after many hardships, reached their home base, none the worse for their exciting experience. "Bare Knuckles" is the picture that Russell was making.

Many Thrills Promised In Bert Lubin Western

"West of the Rio Grande," Bert Lubin's five-reel feature Western, is said to have many unique thrills.

In one scene in the picture, in order to rescue a girl from a half-crazed cattleman, Harry McLaughlin, the aviator, makes a jump across an intervening river by means of a grape vine which he has chopped loose for the purpose. Allene Ray, beauty contest winner, plays the stellar role.

DRAMATIC SCENE FROM "HEART OF THE RANGE"

A bit of action from the J. Joseph Sameth production being booked through the Forward Film Corporation.
Eugene Zukor, assistant treasurer of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who sailed for Europe on February 3 to make a survey of the foreign production and distribution field for his company.

Jackie Coogan, who has another important role in "Peck's Bad Boy," is gloating over the "Exhibitors Herald" review of "The Kid," in which he played a big part. Sam Wood, his director, is enjoying it with him.

Henry Morganthau, former Ambassador to Turkey, pays a visit to the Goldwyn studio. He was the guest of Samuel Goldwyn (left) and Rupert Hughes (right).

Six-Foot-Four, with William Russell. —Positively the best Western I have ever run to date. The kind that is possible. Thrills in plenty. Say all you want to, cannot cover too much territory. Your patrons will come out satisfied and asking for more like it.—E. L. Hubbard, Hub theatre, Bishop, Tex.—Neighborhood patronage.

Their Mutual Child, with Margarita Fisher.—This picture is unusual. Satisfied both classes and masses and proved to be good box office attraction.—Fred S. Meyer Palace theatre, Hamilton, O.—Transient patronage.

Siam Bang Jim, with William Russell. —Good Western picture but did not entertain like Six-Foot-Four, but it makes an excellent program picture.—L. Hubbard, Hub theatre, Bishop, Tex.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Dangerous Talent, with Margarita Fisher.—This picture is unusually pleasing. Satisfied both classes and masses and proved to be good box office attraction.—Fred S. Meyer Palace theatre, Hamilton, O.—Transient patronage.

Ten Plays My Patrons Liked Best

(>July 1, 1920, to Jan. 1, 1921<)

1. Jubilo.
2. Male and Female.
3. The Yellow Typhoon.
4. The Mollycoddle.
5. Go and Get It.
6. The Miracle Man.
7. In Search of a Sinner.
8. The Fighting Shepherdess.
10. A Daughter of Two Worlds.

W. L. Uglow, Crystal Theatre, Burlington, Wis.

like two or three previous comedies with the best picked out and all put together. Hope Love, Honor and Behave will be more satisfactory.—W. W. Wolf, Star theatre, Lake City, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

What Women Love, with Annette Kellerman.—Here's one that's got everything you want. It's all action on land, in water and the air. Patrons enjoyed same and told us so.—William W. Roob, Grand theatre, Port Washington, Wis.—General patronage.

The Branded Woman, with Norma Talmadge.—Great. You can't go wrong on this. Story and production perfect.—J. N. Magruder, Elite theatre, Iola, Kans.

The Jack-Knife Man, a King Vidor production.—It is a picture that makes one wonder, has the busy rushing modern life exterminated the good old loving characters visualized in this production? It is tensely human, so different to regular run of pictures that it will be well received wherever seen. You cannot afford to skip.—H. J. Longaker, Howard theatre, Alexandria, Minn.

In Search of a Sinner, with Constance Talmadge.—A dandy good comedy, with a dandy good star. Six reels. Plenty of comedy. Sends them out smiling. Don't be afraid of it.—H. A. Wishard, Wishard theatre, Bloomfield, Ia.—Home patronage.

Yes or No, with Norma Talmadge.—An extra good picture. One of her best. Norma Talmadge always fills my theatre. All First Nationals good. Admission 20 and 30 cents.—B. O. Swaim, Swaim's theatre, Zionsville, Ind.—Small town patronage.

The Branded Woman, with Norma Talmadge.—All Norma Talmadge pictures please. Played to good business.—Raymond, Gear, Mayflower theatre, Florence, Kans.—General patronage.

The Love Expert, with Constance Talmadge.—This is a real production. Pleased 100 per cent. Had them all talking. Brother exhibitor you will make no mistake by booking this, as it will please them all.—H. W. Jeffries, Majestic theatre, Huntington, Ark.

Polly of the Storm Country, with Mildred Harris.—This picture drew exceptionally well and received lots of praise from the women.—Pfeiffer Bros., Opera House, Kenton, O.—General patronage.

A Virtuous Vamp, with Constance Talmadge.—Real entertaining. Many funny incidents.—Adam Hornung, Victor Opera House, Victor, Mont.—Country patronage.

The Inferior Sex, with Mildred Harris.—This one is terrible. Lay off. First National must have been hypnotized when they put this star on their program.—W. J. Mart, Strand theatre, Grinnell, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

Human Desire, with Anita Stewart.—
A Temperamental Star in This Comedy

Scene from the Christie comedy, "Movie Mad," featuring Neal Burns and Dorothy Devore. By the way, this is only a temporary title, and Educational Exchanges is looking for a better one. Have you a suggestion?

A very pretty story with splendid acting as usual. Will please anywhere. Entertained a good crowd from start to finish. You can’t go wrong on this one.

—Smith Read, Patriot theatre, DeKalb, Tex.—Small town patronage.

A Temperamental Wife, with Constance Talmadge.—This pleased 100 per cent. Big business. Connie always gets the money. Pictures like this will do away with the Blue Laws.—T. N. Magruder, Elite theatre, Iola, Kans.

Her Kingdom of Dreams, with Anita Stewart.—Boys lay off of this one. It is eight reels all spread out in what ought to be about five.—W. F. Baker, Boone Way theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ky.—General patronage.

A Virtuous Vamp, with Constance Talmadge.—Very good comedy.—L. M. Kuhns, Gibson theatre, Gibson, N. M.—Mining camp patronage.

Fifty-Five Minutes from Broadway, with Charles Ray.—All the first National Ray pictures are as good as this one we will be more than satisfied. Fine picture. Fine business.—Pfeiffer Bros. Opera House, Kenton, 0.—General patronage.

Two Weeks, with Constance Talmadge.—Another gloom-chaser by this splendid star. It pleased a good crowd 100 per cent. Book it and boost it.—Smith Read, Patriot theatre, DeKalb, Tex.—Small town patronage.

Mary Regan, with Anita Stewart—This is another dandy program. I only wish I could get more just as good. Pleased a good crowd.—H. W. Jeffries, Majestic theatre, Huntington, Ark.

Fox

Partners of Fate, with Louise Lovely.

Why Trust Your Husband? with Eileen Percy.—A great comedy. One you can afford to book and push to the limit.

Pleased everybody and they went away smiling.—James A. York, Auditorium theatre, Monroeville, Ala.—Neighborhood patronage.

No. 17, with George Walsh.—Good picture, but star not popular here. Too much of the "type" films.—E. A. Baradel, Palace theatre, McGehee, Ark.—Small town patronage.

The Mountain Woman, with Pearl White.—The best picture of this star, but why the bawling scene? It has nothing to do with the story and only is food for the censors.—Peter Krauth, Denison theatre, Denison, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

Sink or Swim, with George Walsh.—After all, only one George Walsh. Handsome and clever and takes his audience by storm. My patrons delight.—W. H. Heffer, Itasca theatre, Alice, Tex.—Small town patronage.

Two Moons, with Buck Jones.—This type of picture always goes good here. Star coming fast. Business good.—Pfeiffer Bros. Opera House, Kenton, 0.—General patronage.

The Cheater Reformed, with William Russell.—This is a good picture. You could invite your clergy to see it. Everyone ought to see it. A good moral.—W. W. Woltz, Star theatre, Lake City, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Challenge of the Law, with William Russell.—Good picture. Went out saying, "It’s a dandy show." Business off on this one. Ran Sunshine comedy with this and made good show.—William Thaeher, Royal theatre, Salina, Kans.

Just Pals, with Buck Jones.—Good picture, but star is better in Westerns.—E. A. Baradel, Palace theatre, McGehee, Ark.—Small town patronage.

No. 17, with George Walsh.—This is a good picture. I didn’t like the Chinese den brought into it, but it made it exciting.—W. W. Woltz, Star theatre, Lake City, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Little Grey Mouse, with Louise Lovely.—A very good picture. Pleased a large crowd, and believe the star will be very popular here. She has splendid support.—Smith Read, Patriot theatre, DeKalb, Tex.—Small town patronage.

Sink or Swim, with George Walsh.—This is a good comedy. One that will please all.—Adam Hornung, Victor Opera House, Victor, Mont.—Country patronage.

Prairie Trails, with Tom Mix.—Excellent Western picture. Action galore and pleased.—Peter Krauth, Denison theatre, Denison, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Terror, with Tom Mix.—Average Mix picture but did not draw as two previous Mix pictures were horribly cut out by censors. Five reels cut to three. This hurts business.—Chancellor Bros. Dreamland theatre, Arcanum, 0.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Joyous Troublemakers, with William Farnum and Russell.—Give excellent satisfaction to large audiences. Top price 55 cents.—Giacoma Brothers, Crystal theatre, Tombstone, Ariz.—General patronage.

Girl of My Heart, with Shirley Mason.—A very good picture, though it did not please as well as former pictures with this popular little chap. Patriot theatre, DeKalb, Tex.—Small town patronage.

Forbidden Trails, with Buck Jones.—Good enough for any one’s regular program. My people like Buck Jones and they don’t make ‘em any better than this one.—H. A. Wishard, Wishard theatre, Bloomfield, la.—Home patronage.

The Husband Hunter, with Eileen Percy.—Another worse than poor from Fox. Stay clear of this stuff.—O. O’Kelly, Majestic theatre, Reedsburg, Wis.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Dare Devil, with Tom Mix.—Big crowd as usual. Mix is my best card, always satisfies. Charging 55 cents for Mix.—E. F. Harman, Opera House, Elgin, Ore.

The Last of the Duanes, with William Farnum.—A picture that will please young and old. Good home and as it is.—I. L. Naiman, Lyric theatre, Alexandria, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Orphan, with William Farnum.—This is a good Western with touches of comedy. Farnum well liked here.—Chancellor Bros. Dreamland theatre, Arcanum, 0.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Peacemaker, with Tom Mix.—A real good picture. Southern setting.—Adam Hornung, Victor Opera House, Victor, Mont.—Country patronage.

The Cyclone, with Tom Mix.—Average Mix picture. Mix is not the wrong thing.—O. R. Nation, Strand theatre, Davis, Cal.—Small town patronage.

Girl of My Heart, with Shirley Mason.—One of the best Fox program pictures for some time.—Peter Krauth, Dreamland theatre, Denison, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

Heart Strings, with William Farnum.—This is great. Should be played with violin music.—J. L. Naiman, Lyric the-

EXHIBITORS

Camille of the Yukon, with Miriam Cooper and steakhouse set, is presented under the auspices of dancers and patrons kicked. We don't want reissues. It kills the game in a good house—Paul L. Shes, Wonderland theatre, Clinton, Ind.—General patronage.

Rose of Nome, with Gladys Brockwell.—Starts out rather tame, but the last two reels put it over in fair shape. My opinion is that this is the best dance hall picture to date.—H. A. Wishard, Wishard theatre, Bloomfield, la.—Home patronage.

Goldwyn

Hold Your Horses, with Tom Moore.—Possibly the best Tom Moore picture ever released. A knockout from start to finish.—H. A. Wishard, Wishard theatre, Bloomfield, la.—General patronage.

The Penalty, with Lon Chaney.—Patrons marveled at the fact that Lon Chaney could make them believe he was legless in this film. This picture is better than the average, and could be classed with the specials.—Charles H. Ryan, Ben Hur theatre, 306 S. Cicero Ave, Chicago, Ill.—General patronage.

Madame X, with Pauline Frederick.—My patrons said it was much better than Hunches of the F. Louisa.—Leaves it up to Bill. Business good.—Pfeiffer Bros., Opera House, Kenton, O.—General patronage.

The Great Accident, with Tom Moore.—Good political story. Good acting. Interest never lags. Servant in house is played by Tom himself, therefore unsuitable for younger set. Use your judgment.—Philip Rand, Rex theatre, Saloon, Idaho.—Small town patronage.

Guile of Women, with Will Rogers.—One of the best Rogers pictures we have run. With every new picture Rogers makes a new friend. Keep it up Bill. Business good.—Pfeiffer Bros., Opera House, Kenton, O.—General patronage.

Officer 666, with Tom Moore.—Played to a business three days starting Feb. 3. A good picture with plenty of action and comedy. Went well with audiences.—C. C. Cleary, Ascher's Palace theatre, Peoria, Ill.

Jubilo, with Will Rogers.—Sure was a good picture. There's a good lesson in all his pictures. Everyone well pleased. This kind of pictures are what builds a rep for our house.—C. L. German, Royal theatre, Bonner Sps, Kans.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Misfit Earl, with Louis Nennon.—Old, but very good. Star well liked here, and this is one of his very best. Can't wait for re-reel comedies as good as any, but not slapstick.—J. Christensen, Star theatre, Sandusky, Mich.—Small town patronage.

Spotlight Sadie, with Mae Marsh.—The cast in it is very good, and their acting is good, but story could be improved upon.—Akin S., Jewell theatre, Lafayette, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Scratch My Back, with a special cast.—A picture that gets them in, but don't boost it too strong. Let them be their own judges. It will please most of them if you don't have them expecting too much.—H. A. Wishard, Wishard theatre, Bloomfield, la.—Home patronage.

The Revenge of Tarzan, with Gene Pollar.—Star good.—H. W. Jeffries, Majestic theatre, Huntington, Ark.

Out of the Storm, with Barbara Castleton.—A very good interesting picture.—Peter Krauth, Denison theatre, Denison, La.—Neighborhood patronage.

Flame of the Desert, with Geraldine Farrar.—A wonderful picture. Good cast, but did not take like The World and Its Woman.—G. M. McClain, Star theatre, Barry, Ill.—Small town patronage.

The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come, with Jack Pickford.—This picture will satisfy and your patrons will tell you so.—R. A. Shobe, Kentland theatre, Kentland, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Silver Horde, with a special cast.—Is a splendid story. One of Rex Beach's best. It is well known and has a good drawing power. Book it now.—Adam Hornung, Victor Opera House, Victor, Mont.—Country patronage.

The Cinderella Man, with a special cast.—A real high class artistic picture that will touch the hearts of all classes. A credit to the industry. Give us more like it.—Harold Daspit, Atherton theatre, Kentwood, La.—Neighborhood patronage.

Strictly Confidential, with Madge Kennedy.—A very pleasing program offering that gave satisfaction to all. Presents Madge Kennedy in especially pleasing role. Good box office returns.—Fred S. Meyer, Palace theatre, Hamilton, O.—Transient patronage.

Double Dyed Deceiver, with Jack Pickford.—Star well pleased. Had Harold Lloyd's High and Dizzy with this, which made a splendid program.—Peter Krauth, Denison theatre, Denison, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

Earthbound, with a special cast.—A very good drama that you can use for at least two days. In seven reels but not padded. Interest is sustained to the finish. You can raise your admission prices on it. A good cast and some good direction.—Charles H. Ryan, Ben Hur theatre, 306 S. Cicero Ave, Chicago, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Loves of Letty, with Pauline Frederick.—A terrible picture. Awful. Failed to go over.—Fred S. Meyer, Palace theatre, Hamilton, 0.—Transient patronage.

Day Dreams, with Madge Kennedy.—A very, very poor story.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy theatre, Winchester, Ind.

Cupid the Cow Puncher, with Will Rogers.—Rogers at present is our best bet. They all like him. He sure pulls some funny stunts in Cupid the Cow Puncher.—H. A. Wishard, Wishard theatre, Bloomfield, la.—Home patronage.

Hodkinson

The U. P. Trail, with Roy Stewart.—This is a real Western picture and will please all the men and boys, and most of the ladies. Only trouble sub-titles dark and a great deal of the photography too dark. Would have been much better if clear.—H. W. Jeffries, Majestic theatre, Huntington, Ark.

The Kentucky Colonel, with a special cast.—Two days fair business to a mighty good picture.—Verner Hicks, Family theatre, Marion, Ill.—General patronage.

The Volcano, with Leah Baird.—Nothing but a propaganda picture. A total fliver at the box office.—Fred S. Meyer, Palace theatre, Hamilton, O.—Transient patronage.

The Brute Master, with Hobart Bosworth.—Absolutely nothing to this. Brother exhibitor, stay away from it.—H. W. Jeffries, Majestic theatre, Huntington, Ark.

Metro

Blackmail, with Viola Dana.—Fine. Dana always goes better than average.

A LOVE SCENE FROM A SERIAL

Joe Ryan and his leading woman, Elinor Field, in his new Vitagraph chapter play "The Purple Riders," by Albert E. Smith and Cleveland Moffet.
HOPE HAMPTON
Who assisted in opening the New Loew's theatre, the State, at Cleveland, on Febr. 5, here—O. R. Nation, Strand theatre, Dixie; Cal. Sund., small patronage.

The Great Redeemer, with a special cast.—Excellent. Broke house record for attendance and pleased them all.—L. M. Kuhns, Gibson theatre, Gilson, N. M.—Mining camp patronage.
The Theater, with May Allison.—Very poor picture. Stay clear of this. With few exceptions have found all Metro productions very poor.—O. O'Kelly, Majestic theatre, Reedsburg, Wis.—Small town patronage.

The Saphead, with Buster Keaton.—Pleased about half. Poorest second-night crowd ever had on so-called big picture.—O. R. Nation, Strand theatre, Davis, Cal.—Small town patronage.

The Muny of Elsinore, with a special cast.—These London stories produced by Metro have not given satisfaction.—J. L. Hashbrow, Grand theatre, Gravellite, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

Alias Jimmy Valentine, with Bert Lytell.—A good crook drama. So far Lytell has always pleased.—I. Hardin Ent. Co., Odeon theatre, Hardin, Mo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Lombardi Ltd., with Bert Lytell.—Was very much disappointed in this. I didn't like it at all. Too much Dago talk. Am afraid it killed the star here, although some told me it was good.—W. W. Woltz, Star theatre, Lake City, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

Alias Jimmy Valentine, with Bert Lytell.—It pleased, but did not draw like it should.—Raymond Gear, Mayflower theatre, Florence, Kans.—General patronage.

Forlorn, Bedroom and Bath, with special cast.—Went over big to big business.—Giacoma Brothers, Crystal theatre, Tombstone, Ariz.—General patronage.
The Heart of a Child, with Nazimova.—Now I know why somebody wants a censor.—Vernon Hicks, Family theatre, Marion, Ill.—General patronage.

Civilian Clothes, with Thomas Meighan. I was a little disappointed in this, and did not do as well as a picture of class should do.—Raymond Gear, Mayflower theatre, Florence, Kans.—General patronage.

False Evidence, with Viola Dana.—Old but good. She is always good.—W. C. Whitt, Home theatre, Anderson, Cal.—Small town patronage.

Pair and Wed, with May Allison.—This is sure a dandy. Everyone liked it. Full of humor and laughs. Give us more like it. The world needs laughs.—W. W. Woltz, Star theatre, Lake City, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

Nothing But the Truth, with Taylor Holmes.—Nothing to it.—Vernon Hicks, Family theatre, Marion, Ill.—General patronage.

Paramount

Humoresque, with a special cast.—Exceptionally good, and plenty of complimentary remarks from my patrons on this one.—O. O'Kelly, Majestic theatre, Reedsburg, Wis.—Neighborhood patronage.

Behold My Wife, with a special cast.—Excellent. A real special.—L. M. Kuhns, Gibson theatre, Gibson, N. M.—Mining camp patronage.

The Right to Love, with Mae Murray.—A good special. Did average business. My patrons not very crazy over this type of story.—W. H. Mart, Strand theatre, Grinnell, Ia.

Hairpins, with Enid Bennett.—Splendid picture. Really something to think about. Please 'em all.—S. I. Goodwin, Royal theatre, Lehi, Utah.

Stepping Out, with Enid Bennett.—A splendid picture that failed to draw, although we did a little extra advertising on it.—A. N. Miles, Emineine theatre, Eminence, Ky.—Small town patronage.

A City Sparrow, with Ethel Clayton.—Satisfactory program picture. Top price. 25 cents to patrons. Giacoma Brothers, Crystal theatre, Tombstone, Ariz.—General patronage.

Humoresque, with a special cast.—Stay off this box with a 25 cent theatre, Kentland, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Lottery Man, with Wallace Reid.—Fine. Pleased nearly everyone.—L. M. Kuhns, Gibson theatre, Gibson, N. M.—Mining camp patronage.

Extravagance, with Dorothy Dalton.—Well that won't sell for us at all.—J. Herbert Talbert, Legion theatre, Norwich, Kans.—Small town patronage.

Huckleberry Finn, with a special cast. Heavit it alone. Patrons did not like it at all.—J. L. Hashbrow, Grand theatre, Gravellite, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

Guilty of Love, with Dorothy Dalton.—Some wonderful scenic shots. Star and juvenile support fine. Langford as husband, poor. Lane as father in same class. We've had lots of adverse critics on account of the lavish use of the cigarette, which was entirely uncalled for. It certainly lessened the dignity of the grandfather, and there is a strong sentiment against this too free use of the cigarette on the screen, and directors will do well to take heed.—S. I. Goodwin, Royal theatre, Lehi, Utah.

Remodeling a Husband, with Dorothy Gish.—No wonder they want to make fewer and better pictures.—W. H. Mart, Strand theatre, Grinnell, Iowa.

The Lottery Man, with Wallace Reid.—Here is a picture you can go after the business with. We knew it was good so we went after big business and got it. 388 admissions in the middle of January, with had roads to contend with, is big for us, and all 388 were satisfied. Wallace will have to hurry to beat this one.—A. N. Miles, Eminence theatre, Eminence, Ky.—Small town patronage.

Guilty of Love, with Dorothy Dalton.—This kind of picture hurts business.—J. L. Hashbrow, Grand theatre, Graceville, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Dancin' Fool, with Wallace Reid.—Very good picture. Lots of good comedy.—Grand theatre, New Hamburg, Ont.—Small town patronage.

Putting It Over, with Bryant Washburn.—While this picture is old, it entertains and was well liked.—Keller & Roush, Rex theatre, Custer, Okla.—Small town patronage.

Behind the Door, with Hobart Boswell.—There is good acting in this picture, but I didn't like the story. A terribly gruesome ending.—W. H. Woltz, Star theatre, Lake City, Iowa.—Neighborhood patronage.

The White Heather, with a special cast.—This is especially good, and the underwater scenes make it different. It is not a picture to raise admission on, but it will give the very best satisfaction.—A. N. Miles, Eminence theatre, Eminence, Ky.—Small town patronage.

The Poppy Girl's Husband, with William S. Hart.—Different from most of Hart's pictures, and took well, as patrons are getting tired of so many wild Westerns.—J. Herbert Talbert, Legion theatre, Norwich, Kans.—Small town patronage.

Hard Boiled, with Dorothy Dalton.—Very good picture. Dorothy Dalton is good if she is in a picture where she has a chance.—Keller & Roush, Rex theatre, Custer, Okla.—Small town patronage.

Scarlet Days, a D. W. Griffith production.—Some, or a few, liked this picture, but Mexican or this class of stuff not liked here. Also dark photography—

The Boss in the Fox production of Mark Twain’s comedy, “A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur’s Court,” staged by Emmett J. Flynn.
Raymond Schneider, Midget theatre, Metamora, Ill.

The Cruise of the Make-Believe, with Lila Lee. Good for program picture.—J. J. Flannery, Strand theatre, Swanton, Neb.—General patronage.

What's Your Hurry? with Wallace Reid. Very good. Not his best, but compares favorably with his other auto stories. The theories of Roberts missed in this one.—W. H. Mart, Strand theatre, Grinnell, Iowa.

His Wife's Friend, with Dorothy Dalton. —Mystery murder in the plot interesting. Unsympathetic acting. Dorothy Dalton looks like a cigar store Indian and acts like well, that's the trouble, she overacts. Several walked out. Lost money.—Philip Rand, Rex theatre, Salmon, Idaho.—Small town patronage.

Little Miss Rebellion, with Dorothy Gish. —An average Gish picture, but not quite as good as some others made by this star.—Raymond Gear, Mayflower theatre, Florence, Kans.—General patronage.

More Deadly Than the Male, with Ethel Clayton. —This is just an average class picture.—Raymond Schneider, Midget theatre, Metamora, Ill.

Counterfeit, with Elsie Ferguson. —My audience was well pleased. Scenery a big help. Miss Ferguson's acting good. No complaints, but lots of compliments.—W. H. Helfer, Itasca theatre, Alice, Tex.—Small town patronage.

Three Men and a Girl, with Marguerite Clark. —Star always popular here, and this was one of her most pleasing pictures.—J. J. Flannery, Legion theatre, Norwich, Kans.—Small town patronage.

Partners Three, with Enid Bennett. —A good story of the desert. Star good.—H. A. Sando, Rex theatre, Custer, Okla.—Small town patronage.

The Grim Game, with Houdini. —Went fine for us, and is such a relief from love stories. There isn't a kiss in the whole picture and the only person who objected was an old maid.—A. J. Miles, Eminence theatre, Eminence, Ky.—Small town patronage.

The Mislading Lady, with Billie Burke. —This picture went over big and everybody said, "Swell picture." This picture will satisfy knockers.—Raymond Schneider, Midget theatre, Metamora, Ill.

The Marriage Price, with Elsie Ferguson. —Well acted society drama. Small crowd on account of bad weather, but those who came out were satisfied.—Herbert Talbert, Legion theatre, Norwich, Kans.—Small town patronage.

Daughter of the Wolf, with Lila Lee. —Good star. Good acting and a good picture. Story is a bit weak.—H. A. Wislard, Wishard theatre, Bloomfield, Iowa.—Home patronage.

Come Out of the Kitchen, with Marguerite Clark. —About the best of this star we have had for some time. —A. N. Miles, Eminence theatre, Eminence, Ky.—Small town patronage.

What's Your Husband Doing?, with Douglas MacLean and Doris May.—First-class comedy. They don't make 'em much better.—Grand theatre, New Hamburg, Ont., Can.—Small town patronage.

Pathé

Half a Chance, with Mahlon Hamilton. —Class A as to entertainment value. A very good picture. Boost it big, as it is worthy of anything good you say of it. Star does some fine work. Good for two days.—Charles H. Ryan, Ben Hur theatre, Chicago, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Moonshine Trail, with Sylvia Breamer. —Stay away from this one. Patrons said this was the poorest I ever showed. Too much "likker" in it.—W. F. Haycock, Star theatre, Callaway, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

Brothers Divided and Smoldering Embers, with Frank Keenan. —Here are two dandy pictures that were well received. They liked Keenan and the stories are interesting. Ran these with Lloyd special at 15-85 cents. —Councill Bros., Dreamland theatre, Arcanum, Ohio.—Neighborhood patronage.

Selznick

The Chicken in the Case, with Owen Moore. —This sure is an amusing comedy. The best Owen Moore yet. Everybody pleased.—Peter Krauth, Denison theatre, Denison, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Figurehead, with Eugene O'Brien. —Best O'Brien picture we ever had here. Glad to see him get out of the matinee idol stuff.—E. A. Baradel, Palace theatheatre, Kentwood, La.—Neighborhood patronage.

Marie, Ltd., with Alice Brady.—Old and positively worthless. A few women liked it, but the men jumped the job from the third reel.—W. C. Whitt, Home theatre, Anderson, Cal.—Small town patronage.

His Bridal Night, with Alice Brady.—Very good little picture. Please all.—W. H. Gilfillan, Lotus theatre, Red Lake Falls, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

Ruling Passions, with a special cast.—A great picture skillfully handled by a capable cast. Gave 100 per cent satisfaction for us. A great Sunday picture as it is a sermon in itself.—C. T. Merrell, Opera House, Greenfield, Ill.—Small town patronage.

Mr. Wu, with a special cast.—Good picture.—F. E. Butler, Rex theatre, Racine, Wis.—Transient patronage.

Mr. Wu, with a special cast.—We think the action in the picture was entirely too slow. If you wanted to slow the motion it couldn’t be done. Picture otherwise all right.—Usual oriental story.—Charles H. Collins, Virginia theatre, Kenosha, Wis.—Neighborhood patronage.

United Artists

The Mark of Zorro, with Douglas Fairbanks.—Continuous showing from 12:30 p.m. to 12 midnight. Record business. Stopped selling tickets twice. The picture was the best that has ever been shown in Youngwood. The action was full of pep. Liked by all who saw the picture.—Henry Youngwood, Pa.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Mark of Zorro, with Douglas Fairbanks.—People who did not care for Fairbanks praised this one. One hundred per cent entertainment.—J. L. Hasbrock, Grand theatre, Graveline, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Mark of Zorro, with Douglas Fairbanks.—Best Fairbanks I ever ran. Played to capacity business for two days.—D. Manheimer, Peerless Fifth Avenue theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Down on the Farm, a Mack Sennett production.—A pretty fair comedy, but didn’t hear a single comment. Average drawing card. The advertising material is good.—Chancellor Bros., Dreamland theatre, Arcanum, O.—Neighborhood patronage.

Universal

Rich Girl Poor Girl, with Gladys Walton.—This is everything that goes to make a good picture. Patrons came out of the show saying, “This sure is a humdinger.”—George E. Thimmes, Pastime theatre, Mechanicsville, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

Pink Tights, with Gloyd Walton.—A dandy little play for the non-critical. It has thrills, interest, animals, small boy part, etc., with good plot. The director keeps this from being a first class classic because of some rough stuff and he just can’t refrain from drawing undue attention to heroine’s legs to delight the rough element.—Philip Rand, Rex theatre, Salmon, Idaho.—Small town patronage.

Once to Every Woman, with Dorothy Phillips.—Used the singer, as others did, and don’t think much of it. Detracts from picture. People all worked up to this scene, and when the voice breaks in it’s all off. The effect is killed. My singer was all right, but I had complaints it spoiled the picture by breaking into it. This is too good a production and this should be considered by those playing it. Of course, it may go big in other towns.—Verner Hicks, Family theatre, Marion, Ill.—General patronage.

Pink Tights, with Gladys Walton.—Good program picture. No kicks. Everyone likes the star.—Watt and Simmons, Bijou theatre, Crookston, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

A Tokio Siren, with Tsuru Aoki.—A good play, scenery, but drawing card.—Grand theatre, New Hamburg, Ont, Can.

PUTTING ONE OVER ON PAPA

Scene from “Nobody’s Wife,” a new Christie Comedy featuring Eddy Barry and distributed by Educational exchanges.
The Devil's Passkey, with a special cast.—Very good. Large crowd. Everyone pleased. This is a good drawing card. — E. E. Harman, Opera House, Elgin, Ore.

Fixed by George, with Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran.—Patrons liked this fine. Feature made a big hit. Folks talked about it for a week. —F. H. Filler, Grand theatre, Humiston, Iowa.—Neighborhood patronage.

Wanted at Headquarters, with Eva Novak and good picture. However, the art of star very poor. How do some stars (?) attain the right to that title? — A. B. Anderson, Majestic theatre, McGehee, Ark.—Small town patronage.

Human Stuff, with Harry Carey.—Good. All Carey pictures draw for us.—Keller & Roush, Rex theatre, Custer, Okla.—Small town patronage.

The Prince of Avenue A, with James C. Corbett.—Fair program picture.—John Steichen, Aurora theatre, White Lake, S. D.—Neighborhood patronage.

Once to Every Woman, with Dorothy Phillips.—Not extra good.—L. M. Kuhs, Gibson theatre, Gibson, N. M.—Mining camp patronage.

The Path She Chose, with Anne Cornwall.—Very satisfactory picture, and pleased all of our patrons.—S. I. Goodwin, Royal theatre, Lehi, Utah.

This is in Nobody, with Frank Mayo.—Star good. Picture wonderful for pleasure to please to good house.—Keller & Roush, Rex theatre, Custer, Okla.—Small town patronage.

Bullet Proof, with Harry Carey.—Was best drawing card used at our theatre for somet ime. Want more features like it. Patrons enjoyed feature extremely.—S. S. Peterson, Auditorium theatre, Calamus, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

Blue Streak McCoy, with Harry Carey.—I run this with Jiggs and Maggie in The Social Lion, and pleased a good crowd. Carey always goes good in my house.—H. W. Jeffries, Majestic theatre, Huntington, W. Va.

The Virgin of Stamboul, with Pricilla Dean.—This is a real special. Run two days. Second day doubled the first day's receipts. Last reel a knockout.—T. N. Magner, Rex theatre, Custer, S. Dak.

The Road to Divorce, with Mary MacLaren.—Fairly good program picture.—John Steichen, Aurora theatre, White Lake, S. D.—Neighborhood patronage.

Under Crimson Skies, with Elmo Lincoln.—Passed least 99 per cent. Little better than average business.—O. R. Nanton, Strand theatre, Davis, Calif.—Small town patronage.

Vitagraph

Trumpet Island, with a special cast.—Say, boys, don't pass up this one. It drew better than we thought it would, but the feature had the satisfaction it gave. Comments on this several weeks after showing. 15-25 cents.—Chancellor Bros, Dreamland theatre, Fairmont, 11., Ore.—Small town patronage.

The Courage of Marge O'Doonie, with a special cast.—This is a very good picture, and is a good drawing card. You cannot do wrong on this one.—E. E. Harman, Opera House, Elgin, Ore.

Slaves of Pride, with Alice Joyce.—This is a fine picture but I didn't make any money because of it being Chautauqua Week. She never does make any money. She's too sad.—W. W. Wolz, Star theatre, Lake City, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

Trumpet Island, with a special cast.—A mighty good offering to fair business. — Verner Hicks, Family theatre, Marion, Ill.—General patronage.

The BROADWAY BUBBLE, with Corinne Griffith.—Eminence has the honor of being the home town heroines in this story. Miss Leigh Gordon Giltner, so of course it was her name that drew neighborhood patrons. Story and star are splendid and will give good entertainment.—A. N. Miles, Eminence theatre, Eminence, Ky.—Small town patronage.

The Message of the Mouse, with Anita Stewart.—Although this is a re-issue and the costumes were out of date the picture drew well.—William W. Roob, Grand theatre, Port Washington, Wis.—Small town patronage.

The Courage of Marge O'Doonie, with a special cast.—A splendid Northwest picture for those who like this kind. 17-25 cents.—Chancellor Bros, Dream land theatre, Steichen, 0.—Neighborhood patronage.

Short Subjects

The Suitor (Vitagraph), with Larry Semon.—This is sure a good one. Kept the audience enthralled. Semon said, "Fine show" as they passed out.—W. W. Wolz, Star theatre, Lake City, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

Haunted Spooks (Pathé), with Harold Lloyd.—Very good comedy that's hard to beat.—T. J. Kuslacie, Swan theatre, Swanton, 0.—General patronage.

Good Night Nurse (Pathé), with Alice Howell.—These comedies are getting better right along.—Hardin Ent. Co., Odeon theatre, Hardin, Mo.—Neighborhood patronage.

One Week and the Scarecrow (Metro), with Buster Keaton.—Two of the best comedies we have ever shown.—F. R. Matson, Crystal theatre, Flandreau, S. D.

Buster Keaton Comedies (Metro), with Buster Keaton. These comedies rank very high among the Fox comedies. We were worried wrong by featuring Neighbors.—J. L. Hasbrouck, Grand theatre, Gracerville, Min.—Neighborhood patronage.

His Royal Sins/y (Pathé), with Harold Lloyd.—This with on the program anything ought to go over in nice style. Good commercial satisfaction. One of the best Lloyd has made. Lloyd is one of our biggest hets. His Royal Sins/y is really a headliner for any program.—Fred S. Meyer, Palace theatre, Hamilton, 0.—Transient patronage.

Kidding the Landlord (Universal), with a special cast.—Don't think much of these comedies, but this one is a nice little comedy. Better than the average.—William Thacher, Royal theatre, Salina, Kan.

Kinograms (Educational).—Have been using Kinograms since Educational has been distributing them. Many patrons stop the house and say they like them fine.—B. O. Swaim, Swaim's theatre, Zionsville, Ind.—Small town patronage.

Edgar Comedies (Goldwyn), with Johnny Jones. These comedies are good business getters, and give satisfaction. Let the kids keep when you are going to run one.—J. L. Hasbrouck, Grand thea tre, Gracerville, Min.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Boss of the Copperhead (Universal), with J. McDonald.—Why does Universal think the majority of people want comedies only through—They don't. We have to cancel Universal unless they get better. Don't book this one.—Philip Rand, Rex theatre, Salmon, Idaho.—Small town patronage.

Vod-A-Vil (Spanish), with a special cast. —We find these very good. All the actors are high class.—Grand theatre, New Hamburg, Ont., Can.—Small town patronage.

Bought and Fought For (Universal), with a special cast.—Good. Universal's two Western pictures please the beat. They are all good.—T. X. Magruder, Elite theatre, Jola, Kan.

The Naugly Night (Federated), with Monty Banks. Everybody raves on comedy. Went over pretty well.—O. R. Nation, Strand theatre, Davis, Cal.—Small town patronage.

One Week (Metro), with Buster Keaton.—At last we have a two reel comedy that is free from vulgarity, yet has action and interest. A newly built house that spins around in the box office and say they like it. The spring of this one. The most exciting patrons were pleased. Book it.—Philip Rand, Rex theatre, Salmon, Idaho.—Small town patronage.

Burlington Travel Pictures.—While there are only three of these, they are excellent program fillers.—Grand theatre, New Hamburg, Ont., Can.—Small town patronage.

Kiss Me Caroline (Educational), with Bobby Vernon.—Went over big.—O. R. Nation, Strand theatre, Davis, Cal.—Small town patronage.

An Overall Hero (Educational), with Smiley Burnette. This comedy certainly not only made the adults and children laugh, but made the babies in arms laughing which makes it a very good comedy.—Pfeifer Bros., Opera House, Kenton, 0.—General patronage.

The Toonerville Fire Brigade (First National).—Two reel comedy burlesque on small town fire department. It brings the trinitary smile but lacks action. Just mildly amusing. It's clean.—Philip Rand, Rex theatre, Salmon, Idaho.—Small town patronage.

Neighbors (Metro), with Buster Keaton.—A real comedy. It sure made a hit with us.—F. R. Matson, Crystal theatre, Byron, Ill.—Small town patronage.

Bumping Into Broadway (Pathé), with Harold Lloyd.—Lloyd's pictures are sure fine. Everybody raves on him. Have run about four and have booked.—John L. Naiman, Lyric theatre, Alexandria, Nebr.—Neighborhood patronage.

My Salomy Lions (Universal), with a special cast.—Where it wasn't vulgar it was very funny. Universal needs a new director who has some interesting ideas.—Philip Rand, Rex theatre, Salmon, Idaho.—Small town patronage.

Serials

The Lost City (Warner Bros.), with Juanita Hansen.—This is a good serial but for some reason or other it has failed to do well for us.—Hardin Ent. Co., Odeon theatre, Hardin, Mo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Vanishing Trails (Canyon), with Philip Rand. This serial is well liked here, and draws business.—Keller & Roush, Rex theatre, Custer, Okla.—Small town patronage.

The Son of Tarzan (Universal), with a special cast.—Greatest money maker

With the Procession in Los Angeles

By Harry Hammond Beall

CARL LAEMLE, president of Universal Film Manufacturing Company, is again one of the exhibitors. Mr. Laemle will have some announcements to make in the near future, it is said.

SAMUEL GOLDWYN, president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, who has been at the studio for the last seven weeks, has returned to New York. Since Mr. Goldwyn's visit, important production plans have been outlined.

Announcement was made by the Symphony theatre of the booking of the Thomas H. Ince special, "Lying Lips," at that house, and it is considered at the Ince plant to be the most important achievement at the Ince studios since "Civilization."

After spending some time at the Goldwyn Culver City studio in conference with Samuel Goldwyn and other officials, Mary Roberts Rinehart returned to her home in Pittsburgh, Pa., accompanied by Frank Dazey and Agnes Johnston, domestic and literary partner, who will collaborate with her on her first original screen story.

Little BREEZY EASON, the kiddie star of Universal, has just begun work on "Patches," in which he plays the star role under the direction of his father Reeves Eason. He is a guest at the world's film capital—asked him, "little boy, where are the patches?" young Mr. Eason replied, "On the bosom of my trousers."

TOO BROWNING is reviewing an army of photograghers daily to select an all-star cast for "Fanny Herself," the Edna Ferber story upon which production will start soon. The famous director has not diverted whom he has selected for the leading role, but it is understood that he has made his selection and that he is waiting only for the erection of the elaborate sets which the story will require.

The latest in dressing rooms has been introduced to the film colony by PAULINE FREDERICK, who designed a movable little house which she uses for a makeup room on the stage. The star is taking no chances on the chilly stages, so the movable room enables her to be thoroughly "comfy" and still remain on the set.

JOHN M. STAHL has engaged J. H. McCloskey as his assistant in the production of "Muffled Drums," an all-star picture to be released by Louis B. Mayer through First National. Mr. McCloskey worked previously on the Mayer lot as Edward Jose's assistant in the making of "The Yellow Typhoon," which starred ANITA STEWART.

LOUIS J. GASNIER is back on the Robinson role lot after a trip to the hospital. Gains will start shooting another all-star feature for the R-C program some time soon.

ALEX WHEELER, until recently head of Metro's photographic department, has joined forces with the Union Film Company at their Sherman, Cali., studio. Mr. Wheeler is an artist of enviable reputation, having done considerable work in Nazimova productions.

JACK PICKFORD cannot drive an automobile in the State of California for one year, his license having been revoked by the State Motor Vehicle department. This action came as the result of repeated arrests on charges of speeding.

The marriage of NORMAN DAWN, Universal director, to Miss Katherine Madden, formerly a member of the Universal City scenario department, has been announced. Dawn first met Miss Madden when he directed "The Fire Cat." Edith Roberts' "Little Vehicle." Miss Madden is tiring of indoor work, joined the Dawn company and played a small role in support of the star. The marriage was a complete surprise to the film colony of which Dawn and his bride are popular members. Norman Dawn is a South American by birth and one of the most successful directors.

Bowes of Goldwyn Now on the Coast

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 15.—Edward Bowes, general manager of the Goldwyn theatre chain, has arrived in Los Angeles.

Regulatory Measure Proposed in Fresno

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

FRESNO, CAL., Feb. 15.—The city trustees have modified the ordinance proposed to regulate standing of patrons in theatre aisles and foyers. As it now stands the ordinance will not prevent the sale of tickets and the standing of patrons in the foyer. It will prevent standing in the aisles and on the exit side of the lobby.

Add George Patullo To the Lasky Staff

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 8.—George Patullo, well known short story writer and war correspondent, is the latest addition to the Lasky scenario staff. He and his wife are in Hollywood and will make their home there for the remainder of the former's current picture contract.

Lila Lee Confirms Engagement Report

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 15.—Lila Lee is engaged to be married to Captain Claude Collins of the U. S. aviation service. Miss Lee has confirmed the report, but says that the wedding will not take place for a year or longer.

Theatre Fire Is Disastrous

ST. JOHN, N. B.—Two firemen were killed and four injured in a fire which destroyed the Star theatre recently. One of the walls collapsed, burying six men under the debris. The loss is estimated at $30,000.

West Coast Publicity Hounds

A GET-TOGETHER meeting of the publicity men of the West Coast was recently held to form the Western Motion Picture Advertisers. The first meeting was attended by the following live-wire representatives: AL Wilkie, representing Cecil B. DeMille; Pete Smith, Marshall Neila; Paul Conlon, William S. Hart; Charles L. Hertzman, Universal; Malcolm Seboy, Universal; Jack Neville, Katherine MacDonald, Ray Leck, Metro; Howard Strickling, Metro; Adam Hull Shirk, Lasky; W. A. Steeve, Lasky; Robert I. Allen, Lasky, and Melvin M. Riddle, Lasky; R. S. Dobson, Louis Weber and George Loane Tucker; Barrett C. Keating, Realart; Sig Schlager, J. Parker Reed Productions; Lindsay McKenna, Betty Compson Productions; Harry Brand, Buster Keaton; John E. McCormack, Associated First National Pictures, Inc.; W. E. Keefe, Producers Film Corporation; Lawrence Weingarten, Dial Film Company; Ed. Rosenbaum, Chester Comedies; J. Asbury Jackson, Goldwyn; Jack Gault, Goldwyn; Walter Anthony, Mack Sennett, Harry D. Wilson, Sol Lesser; Ted Taylor, Tod Browning, Reginald Barker, and William D. Taylor; Bradley J. Smollen, Vitagraph; Tony Martin, press sheet and house organ publisher, and Harry Hammond Beall, Exhibitors Herald.
Simplex Cinema Company Opens New Headquarters

Walter Green Is General and District Manager—Offices at 906 S. Wabash

Complete Line of Accessories Will Be Included in Stock of Equipment Firm

The Simplex Cinema Equipment Company, distributors of Simplex projection machines and Simplex products in Illinois, Indiana and Eastern Iowa, opened its new offices and sales rooms at 906 South Wabash avenue, Chicago, this week, in the heart of the new film district.

Walter Green, formerly with the Kleine Camera Company and well known in local film circles, is the general as well as district manager of the new concern. H. E. Du Bois, at one time associated with the Mid-West Theatre Supply Company, is the store manager.

While the company will primarily devote its attention to Simplex products, it is announced that included in the stock to be carried will be a complete line of theatre equipment "of ample proportions to furnish a theatre from top to bottom."

Slogan Is Service

"The slogan of the Simplex Cinema Equipment Company is service and courtesy," said Mr. Green. "We mean to give the exhibitors in the territory which we serve a maximum of service."

In charge of our repair department will be a man who is thoroughly experienced and fully familiar with the Simplex projector—a man who received his training in the factory of the Precision Machine Company, manufacturers of the projector."

Officials of the Precision Machine Company showed keen interest in the establishment of the Chicago concern, and gave Mr. Green and his associates advantage of their experience and ideas of how a business of this kind should be conducted.

Porter in Chicago

E. S. Porter, president of the company, was in Chicago last week supervising the final touches prior to the opening. He was enthusiastic over the proposition and stated that he would call attention of his other distributors to the manner in which business is handled by the Chicago company.

One of the features of the spacious quarters which the company has leased is a modern projection room of sufficient size to comfortably seat one hundred and fifty persons. This is primarily designed for the demonstration of Simplex machines and will also be available for trade showings. It will not be completed for about two weeks.

The projection room in connection with the little theatre will be a model and the most up-to-date in the country, it is announced. It will house four Simplex machines and will in addition contain all the latest modern equipment.

Advantage to Exhibitors

"The projection room is another distinct advantage to the exhibitor," Mr. Green commented in this regard. "When trouble develops in a machine, we will try it out under actual working conditions, and this gives our repair department the opportunity to locate exactly the difficulty. After the trouble is adjusted another working test will be made so that we know that the mechanism is right before it leaves our service department."

"The buyer, too, also has the benefit of seeing the machine in operation, which is true of other equipment he may care to purchase, such as arc controls and screens. It is possible to demonstrate for him the performance of each article under the actual working conditions it...

Equipment Progress

"The projection room, the heart of the theatre, is the most neglected unit of the theatre and the most important one."

This statement was made by a projection engineer in conversation with the writer last week. He then continued citing incidents in his experience of projection rooms so indifferently constructed and located as to reduce the possibilities nearly fifty per cent, in the projection of the picture.

His talk was so interesting and so full of valuable information on projection that we have asked him to write a series of articles along the lines of his conversation.

He has our request under consideration but has not, as yet, agreed to put his thought in print. He is a man well known in the middle west and speaks with practical experience as a basis.

We hope to be able to announce the beginning of this series within a few weeks. It will be invaluable to exhibitors and operators alike.

* * *

Exhibitors generally are becoming more and more impressed with the three projection machines idea, also the two generator sets. The extra equipment is in the form of insurance. The exhibitor who projects his show this way will rarely if ever experience the unhappy sensation of returning paid admissions.

Think of new equipment—but don't just think—act!
Holway Sales Chief of Equipment Firm

Something New in the Way of Service Is Planned by the Executive

MAKES HOUSE SURVEY
Representatives of Company Will Be in Touch at All Times With the Exhibitors

B. A. Holway, who organized and was general manager and secretary of the Carolina Theatre Supply Company, has been appointed sales manager of the Fulco Sales Company, one of Chicago's newest in the way of theatre equipment houses.

While the concern is but little over ninety days of age, the man back of the project, C. H. Fulton, is well known to Chicago exhibitors, both through his connection with the United Theatre Equipment Company and also the E. E. Fulton Company of which his father, E. E. Fulton, is the executive head.

Personal Service Planned

Something new in the way of service is planned by Mr. Holway, who is at present engaged in a complete canvas of the theatres of Chicago, meeting the exhibitors personally. His plans for the future include a division of the city into zones and the assigning of a man to each territory, the size to be determined by the ability to give the best of service.

In this way representatives will be in touch with exhibitors at all times, ready and willing to aid them in their problems and local suggestions where they are wanted. At the same time, supplies handled by the company will be available to the theatre owner with a minimum of delay.

Supervise Ascher Chain

Ascher Bros.' circuit of theatres is the first to come under the supervision of these projection engineers, the appointment coming recently to supervise the installation of all equipment in the projection rooms of the chain and also inspection and care of the equipment after installation.

Contract with Hugo Reisinger for the handling of Electra Pink Label carbons in ten states has already been closed as has also Illinois territory for the Gardiner Velvet Gold Fibre Screen and the Illinois and Indiana territories for Ft. Wayne Corporation nets.

Mr. Holway has had a varied experience and is well qualified for his present position. He is a former newspaper man, wrote publicity, and advertising for the F. F. Proctor company, was representative for Metro in New York State and also represented the World Film Corporation in Buffalo. During the war period he served with the Y. M. C. A. as a director and in picture activities with headquarters in Boston. Following this he organized the theatre supply company in Columbia, S. C.

Liberty Theatre Opens In Kalispell, Montana
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

Kalispell, Mont., Feb. 15.—The Liberty, a new modern 800-seat house, has opened here. The opening marked the passing of the Orpheum, which for many years had served the amusement loving public of this city, as the Liberty was erected by Marius Anderson and R. D. McDaniel for the purpose of supplying many conveniences which they had found the Orpheum lacked.

The new theatre, while primarily intended for the presentation of motion pictures, was constructed with a view of providing adequate housing for any sort of a theatrical entertainment. It has a deep stage and full scenic equipment. It is the holder of the Associated First National pictures, Inc., sub-branching for the Kalispell territory.

The owners, Mr. McDaniel and Mr. Anderson, have a monopoly on the amusement service of Galispeil.

Mt. Clemens Firm Holds Elections of Directors

Mt. CLEMENS, MICH.—At the annual stockholders’ meeting of Macomb Theatre Company, the following directors were elected for the new year: Frank G. Kendrick, William E. Kohler, William H. Wagner, Harry M. Widrig, Jacob Malbin, John Guenther and William Miller.

Louis F. Wolff and Harry Widrig, who have made a trip of inspection of theatres in various large cities and small towns in Michigan and in Canada, gave reports on the trip. The building of the Macomb will be rushed to completion for a late spring opening.

Wallersteins Get Control Of Michigan City Houses

MICHIGAN CITY, IND.—Wallerstein Brothers, proprietors of the Starland theatre, have acquired the ownership and control of all the amusement houses here.

They recently purchased the Garden, Idledour and Dreamland theatres from Ezra Rhodes of South Bend and will take possession on February 1. M. E. Remley will return to South Bend and take charge of the string of Rhodes theatres in that city, Elkhart and Goshen.

Facts of Interest About Loew State Theatre, Cleveland
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

CLEVELAND, O., Feb. 8.—Many interesting features of Loew’s State theatre, 14th street and Euclid avenue, which has just opened, follow:

Cost—$1,016,000.

Seventeen months, eleven days in building.

Thomas W. Lamb, architect.

Seats—4,000 persons.

Six million bricks used in building, 6,000 bags of cement and fifty cars of steel.

Twenty thousand lamp bulbs used in lighting.

There are five aisles and forty-five exits.

Antiques and luxurious furnishings from all over the world adorn the lobby and lounging rooms.

Verdant marble terrazzo used in stairways and floors.

Walls covered by 3,000 yards of red brocaded velvet.

Decorations are of the Italian renaissance, the color scheme of café au lait gold, with red, blue and black.

Has largest lobby in the world.

The theatre would have to be visited to appreciate the hundreds of other features.

Nicholas Power Dies At Palm Beach, Fla.
Founder of Company Bearing His Name Was Ill Only Three Days

NEW YORK, Feb. 15.—Nicholas Power, organizer of Nicholas Power Company and head of the concern until four years ago, died in Palm Beach, Fla., February 9, of heart disease, after an illness of three days. Word of Mr. Power’s death did not reach here until late last week.

Since his retirement four years ago, Mr. Power took no part in the management of the affairs of the company. The business is in the hands of Edward Earl, who succeeded Mr. Power as its head.

Mr. Power was a member of St. John’s Lodge No. 1, F. and A. M., a life member of Aurora Grata Consistory and of Kismet Temple, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. He was 68 years old, and is survived by his widow, Mrs. Rose William Power, and two daughters, Mrs. Lillian Brown and Mrs. Florence Ott.

Murderer of Mills Pays Death Penalty
Edward Brislane Executed for Crime Committed Last Summer

Edward Brislane, who last summer shot and killed William Mills, manager of the Crawford theater, was hanged in the Cook county jail, February 11. A determined effort on the part of relatives to stay the execution failed. Governor Small declining to interfere.

Murder Without Provocation

The murder was committed during an attempted holdup. Brislane, according to his confession, had been watching the theater for several nights, noting that the woman cashier pulled down the curtain of the box office and counted the money about 9 o'clock in the evening. He said that he expected little trouble robbing her. When he opened the box office door and found Mills assisting the cashier, he was taken by surprise and, panic stricken, fired the fatal bullet.

Case Is Pathetic One

The case aroused unusual interest among theatre men on account of the fact that Mrs. Mills was left without sufficient means to support herself. Under the direction of the Allied Amusements Association fund, were raised to purchase a home for her.

Celebrated Players in Non-Theatrical Field

Celebrated Players has created a non-theatrical educational department in direct charge of Henry C. Friedman. The various of subjects released by Celebrated peculiarly fits them to serve this field.

The marketing of the New Zenith Portable Projector for use in private homes, schools, lodges, churches and various other institutions of learning is also already under way.

“Servant in the House” Will Show at Barbee’s

Smith of Celebrated announces the closing of a contract for his company with Barbee’s Loop Theatre for the first of the Walgreen special, a Chas. Rann Kennedy story, “The Servant in the House,” produced under the personal direction of H. O. Davis. It will open the week of March 6.

Vandals Damage Organ In New Chicago House

Vandals did a great deal of damage to the new $20,000 pipe organ installed in the Senate motion picture theatre, Madison street and Kedzie avenue, a week before the opening. They ripped out the wires and did other damage.

Chicago Press Club Will Assist Drive For Crippled Poor

Chicago’s motion picture press club pledged its support to Mrs. Marshall Field and Major Fred McLaughlin in their drive for funds for crippled poor children, at a meeting held February 11 at which Mrs. Field, Major McLaughlin and Herman Black, publisher of the Evening American, were honor guests.

Dr. W. H. LeMar M. Mason, Ralph T. Kettering, A. L. Parker and Harry Rice were appointed on the committee to assist in the drive. The first step will be the making of trailers for use in theatres. These will be donated by Witterton R. Rothacker of the Rothacker Film Makers. The operation of the press club was pledged by Daniel Roche, president. Sam Atkinson pledged the assistance of the A. A. A.

Mr. Black made an interesting talk of his newspaper’s handling of motion picture news.

“We use it because it is news,” he said. “The people want it.”

New Chicago Exchange To Be Opened Early in March on Wabash Ave.

Another new exchange will soon be added to Chicago’s already long list of independent film marts. The Wabash Film Exchange will early in March be established and ready for business at the corner of Eighth and Wabash avenue.

The new exchange, which will be located on the third floor, 804 South Wabash avenue, will be fully equipped to serve exhibitors with a complete line of new and re-issued one and two reel comedies, two reel Western productions and five and six reel special features of society, Western and comedy drama types.

The Wabash Film Exchange will specialize in popular priced productions and will make this their big talking point.

The personnel and officers of the newly formed exchange will be made public as soon as arrangements have been completed for the opening of the new offices.

Telser Sales Manager For Favorite Players

Art Telser, former sales representative for the Favorite Players Film Corporation, has been appointed sales manager by I. Van Ronkel, dean of the Chicago exchange men, who regards his latest protege as one of the most promising young men in the city. Telser won his promotion after less than three months as salesman.

“The Melody of Flowers,” one of Celebrated’s Prizma master pictures, is being shown at both the Riviera and Tivoli theatres this week.

Lease Property for New Loop Playhouse

Katz and Ortenstein Will Erect Modern Theatre in Adams Street

Another motion picture theatre is to be added to the list of playhouses in Chicago’s loop district.

Milton Katz and Harry M. Ortenstein have leased the property at 15-20 East Adams, a former Union restaurant, and are erecting a modern theatre with the help of a famous bar. The house will be small but beautifully appointed. The owners operate several theatres on the south side.

Big Houses Near Completion

Both of the large houses being erected in the loop by Balaban and Katz, and Ascher Brothers are nearing completion. Jones, Linick and Schaefer obtained property several months ago for the erection of a new theatre.

Announcement was made one week ago that the famed Rodman’s Union restaurant, would erect a motion picture theatre at 10-12 South Clark street at a cost of $75,000. It will seat 200 people.

The Rose, Alcazar and Boston theatres, recently purchased by Jones, Linick and Schaefer have already been re-decorated, and have taken on a new appearance.

New South Side Theatre

The National Theatre company have purchased property on Cottage Grove avenue near Seventy-fifth street on which a large motion picture theatre is to be built. The new theatre will be the property of the Chicago Film Co.

“Hidden Light” Given Premiere at Pantheon

“Hidden Light,” the new feature being distributed in the Chicago film district by Gollos Enterprises, will be given its Chicago premiere at the Pantheon theatre, February 20.

The production has been booked at the Windsor, the Bijou, the Alcazar and the Chicago theatres.

“The Devil” Is Shown At Noonday Luncheon

“The Devil,” Pathe’s new feature production starring George Arliss, was given a press screening in the Pathe projection room February 14 following a luncheon to press representatives at the Auditorium Hotel at which W. A. Aschman, Chicago manager for Pathe, acted as host.

E. S. Barbour, who has been with Selznick forces for the past year, has joined the Gollos Enterprises as salesman. He will cover the south side.
SHOTS AND MISSES

By Mac

We okay the remarks of Exhibitor P. W. McCulligan, Dreamland theatre, Pekin, Ill. Several days ago Representative Frankman of the Unity Photoplays dropped in on the Pekin magnate and after taking his order for a few of Unity’s best offerings, quizzed “Frack” with regard to Manager Frank Flaherty. Claimed he has been dealing with the handsome Celt for the last decade or so, but never had the pleasure of a personal meeting. After giving a kodak shot of Flaherty’s the once over, tells “Frack”: “Seems to be a good ‘liver’ and one of the best lookers I have ever seen in the film business.”

Ben Edelman, well known “vet” about the Central states, is now covering Illinois for the Selected Films, Inc., lining up the downstate exhibitors with the “The Son of Tarzan” serial which this exchange is offering with considerable success throughout this territory.

M. J. Mintz, general sales director for the Synchronized Scenario Music Company left February 10 on route for the Capitol City and was greeting the old guard about 42d street and Broadway on or about Lincoln’s Birthday. On the way East, M. J. expected to drop off at a few of the big cities along the trail giving the live exhibitors a real opportunity “for better music.”

Milt Simon, president Selected Films exchange, who has been traveling the territory, arrived home, reporting that the Harry Grampp chain of theaters closed on the “Tarzan” serial. Milt is so elated over this close that he has promised to take the “Century” Eastward some day next week and do a little shopping in little of New Yawk.

George Levy has returned to the Unity Photoplays and is covering the Chicago theatres. E. P. Cassave, a newcomer, represents this company in the northern Illinois field.

That’s all right, Louis Frank has promised us he is leaving for New York very shortly, so tell the boys to keep their eyes on the incoming Chi. trains and you might sell him some fillums for Illinois.

Joseph M. Goldstein of the Canyon Pictures Corporation spent considerable time with the local film fraternity en route to Indianapolis and other points West and Northwest.

A. Teitel, film renovator par excellence, registers another 100 per cent result last week. Hector Fuller of David Wark Griffith, Inc., turned their cinema masterpiece, “Way Down East,” over to Abe for attention and admit the results were masterful. Thata boy, Abe, get ‘em all!

L. A. Schiff tells us he put the Ford and a quart bottle of “prohibition” in the garage the other night upon completing his calls for the evening and awoke the next morn to discover both gone. No sympathy at all—serves you right. Fords are being turned out in gross lots, but the OTHER—oh-oh, each day it becomes more of a treasure. Nix on the police. The lucky one who purloined it should have his name engraved upon the walls of fame as an immortal.

So far we have been unable to pick the leader for record sales on “Vanishing Trails,” the latest Celebrated serial release, for G. H. Moore, Dave Dubin and Johnny Mednikow agree they are taking them all on the dotted line.

Henry Friedman of the Celebrated Players is spending a brief stay with Louis Goulden at Indianapolis, meeting the Hoosier exhibitors and telling the boys what a gem the new projector is.

Irving Mandel of the Security Pictures is now making arrangements to give the local exhibitors ample opportunity to book feature releases on new subjects and will announce the plans in detail at a later date. They will continue the re-issue subjects as heretofore.

Henry C. Friedman is touring Indiana in the interests of Celebrated’s new educational department. He will be gone about three weeks.

Hunt Stromberg and Horace Rogers, his assistant, who have been assisting in putting over “Lying Lips” at Barbee’s Loop theatre, left Tuesday, February 15, for New York.
Jack Grauman Joins Vandawalker
As Official of Doll Van Company
Former Metro Manager Will Make Trip to Coast in Interest of Corporation—Policy of Expansion Will Continue

Jacob S. (Jack) Grauman, well known to exhibitors and all branches of the industry in the Chicago and Milwaukee territories, has affiliated with Doll Van Film Corporation, it was announced this week by D. M. Vandawalker, president of the company. He will be vice-president and treasurer.

The most recent venture of Mr. Grauman, for more than a year manager of Metro’s Chicago office, previous to which he represented that company in Milwaukee, was his association with Saxe Brothers in the purchase and sale of the Boston, Rose and Alcazar theatres in Chicago’s loop district.

To Make Coast Trip
His first activity will be a trip to the West Coast in the interests of the company, where he will make a survey of conditions in the independent production field with a view toward obtaining additional features for distribution in the Illinois and Wisconsin territory. He will be gone about one month.

"With Mr. Grauman coming into the firm," said Mr. Vandawalker, "our policy of expansion will continue as rapidly as consistent with good business. Mr. Grau-man has the friendship and confidence of the exhibitors in this territory and I am greatly pleased with the affiliation."

Exhibitors Are Interested
At the same time it was announced that a number of prominent exhibitors in Chicago and Milwaukee had become interested in the company and it is understood that this total will be increased in the near future.

The Milwaukee exchange, which will be opened by the company early in March will be under the management of
L. H. Guhl, now with Metro in the Wis-cconsin city. It will be located at 408
Toy building. Frank Kamp, at present Wisconsin road man for Metro, will join the Doll Van force at the same time.

Louise Lovely’s Coming
Feature Has N. Y. Locale

The welcome by film fans for productions that have their entire locale laid in New York City, as in the case of "While
New York Sleeps," has led William Fox to select for Louise Lovely's next starring vehicle a story written by George William Hill and called "While the Devil Laughs," in which the entire action transpires in the metropolis.

The story of the feature concerns chiefly the efforts of a girl of the East side slums to rise above the level of her surroundings and emancipate herself and her impoverished family from the fetters with which an unkind fate has enchained them. This is made the basis of a tale of New York, with its gaudy cabarets, drac-ary tenements and picturesque Man-hattanese.

Pathé Reports Big Demand
For "The Devil" in N. Y.

New York is setting the pace for all other Pathé exchanges in bookings on the Associated Exhibitors’ celebrated production, "The Devil," starring George Arliss.

Following the successful pre-issue showings at the Strand, New York, and the Strand, Brooklyn, other leading metropolitan theatres have billed the production, and Pathe predicts that "The Devil" will be rated one of the most successful pictures ever exhibited in the New York territory.

Mack Sennett's successor to "Mickey," "A SMALL TOWN IDOL."

Maurice Tourneur's greatest achievement, "THE LAST OF THE MOHICANS."

All three came through one organization—Associated Producers, Inc. All three established standards that all others will find it hard to follow or excel.

THE SPICE OF THE PROGRAM
BEAUTY

The scenic pictures made under the direction of Robert C. Bruce are well named the "Scenics Beautiful." They entertain any audience, anywhere—yet they are to the art of motion pictures what the canvases of Rembrandt, Velasquez or Whistler are to the art of painting.

PRE-EMINENCE

For years, Robert C. Bruce pictures have been pre-eminent in the scenic field because they actually tell a story while depicting nature in her most beautiful moods. They entertain, yet they are art.

REGULARITY

Robert C. Bruce is consistent in the quality of his product—produces "Scenics Beautiful" with unparalleled regularity.

Robert C. Bruce's consistency caused the editor of the Exhibitor's Herald to write, "The most remarkable thing about Robert C. Bruce's Scenics, next to their quality, is their regularity of release."

Educational has always released the Robert C. Bruce "Scenics Beautiful."

Breaking All Records

MACK SENNETT'S "A Small Town Idol" is pre-eminently the greatest comedy drama and the biggest box-office success ever produced by the screen's ablest creator of laughter and happiness. First run exhibitors are the authors of this statement. What a Producer and his agents think of a picture makes little difference; what the box-office reflects means everything.

Now in its fourth week of tremendous patronage at the Mission Theatre, Los Angeles. Broke all records at Stillwell's Casino, Spokane. Ready to begin its engagement of two weeks or longer at the Strand, San Francisco. Sought for extended runs by big showmen everywhere who proclaim it as "bigger than 'Mickey.'"

MACK SENNETT in "A Small Town Idol" has delivered everything he promised in advance to the nation's exhibitors. "A Small Town Idol" has comedy in abundance; it has thrills and action; it has love and romance; it is a radical departure from all previous Sennett production standards and newspaper critics hail it everywhere as his achievement supreme.

"Lying Lips," the latest Thomas H. Ince release, submitted for the first time for approval of a New Bern audience, is one of the most idealistic conceptions of screen dramatization it has ever been our good fortune to witness.

The picture teaches the great lesson of the futility of wealth as the goal of human desire, and the desirability of the simple life in the achievement of happiness. But the beauty of the picture itself, the lavishness displayed in its construction, almost equals the work of the very fine artists chosen to portray the character roles. There is not a false note in the production anywhere. All these things are presented with a telling effect and a fine regard for the beautification of the ensemble.

If all the pictures made were as fine as "Lying Lips," as true to life, as beautifully conceived and as artistically constructed, there would be no censorship of pictures little need for a censorship of pictures before they are made.

We predict that "Lying Lips" will delight many thousands throughout the length and breadth of the land as it delighted two discriminating audiences at the Masonic last night. To our way of thinking it is the best picture since "The Birth of a Nation."

The exclusive publication in recent issues of Exhibitors Herald of the formation of a long run theatre circuit in principal cities throughout the country, and the connection of A. H. The Price of Dissension

By MARTIN J. QUIGLEY

The complacency of many people in this industry must be a source of perennial wonderment to the outside public who stand on the sidelines and look us over. We coyly admit we are one of the great industries of America yet we turn a side to the public which is covered with petty bickerings, suggestive of back-alley quarrels. We point to the efficacy of the motion picture as an influence upon public thought yet everywhere throughout the country agitators with nothing to commend them except loud voices are driving us into positions in which we are compelled to defend the very right of exhibiting pictures. We claim, and rightly so, that the motion picture is more essential to the happiness of the people of the nation than the public press, yet we enjoy none of the privileges and prerogatives of the press.

Without fear of being charged with rash conclusions, we remark that there appears to be something wrong!

Something is wrong, unequivocally so, and what's wrong cannot all be charged up to the youth of the industry and the manifold difficulties with which it must contend.

This industry today presents a graphic and most disturbing example of a house divided against itself. If one would listen to the emphatically voiced opinions of certain persons in the industry it would appear that nothing short of a revolution, fought out in the streets with rifles and pistols, would ever settle the internal disagreements of the industry. Again it would appear, on advice from the same sources, that a part of the personnel of the industry had effected a corner on disloyalty, misrepresentation, intrigue and dishonesty.

As a plain matter of fact the danger or the relief of the industry does not depend upon the outcome of the various internal controversies now raging. These will be solved, some sooner and later, but they will be solved and equitably so. The real danger lies not in the controversies but in the condition of disorganization that has grown out of the bitter feelings that have been engendered by the controversies. It is a case of making a surgical operation successful in the eyes of the surgeon even if it must be done at the cost of the patient's life.

We are not unmindful of the splendid efforts of Sydney S. Cohen and his associates on behalf of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America to effect an adjustment of certain conspicuous grievances held by the exhibitors of America. There is, for example, the matter of a uniform, equitable rental contract. In this case, for instance, we know that a settlement was agreed upon by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. It is apparent that the National Association has delayed putting into effect this agreed settlement, perhaps for good reason. But, at any rate, there is no proof that it has defaulted entirely on its agreement.

However, we submit that even a longer delay on the adjustment of this grievance, which must necessarily one day be adjusted because of the obvious equity to all concerned, is not as harmful as certain of the possible consequences that doubtless would issue out of protracted internal dissension within the industry.

On the other hand, whatever may be the goal of achievement of the National Association in building up its exhibitors' division it must be realized that the rights of the presently organized exhibitor, as expressed in the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, must be safeguarded or else no eventual result could compensate for the animosity that would be engendered in the minds of the members of that organization, bringing down a heavy penalty to the industry as a whole.

Never before in this industry has there been greater need of unselfish leadership and an effective retirement to oblivion of grandstand methods.

We urge the leaders who are now charged with the responsibilities of high office to permit nothing to blot out their vision of those things which stand for the greater good of the whole industry and to be mindful of the perils that will be encountered if this industry attempts to continue on its disorganized way.
Two notable temples of the art are now open to the public in Chicago. On the South Side there is Balaban and Katz’ “Tivoli” and in the heart of the great metropolitan district on the West Side there is Lubliner and Trinz’ “Senate.” Both of these theaters are among the finest that have yet been erected in Chicago or elsewhere and they stand out as a testimonial to the enterprise of Balaban and Katz and Lubliner and Trinz and also as an eloquent tribute to the progress and permanence of the motion picture.

It is exceedingly regrettable that the individual exhibitor in most instances has not taken the trouble to inform himself on the subject of censorship. Usually the first active interest manifested by the average exhibitor in this subject is when a long-existing agitation in his community begins to materialize into action. And frequently even in such instances it is difficult to get the individual exhibitor to take a part which would be consistent with the importance of the question to his interests. In Chicago, for example, no prominent exhibitor whose words would receive a careful hearing has seen fit to voice a protest against the measure now pending.

The public in Chicago must be astounded with the impression given by newspaper articles concerning the internal warfare among exhibitors. The state’s attorney in investigating bombing outrages has been compelled to listen to charges that these are really due to the activities of rival organizations. All of this must tend to convince the official that it is a family wrangle and to discourage him in his efforts to protect the exhibitor who has been victimized. If we must have quarrels of this kind they ought at least be conducted quietly and not in the public prints.

The list of valid pretentious productions now before the trade is augmented by the appearance of Metro’s, “The Four Horsemen.” That the ambitious effort to translate Ibanez’ story to the screen has been done well and adequately will be the cause of general rejoicing throughout the industry. Every really big picture is an asset to the industry as a whole.

Re-Takes
J. R. M.

See where they are compelling people to go to shows in Russia. The Soviet government has decreed that a fine is to be inflicted on all exhibitors who refuse official invitation, order to go to the theatre. And we call Russia slow!

Things We’ve Noticed
That photos and stories marked “exclusive” always appear in all the trade papers simultaneously.

“Blind Wives in Demand”—Headline. We suppose the good looking husbands are demanding them.

And Everybody Laughed
A member of the Chicago censorship commission jumped to his feet and denounced film advertising at the last hearing. He said he was attracted to a theatre by a poster showing a semi-nude woman, but on going in he found nothing like it in the film.

Kipling Is Famous
Randy Lewis of the Pathe publicity staff, who paused briefly between trains, last week said Rudyard Kipling had never attended a “show,” to which makes Kipling famous for another reason besides being a great author.

The esteemed Trade Review reprints a page of motion picture advertisements under the caption “How the Chicago Tribune Cooperates with Its Motion Picture Theatre Advertisers.” Yes, they do. At so much per line, paid in advance.

The same Chicago paper printed an account of the opening of a $2,000,000 picture theatre, the Tivoli, giving it just six lines.

Kidding the Public
There was a lot of grief among picture fans in Chicago last week when a list of the so-called stars was printed in the paper that conducted the contest. Stars that are dead, and others that no one ever heard of, were picked by the paper to puzzle the contestants. And they sure did puzzle the fans.

Those Shoes Again
The film industry was shaken to its depths last week when Carlyle Robison announced that Charlie Chaplin had insured his famous size 14 shoes for $20,000. The story didn’t mention the insurance company nor the amount of premium, but those are minor details.

Harold Lloyd’s next comedy is “Now or Never,” which, like all the film salesmen a fine line to hand the exhibitor. They can take it is “now or never.”

The Astute Reporter
J. Stuart Blackton just before sailing for Europe told this one on himself. He was accosted by a newspaper reporter in Shimbol, England following the showing of “Passersby,” and the following conversation took place:

“I am a newspaper man, I don’t write on the cinema and I don’t like motion pictures, but I do think you have a very creditable picture. I say, old chap, it is really remarkable you have been made such a good picture—the first time, you know. It isn’t half bad for a first attempt.”

Vol. XII March 5, 1921 No. 19
Censorship Bill In N. Y. Legislature Causes No Alarm
(From Staff Correspondent)

ALBANY, N. Y., Feb. 22.—A bill for the creation of a censor board to license motion pictures shown in the state has been introduced by Assemblyman Clayton of Kings county. Under its provisions three censors would be appointed by the governor for five-year terms at salaries of $3,000 a year each. Films not licensed could be shown, but a license fee of $3 is fixed for each 500 feet.

NEW YORK, Feb. 22.—The bill referred to in the foregoing dispatch has been referred to the ways and means committee, which will hold a hearing at an early date. No alarm is felt here over the introduction of the bill, as a similar measure has been introduced practically every year only to be defeated.

Both the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry will be represented at the hearing.

Iowa Measure Would Punish Players for “Crimes” on Screen
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

DES MOINES, Feb. 22.—Lawyers in the state senate agree that it would stifle the censorship measure in the legislature would require not only prosecution of persons taking parts in such crimes, but also of the actors who participate in the scenes which the bill would prohibit. As a result, there would bar exhibition of pictures showing robbery, burglary, blackmail and sex crime. Any act preparatory to—these crimes also would be prohibited.

“If we will just increase the penalty to make violation of the proposed law a felony,” one senator suggested, “this will give us extradition power over the screen villains, Iowa courts might deport persons from the East and West Coast studios for a while.”

Woods Buys Site for Boston House
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

BOSTON, MASS., Feb. 22.—A. H. Woods, in conjunction with Robert McCormick of Chicago, has bought a site here adjoining the Shubert theatre in Tremont street, on which he will build a theatre to form a link in the chain of 42 motion picture theatres.

Nebraska Senate Asks for Federal Censorship
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

LINCOLN, NEB., Feb. 22.—A resolution asking congress to adopt federal censorship passed the senate here, 28 to 0. The present statute book is dead of the censorship in this state. It is possible, however, that a misdemeanor measure will be adopted.

NEW YORK, Feb. 29.—Charles Edwards, well known character actor, is at the Holy Family hospital, Brooklyn, suffering temporary blindness due to studio lights.

Men and Women of Studios Band to Fight “Reformers”

William D. Taylor Heads Movement to Enlist Producing Branch of Industry in Fight on Censorship and Blue Law Legislation

(Los Angeles, Feb. 22.—For the first time in the history of the motion picture industry, men and women in all lines of the producing branch are mobilizing to assist distributors and exhibitors in combating censorship, blue laws and other unfriendly legislation.

William D. Taylor, director of the Motion Picture Directors Association, has taken the lead. For assistance, he has appealed to the Motion Picture Directors Association, Motion Picture Art Directors Association, Assistant Directors Association, American Society of Cinematographers, Society of Illuminating Engineers, Screen Writers Guild of the Authors League, Western Motion Picture Advertisers, Photoplayers Equity Association, and the Girls’ Studio club as well as film exchange managers, exhibitors, and motion picture operators on the west coast.

Urges Forgetting of Petty Differences

“It is regrettable to note at this time of peril that some factions are quarreling with each other at a time when paid reformers with millions of dollars behind them are preparing to come over the top from the opposite trenches,” says Mr. Taylor in his appeal, “it is imperative that any petty differences be forgotten until the last paid reformer is definitively defeated in his attempted assault on the screen.

The call reads:

The necessity of immediate and united action on the part of the producing picture industry to defend itself against legislation menacing of censorship and so-called “blue laws” is recognized by every member of the industry.

Cities Trade Paper Appeal

Our motion picture trade publications are urging united and selfless action of everyone connected with producing, distributing and exhibiting of motion pictures to defend this great industry against those who would weaken and destroy it.

It is regrettable to note at this time of peril that some factions are quarreling with each other at a time when paid reformers, with millions of dollars behind them, are preparing to come over the top from the opposite trenches. It is imperative that any petty differences be forgotten until the paid reformers are definitely defeated in his attempted assault on the screen.

Wants Something Started

With the ambition simply to see “something started” and not from any desire to attempt to dictate or run the affairs of the industry, the Motion Picture Directors Association urges the immediate organization of a central committee of western motion picture organizations, the purpose of which is to unite every phase of motion picture production, distribution and exhibition, for the purpose of protecting ourselves from all enemies, and of furthering our common interests. It is suggested that this committee be composed of one representative from every existing recognized association whose vital interest is the welfare of motion pictures.

Your organization is urged to name an official representative, who will meet with one representative of each of other organizations at the Los Angeles Athletic Club, Monday, February 29, at 5:30 p. m., to perfect and form such a central committee.

Dodie Notson will meet me at Lux sky studio, as soon as possible, the result of your action on this matter.

Weekly Gross Receipts For “Way Down East” Are Totaling $176,000

NEW YORK, Feb. 22.—The sixteen-week run of “Way Down East” shows now playing in different metropolitan centres throughout the country, are drawing an average gross business of $176,000 a week, according to the D. W. Griffith offices.

At the Forty-fourth Street theatre, here, the picture is in its twenty-sixth week, where it continues to keep above the $16,000 weekly mark. The Griffith offices expect the picture to run here for a year.

Recent openings at Cincinnati and Cleveland have been as successful as elsewhere. The picture is playing for four weeks at the Lyric, Cincinnati, with an option of four more, and for ten and possibly twelve weeks at the Enclad, Cleveland.

Industry's Leaders to Attend "Naked Truth" Dinner in N. Y.

Great Array of Talent Will Be Assembled to Furnish Entertainment for Affair to Be Given at Biltmore Hotel by A. M. P. A.

Completion of plans for the Associated Motion Picture Advertiser's "Naked Truth" dinner, to be held at the Biltmore Hotel, March 4, shows a list of notable guests and the most brilliant array of entertainment talent ever assembled in one room for a motion picture function.

"The Naked Truth" dinner, which has been the subject of constant planning during the last three months, promises to eclipse any function ever offered in the motion picture industry, and will be offered to members and guests as a seven reel of super special merit, published on an exclusive basis to franchise holders consisting of members of the A. M. P. A.

When Director Paul Lazarus, president of the association, takes his place at the head of the table to initiate proceedings for the dinner he will do so as the result of work by a committee which has exerted every effort to make the first of these annual "Naked Truth" dinners an affair that will be formal and still unique in entertainment value and in bringing together executives and leaders of the industry with the advertising and publicity men.

Among the invited guests who have signified their intention of attending the dinner are: Adolph Zukor, president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; J. D. Williams, general manager of First National; H. Schwalbe of First National; Hiram Abrams of United Artists; Percy Waters, president of Triangle; Gabriel Hess of Goldwyn; Lewis J. Selznick, president of Selznick, William Fox, president of Fox; Paul Brunet, president of Pathe, and A. H. Hansen, president of Urban Motion Picture Industries, Inc.

For the entertainment end of the program, which is under the direction of Victor Shapiro, a galaxy of talent has been assembled from the A. M. P. A. membership. Headlining the bill will be "The Big Five," with Herb Crooker. "The Big Five" consists of Jerome Beatty, C. L. Yearsley, Paul Gilieck, P. A. Parsons and Harry Reichenbach.

Father Time will dominate the sketch in a scintillating series of episodes introducing the Cave Man, the Roman, the Bell Man, the Showman and Just Man.

"The Newer Idea" will be a one reel feature in itself presented by Nat Rothstein, Victor Shapiro, Joe Brady and Arthur Brillant in which press agents may meet an introduction to their favorite advertise and overburdened phrases. Other sketches whose services have been enlisted so far for the presentation of stunts on the program include: Paul Lazarus, Hal Fylie, Paul Sarazan, J. Irving, George Mitchell of M. Botsford, Maurie Myers, Sam D. Palmer, George Landy, Al Feinman and Walter F. Eberman.

A pageant which will deal with blue laws, censorship and other tribulations incidental to the industry will be a feature of the evening.

Tom Wiley, in charge of arrangements, has complete control of the tickets for "The Naked Truth," dinner admission to which will be limited by the seating capacity of the private dining room.

L. A. Apollo Latest Lesser Acquisition

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 22.—The new Apollo theatre in Hollywood boulevard is the latest playhouse to open under the banner of Gores, Ramish and Lesser. Elaborately equipped, the new Apollo is one of the largest neighborhood houses here. The opening was held this week. The house will be under the supervision of J. M. Young, Leslie Swope and F. A. Grant who operate Hollywood Theatres, Inc., one of the corporations recently merged into West Coast Theatres, Inc. With the new Apollo, their holdings are increased to forty-one theatres.

Son Stars in Picture For Laemmle Library

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

Schedule Conventions
For March and April Pennsylvania, West Virginia and New York Exhibitors to Hold Meetings
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)
NEW YORK, Feb. 22.—Three state exhibitor conventions thus far are scheduled for March and April, according to an announcement from the headquarters of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. Pennsylvania theatre men will meet at the Penn Harris hotel in Harrisburg on March 8 and 9. The executive committee members from Pennsylvania—Henry d. n. S. Evans—are in charge of preparations.

In March 14 and 15 the West Virginia exhibitors will convene at a place yet to be announced.

The Exhibitors’ League of the state of New York will meet at Rochester on April 4 and 5, Irvin M. Salyards, chairman of the Rochester local organization, will make reservations for those desiring to attend.

Officials of the state league expect approximately 100 per cent representation at the convention. The membership has had a rapid growth since the last meeting at Utica.

Censor and Sunday Closing
Measures Killed in Missouri
Reformers Declare They Will Take Their Fight for Passage to the Floor of the House—Vote in Committee Is Unanimous
(From Staff Correspondent)

ST. LOUIS, MO., Feb. 22.—The Missouri state house committee on criminal jurisprudence has killed the proposed bills, the enactment of which would have created a state board of censors to control Sunday amusements. Efforts will be made by the proponents of these bills to obtain passage in the house over the unfavorable committee report. The possibility of such successful action is negligible in view of the fact that no bill which has ever been killed by the committee has succeeded in passing the legislative body.

Exclusive information afforded the representative of EXHIBITORS HERALD from an authentic source disclosed the fact that the committee unanimously voted down the suggestions both for Sunday closing and rigid censorship.

Committee Reflects Sentiment of Legislature

The members of the committee, it was stated, were thoroughly opposed to the prepositions and reflected the general sentiment of the entire legislature. With such condition existing, it is next to impossible for the blue lawists to put into effect their bills for at least another four years when the majority of the legislators are replaced or reelected.

St. Louis and Kansas City men and women who have been in Jefferson City fighting for the censorship and closing bills made emphatic declarations of their intention to carry the bills to the floor of the house. Representatives of the Committee of Fifty had filed with the committee on criminal jurisprudence petitions signed by 40,000 Missourians demanding censorship.

Hearings Are Closed

Hearing on the Chaney bill to bar Sunday amusements aimed chiefly at Sunday motion picture exhibitors has closed. David Reiter, secretary of the Lord’s Day Alliance of St. Louis, headed the delegation which appeared to urge the approval of the measure. The bill was introduced in the senate by Senator Seneker and was killed in the senate committee.

Reiter said that there were only twenty to twenty-five towns in Missouri where motion pictures were shown on Sunday, and declared that more than 200,000 persons in 100 cities of the state were represented by letters which he filed with the committee demanding that the shows be closed on the Sabbath.

Film Exported Would Circle Globe Twice

Tremendous Figures Illustrate Growth of Industry

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 22.—Motion picture films sent out of the United States in 1920 aggregated 47,000 miles in length or nearly enough to extend twice around the globe at the equator, and incoming films were nearly half as much in length.

These tremendous figures, says a statement by the National City Bank of New York, illustrate the bigness and constant growth of the motion picture industry of the world and especially of the United States, which is by far the largest world's largest exporter of films both exposed and unexposed.

The increase of exportation of exposed films has been great in recent years, the total quantity of exposed motion picture films exported from the United States having grown from 32,000,000 feet in 1913 to 73,000,000 feet in 1915, 164,000,000 in 1916, 153,000,000 in 1919, and 175,000,000 in 1920.

The exportation of unexposed films has dropped from 114,000,000 in 1914 and 126,000,000 in 1915 to less than 65,000,000 feet in 1920.

The exports of exposed films to France in 1920 were in round terms 25,000,000 feet as against 9,000,000 in 1919 and only a little over 1,000,000 in 1918; to the United Kingdom the quantity exported in 1920 was more than 30,000,000 feet as against less than 15,000,000 in 1918; to Canada 17,000,000 feet in the eleven months ending with November, 1920, as against 12,000,000 feet in the same months of the preceding year; to Argentina 10,000,000 feet against 7,-

Amusement Parks to Aid N. A. M. P. I. in Fight on Blue Laws

The National Association of Amusement Parks in cooperation recently in Chicago passed resolutions endorsing the fight of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry on the blue laws and voted to give the N. A. M. P. I. all possible assistance, actively and financially.

The action followed an address by Sam Atkinson, business agent of the Allied Amusements Association of Chicago and a member of the N. A. M. P. I. Committee.

Present at the session were amusement park owners from every state in the United States as well as Canada, Great Britain and Ireland.

Fox Film in Sixth Month on Broadway

"Now in its sixth month on Broadway!"

This is the interesting announcement issued by Fox Film Corporation in connection with the run on Broadway of his feature production, "Over the Hill."

The Fox announcement says:
"Not since James A. Herne swept the American theatregoers off their feet in a flood of emotion with his celebrated play, 'Shore Acres,' has anything been so overwhelming the intense interest being registered by the public today in 'Over the Hill."

"Since Herne's day the high spots of New York theatrical attendance have certainly not been held by plays that catered solely to the tenderest of emotions. There have been a few exceptions, it is true. In the main, however, one has but to glance casually over the list of plays and the theatrical attractions of any day to become convinced that plays which find their chief appeal in tugging at the public's heartstrings will, so far as New York City is concerned, be found well down toward the bottom of the list."

"This seeming coldness of the New Yorker for plays that were intended to impress him deeply has resulted in a feeling—shared by the dramatist and the producer—that perhaps it was well to let the New Yorker's heart alone and simply give him something light and airy upon which to feast his eyes recently in "Over the Hill" proved the fallacy of this as a policy. The thousands upon thousands who have seen this picture and immediately constituted themselves individual press agents for it, substantiate the claim that the New Yorker's heart is as sound and his emotions just as easily reached as those of any class of people on earth. That is why, in the case of 'Over the Hill,' the extraordinarily extravagant theatrical productions ever seen on Broadway, 'Over the Hill,' with its rag carpets, almshouse, poorly dressed kids and little old mother is still holding its own in its sixth month of continuous presentation."
Dear Mr. Lazarus:

The practice of writing open letters to you on the subject of trade paper circulations, audits and such, now being in vogue, I herewith submit my contribution:

The quality or kind of circulation in this field is hardly of less importance than the quantity.

EXHIBITORS HERALD, in the upbuilding of its subscription lists, has pursued a selective policy which has given this publication a class circulation in the finest definition of the term.

With a method never previously or since duplicated in this industry, EXHIBITORS HERALD, at a considerable expense, has sent personal representatives of the publisher into every territory, where exhibitors were met face to face and their subscriptions solicited and received.

Our circulation efforts have been directed toward but one goal: Subscriptions from the buying power of the industry—the exhibitor. With this unvarying policy of selection we have been able to create a circulation which goes direct to the actual buyer of films and theatre equipment, eliminating the manifest circulation wastes involved in reaching persons identified with incidental operations of the industry.

As to quantity, the figures now in the hands of your members speak for themselves.

These figures are susceptible to verification at any time upon any plan recommended or requested by your association.

Sincerely yours,

(Signed) Martin J. Quigley, Publisher

Postscript: In connection with claims that any contemporary alone covers the field, and that any contemporary has twice the theatre circulation of this publication, I refer you to distribution statistics which we have previously supplied your members.

Associated Exhibitors, Inc. Is Completely Reorganized

Samuel Harding of Kansas City Is President With Arthur Kane Chairman of Directors—Activities Will Be Greatly Extended

(From Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, Feb. 22.—Associated Exhibitors, Inc. has been completely reorganized. The new company, incorporated in Delaware, will begin business on March 1.

Samuel Harding, of the Liberty Theatre, Kansas City, is president of the new organization. Arthur S. Kane, president of Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation, is chairman of the board of directors. Paul Gustonovic, of the Strand, Orpheum and other houses in Cleveland, is vice-president.

Brunet Also Is Member of Board

On the board of directors in addition to Mr. Kane are Paul Brunet, president of Pathe Exchange, Inc.; Elmer R. Pearson, director of exchanges for Pathe, and John C. Ragland, vice-president and general manager of Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation.

Under the reorganization a policy of broader activity has been adopted. The preferred capital stock is $1,000,000. All of the assets of Associated Exhibitors, Inc., of New York, with a preferred capital stock of $800,000, have been taken over. Under the terms of a contract signed with Pathe, Associated Exhibitors takes over the Pathe feature sales force which comprises sixty-seven men distributed among thirty-five exchanges.

Pathe Hands Shipping

The handling and shipping of prints, the advertising and collection, in fact, the operation of virtually all features of the business with the exception of the actual selling will be done by Pathe.

Another contract gives Associated Exhibitors the feature productions of Pathe and American Film Company. Pathe has been distributing an average of three features a month. These features are in addition to Associated Exhibitors' own productions, which include the Harold Lloyd comedies, “The Devil,” starring George Arliss; the Edward Jose picture, “What Women Want to Know,” and Godine-Farrar in “The Riddle: Woman.”

Negotiate for New Stars

The American Film product to be handled by the new company features such stars as William Russell, Margarita Fisher, Charlotte Walker, Seena Owen and Helen Jerome Eddy.

Already contracts are being negotiated with the new company by prominent independent producers, according to an announcement just issued.

Offices of the company are at 25 West Forty-fifth street; Phil Ryan is in charge of the present company headquarters.

Conferences which preceded the completion of plans for the organization were held in New York City and were attended by Mr. Harding and Paul Gustonovic. Before returning to Kansas City Mr. Harding expressed himself as highly gratified with the contracts negotiated and other measures formulated, and expressed complete confidence in the artistic and financial success of the enterprise.

The headquarters of Associated Exhibitors, Inc., in each exchange center in the country, is to be in the Pathe exchange in that city or town.

Kinema Record Broken

(From Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, Feb. 22.—First National announces that “Passion” smashed all box office records for its first week at the Kinema theatre, Los Angeles, exceeding the previous best total by $7,000. It also has established another record at the Kinema by remaining for a second week.

Australian Film Men To Visit in America

Doyle Will Study the Modern Methods of Presentation in This Country

Stuart F. Doyle, general manager of Union Theatres, Ltd., and W. A. Gibson, general manager and managing director of Australian Films, Ltd., are on their way to America for the purpose of studying the film and theatre situation.

Mr. Doyle will inspect the various methods of modern presentation with a view of applying them in the eighty-theaters controlled by his company in Australia. The company is now erecting several large houses, each to cost $1,000,000. In structure they follow the lines of the Capitol in New York.

Besides his connections with Union Theatres, Mr. Doyle is a director of Australian Films and managing director of Greater J. D. Williams Amusement Company, Ltd.

Mr. Gibson expects while in this country to negotiate for the company to supply United Theatres and other customers of his company. The men will arrive in New York about the middle of March.

National Review Board To Raise Special Fund For Educational Work

The National Board of Review of Motion Pictures has launched a campaign for raising a special fund “to carry on the more general educational work of the board.” In a letter to all exhibitors the board appeals for contributions from producers, directors, distributors, actors, exhibitors and fans.

The income of the board is limited to the small fees charged producers for reviewing films and from the sale of bulletins and lists. This income barely meets current expenses and for that reason this appeal for a special fund has been made.

Contributions should be sent to Sam A. Lewishohn, treasurer of the board, 70 Fifth avenue, New York City.

Morosco Negociating With First National

(From Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, Feb. 22.—Confirmation of the story that Oliver Morosco is a potential source of product for First National has been made at the First National offices here. It was said, however, that the negotiations are still under way and while not yet concluded a favorable outcome can be expected. “Linger Longer Letty” and “The Half Breed” are two pictures mentioned and it is said that all will go through First National if the deal is consummated. The complete list is not available at this time.

Contract Prohibits Depiction of Crime

(From Exhibitor's Herald)

FORT WORTH, TEX., Feb. 22.—The contract lets the part for the exhibition of free motion pictures in Marine, Sycamore, Forest and Trinity parks prohibits the showing of films depicting bandits, train robbers and other films that “may corrupt the morals of children and young people.” Jenkins and Fox will operate the shows.
Reformers Appear Beaten In Chicago Censor Battle

Martin J. Quigley, Publisher of “Exhibitors Herald” and Police Chief Fitzmorris Deal Effective Blows at Proposed Ordinance

Charles Fitzmorris, superintendent of the Chicago police department, and Martin J. Quigley, publisher of EXHIBITORS HERALD, appearing before the judiciary committee of the Chicago City Council February 17, apparently destroyed the hopes of reformers who are attempting to grasp control of motion picture censorship in Chicago.

Chief of Police Fitzmorris stated flatly that he was against any plan which would remove control of film censorship from the police department.

Quigley Delivers “Minority Report”

Mr. Quigley, who functioned as secretary of the censorship commission until it became apparent the body was straying from its avowed purpose of an impartial inquiry into the censorship question, gave what might be termed a “minority report,” in which he pointed out the unfairness of the investigation and the unsoundness of the commission’s findings.

The appearance of Mr. Quigley came in the nature of a bombshell as the report and recommendation of the censorship commission had been delivered to the legislature, accompanied with an inference that it represented the unanimous action of the commission.

Aldermen Show Keen Interest

Mr. Quigley had been on his feet several minutes, discussing the proposed ordinance from the standpoint of a motion picture trade paper publisher who had been in intimate touch with every phase of motion picture censorship for a period of six years.

He stated that he was secretary of the Chicago censorship commission until “it practically passed out of existence in the spring of 1919” and that the report and recommendations were prepared at meetings of which he had no notice.

“I wrote and telephoned you every time we”—interrupted T. D. Hurley, chairman of the commission and sponsor of the proposed ordinance, and in turn was interrupted himself by Alderman Charles S. Eaton who exclaimed:

“I had been led to believe that this report was unanimous. This is a surprise to me.”

T. D. Hurley and Rev. W. S. Fleming were on their feet, vying with each other for an opportunity to speak.

Chair Silences Fleming

“I want to stop this,” shouted Hurley. “The public is being misled.”

“I want to be heard,” cried Rev. Fleming.

Chairman Olson of the judicial committee called for order.

“Is my intention to let everyone be heard,” he warned, “When the speaker has completed what he has to say, you can question him. Until then, have the courtesy not to interrupt.”

Mr. Quigley then resumed his talk.

Other Speakers Interrupted

Chief of Police Fitzmorris, who followed, was met with similar interruptions. Time after time, Mr. Hurley and Rev. Fleming were called to order when they obtained the floor presumably to question Chief Fitzmorris and took the time to voice their opinions.

When the police chief left the stand, a number of men and women sought recognition but Mr. Hurley and Rev. Fleming still persisted in monopolizing the time. Chairman Olson illy concealed his exasperation.

“I will have to ask that those who have had the floor three times and more give way to others who want to be heard,” he said. Mr. Hurley sat down.

Rev. Fleming remained standing.

“Previously I have been speaking as a member of the commission,” he said. “But this afternoon I have been asked to speak for—”

“Please,” said Chairman Olson, still standing.

And Rev. Fleming sat down.

Final Hearing Is Arranged

Late in the afternoon, Chairman Olson attempted to find out whether another meeting would be necessary. He asked those who cared to be heard to rise.

“This concerns every child in Chicago and I don’t believe—”—started in Mr. Hurley.

“The legislative committee is conducting this hearing and I will consult them,” replied Chairman Olson.

Adjournment to Wednesday, February 23 was decided upon.

“I can’t be here,” volunteered Rev.

U. S. Films Shown In Fifty Countries Export Abroad of Unexposed Product Shows Decrease in December

(Washington Bureau, Exhibitors Herald)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 22.—Nearly fifty different foreign countries are showing American motion pictures regularly, according to the latest report of the bureau of foreign and domestic commerce of the department of commerce. Nine countries are using our film in the production of motion pictures.

Figures Are Compiled

Figures concerning the exports of both unexposed and exposed film during December have been compiled by the bureau, and show that our shipments of unexposed film totaled 3,162,541 linear feet, valued at $193,292, while shipments of exposed film totaled 14,067,651 linear feet, valued at $375,938.

For the year 1920, exports of unexposed film totaled 64,066,626 linear feet, valued at $1,706,348. This was only half the quantity exported during the preceding year, when a total of 120,041,912 feet, valued at $2,650,263, was shipped abroad.

Exports on Increase

Exports of exposed films, however, increased in footage, although the value was slightly less than for the preceding year. During the year we exported 175,191,635 feet, valued at $7,592,195, as compared with 153,237,360 feet, valued at $5,066,723, for the year 1919.

With an annual business of nearly $10,000,000, our export trade in motion pictures has taken its permanent place among the important commodities in our world-wide commerce.

Exhibitors Herald
Too much of the past three years has been wasted in argument. If the picture is of real value, then it is sufficient that the exhibitor is prepared to present it. The creation of the commission is not in itself a question of censorship. It is a question of defining the place of a motion picture in the city of Chicago, and the exhibition of its circulation in the city. It is not a question of the public morals, but of the public's right to enjoy the arts.

Wiveson's Hand Picked

"In view of the evident sincerity of purpose of the men and women behind this measure I regret to be compelled to point out that this inquiry was directed in such a manner that it could only bring out what these men and women had previously conceived to be correct. Outside of a single large hearing held in this chamber there is the testimony only of husbands and wives, and second-hand to the appearance before the commission of Joseph Hopp, Sam Atkinson and Maurice Choyz, writers for the Chicago Defender.

Atkinson quotes R. R. Quirk, publisher of Photo Play Magazine, a motion picture paper of national standing. I will save my words in setting forth what they had to say because it is not there.

"I agreed to serve on the commission, because I believed at the time that certain sins and influences in my possession concerning the motion picture would be sought and accepted by the commission. Instead, I found Commissioner Quirk's second-hand evidence, and everything that did not agree exactly with what he had to say.

"In closing, I urge you to leave well alone, that your police department is well equipped in law and personnel to deal with the existing situation. This report, while an earnest effort, is merely a chronicle of lost motion.

Chief Questions Questioners

For several weeks I have been following the chief, as to his opinion of the "Kid." It is immense." asked Chief Fitzmorris, when called to the stand. Stated that he was opposed to the proposed ordinance and asked:

"What is the matter with the present system?"

"Give me your opinions, and I will call them a failure. I have heard no complaint against it since I took office. I think censorship is an integral part of police work."

Contradicting charges made by the commission, he stated that he personally reviewed every questionable film.

In answer to questions, he said he opposed contemporaneous of the pink permit.

"Calls The Kid" Immense

T. D. Human, the Chicago police chief, as to his opinion of "The Kid."

"It is immense," responded Chief Fitzmorris.

"Do you believe children should see it?" demanded Hurley.

"I believe every child in Chicago should see it," was the response. "They'd be better off for it."

"You mean to say that you approve of a film featuring the illegitimate birth of a child and showing a mother leaving her baby in an ash can and a man teaching is to break windows?" demanded Hurley.

"Why, if you mean 'The Kid,' sure," responded the chief. "I'd never recognize it from your description. That picture is immense. I'm for it!"
Brady’s Trip Strengthening M. P. T. O. A States Cohen

President of Exhibitors’ Organization Makes Public Additional Wires and Other Messages of Confidence and Support

Additional reassurances from exhibitor organizations throughout the United States that they are standing solidly in back of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America has brought a statement from Sydney S. Cohen, president, that regardless of the motives of William A. Brady in his nationwide trip, a noticeable strengthening of the M. P. T. O. A.

“Advices from all quarters indicate that it were the purpose of Mr. Brady to weaken the exhibitors of the country by his trip, the effect has been exactly opposite,” says Mr. Cohen’s statement, “The more or less open hostility of the group of interests represented by William A. Brady has opened the eyes of every theatre owner in the country and has caused new accesses to the Motion Picture Theatre Owners everywhere.

Assurances From Many State Leaders

Simultaneously, Mr. Cohen made public assurances of confidence and support from A. R. Pramer, president of the Nebraska organization; Stuart Gould, business representative of the Nebraska exhibitors; Charles F. Sears, president of the Missouri organization; and officers of the Ohio and the Southern California and Arizona organizations.

Eaton Directs Goldwyn Short Subject Division

Industry Plans Big Defensive At Public Censorship Hearing In Washington, D. C. Feb. 28

Meeting Is Important Due to Fact That Capital Has Been Chosen for First Skirmish for National Regulation

(From Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, Feb. 22.—The motion picture industry will be well represented at the public hearing of the censorship question before the district commissioners at Washington, D. C., on February 28.

At the National Association offices it was said that Harry Crandall, George W. Fuller, president of the Washington Exchange Managers, and C. C. Pettijohn would appear. D. W. Griffith also will be one of the speakers.

Cohen to Be Present.

At the headquarters of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America it was said that Sydney S. Cohen had talked with Julian Bylewski and Harry Crandall, both of Washington, during his visit to the capital several days ago, and that arrangements were being made for speakers to appear at the hearing. Mr. Cohen also will be present.

The hearing is being held to obtain suggestions as to what should be done, if anything, to better regulate Washington motion picture exhibitions. In a circular letter issued by the district commissioners inviting interested persons to appear at the hearing, it is declared that "while most of the films exhibited in Washington have passed some sort of censorship this has not been rigid enough to prevent the exhibition of some objectionable films." The result has been the receipt of letters by the commissioners from ministers and others protesting against the character of some of the films recently shown.

Hearing Important

The commissioners, according to the letter, have no desire to do anything that will work an undue hardship on those engaged in the motion picture industry.

The Washington censorship hearing is of unusual importance since Washington is the ground selected by the proponents of national censorship for their first skirmish. If successful in Washington they will expand their activities to cover other cities. It is understood. The local censorship campaign is a preliminary step for a campaign for federal censorship.

Mack Sennett Uses "Exhibitors Herald" To Put Over Scene

"Exhibitors Herald" has again burst into the spotlight of picture fame by becoming a part of a big scene in the latest Paramount-Sennett comedy, "The Unhappy Finish." Charles Murray is cast as the proprietor of a motion picture studio in this Sennett two-reeler and quite naturally consults a copy of his favorite trade journal. A close-up of Murray reading "Exhibitors Herald" is shown in one scene and in another the magazine is shown lying on the executive's table, the only film trade paper, by the way, that occupies a place on the table.

Several months ago Al Christie had occasion to introduce a character in one of his comedies reading a film journal and gave the place of honor to "Exhibitors Herald." The magazine did not appear camera shy and photographed extremely well in both pictures.

Margaret Fisher Signs With Eckels

(From Exhibitors Herald)

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 22.—Eddie Eckels, president and general manager of Independent Films Association, has signed a long-term contract with Margarita Fisher, former American star, who will leave New York soon to begin work at the old Griffith studios recently taken over by Independent.

Saxe Propose Noon Opening to Combat Blue Law Agitation
(From Staff Correspondent)
Milwaukee, Wis., Feb. 22.—As a means of combating the blue law agitation here, Thomas Saxe, secretary-treasurer of Saxe Amusement Company, suggests that theatres open at noon on Sunday instead of at 10 or 11 o'clock.

It is believed that this movement will pacify the reformers. Their contention is that with the theatres open in the afternoon the churches cannot meet the competition. Bishop W. W. Webb of the Episcopal diocese of Milwaukee has written an article to the New York Churchman denouncing the blue law agitators.

Chamber of Commerce at Fairbury, Nebraska Opposed to Censorship
(Fairbury, Neb., Feb. 22.—While no official action on the proposed censorship bill in the state legislature was taken at the recent meeting of the Chamber of Commerce, the sentiment of those present was in opposition to the measures.

An effort was made to have a resolution favoring censorship adopted. This failed when W. F. Cramb moved to table the matter. This was seconded and adopted, 49 to 20.

Effort to Repeal Blue Laws
In South Dakota Fails When Senate Defeats Wagner Bill
Whole Town Turns Out To Raise Hoover Fund
H. G. Bemis of the Gem theatre, Inker, D. N., should have a place on Herbert Hoover's honor roll. He donated a day's receipts to the European Relief Council. Of course Mr. Bemis is not alone in that. Many other theatres did the same. But he must have put a lot of steam behind his campaign to raise the sympathies of Inker inhabitants for Europe's starving youngsters. The whole town apparently turned out to see the Hoover Day show which Mr. Bemis put on.

There are only 350 people in Inker. But the check for a day's receipts which Mr. Bemis forwarded to C. C. Pettjohn of the motion picture division of the Hoover committee was $48.75.

It wasn't the size of the check that made such a hit with the Hoover committee. It was the fact that Mr. Bemis had made the most of the town's limited population. If the big cities had responded proportionately all the hungry children in the world could be fed for a year from the funds collected through the pictures houses on Hoover Day.

Attorney General Announces He Will Begin a Campaign of Enforcement if Regulation Is Not Abolished (Pierre, S. D., Feb. 22.—Indications point to a finish fight over the blue laws in this state. Efforts to repeal the blue law now on the statute books have failed. Following defeat of the Wagner bill, which would have accomplished this, a motion was made to reconsider the measure.

Motion is Tabled
This last activity on the part of those seeking an open Sunday proved of no avail when the motion was tabled.

Attorney General Payne only recently announced that if efforts to repeal the law failed in the legislature he would launch an intensive campaign of enforcement.

Develops Major Issue
Because of the attorney general's pronouncement and the present status of the fight in the legislature it is believed the matter will develop into a major issue in this state.

The question is of vital importance to the exhibitors of the state and every effort is being made to cooperate with the forces in the legislature who seek repeal of the law.

Samuel Gompers’ View On Legal Censorship

Statement of Labor Chief Is Herewith Published In Full With the Hope That It May Aid Materially the Exhibitors in the Various States Who Are Called Upon at This Time to Fight Regulatory Measures

By SAMUEL GOMPERS

In New York state it is proposed to enact legislation providing for state censorship. I hope the New York legislature will demonstrate a better understanding of our time than to add one more to the already too long list of repressive and coercive measures on our various law books.

There is a kind of censorship that is both effective and in keeping with the true American concept. It is voluntary censorship, organized by the industry itself, with the proper representation of those who patronize motion pictures. There is between compulsion and voluntary action all of the difference between tyranny and democracy. It is my hope that compulsory governmental censorship will make no further inroads upon American freedom of expression through motion pictures.

* * *

It is regrettable that advocates of governmental motion picture censorship again are active in the endeavor to place one more restriction upon the exercise of freedom of expression. I trust they will not be successful. I am aware of all the arguments used by those who propose censorship, and I am aware that a great many pictures are produced which might be left unproduced.

But there must somewhere be an end to restriction, to censorship, to the exercise of the arbitrary judgment of a few over the doings of the masses, or we shall lose our democratic character entirely and become a nation of subjects.

Nothing to be gained by the possible suppression of a few unworthy pictures can compensate for the loss of freedom that would result, nor for the sense of being subjected in our pleasures to the personal judgment or whims of a court of censors.

* * *

The public will take care of its own standards if left free. The idea of censorship is not an American idea and cannot with safety be introduced into our life. Once we are started upon the censorship road we are again engaged in the age old contest between free government and government by compulsion, by decree, by caste.

Rather than accept the “thou shalt not” of whosoever may be able to control censorship, the American people will prefer to deliver their own verdict in person and in their own way. This is not the land of “thou shalt not”—this is not the home of “verboten,” and may it never be.

Censorship Fight in Wrong Hands: Cohen Declares Campaign Must be Conducted by Citizens of the Country

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEW YORK, Feb. 22.—The campaign against enactment of censorship and blue law legislation has been “entrusted into the wrong hands,” declares Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theater Owners of America, in a recent statement.

The proper course would be for the citizens of the country to conduct the fight, he says, adding that the “exhibitors have worked out a complete campaign based on these lines, and are close to go forward with it immediately.”

“Keep Producers Out”

“In view of the events at the hearing before the judiciary committee of the common council in Chicago on February 3, it has become clear,” the statement says, “that the campaign against censorship and against enactment of blue laws has been entrusted into the wrong hands.

“The exhibitors have always protested and recent events cause them to lend new vigor to their protests that the producers of motion pictures should be absolutely kept out of the fight against censorship.” It is a notorious fact that the manufacturers have been on both sides of this question.

Question One of Principle

“The question of censorship is one of principle. It involves the recreation and liberties of millions of American citizens. These citizens must conduct the campaign. The industry can furnish them with facts and data, but the battle itself must be carried forward by them.

“The first thing necessary is to retrace the false steps heretofore made; to recall the spokesman of the manufacturers and to interest men and women prominent in public life. The press particularly must be enlisted in this campaign.

“We request all exhibitors who may have censorship troubles of any kind to address themselves to the headquarters of the Motion Picture Theater Owners of America where their needs will be supplied to the best of our ability.”

Film Board Members Experience Thriller and Loss of $2,322

(From Staff Correspondent)

ST. LOUIS, MO., Feb. 22.—It is the usual thing for a group of film men to witness a thriller and then go home and forget it. A hold-up (the screen kind) would be the last thing to keep them awake.

But seven members of the St. Louis Film Board of Trade one night recently saw a hold-up which they won’t forget so soon. It kept them up the better part of the night telling it to the police.

It was the real thing this time. The bandits were in deadly earnest. And the loot—$827 in currency, $1,080 in jewelry, two overcoats valued at $400 and a five-dollar pair of gloves. The robbery took place at the office of the Film Board in the Empress building. Members in the room were J. Ray Weinbrenner, former assistant prosecuting attorney and attorney for the board; Sol J. Hankins, Fine Arts Film Company; Richard Forester, Vitaphone Pictures Corporation; Maira Stahl, Sidney J. Baker, First National Pictures, Inc.; Joseph Desberger, Robertson-Col., and J. Weil of Goldwyn.
"Big Four" to Have Own Offices Abroad

Company Now Has Fourteen Pictures for Foreign Distribution

(From Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, Feb. 22.—United Artists will soon establish exchanges abroad to handle directly the distribution of its product. This undertaking has been under advisement for some time, but final decision has not reached until the recent meeting of the board of directors Thursday.

Main Office in London

The main foreign office will be in London. Following its opening, within two months, other offices will be established.

None of the United Artists pictures has yet been shown abroad. Until recently the concern had the distribution rights for the United States and Canada only. It is believed that the visits of Mr. Abrams and his associates to Los Angeles and also to England were to lay the groundwork for the plans which are being consummated.

Now Has 14 Productions

United Artists will have fourteen pictures ready by the time the foreign office is opened. These are: "His Majesty, the American," which will be retitled "One of the Blood;" "When the Clouds Roll By," "Mollydoodle;" "The Mark of Zorro," "The Nut" and "The Three Musketeers," all Fairbanks pictures; "Vamps," "Suds," "Love Light," with Mary Pickford, also the next Pickford subject "Through the Back Door;" "Mack Sennett's "Down of the Old Road;" "Romance, " "The Love Flower" and "Broken Blossoms," two Griffith pictures, round out the list.

Ticket Scalpers Make Big Profits on Sales For "The Kid" in L. A.

(From Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, Feb. 22.—Advises from Los Angeles to the First National offices here contain the information that the opening of Chaplin's "The Kid" at the Ambassador theatre brought out ticket scalpers who sold their holdings at fabulous prices.

The entire seating capacity of the house has been sold out for a week in advance, the wire adds. From this it is gathered at First National that S. Barrett McCormick, the Ambassador manager, is reserving seats. The Ambassador is an intimate theatre on the deluxe picture stage.

After its Ambassador showing "The Kid" will go into the Kinema, also under McCormick's management. No date for the move has been set as it has not been determined how long a run will be given "Passion," the present Kinema attraction.

N. A. M. P. I. Resolutions

Explain Membership Drive

Declare Recruiting of Theatre Owners Is for Combatting Unfriendly Legislation—Invite Exhibitors to Affiliate

Resolutions clarifying the purpose of recruiting members in the theatre division of the N. A. M. P. I. and inviting exhibitors to become members were unanimously adopted at a meeting of the executive committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry held in New York, February 19.

Referring to the action of its members inviting exhibitors to join the theatre division, the resolution states the purpose "was to bring about a more perfect co-ordination of all branches of the industry to combat legislation seeking to establish legalized censorship of motion picture prior to publication, the enactment of so-called blue laws, and all other adverse legislation."

Not Fighting Exhibitor Organizations

"Membership in the theatre division of the National Association would and shall not in any way conflict with membership in local, state or national exhibitor organizations now existing or that may hereafter be formed," it continues.

In the meantime, William A. Brady, president of the N. A. M. P. I., is on the last lap of the nation-wide tour for the announced purpose of bringing about unity in the industry and awakening sentiment against censorship.

Will Enlist the Players

Word from Los Angeles indicates that Mr. Brady's arrival in Los Angeles Saturday, February 20 will be the signal for a series of dinners and get-togethers.

The National Association officers state they were written communications from prominent producers and others identified with the industry in Los Angeles inquiring the time of his arrival there. One telegraphic inquiry was from Walter J. Reynolds, secretary of the Producers' Association, indicating that a receiv ing reception was arranged and that a luncheon would be given Mr. Brady shortly after his arrival.

Among those planning to welcome Mr. Brady in Los Angeles are Thomas H. Ince, R. H. Cochrane, Vice-President of the Universal Film Company, J. W. Engle, Vice-President of the Metro Film Co., Jesse L. Lasky, Vice-President of Famous Players, Earl H. Hammons, President, Educational Film Co., A. P. Michael of the Los Angeles Film Board of Trade, and others who are actively identified with the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

Touring the West Coast

President Brady's itinerary for the week took him from Seattle to Los Angeles. Arriving in Seattle February 18, he proceeded the following morning to Olympia, the state capital of Washington, and on Sunday February 19 went to Portland, Ore. and from there to Salem, the state capital, February 21. His schedule called for his arrival in San Francisco Wednesday February 23.

Members of the National Association's executive committee declare that confidential reports are to the effect that Mr. Brady is accomplishing a great deal in his fight on censorship laws in the various states visited.

Resolutions of N. A. M. P. I.

Whereas, members of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry recently invited exhibitors of the United States to join the Theatre Division of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, and

Whereas, the purpose of such invitation was to bring about a more perfect co-ordination of all branches of the industry to combat legislation seeking to establish legalized censorship of motion pictures prior to publication, the enactment of so-called blue laws, and all other adverse legislation, it being always understood that membership in the Theatre Division of the National Association would and shall not in any way conflict with membership in any local, state or national exhibitor organization now existing, or that may hereafter be formed; now therefore, be it

Resolved: That the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry approves and confirms such action of its members, and now as an association solicits the exhibitors of the United States to become members of its Theatre Division.

Great Motion Picture Industry Is in Safe Hands

Self Made Men Are Hearing and Are Heading Call of a Worthy Ambition

Says OTTO H. KAHN

It is barely a dozen years or so ago that the world awoke one morning to find upon its doorstep a baby giant, the moving picture. The captains of finance and industry passed by and turned up their noses at the bounding. It was plain men, risen from the ranks, who took it in and nurtured it and used their own scanty means and what little they could borrow to uphold and develop it. And thus the moving picture industry came into being.

Being plain men, those who developed it understood the people. And, understanding the people, they catered to the healthy, fundamental sentiment of the great mass which wants to be interested, grieved and moved, be it to laughter or to tears.

They were pioneers, and the pioneer does not start with laying out beautiful avenues and erecting structures of impecable style. Crudities they were, and mistakes of judgment and of taste. But they did create, with great vision, daring enterprise and hard work a vast new industry; they had become the famous and pre-eminent throughout the world, and above all, they established a huge demand, giving to the people an instrument of instruction, diversion and recreation, the like of which had never been known or dreamed of until the advent of the camera.

And then, as soon as they could feel that the industry was firmly established and had struck its gait, they proceeded—to their honor, be it said—to improve, to beautify, to aim higher. They did not wait till they were prodded to do so by public demand. They anticipated the demand. They volunteered more than was asked for and more than, from the merely commercial point of view, were believed to be needed.

They called to their aid the art of music. They had the courage and the wisdom to ask of the people adherence to a high standard of orchestral music. They established orchestras of the highest grade. They presented singers and instrumentalists who sang and played the best of musical compositions. To hundreds of thousands whose means would have permitted them but care or not at all to visit concerts or the opera they opened access to the joys and inspirations of musical art. And thus they enriched the whole fabric of the people.

They became an educational and cultural influence of the most effective kind and in the most effective way. Free from that patronizing, bounty dispensing, "uplift" attitude, and from that chilly dullness which too often are obnoxious adjuncts to well-meaning movements for the people's benefit.

They called to their aid young singers, giving them the opportunity of earning some money and of testing their qualifications before the public—a very real service to young talent, for the opportunity, unfortunately through unwisely, is all too difficult to attain in our concert halls and on our operatic stage.

Not a few singers date their careers from appearances in "movie" houses, and some of them have graduated from the "movie" stage to grand opera.

And more and more they are calling to their aid eminent painters, internationally famous sculptors, the leading writers of the world. More and more, do they recognize that "the play's the thing," seeking perfection of ensemble, interest of action and dramatic merit of the story, rather than to be mere vehicles for the exploitation of any one personality.

These self-made and self-taught men at the head of the moving picture craft are hearing and heedling the call of a worthy ambition. They are conscious of their responsibility to the opportunities of an industry which gives boundless scope for development and for service to the good of mankind to be done, and some things to be weeded out, but the accomplishments of the past and the endeavors of the present give every promise of progressive achievement. These men are on the right road. It leads onward and upward. The great inducement of which they are the leaders, is safe in their keeping.

South Dakota House Goes for Censorship
Action of Legislatures Is Big Surprise—Passes by Vote Of 76 to 20

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)
PIERRE, S. D., Feb. 22.—The censorship bill passed the house of representatives by a vote of 76 to 20.
Victory for the reformers in the lower house was a complete surprise to the anti-censorship forces. It was an unsuspected landslide.
Just prior to convening of the session many members who voted for the measure were arguing in the negative.
It has been rumored that the action of the lower house was merely an effort to shove the bill into the senate. The opposition forces declare it will die in the senate.
The bill provides for the establishment of a board of three members. The salaries of the members are $2,000 for the chairman and $1,800 for the two other members. An inspection charge of $5 a reel is provided in the bill.

Guimond Is Appointed Advertising Director For Realart Pictures

L. F. Guimond, who has had experience as an exhibitor, sales manager, as well as in publicity and advertising work, has been appointed director of publicity and advertising for Realart.
His introduction to the business nine years ago was through a small town theatre which he built and operated for a time. He has also managed metropolitan houses and is familiar with the problems of exhibitors generally. In the distribution end he has for several years past been connected with major organizations in capacities.
He was for a time sales promotion manager for W. W. Hodkinson Corporation and following that two years as sales manager of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in both the sales and advertising departments.

First National Signs to Distribute Three Hope Hampton Films

(From Staff Correspondent)
NEW YORK, Feb. 22.—Associated First National has contracted for the distribution of three Hope Hampton productions, according to an announcement just received from star and producer. The first, "Love's Penalty," has been completed. The second will be "Star Dust," a Fanny Hurst story. H. Hart Healey will direct.
From well-authenticated reports it is learned also that First National may distribute Vivian Martin productions.

At the offices of Messmore Kendall, who has Vivian Martin under contract, the story was neither affirmed nor denied, all questions being answered that "there was nothing to be said at this time."

Iowa First National Favors Policy of "Bigger Pictures"

J. D. Williams Tells Exhibitors That He Sees Very Little Tendency Toward Reduction in the Cost of Production

Endorsement of the policy of bigger and better pictures was voted by seventy-five exhibitors from Nebraska, Iowa and Kansas attending the annual meeting of Associated First National of Iowa at the Hotel Savery, Des Moines.

The meeting was held on the first anniversary of the beginning of the first run of the initial Associated First National publication in Iowa. A. H. Blank, president of the Iowa corporation, presided. Lieut. Gov. Hammill of Iowa gave the address of welcome.

Policy of Producers Is Fewer Pictures

In endorsing the policy of bigger and better pictures the question of the probable trend of cost of productions was raised. In this connection, J. D. Williams, general manager of Associated First National, declared that he saw very little tendency toward the reduction of production costs in the future as every producer of note was working upon a policy of stronger, better and fewer pictures.

Such a policy, he explained, was necessarily more expensive than one which included careless hurried production and that while the actual money costs probably never would be lower than now, the exhibitor would receive a better value through the inevitable finer quality of pictures which must result from the policy of better and fewer pictures.

Elect Board of Directors

Mr. Williams also explained in detail the processes by which the exhibition value of First National pictures was fixed, and expressed the opinion that the system was the fairest one that could be devised to the producer and exhibitor alike. The following board of directors was elected:

A. H. Blank, Des Moines;

Following the banquet, which was the order of the evening session, the directors met and elected the following officers:

A. H. Blank, President and Treasurer;

M. B. Shamburg, First Vice President;

A. J. Diebold, Second Vice President;

S. S. Schwarz, Secretary.

Next Meeting in Kansas City

The next meeting will be held in Kansas City, the second Monday in February, 1922.

A general call to producers to eliminate every suggestion of salaciousness in titles, sub-titles or advertising matter of motion picture productions was sounded by the exhibitors. They went on record with the opinion that care should be exercised in the advertisement of pictures and that the offices of censorship would be the greatest service producers can render to the exhibitors in states where there are drastic bills before the legislature.

Bills are pending in both Iowa and Nebraska and the exhibitors at the meeting declared that much of the agitation for censorship was directly traceable to mistaken ideas of certain pictures due entirely to suggestive advertising matter. Mr. Williams declared that the First National organization had been alive to this situation and that every effort was being made by the independent producers and stars distributing through the organization to live up to the spirit which had been embodied into the resolution. He declared, however, that the task was not so easy as it would appear on the face of it, as it was beyond the power of any one person, or any group of persons, to imagine the things that some of the reformers would find objectionable.

Complete Lansing Theatre

LANSING, MICH.—Lansing Arcade Theatre Company, "one of the Best Managed Enterprises," will open its half million dollar theatre here on St. Patrick's Day, March 17. The theatre is rapidly nearing completion.

Open Carter, Crane, Mo.

CRANE, MO.—The Carter Theatre, which has been under construction for the last several weeks, is nearing completion. It was expected to be ready for opening in January.

A luncheon and screening of Associated First National pictures was held at the Hotel Savery, Des Moines, Ia., on February 14, at which A. H. Blank was re-elected president of the Associated First National of Iowa.

FIRST NATIONAL FRANCHISE HOLDERS HOLD MEETING
Maryland Exhibitors Raise National Quota of $1,800

Eugene McCurdy Is Elected President of League at Baltimore Meeting — Censure Laemmle for N. A. M. P. I. Statement

BALTIMORE, MD., Feb. 21.—Maryland’s quota of $1,800 to the treasury of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America was subscribed in less than ten minutes at the recent convention of the state association at the Southern hotel.

Renewed allegiance to the national league was voted in a resolution which also expressed complete confidence in its present leadership.

Exhibitors Censure Hampton and Laemmle

Two resolutions censured the activities of Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, and Benjamin B. Hampton. In discussing the Hampton resolution exhibitors characterized “the so-called crusade of Mr. Hampton as a sensational and spectacular anti-picture propaganda for which there was not the slightest excuse.”

Mr. Laemmle was removed for publication in the Universal Weekly of an article calling upon exhibitors to join the exhibitors’ division of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

It was voted to notify the Universal chief of the convention’s action.

The following officers were elected:

President—Eugene B. McCurdy.
Vice-President—Thomas Goldberg.
Secretary—William E. Stumpf.
Treasurer—Frank A. Hornig.

On the board of governors are Thomas H. Burke, Cumberland; William Frey, Brunswick; J. E. Cahill, Centreville; William Insley, Salisbury; John Marvll, Easton; William Boyer, Hagerstown; O. H. Fisher, Frederick; Frederick Osborn, Westminster.

Sydney S. Cohen, president of the national league, covered several subjects in an address before the convention.

Principal among the important questions he touched upon were censorship, blue laws, uniform contracts, film rental tax, music tax, deposits, etc.

The case of Mrs. Pauline K. Dodge of Morrisville, Vermont, was cited by President Cohen as a definite and practical application of the motto of the M. P. T. O. A.—“An injury to one is the concern of all.”

Command M. P. T. O. A.

Following Mr. Cohen’s talk the convention adopted a resolution commending the M. P. T. O. A. for its activity in behalf of Mrs. Dodge.

Continuing, Mr. Cohen said he was gratified by the messages of loyalty which had come to the organization as a result of the nation-wide trip of William A. Brady in behalf of “closer harmony within the industry.”

THEIR FAVORITE GAME—“RING ‘ROUND ROSIE”

Export Firm Has Entered Domestic State Right Field

NEW YORK, Feb. 25.—Export and Import Film Company, which heretofore has been active chiefly in foreign film dealings, has entered the domestic state right market.

The first pictures to be offered are “The Mask” and “Kanzan,” the latter a picturization of a James Oliver Curwood story. Both subjects were produced by Col. W. N. Selig. The first named presents Hedda Nova, Jack Holt and Little Mickey Moore as the feature players; the latter Jane Novak. It is understood that the company has a number of negatives on hand to follow up the two pictures now announced as ready. George H. Hamilton is directing the sales.

Brooklyn Will Have Cooperative Theatre

BROOKLYN, N. Y.—The Richmond Hill South Civic Association will launch in a cooperative plan for building a motion picture theatre.

Papers of incorporation are being obtained in Albany. Incorporators are: B. Harrison Noden, Robert Buchanan, A. Lopez Cardoza, William M. Chambers, J. C. Kemp, William Rau and E. N. Zorn.
Universal Will Give Short Subjects Special Exploitation

Berman Announces That Company Will Aim at More and Better One and Two Reelers

IMPORTANT production changes are being projected in the Universal organization as the result of a recent investigation of the field by agents of Carl Laemmle, president of the company.

H. M. Berman, general sales manager, who is in charge of the investigation, has outlined several new and striking projects.

Hereafter Westerns and short stuff made at Universal City will receive extra and special exploitation, some of it approximating the exploitation received by feature productions, Berman stated.

“We feel in Universal that we stand at the forefront of Western and short stuff producers,” he said. “It has been decided that Universal shall go to greater length to produce more and better one and two-reelers. Already extra comedy and Western units have been added at our West Coast studios.

* * *

“This broadening of activity is to meet a well-defined increase in the demand for first-class comedies and Westerns. We are now going to supply exhibitors with more than one Western every week—a choice of several good Westerns every week. We also are going to help them sell these Westerns to the public by supplying more exploitation aids in the way of paper, press material and display lines, as well as by popularizing our Western stars with the public directly.

“Our various units include one headed by Hoot Gibson, one by Art Acord, one by Jack Perrin and one by Leonard Chilpan. Eileen Sedgwick also heads a Western producing company. Other popular women leads are Louise Loraine, Dorothy Woods, Gertrude Olmstead, Marcelle Pershing and Dixie La蒙特. Our Western directors include Jacques Jaccard, Edward Kull, Al Russell, Edward Laemmle, William Craft and several others. William Lord Wright, an expert scenarist, is supervising our short reel productions.

“An exploitation drive of the same magnitude as that to open on Westerns will be conducted for our short comedies. Recent Universal-Century comedies are as good as any short comedies now produced. The new two-reel Lyons and Moran comedies promise equally as much.

“Universal Star comedies and the new series of animal comedies will complete our enlarged short stuff program. William Beaudine, our new comedy director-in-chief, has produced several Dorothy Wolkert comedies, soon to be released, that Universal regards so highly. An unusual amount of attention will be devoted to their exploitation.

“Ward Hayes, also added as a comedy director, has created another new comedy unit at Universal City, with Billy Fletcher as the featured player. The new animal comedies will star Joe Martin, Universal’s intelligent orang-outang. Harry Burns, assisted by A. C. Stecker, trainer, is in charge.”

Berman recently returned to New York from Kansas City. Attending a Universal convention there were J. H. Calvert of that city, Harry Leifoltz of Omaha, Edgar B. Haines of Des Moines, J. Gilson of Minneapolis, Ned E. Depinet of Dallas, Barney Rosenthal of St. Louis, Sam Benjamin of Oklahoma City and Manager White of Ft. Smith. These men all are branch managers.

Open Alhambra and Rialto in Milwaukee

Landau Has the Former Saxe House Renovated

(From Staff Correspondent)

MILWAUKEE, WIS., Feb. 22—Two —the Alhambra, renovated and renovated, and the Rialto, a new Saxe house, have been opened.

Leo A. Landau, former manager of the Butterfly, is directing operation of the Alhambra, formerly a Saxe house. The opening engagement was “The Furnace,” a Realart production. Charlie Chaplin’s “The Kid” opened the Rialto, owned by Saxe Amusement Company. Frank Cook is manager.

Decorated in Blue and Gold

The Rialto will offer a continuous performance from 10 o’clock in the morning to 1 a.m. This is the only house in Milwaukee following this policy.

The color scheme of the new Alhambra is peacock blue and gold. The magnificent drop is in the same shades of blue, decorated with peacocks. A multitude of new stage lighting effects are possible.

The Alhambra orchestra is of thirty pieces, under the direction of Jerry Nelson. Chicago Coser Commission. Ellwyn Owen is at the organ. At the opening performance Alma Doria, soprano, of New York, the Oscard dancers and the Alhambra chorus provided additional entertainment. The seating capacity is more than 4,000.

Crowds Sigh Traffic

The Rialto, located on the corner of Third street and Grand avenue, was scheduled to open at 12 o’clock noon. About an hour before, traffic policemen were called to relieve congestion.

A feature of the new Rialto is the ladies’ room which is located on the mezzanine. Here are divans and settees harmonizing with the drapes and decorations and a large illuminated flower box. The interior of the theatre is finished in polychrome with rose panels and ornamented with Italian antique. Caen stone is used in the lower half of the walls. Hand painted parchment shades are used all over the house.

The screen is higher than the average screen, and the seats are placed on a decline from the rear to the middle of the theatre, and on an incline from the middle to the front. The seating capacity is 900.

License Plan Penalizes

Boost in Theatre Price

Chicago theatres which boost their prices during holiday seasons and on other special occasions are penalized under the terms of a new licensing ordinance imposed by the council committee on revenue. The ordinance provides a minimum tax of $200 annually for the theatres with a seating capacity of 350 or less which charge maximum admission fee of 25 cents. The maximum tax is $5,200 for theatres seating 2,500 which charge a maximum of $1. In the event of a theatre charging more than provided in its license 3 per cent of the gross excess must be paid to the city.

JAZZ AND JEALOUSY DON’T MIX

A scene from the Celebrated single-reel comedy, “Jazz and Jealousy,” which has just been completed.
Ballin’s “East Lynne” Artistic Success

“East Lynne” the picture should eclipse in point of box office success “East Lynne” the stage play. Hugo Ballin’s modernization of the American classic is better entertainment than the original work.

March 27 has been announced by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation as publication date of the feature, postponement being explained as considered desirable for the purpose of giving exhibitors opportunity to make proper preparations for the showing. That means advertising. And “East Lynne” is an exhibitor advertisers “find.”

“Next Week! ‘East Lynne!’”

That single line on the billboards of any city will take beholders back to the day when the stage favorite was a theatrical sensation. Properly elaborated upon, it should bring to the initial screening at any American theatre patronage of such volume as to severely tax its seating capacity.

The patron will find in the Hugo Ballin modernization all of the dramatic appeal, the pathos and the strength of the original. They will miss the glaring inconsistency, the unforgettable “blue spectacles disguise,” that was condoned as it was smiled at in the play’s road show days.

Mr. Ballin accomplished a distinct triumph in his modernization, introducing modern dress and setting without losing the atmosphere of the period as regards character and action. The production will be greeted as an old friend in new dress and the greeting accorded will be warm in keeping.

His technical skill is shown in many settings rich with the unpretentiousness of good taste. A city in winter, a countryside at midnight, a medieval sequence utilized in picturesque narration, all are pictures which the greatest artist might be proud to sign. And no portrait painter has caught with greater fidelity the feminine face distorted by emotion.

The several plot threads are unified in continuity seldom equalled, the great effort which one familiar with the play will concede that this required being justified by the graceful, continuous story progress effected. As a consequence the interest increases steadily from the opening scene to the properly abrupt ending.

Mabel Ballin displays marked skill in the emotional role which is the star part. Beauty is sacrificed to realism early in the footage and at several points she rises to dramatic heights of commanding impressiveness. Her death scene at the close of the picture is one of the finest bits of acting in recent production, brief, simple, sufficient.

Henry Sell as the “villain” lays claim to second place in the memory. His performance is natural. The silk hat and the pointed collar of the familiar stage original give place to the immaculate but modest attire of the modern “heavy.” His work is in keeping.

Edward Earle, as the husband, satisfies. He disposes of the comparatively slender “part” capably, gaining by restraint the realism that his stage predecessors lost by lack of it.

Other members of the cast enact creditably their several roles, their work recalling, perhaps, more strongly than that of the more prominent players the stage version of the play.

The plot is so familiar as to require no detailed synopsis here. How Isabel Carlyle is influenced by Francis Levison to doubt her husband, deserts him and her son to go with Levison and returns when abandoned by him to die in her husband’s arms is shown in such manner as to charm with a freshness that augurs well for extended engagements.

The success of “Way Down East” is ample proof that picturizations of the genuine American stage classics are in demand. “East Lynne,” published in seven reels, gives the exhibitor an opportunity the significance and importance of which none should under estimate.

“Payment Guaranteed” Next Special Feature Offered by American

Having put “Sunset Jones” on the market, Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of American Film Company, now announces that the company’s next special drama will be “Payment Guaranteed.”

Margaret Fisher is the star and Capt. Cecil Van Auker is leading man. Others in the cast are Hayward Mack, Harry Lonsdale, Harvey Clark, Marjorie Manners and Alice Wilson.

It was directed by George L. Cox, assisted by Sidney Alge. Camera work and lighting are attributed to Georges Rizard, and the settings to S. A. Baldrige, technical director of “Flying A.”

“The Devil” Setting Attendance Records

According to the latest reports received by Pathe, “The Devil,” with George Arliss in his famous stage role, continues its high record of attendance. Audiences “packed like sardines” are reported unanimous in their expressions of approval. This is the report received from the Mark Strand in Albany, where during the three days of the run of “The Devil,” crowds seeking admission were larger than ever before in the history of that house. A similar report was received by Frank L. Smith, managing director of the Rialto in Newark. A telegram from Cleveland, Ohio, settles the question of the character of “The Devil’s” reception in the Middle West. Not one, but two of the largest hotels in the city were needed to accommodate the crowds.

“The Reckless Sex” New Comedy Made by Christie

Al Christie is said to have given strong proof of his versatility in comedy creation in “The Reckless Sex,” a two reeler which soon will be published by educational exchanges. Christie personally directed this picture in which Dorothy Devore, Earl Rodney, Moly McGowan and Ward Caulfield appeared.

Opening scenes show a baseball game on the beach with the players girls in cabaret attire. The Dorothy Devore disguises herself as a college youth to accompany the youth she has secretly married to his home. Later she is seen disguised as a policeman. There is a cabaret scene said to be the largest ever used in a comedy, three different sets of costumes being used in the few moments that this portion of the picture is flashed on the screen.

Federated Exchanges Sign For Thirty-Nine Comedies

Close Convention by Closing for Monte Banks and Hallroom Series and "Dangerland," New Selig-Warner Brothers Serial

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 22.—The Federated Film Exchanges of America wound up its annual convention signing with the Selig and Warner Brothers for "Dangerland," the new serial which is declared to have cost $500,000 to produce.

It was also announced that thirty-nine comedies were obtained under the terms of new contracts—thirteen Monte Banks comedies and twenty-six Hallroom comedies.

The contract to publish Special Pictures comedies and scenarios was terminated.

Delegates Depart for Home Enthusiastically

Franchise holders who departed for their home cities after concluding their business here were enthusiastic over the accomplishments of their organization in the first year of its existence and the outlook for the coming twelve months.

It was indicated that additional announcements of important product obtained for distribution would be made at a future period.

Joseph L. Friedman, president of the Federated Exchanges, who returned to his home in Chicago direct from San Francisco on account of the press of business, mirrored the enthusiasm of the individual franchise holders upon his arrival.

Great Things to Come

"Not a member of our organization had a complaint," he declared, "every man is more than satisfied with the rapid strides forward during the past year and predicts even greater success for the coming year.

"If there was any doubt about the feasibility of our plan it has long since been dissipated. Exhibitors everywhere have expressed their appreciation of the high quality of the product we have offered. In a few months, the word 'Federated' has become nationally known as a guarantee of sure fire features and short subjects, "I feel that we have just begun—that the next twelve months will see a greater step forward than the past year."

Distribution 100 Per Cent

 Shortly before the convention at San Francisco convened, the New York and Canadian franchises were allotted, giving Federated one hundred per cent distribution.

It is stated that there were twenty-seven producers of features and short subjects in San Francisco seeking an outlet for their product through the Federated organization.

Barrie's "Peter Pan" Will Be Screened by Laskys at Near Date

Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, is in Hollywood, where he will spend six weeks at the Lasky studio.

He will make preliminary arrangements for the production of "Peter Pan." Sir James M. Barrie's masterpiece. Sir James will come to this country in July, Lasky announces, and will devote several weeks to collaboration with the director and continuity writer on the scenario for the production. The identity of the director and leading woman is not divulged.

Thomas Meighan will go East to do Booth Tarkington's story, "The Conquest of Canaan." Lasky, following "The Conquest of Canaan" Meighan will do Peter B. Kyne's "Cappy Ricks."

Pathe's Arkansas Branch Moved to Memphis, Tenn.

To better serve the exhibitors in the territory through increased railroad facilities, Pathe Exchange, Inc., has moved its Little Rock branch to Memphis, Tenn., where it is now located at 302 Mulberry street.

C. C. Vaughan, manager of the Little Rock branch, and the entire sales force will continue to work out of Memphis. The same territory covered from Little Rock will be operated out of Memphis. This includes all of Arkansas, Western Tennessee and Northern Mississippi.
Schade Finds Exploitation Is Big Asset in Smaller Cities

Ohio Theatre Man Strives to Get Novelty in His Stunts Rather Than Make Use of the More Expensive Forms of Advertising

Occasionally the exhibitor in the smaller city or town expresses his opinion that exploitation is "all well and good" for the metropolitan theatre man, but a waste of money in the less thickly populated places.

George J. Schade, owner and manager of the Schade theatre, Sandusky, O., takes an opposite view of the matter. Manager Schade caters to a population of 20,000 people and has three motion picture theatres as competitors and frequently a fourth. It would take the eloquence of William Jennings Bryan to make him even doubt that he gets a good break in the patronage because of his exploitation.

He doesn't go in for the expensive stunts, but strives for novelty. When he has an attraction booked that does not suggest inexpensive exploitation he passes up the stunt stuff but increases his newspaper advertising to make up for it, although he does not regard the increased space quite as effective as the special novel stunts.

The Schade theatre holds the sub-franchise in Associated First National Pictures in Sandusky and the method employed by Mr. Schade in handling four of the attractions distributed by this company in the past two months may furnish suggestions to other exhibitors.

"Dinty," the Marshall Neilan production starring Wesley Barry, furnishes a demonstration as to how Mr. Schade meets extraordinary opposition. "Way Down East" was booked into one theatre, and the other three houses booked the strongest attractions they could get. The picture was booked for four days.

He organized a "freeclerked" newsboy competition. It consists of offering prizes to the boy able to exhibit the greatest number of freckles. The newspapers treated the contest kindly. Mr. Schade used but eighty inches of newspaper advertising for the entire four days. He used special cutters and cut-outs in his lobby and posted an unusual amount of billing, and used a cut-out throwaway. Despite the opposition, and the fact that the picture had been booked twice as long as the usual attraction, attendance at every performance was pushing close to house records.

Mr. Schade found ideas he could utilize for "My Lady's Latchkey," starring Katherine MacDonald, in the press sheet, and hung his lobby with assorted keys of various designs and sizes. He inserted advertisements in the lost and found columns asking the return of a lost latchkey to Miss MacDonald at the theatre address. His newspaper advertising totaled 160 inches, just double the amount used for "Dinty," but the attendance records on the first day exceeded that of any previous Sunday in the history of the house.

Harold Lloyd in "Number Please!" was the comedy on the same bill with Lionel Barrymore in "The Master Mind," and this fact furnished Mr. Schade with his inspiration for the special stunt to be used in connection with the showing. On the day the bill opened the girl ushers of the theatre started early on the house telephones to call upon numbers chosen at random. When an answer was received they would say "Number, Please!" and then followed it quickly with the remark, "Harold Lloyd with the Master Mind is at the Schade theatre." This one particular stunt Mr. Schade regards as being the most effective that he has employed.

"The Heart of a Fool," the Allan Dwan production, did not suggest any stunt exploitation that appealed to Mr. Schade, so he utilized another theory of exhibiting that he had found successful on previous occasions. It is a system of creating the impression of an extremely dignified production without saying so in many words.

He paid particular attention to his newspaper advertisement. It intended to hold it down to seventy-five inches. No lobby display was used but an extra large number of stands for twenty-four sheets was utilized. One sheets and three sheets were also used. The very restraint he showed in his advertising accomplished the purpose at which he was aiming, that of impressing the public with the fact that it was a production out of the ordinary.

Attendance on the opening day threatened to break the house record and the day following, a Monday, the number of paid admissions was far greater than the average Mondays.

Chicago Boasts Two of Finest Theatres
In the World in the Tivoli and Senate

Beautiful Neighborhood Cinema Palaces Added to Long List of Houses

Two palatial motion picture theatres have thrown open their doors to waiting public in Chicago within the past ten days. They represent a total seating capacity of 7,800 and cost upwards of $3,000,000.

That there was a "waiting public" was clearly demonstrated to the owners of these two beautiful cinemas the Senate played to more than 9,000 people and the Tivoli's total attendance for the first day was 11,500.

The Senate theatre, located at Kedzie and Madison street, was opened for business on Feb. 12. It is the seventeenth theatre in the chain of the Lerner and Trinz circuit and quite outshines its predecessors. It is very artistic in design and finish and up to date in every respect.

It is the largest house in the L. & T. chain and has a seating capacity of 3,100. The main floor has 2,300 seats and an excellent view of the screen can be had from any part of the immense auditorium.

Comfortable, Homelike Theatre

A hundred-foot arch spans the proscenium and a forty-foot marble staircase leads up from the spacious foyer. Deep carpets cover the floors and the richness and draperies give the theatre that comfortable, homelike appearance characteristic of the Pantheon, the L. & T. house located on Sheridan road. The color scheme of the Senate is pale mauve, lighted with crystal domes.

Beautiful paintings line the walls of the foyer and every detail looking to the comfort of patrons has been faithfully carried out. The ventilating system is a departure from ordinary ones. Pure air is forced into the theatre from the ceiling, approximately eighty feet from the ground floor. It is thrust through floors, eliminating all "draft" and any possibility of recirculation of used air.

A forty-piece orchestra augmented by a mammoth pipe organ furnishes the musical accompaniment for the pictures. The Senate opened with the Paramount-Monarch feature, "Brewster's Millions," and a well balanced program of short subjects. "Lying Lips," the Thomas H. Ince production on the Associated Producers list, is the attraction this week.

Tivoli Seats 4,500 People

The new Balaban & Katz house, the Tivoli, at 43rd st. and Cottage Grove ave., was dedicated Feb. 16. It represents the last word in theatre construction and architectural beauty. The theatre was sixteen months in construction and cost, it is said, $2,000,000. It seats 4,500 people.

One is impressed at once upon entering the grand lobby with the beauty and magnificence of the theatre. The architectural plans for the Tivoli were executed by the Chateau de Versailles, here the peace treaty with Germany was signed. From the street a window on the first floor is a clear height of sixty-five feet. Above the sidewalk, radiates a wonderful brilliancy of lights which create a beautiful air of romance.

The draperies, ceilings and general artistic touches throughout the theatre are beautiful.

The lobby will hold 1,500 people and will serve as a perfect waiting room for patrons.

Interior Beautifully Decorated

Inside the theatre proper the ceiling is broken into units by a triple ceiling effect. Above the balcony there is a sunburst dome 65 feet in diameter, tinted in silver, while over the mezzanine floor is a dome edged by a hand decorated frieze. The forward part of the ceiling is domed and offset on each side by a rosette which tops the design leading into the pillared organ settings.

Spacious aisles break up the immense floor expanses and ample room is given between rows of seats for anyone to pass in or out. Comfortable boxes and loges extend in a horseshoe effect clear across the theatre. These are easily reached from the main entrance.

The general architecture of the Tivoli is after the style of Louis XVI and of the early Renaissance type, with late Italian treatment. Magnificent mural paintings and hundreds of oil paintings add to the beauty of the place.

The Tivoli is equipped with an automatic lighting system which produces amazing effects. The ventilating system is the latest type.

One of the finest organs made and an organist of wide repute on the West coast has been brought to Chicago to play it. Jesse Crawford introduced many novelties on the opening night and his playing received rounds of applause.

An orchestra of forty pieces, led by Nathaniel Finston, late of the Capitol theatre, New York, furnished a splendid program during the opening week. The feature was "Dangerous Business" starring Constance Talmadge. Appropriate short subjects were part of the opening program.

Schaeffer New Chief Of Boston Territory
For Famous Players

S. R. Kent, general manager of distribution, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, announces the appointment of George Schaeffer as district manager in charge of the Boston and New Haven Exchanges, with headquarters at Boston. He succeeds H. G. Ballance, now general sales manager.

Mr. Schaeffer has been identified with the film industry for a number of years and has a fine record of constructive achievement. He has been office manager at the New York exchange, where he is succeeded by Paul J. Swift. Mr. Swift has been branch manager at Omaha and Herbert Krause is named to succeed him there.

Data Indicates Reduction in Juvenile Delinquency in U. S.

N. A. M. P. I. Says Those Seeking to Show That Films Are Detriment to Children Are Indulging in “Loose Talk”

Juvenile delinquency in the United States is decreasing.

Paul R. Smith, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, with these figures formed on the basis of its investigations in the N. A. M. P. I. asserts that those persons who seek to show that motion pictures are an unhealthy influence for youthful morals are in a "lot of loose talk unsupported by facts.

The National Association further states that, while more children are patronizing the motion pictures each year, statistics indicate that the proverbial "bad boy" is improving. The association does not claim that pictures are actually responsible for this, but it does call attention to the fact that in the films evil-doers are punished, thus establishing a moral that cannot be overlooked.

"Hearts Aflame" Will Be Historical Screen Tale

June Novak in "Hearts Aflame," the special six-reel production which marks the initial 1921 issue of Clark-Cornellius Corporation, will be followed by a series of pictures at stated intervals of the same standard as this, according to announcement from the producers.

The theme of the story relates to the romance of a young American girl who lives through the trying times of the revolutionary period and is east among the big men of the day and the sympathizers of this country's enemies, which include the former queen of England. The picture will be distributed on the state right plan. S. J. Rollo, general manager of the company, is arranging for trade showing of the production in the various centers of the company.

Sells El Dorado Mission

EL DORADO, ARK.—B. Davis has announced the sale of his interest in the Mission theatre to B. Clark, E. C. Robinson and W. F. McWilliams. The latter is a former owner of the Mission and has recently been engaged in the theatre business in Fayetteville.

Buys Theatre in Utica

UTICA, N. Y.—J. William Mackie, who has been a partner in the New Orpheum theatre, has purchased the South street, has sold his interest to Harry Lumberg of Niagara Falls, N. Y. Lumberg is now sole owner.

Remodel Iowa Theatre

CEDAR FALLS, Ia.—C. A. Williborg of Dyersville, owner of the Regent theatre, has begun extensive remodeling of his Cedar Falls theatre. L. H. Erekson will continue as manager.

Reopen Elk River Theatre

ELK RIVER, MINN.—The Elk theatre, which was damaged by fire a month ago, has been completely repaired and redecorated and has been opened to the public.

Open Columbus Phenix

COLUMBUS, GA.—The new Phenix City theatre, completed recently at a cost of $20,000, has been opened to the public. Roy Martin is the owner and manager.

Adds New Picture Machine

GIBSON CITY, ILL. — George Woolcy, manager of the Princess theatre, has installed a second projection machine.

Six Units Are Making Two Reel Westerns at Universal City Plant

Six producing units are making two reel Westerns at Universal City. Hoot Gibson is directing himself in "The Cactus Kid." Out on the desert toward Newhall, Jacques Tourneur is working coupled with a company headed by Leonard Clapham. The director is filming a series of two reels, the first of which will be called "Trail Hardness."

Edward Kull, who divides his directorial ability between serials and westerns, now is directing Eileen Sedwick in "The Heart of Arizona."

Song Is Written for Tieup with Joan Film

A tieup that will embrace practically every department, music and 5-10-25-cent store in the country, has been arranged between Joan Film Sales Company and Jerome H. Remick Company, music publishers of New York, in connection with the new Joan state right publication, "Anabel Lee."

This five-reel production is based on Edgar Allen Poe's classic poem and deals with the love of a humble fisher boy of the New England wealth, aristocratic girl. Jack O'Brien carries the male lead and Lorraine Harding takes the feminine role. The song, "Anabel Lee," has as its authors Mehlinger and Meyer, and it is said to be already on its way to popularity.

"The Idol of the North" Next Dorothy Dalton Film

 Paramount states that "The Idol of the North" is the title of the Dorothy Dalton picture which was filmed under the working title, "The Teaser." R. William Neill directed. Miss Dalton appears for the first time in nearly two years in the type of role in which she won her greatest reputation—that of the Western mining camp heroine.

Civic Theatre for Texas

EDINBURGH, TEX.—The Chamber of Commerce has reported the raising of $7,000 for stock in the $14,000 theatre they will build here. The theatre committee is composed of A. J. Ross, W. H. Gosage, E. E. McKenzie, M. A. Green and J. W. Heaceok.

Plans Pottsville Theatre

POTTSTOWN, PA.—William B. Shugars and associates plan the erection of a $250,000 theatre on the site of the Slater theatre in North Centre street. It will seat 2,200 patrons.

Takes Dodge City Option

DODGE CITY, KAN.—H. A. McClure, formerly of Dodge City, now in the theatre business in Bakersfield, has taken an option upon a 50-foot lot, planning to erect a theatre in Second street.

Changes Summer Location

SUMNER, ILL.—F. L. Holman of Xenia is moving his motion picture outfit from the Piper building to the second story of the Smith building.
THE FEATURE LENGTH SLAPSTICK COMEDY has progressed beyond the experimental stage. That there is a definite demand for that type of entertainment is an established fact. Yet two exhibitors reporting in the "What The Picture Did For Me" department of this publication results obtained with a current attraction of this class state that the picture scored a triumph in one city and a failure in the other. In each report the phraseology was of superlative nature.

Neither exhibitor submitted specimens of the advertising used for the attraction. Were inspection of this possible the apparent inconsistency doubtless would vanish. A patron expecting drama is not likely to relish the vigorous humor which pleases thoroughly the man beside him who came to the theatre prepared and determined to laugh heartily at just that style of entertainment. Advertising which indicates clearly the type of entertainment offered attracts patrons who like that type and performs at the same time the equally important function of eliminating from the audience those who do not. That kind of advertising assures complete satisfaction of the entire patronage insofar as the picture is qualified to satisfy.

THE "TOPICS OF THE Day" on the opening program of the Tivoli theatre, Chicago, included considerable footage devoted to messages of congratulation addressed to Balaban & Katz, proprietors, and to the people of Chicago. A splendid example of trade courtesy. Also a better advertisement for the Tivoli theatre and for "Topics of the Day" than could have been purchased with money.

THE MODERN EXHIBITOR has added the camera to the list of equipment necessary to the successful operation of the theatre. He has found that stories submitted to newspapers are given greater space and prominence when accompanied by a photograph, whether or not the photograph is used to illustrate the story. "Seeing is believing," and newspaper men are traditionally doubtful of showmen's veracity. The camera need not be of the most expensive design nor of such size as to render upkeep prohibitive. A picture of post card size is as convincing and, if well taken, as satisfactory for purposes of reproduction as a larger and more expensive one. The photographic proof of the written or spoken word is the essential thing. One well illustrated theatre story in the position which the newspaper make-up man naturally accords it is worth the price of the camera which assures its publication.

"THE LURE OF CROONING Wafers," "Gene Pollard" and "Plus Wax Tax" are typographical errors recently encountered in newspaper advertisements submitted by exhibitors. They are selected as representative examples of careless proof reading prevalent in a degree out of keeping with the evident care exercised in the writing of copy and the arrangement of matter. The best advertisement falls materially short of accomplishing the purpose for which it is intended when a glaring error is made in composition. Careful reading of proof and checking of corrections is an essential part of good advertising. Clean copy wins confidence.

ANOTHER PAGE OF THIS department is devoted entirely to photographs showing the excellent "Passion" presentation produced entirely with local talent by an exhibitor who was not afraid to make an experiment. More than one page would be required for detailed discussion of the importance which rightly attaches to that successful test of the local talent argument advanced by this department. The too familiar "Presentation is too expensive" should be heard no more in the trade. Inexpensive amateur talent can be used successfully. Exhibitors with the future of the motion picture at heart will read and profit by reading that page.

ON ANOTHER PAGE THE business woman's popularity contest being conducted by the Omaha (Nebr.) Daily News is described. The winner of that contest is to go to California, spend two days as the guest of Viola Dana at the Metro studios, and return to Omaha, all expenses being paid. But the management of the Sun, Moon and Muse theatres of Omaha is going to pay for the trip. N. N. Frudenberg, director of advertising and publicity for the theatre, writes that a ten-fold return upon the investment in the form of newspaper publicity and increased patronage during future engagements of pictures starring Miss Dana is expected. That is constructive advertising. The theatre management that lays thus in advance a foundation for future business need give ear to no gossip of "depression" or "re-adjustment." It is well equipped to weather even a genuine industrial tempest.
Showmanship Suggestions in the Stills

"NEW YEAR'S EVE IN BABYLON" is the title given the scene in "A Small Town Idol," Mack Sennett's Associated Producers, Inc., six-part comedy feature in which the dance shown in the above still takes place. The information and the still gives exhibitors basis upon which to plan in advance an interlude or prologue which should not be found difficult to stage and should prove effective in enhancing presentation of the production.

"WING TOY," Shirley Mason's forthcoming Fox production, offers opportunity for a distinct novelty in presentation. The still gives ample material for working purposes. Though Japanese children can be employed in only a limited number of instances, white children will serve satisfactorily, this arrangement allowing for a newspaper publicity campaign which should bring big results.

THE elaborate night life scene from "The Greater Claim," Alice Lake's forthcoming Metro vehicle, provides opportunity for experiment with a type of presentation that has been suggested for such occasions and should prove useful with many attractions if found practical. The scene does not open the picture, hence the usual objections to the interludes obtain. An interlude which does not interrupt the picture but is staged during its progress constitutes the suggestion. Stage lighting of the color which the scene is tinted or its complement sufficiently subdued may be used, the setting being arranged so as to seem a part of that used in the production, in this case several tables properly placed serving the purpose. Singers and dancers in a modernized bacchanal disclosed by lights brightening in pace with the fading-in of the scene and closed off in like manner, orchestral accompaniment applying to picture and presentation alike, complete the proposed feature. The idea should be tested. Aside from its possible value in enhancing this somewhat difficult type of production, it gives no little promise of offsetting in considerable degree the detrimental effect of censorship.

CLYDE COOK'S Fox comedy, "The Jockey," presents that comedian as in the above still, providing opportunity for exterior exploitation of various types. A comedy jockey mounted upon a likewise comedy race horse is the obvious suggestion. If this is utilized after protracted preparation through a teaser campaign there is every reason to believe that extensive publicity may be gained and voluminous patronage induced for the showing. That a short subject worthy of program position is worthy also of exploitation is no longer questioned by exhibitors who have made the test of practice.
Lacey's Spectacular "U. P. Trail" Lobby Draws Capacity Business for Majestic Run

"SPECTACULAR" is a strong word. It is not often that it can be used in description of an exploitation campaign. Still less frequently can it be properly applied to a well standardized a thing as a lobby display. The present instance is a notable exception.

The results that followed use of the lobby display reproduced photographically upon this page by Frank Lacey, manager of the Majestic theatre, Portland, Ore., were, according to report, in every sense spectacular. The use of "hundreds" instead of the stereotyped and consequently dubious "thousands" in the statement received, that "hundreds were turned away at each evening performance," gives strength to the report.

Examination of the photographs submitted adds to the impressiveness of the event as reported. Such examination discloses the fact that time and money were devoted to the composition, and it is significant that Mr. Lacey's comment upon the whole is to the effect that "any exhibitor can achieve like results by devoting time and money to the effort."

The miniature stage which Mr. Lacey utilized as the central figure of his lobby merits particular attention. It is reproduced in considerable size for that reason. Look it over.

The exhibitorial judgment will form immediate estimate of the actual cost involved. It will also calculate the amount of energy required for the production of such a display. Together the considerations constitute what may will esteem a formidable obstacle in the way of the man who otherwise would follow the example established.

Such should not be the viewpoint. The important fact that a thing worth doing invariably lies outside the line of least resistance should be more widely recognized. Experiment will effect that recognition in every case.

There has been argument to the effect that experiment is dangerous. Such argument, a lazy man's "alibi" misconstrued as logic, is the most restrictive influence bearing upon development in theatre management. It should be permanently discarded by the exhibitor whose aim it is to keep in the front rank of showmanship.
"Outside the Law" Draws At Salt Lake City Kinema

"Outside The Law," Priscilla Dean's Universal production, drew well at the Kinema theatre, Salt Lake City, Utah. The statement is made with assurance despite the fact that no report from the theatre or other source is available as substantiation.

The photograph reproduced here, showing the street view of the Kinema during the engagement, is ample proof. And the photograph is the sole and sufficient material available.

The Oriental effect which was gained in preparation of the theatre front for the run is no doubt in considerable degree responsible for the patronage disclosed. That effect has been demonstrated productive in so many instances as to defeat any attempt at enumeration.

The motion picture successes of the past that have scored heavily at the box office, considered in the mass, present conclusive proof that advertising of the type is mighty in selling power. "The Virgin of Stamboul," "Kismet," "Sahara," "The Yellow Typhoon," "A Tokio Siren," the list might be extended indefinitely.

The Kinema chose well in making plans for its frontal display. The prison wall effect which figured so prominently in the New York opening of the production in discussion is likewise powerful in appeal. Perhaps the most productive arrangement that can be made in behalf of the picture consists of a combination in which the two types figure with equal prominence. Certainly some exhibitor will try out that method.

An interesting instance of economy in showmanship to which did not attach the evil effects usually encountered in attempts to combine economy with advertising is pictured in the accompanying illustration, reproduction of a photograph showing the front of the Blackstone theatre, Detroit, Mich., during the engagement of "Madame X," the Goldwyn feature. The picture practically tells its own story.

The specially prepared spread which forms the central figure of the composition represents a not inconsiderable outlay, but in comparison with that which would have been involved had the entire display been made up of special material it represents genuine economy.

The stock material with which it is combined gains considerable strength through the balance obtained by the combining of materials.

Whatever saving was effected was without detrimental effect upon the whole. That is one instance of an-harmful economy in advertising. They are few.
Opening of the prologue used by Samuel Lesselbaum, manager of the Stadium theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., for the showing of "Passion," the First National attraction starring Pola Negri. Note the strong effect gained without use of special scenery.

Amateurs Satisfy Prologue Demand

Amateurs chosen from the list of patrons who had won song contests previously held at the Stadium theatre Brooklyn, N. Y., were used with complete success in presentation and exploitation of "Passion," the First National attraction, which Samuel Lesselbaum, manager, reports as breaking box office records.

Accompanying illustrations show the presentation and exploitation in detail, concrete proof that prologue use of local talent as suggested in these pages is entirely practicable.

Of the six persons employed for the Stadium presentation not one was a professional actor. The point is important to exhibitors who adopt the Lesselbaum prologue as a guide in planning presentation for the picture at their theatres.

A Corner of the Stadium lobby showing the manner in which period furniture was used to create an atmosphere calculated to effect without seeming to do so the essential transition from modernity to the period of the play.

The same players who participated in the presentation went about the neighborhood with a neatly designed sign atop the sedan chair to inform the many whose attention undoubtedly was drawn to the strange procession as to the details of the engagement.

A View of the production will provide the exhibitor with such lines as are necessary for the staging of the presentation, and similar lines, in this case the more classical phraseology serving best, can be delivered at vantage points in the exploitation tour.
"Faust" and "Aida" Win Applause as Presentation

UN-ALLIED presentation is undoubtedly one of the important developments of the near future. At Grauman’s, Los Angeles, at Balaban & Katz magnificent new Chicago theatre, the Tivoli, and at the Strand, Brooklyn, N. Y., this form of stage feature has been demonstrated successfully. The remarkable reception accorded two such features recently staged in the latter theatre merits general attention.

"Aida" and "Faust" were staged by Ed. L. Hyman, managing director, in connection with "The Devil," the Associated Exhibitors production, and "Mamma's Affair," Constance Talmadge’s current First National attraction, respectively. Accompanying illustrations show two phases of the latter presentation.

Specially made film text was used in both instances, readable screen information as to the plot being introduced to lead up to the first and make the transition to subsequent numbers. Solid color and gauze drops with colored lighting effects were used for "Aida," and special settings for "Faust."

The selections were confined to the most widely known arias from the operas, and the "Faust" feature, staged subsequently to the "Aida" tableau, proved an even greater sensation in popularity than its predecessor, interfering seriously with the program schedule of the evening performances.

There are many arguments for the presentation feature without relation to the screen production, and probably as many against. The question is one which cannot be decided at once but will work out its own answer.

Treadmill Race Prologue Precedes “County Fair”

ACCOMPANYING photographs show the stage of B. F. Keith’s 81st Street Theatre, New York, as it appeared during the showing of “The County Fair,” the Maurice Tourneur production distributed by Guy Crosswell Smith, and the house staff in the costumes adopted for the occasion. Though the photographs do not show it, a commendable policy was followed in the handling of the production.

The treadmill prologue has been repeatedly demonstrated effective. Despite the cost involved in its use it has invariably exercised such stimulating influence upon ticket sales that it has taken its place in the list of practical presentation properties.

In addition to its eminent suitability in that connection it is decidedly important that it be classified as actually a part of exploitation.

Presentation is readily divided into two classes, that which merely accentuates the strong points of the production in question and that which may be utilized effectively in direct advertising of the picture.

The horses and riders in the presentation feature serve a no less important purpose upon the street in spreading the news of the engagement and the essential impression that it is considered by the management worthy of the extensive plans made for its screening.

That sort of news, spread effectively as it is in this manner, produces patrons. It not only implants passively the information but creates a genuine impulse to attend the theatre.

“In Old Kentucky” profited greatly by this form of presentation-exploitation. “The County Fair,” likewise a proper subject for its use, should experience like results.
A Real Showman
Writes His Story

R. A. Grombacher, manager of the Liberty theatre, Spokane, Wash., experienced remarkable success with his admirably conducted engagement of "Kismet," the Robertson-Cole production. His letter describing the six day run and the preparatory campaign, a showmanship story of exceptional interest, together with illustrations made from photographs accompanying the letter, follows in its entirety:

EXHIBITORS HERALD,
Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen:

We have just completed an engagement of Otis Skinner in "Kismet," a Robertson-Cole production, and for the benefit (if there be any) of the exhibitors who may follow us in putting over this picture, we desire to inform the trade through your trade paper as to just how we exploited this picture.

Otis Skinner in "Kismet" stands out as the biggest picture, and the biggest drawing card, the Liberty theatre of Spokane or any other theatre of Spokane has ever had or shown.

You will find under separate cover a photograph taken at 9 P. M. the fourth night of the showing of this picture. We opened the picture on Monday, January 31st, and the photograph was taken Thursday night, February 3rd. The picture closed a perfect and successful run of six days on Saturday, February 5th.

An advanced advertising campaign was started two weeks before the picture with an inside display as shown in the background of photograph No. 2. Incense was burned to give the Oriental atmosphere to the people in advance.

Two days before the opening of the picture the lobby was dressed as shown in pictures No. 2 and No. 3. Incense burned in the lobby during the entire engagement. Picture No. 4 shows the outside display. Picture No. 5 shows how the ushers were dressed, also the page boy. Photograph No. 6 shows our stage setting for the prologue.

There were five people in the cast; namely, Mr. Guy Sheehan as "Hajj," Miss Virginia Cooper as "Kut-al-Kulb," Miss Gladys Kenyon as "Norgis," Mr. Geo. Shallenberger as "Muzzin," and Mr. Chas. Brady as "Gaoler."

The prologue was opened with the dance, Mr. Shallenberger doing "The Vision of Salome," followed by Mr. Sheehan singing "Land of Allah," a song written by Oliver G. Wallace, who is now at Grauman's Rialto theatre, Los Angeles.

This was followed by Miss Cooper singing "Kismet," and closing the prologue with an Oriental dance by Miss Kenyon. The prologue was very elaborate and effective, gaining the praise of everyone in Spokane. It was the largest prologue ever attempted by a motion picture theatre in Spokane and the most remarkable part of it is the fact that our stage is but ten feet deep, center. We used a drop curtain and special lighting effects to carry it out complete.

The entire presentation was under the personal direction of the writer. The outside lobby and the inside lobby were
The two excellent illustrations presented with this account of an innovative and highly productive exploitation stunt practically tell the story. Examine them.

Then thank E. Metzger, manager of the Strand theatre, Creston, Ia., for the idea.

Mr. Metzger constructed and installed the necessary apparatus three days prior to the initial screening of "Unseen Forces," the Sydney A. Franklin Mayflower production distributed by First National. The invitation to ask questions of the strange looking box that hung in mid-air above the box office was prominently displayed.

People did ask questions. And they received replies as promptly or as if they had addressed an individual standing alongside them in the lobby. The drawing showing the mechanical construction of the device indicates clearly the arrangement by which this was made possible.

The general nature of the replies is important. In every case where it was possible to so word the answer as to bring in the words, "Unseen Forces," this was done, as: "Where is my sister?" Ans. "Making a date with her friend to take her to the Strand to see "Unseen Forces.""

"How does this box work?" Ans. "It does not work. "Unseen Forces" do the work."

The local newspaper carried genuine news stories aggregating two columns in discussing the stunt. And the general comment aroused by the device doubtless reached even more people than were informed of it through this medium.

The work is wholly original with Mr. Metzger, and in point of adaptability it is of a quality not often surpassed. It can be used with the attraction Mr. Metzger used or with a number of others now available, such as "The Riddle: Woman," "The Unseen Witness," "Lying Lips," "Dead Men Tell No Tales," "The House of Whispers," and others, as well as with many that will be published.

It is well to preserve the idea for use at whatever time and with whatever attraction it is considered appropriate. Though essentially a "one-time" stunt, it can be made to assume sensational proportions during the period of its usefulness.

When the Lisbon theatre, Cincinnati, O., exhibited "Dangerous Business," the First National Constance Talmdage vehicle, an artist drew a huge letter congratulating the star upon her recent marriage, and a table was placed in the lobby, where patrons could sign their names. Two thousand signatures were obtained, and voluminous comment was created.

Able Exploitation Fills Palm Theatre

The following communication, headed "A Child For Sale" and "What If I Did For Me," accompanied a newspaper advertisement unfortunately mutilated beyond possibility of reproduction, details in exhibitor's phraseology the campaign which resulted in five days of big business for the Palm theatre, Pueblo, Colo.

"A Child for Sale," a state right picture sold to me by the Arrow Photoplay Co., smashed all records for five days. Used a vigorous newspaper campaign for about two weeks to opening and on Sunday, the opening day, I had to stop selling tickets five times. It was by far the biggest Sunday in the history of the house and held up as each day's receipts increased over the other.

During the run I placed in the newspapers the ad enclosed, and in addition one headed "Bring the Kiddies," and found that it rendered a service to mothers and enabled them to see the picture without having to care for their children and brought them out in the morning and afternoon.

As an added attraction I put on an eight-year-old boy singer three times a day for the run, singing "Who Wants a Baby?" which went over very good.

Trusting that you can get other exhibitors know what pulling power this picture has and book it, I remain, very truly yours,

C. H. ERNST, Palm Theatre, Pueblo, Colo.

Y. M. C. A. Aids Theatre In “Go and Get It” Drive

Exploitation admits of broad but important classification under two heads, picture advertising and theatre-picture exploitation. The latter, having all of the good points of the former and several additional ones, is logically the preferable variety.

“Go And Get It,” Marshall Neilan’s First National attraction, has produced much of this better class exploitation.

The remarkable “Go And Get It” drive executed by the management of the Rialto theatre, Hamilton, O., in cooperation with the Y. M. C. A. of that city, is an excellent example of theatre-picture exploitation. The photographs reproduced in illustration of this story give a definite impression of the results obtained.

The treasure hunt which has been used elsewhere in behalf of this and other productions was made the central feature of the Rialto campaign. The secretary of the Y. M. C. A., when approached by the management with a view to enlisting his assistance in the campaign, readily saw the advertising which the Y. M. C. A. would receive and the possibility of adding memberships through that advertising.

The treasure hunt was organized along the usual lines and four thousand boys participated. An accompanying photograph shows the procession on its way to the theatre, a juvenile “ape man” adding a touch of novelty in the costume made up for the occasion.

In this case the Y. M. C. A. secretary was not satisfied with merely assisting. When he saw that the campaign was going to prove a success he straightway organized a second treasure hunt for the benefit of the younger members of the organization, who could not compete with the older boys in the search. Thus a secondary campaign was superimposed upon the original.

As straight picture exploitation the stunt is obviously meritorious. But it has a greater value than that which pertains exclusively to the Marshall Neilan production.

When that attraction has become a memory, no matter how pleasant, the effect of the campaign will continue to benefit consistently the Rialto box office.

The membership of an organization which can turn four thousand boys into the field in an organized search must be great. And every member of that organization unquestionably feels more warmly toward the Rialto than prior to the campaign. Passive as the feeling may be, it is such as to materially affect their choice of theatres upon a given occasion.

The class of citizens that normally supports such an organization is also properly influenced by such an event. These persons, usually not very ardent in their support of any theatre, are worth “going after.” Much good can come as a result of their effectual conversion to the screen form of entertainment. By the same logic, much harm can and frequently does follow upon any incident which antagonizes them.
Two Weeks of Exploitation Record for Two-Day Run

William Epstein, manager of the Strand Theatre, Laredo, Tex., established what the trade will doubtless concede a record when he conducted an exploitation campaign for two weeks in advance of the two-day showing of "Go and Get It," Marshall Neilan's First National attraction. Mr. Epstein's argument against a longer showing was that experience had convinced him that he would experience as great patronage, measured by dollars and cents, in two days of capacity business as in four of less concentrated attendance. That statement is of general interest.

Mr. Epstein opened his campaign with a page advertisement in which merchants co-operated, the theatre holding a considerable portion of the space. But he carried the co-operation further than the publication of the newspaper.

As soon as the paper was off the press he had a slide made of the page and showed it upon his screen at every performance. He followed through on this idea by watching subsequent merchant advertising and giving special mention of the sales held during the period, gaining by that device permission to place in the windows of such stores a card reading, "Here. Now. You can 'Go and Get It.' See it at the Strand later."

As far as available window space was concerned, Laredo was blanketed with "Go and Get It" advertising a full week before the opening day. But the drive was not confined to windows or newspapers.

A donkey was utilized for street purposes, and in this bit of originality Mr. Epstein evolved an idea which may be used by any exhibitor who plays the production. The accompanying illustration shows the comic exploitation figure as it appeared upon the streets of the city, the natural appetite being stimulated when the animal's patience failed by the comments of pedestrians who watched from the sidewalk its meandering progress.

The front of the theatre was also given especial attention, another illustration showing the effect gained by use of stock paper.

Mr. Epstein's report, at the conclusion of the engagement, was to the effect that in the two days he had experienced business that more than justified the expense of the two weeks of exploitation.

First National's Morality Prologue Script Has Merit

The morality play, a dramatic form peculiarly fitted for prologue purposes, is suggested by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., as most effective for presentation of "The Oath," a still from which is reproduced herewith in illustration of the practical working script contributed to this department by that organization.

The outline is presented herewith as received, the best and most useful exhibitor aid contributor since the adoption by First National of the "Showmanship Suggestions in the Stills" idea.

The use of a dance pantomime, re-enforced with appropriate and effective lighting, as a prologue to a presentation of "The Oath," the R. A. Walsh special which is one of Associated First National's "Big Five," is suggested naturally by the leading themes of the story.

One of these themes is the havoc wrought in the lives of men and women by jealousy. The second theme, quite as carefully worked out as the first, is the result of the conflict between love and wealth in a woman's life.

Though all ends well for the heroine of the drama, Minna, her sorrows and sufferings are brought upon her, first, by her jealousy, and second by her election to hold fast to her father's riches even at the sacrifice of a true love.

It is this current in the picture story which furnishes the inspiration for the pantomime prologue.

The accompanying illustration, showing the interior of the boudoir of Minna's luxurious home, suggests the setting that should be used—a setting that can be arranged without too great an expense, but one that can be made an effective background for the dance prologue.

Four persons would be required. Only two of these, however, need be dancers—those who personate Love and Wealth. The other two would represent the heroines of the drama, and the spirit of Jealousy.

The course of the prologue would run as follows:

At the rise of the curtain, the heroine would be discovered sitting on the settee in the foreground, her manner indicating mental anguish and perplexity. The set should be lighted as for evening. Accompanied by suitable music, the figure of Love, a young and beautiful girl, enters, observes Minna's conflict of soul, and goes to her, putting her arms around her and endeavoring to persuade her that Love can answer all her doubts.

After whispering a moment in Minna's ear, Love begins her dance—a dance that fascinates Minna and by degrees convinces her that Love is right. The happiness in her manner and upon her face indicates that she has learned to be guided by Love, when the music suddenly changes, and Wealth enters from the opposite side of the stage. Love starts back in dismay; Minna watches the glittering, dazzling figure of Wealth (a male dancer to play this part) as he approaches her with assurance in his manner and the smile of conquest on his face. His hands full of jewels, he begins a triumphant dance around her. Love in vain tries to attract him. Minna is lost in the spell of Wealth's wooing. Love retires, crushed to a corner of the stage and Wealth clasps Minna in his arms, dancing with her in exultation around the stage.

The Love theme in the music now re-asserts itself. A sudden feeling of loneliness and fear steals over Minna. The face of Wealth changes. She sees him as a green-clad light. She recoils from him, and begins wildly searching for Love again. Wealth flies her with renewed temptations, and the Love theme rises again from the orchestra, in an endeavor to drown the Love theme. But in vain. Love rises from where she had been lying and resumes her dance as Jealousy, a figure clad in green and swathed in green light appears upon the scene.

As Minna and Love find each other again, Wealth assails them both with fresh blandishments. Love's attention is attracted; she hesitates, for a moment, to listen to the plea of Wealth, and Jealousy, stealing to Minna's side, whispers words of poisonous suspicion in her ear. In a jealous fury, Minna drives Love from her, and embraces Wealth with wild abandon, while Jealousy stands mocking and rejoicing in his work. But in a moment Wealth tires of her, and wanders away. Minna struggles. He roughly throws her off, and follows the beckonings of two or three girls who, standing in the doorway, motion to him to follow them.

Minna sinks down weeping passionately, and Jealousy disappears. A moment's pause, and Love re-enters to comfort Minna and remain with her. There is a joyful reunion between the two to the strains of the Love theme, and the lights fade out as the picture begins.

Leon Bamberger, newly appointed Paramount exploitation man at the Minneapolis, Minn., exchange, practically converted the Minneapolis Automobile Show into a mid-season "Paramount Week," gaining for Paramount pictures greater publicity during the six days of the event than could have been obtained by any less thorough methods.

Executives of the show applied to the Paramount exchange and Finkelstein & Ruben for pictures which might be shown as an added attraction. Phil Reisman, branch manager, assisted by I. H. Ruben of Finkelstein & Ruben, immediately assented to the proposal. "The Life of the Party," "Mary Ellen Comes to Town," "On With the Dance," "John Petticoats," "Black Is White," "Male and Female" and "Crooked Streets" were loaned for the six days, one each day, being selected because they were not playing in the territory.

Then Mr. Bamberger made use of the Minneapolis Daily News. This paper had featured for a considerable period a mysterious man known as "Mr. X," whose services in any capacity were always available to any subscriber of the paper upon demand. Mr. Bamberger sent a telegram asking him to serve as one of the judges in the star contest which was simultaneously announced and received an immediate reply of acceptance.

Then the newspapers published the invitation of the auto show executives, the Paramount exchange and Finkelstein & Ruben to visitors, an invitation to impersonate the stars whose pictures were being shown on the evening of their visit, cash awards and tickets good for admission to Finkelstein & Ruben theatres being offered the winners.

The response was enthusiastic. The Monday and Wednesday night winners, impersonating Roscoe Arbuckle and Mae Murray, are shown in accompanying illustrations. An even more striking impersonation, that of Gloria Swanson, was received too late for reproduction.

Newspapers featured the contest almost as prominently as the auto show, each day publishing accounts of the previous night's developments.

The event as a whole warrants the term applied, a mid-season Paramount Week. And the best part of the idea is that it can be applied to any similar event, at any season of the year, and in any section of the country.

Exploitation Stories
Showing the Trend of Advertising Activity Recorded by the Lens

THE Oriole theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., operated by Edelhertz Bros., was formerly a church. As a motion picture theatre it has produced results on a par with the Hamilton and Atlantic theatres, also operated by the owners of the Oriole. The showing of "The Penalty," the Goldwyn production, was so well patronized as to warrant the photographing of the front as the matinee crowd was leaving.

C. EPSTEIN, manager of the Anderson theatre, Anderson, S. C., made up an admirable lobby display for the engagement of "Twin Beds," Mr. and Mrs. Carter DeHaven's First National production, by setting up a model boudoir as seen in the accompanying photographic reproduction. The simplicity and economy of the stunt detracts in no way from the effectiveness achieved, rather strengthening the general appeal by reason of the realism accomplished. The stunt is obviously adaptable. The opportunity for free advertising will not be missed by the enterprising merchant. The additional ticket sales brought about by the display were 100 per cent profit.

CONVINCING confirmation of the frequently made statement that brilliant front lighting is the most effective form of abstract theatre advertising is given by the accompanying reproduction of a night photograph showing the Regent theatre, Wichita, Kan., during the showing of "Passion," the First National attraction. The cost for current and upkeep involved in a lighting system, including outlining of theatre lines, is insignificant in comparison with the effect obtained. O. K. Mason, manager of the theatre, constructed a special framework for the lobby frames, superimposing the title and a cutout of the star sixteen inches in front of a red silk background illuminated from the rear. The entire front was thrown into dark red radiance by skilful arrangement of illuminants and screening, a color wholly in keeping with the title of the play and doubtless inducive of voluminous box office sales.
EXHIBITORS HERALD

THREE performances were used in the Madison theatre "Kismet" prologue, the stage setting used being a reproduction of one of the harem scenes in the picture as suggested in the page of "Showmanship Suggestions in the Stills" conducted by this department.

SID GRAUMAN, proprietor of Grauman's Million Dollar theatre, Los Angeles, is probably foremost among American exhibitors in the use of un-allied advertising stunts. When "Paying the Piper," the Paramount production, was being shown at Grauman's the management staged "20 Minutes in Pershing Square," a characteristically elaborate Grauman stage feature bearing upon a popular Los Angeles location, and added a personal appearance of Mrs. Gladys Wetherell, whose recent abduction was a front page sensation in the newspapers of the nation. The photograph shows the crowds drawn to the screening of the picture by the many varieties of exploitation instituted, a typical Grauman advertising drive.

APoster broadside used by the Luna theatre, Brooklyn, N.Y., during a recent program run. No attempt is made to obtain artistic effect but mass values are depended upon.

CHARLES B. RAYMOND, Paramount exploitation representative, drew the attention of all passing the Majestic theatre, East St. Louis, Ill., when he placed conspicuously upon the sidewalk the barrel seen in the above production. The sign caused pedestrians to look into the barrel, where they discovered a large apple from which a bite had been taken, the apple being designated as "Adam's Apple." The identification of stunt with attraction is so definite as to warrant widespread adoption of the idea and elaboration upon the original achievement.
Frudenfeld’s Letter Ads
Practical Novelty Stunt

N. N. Frudenfeld, director of advertising and publicity for the Sun, Moon and Muse theatres, Omaha, Neb., used in behalf of a recent engagement of “The Saphead,” the Metro production, a letter-to-the-public series which is worthy of general study. The reproductions of newspaper advertisements used in the series presented herewith are selected from a collection of some twenty that were published in the Omaha newspapers.

Mr. Frudenfeld’s copy took the form of a personal letter from “Sunny Ray” to various individuals and organizations of importance in the city. Various topics were discussed, and various forms of introduction employed, but in each instance, either in the first letter or in the follow-up that was published the following day, allusion was made to the comedy that was being shown at the Sun theatre.

Read any of the reproductions presented.

Note the novel sketches interjected to hold attention and to break up the solid appearance of the composition.

There is more in each communication than advertising. There is in each enough matter to warrant such a letter to the parties concerned. It is more than probable that any of them receive less important communications in every mail.

But the allusion to the comedy was the important thing. In making it so skilfully as to effect its definite registry, without becoming so obvious as to lose the interest of the reader, Mr. Frudenfeld scored a genuine achievement in copy writing.

The straight advertisement which is also reproduced is typical of Sun theatre advertising. It was maintained throughout the letter campaign for the obvious purpose. It is significant that it was not, however, definitely identified with the letter series.

The idea is thoroughly sound and easily adaptable. The expense involved is not sufficient to make its use prohibitive except in rare cases. The probable results are great.

Of equal value to the advertising exhibitor is another Frudenfeld enterprise conducted in cooperation with the Omaha Daily News. By the arrangements made the winner of the Business Woman’s Popularity Contest being conducted by that newspaper is to make a trip to the California studios of the Metro Pictures Corp. where she will be the guest of Viola Dana for two days, the entire expense of the journey being paid, according to the announcement, by the newspaper, but in reality by the Sun theatre.

Coupons clipped from the newspaper are used in the voting and another arrangement has been effected whereby votes may be cast at the theatre. Mr. Frudenfeld’s comment upon the arrangement being to the effect that a tenfold return upon the investment is expected, due to the stories of the trip which will be printed and the heightened popularity of the star.

Both enterprises are what has been slantly but expressively dubbed “big league stuff.” Pursuing the analogy, “Mr. Frudenfeld is batting something like .350 and cutting none of the bags!”

Auto Drivers should drive carefully.

Chief Exhibition and Mr. Hansen also other Gentlemen.

Do you think it is safe to allow an auto driver to laugh? Yesterday I saw a standing fat lady and Mr. Hansen and retired on auto coming down Farnam street going from one side of the street to the other. As the auto got near I heard laughter. I asked driver to stop. He stopped the auto and asked what the great idea was. The driver said “Just as I got to the corner of 6th and I thought of that great comedy, the Saphead.” Now playing at the Sun O Theatre and turned laughing and lost control of the car. Then what do you think happened? Driver started laughing and hit the auto more on 3 Point blame building. I went as he must have seen.

Laughing Omaha helps Howard Omaha

Gentlemen

I think your slogan “Howard Omaha is great! I have had a pretty tough time on your town this week on account of the Saphead at the Sun O Theatre. Everywhere I go everyone is laughing. If I couldn’t quite figure out how laughing Omaha could help Howard Omaha last night I was in deep thought and came to the conclusion it is because the Saphead at the Sun O Theatre is a great comedy and is making everyone laugh. I know you make all people laugh so why is it not good for massasje Omaha movement? I shall write up your Harry Goldberg, Ray of the Sun O Theatre and thank him for helping Howard Omaha.”

Yours,

Sunny Ray.
Tivoli Teasers Important
In Pre-Opening Campaign

The Tivoli theatre, Balaban & Katz’s magnificent new Chicago house, is reported as accommodating over 11,000 patrons on the opening night, Feb. 16, between the hours of 5 p.m. and midnight. Observation of the preparatory advertising campaign and the opening permits of no questioning of the figures.

The pre-opening advertising campaign, culminating in a special color section, published by the Chicago Evening American on the day of the opening, was admirably conducted in its entirety and brilliant in some of its phases. The teaser campaign reproduced herewith was not the least capably managed detail of the whole.

The six displays, the originals being in two-column width, were used from Monday to Sunday of the week preceding the opening. On Sunday the identity and location of the “most wonderful place in the world” was disclosed, and the opening announcement was promised for the following day.

From that time on larger and larger space was taken each day until the publication of the special section, which contained color photographs of the interior and exterior, stories and statistics of its construction, a business history of the firm of Balaban & Katz, and advertisements of those who had participated in the work or supplied equipment.

At 7:00 p.m. on Wednesday night the street in front of the theatre was blocked. Sale of tickets was stopped several times during the evening, and at 10:10 several hundred people stood in the lobby awaiting opportunity to enter.

The pre-opening campaign was a splendid advertising accomplishment. The teasers are typical of the whole.

STUNTS

A masked man in dress clothes, bearing upon his back an advertisement for the Fox serial, “Fantomas,” was used as street exploitation by the Mount Morris theatre, New York, a boy following the man and distributing masks and back cards which were donned by youths in the neighborhood who entered into the spirit of the enterprise and joined the procession.

“Some day everybody will know. Why Not Now?” These were the catchlines printed in red on post cards and sent to every woman in San Bernardino, Cal., by the Strand theatre. Another space on the card gave the title of the play, “The Truth About Husbands.”

Cuts of Estelle Taylor and Marc MacDermott were utilized by merchants of Elizabeth, N. J., in five pages of advertising prior to the showing of “Blind Wives,” the Fox production in which the stars are featured, at the Liberty theatre.

Gerald Hoag, manager of the Majestic theatre, Ann Arbor, Mich., saved 25,000 programs and put over an unusual advertising stunt that was the result of an emergency when Edward C. Beatty, manager of the W. S. Butterfield theatres, switched bookings for the Majestic and set in a week showing of “The Kid” too late to stop the printing of the programs. Mr. Hoag splashed the notice of the change in red ink upon the cover of the programs and sent them out. They proved more effective as advertising than specially printed programs might have been expected to do.

A green extra, published by the “Lancaster (Pa.) Intelligencer” on the day before the opening of “Madame X,” the Goldwyn production, at the Fulton Opera House, formed the climax of an advertising campaign which included use of all available billboard space, street car banners and special presentation accompanied by an orchestra engaged for the occasion.

A woman impersonating not too realistically the Eve of popular tradition distributed apples for the Majestic theatre, East St. Louis, Ill., each of which bore a sticker reading, “In Adam’s Time the Apple was ‘Forbidden Fruit,’ but in 1921 Who Wants To Be Ancient? Partake Generously of Cecil B. DeMille’s ‘Forbidden Fruit.’ It Is a Pleasant Sensation.”
New York Notes About Film Folk
By J. B.

New York City, Feb. 22, 1921.

Things are humming on Orienta Point and adjacent territory where D. W. Griffith's production "Dream Street" is being pictured. There are about three hundred Mamaroneck maidens who believe they could play the lead if Mr. Griffith would only stop long enough to give 'em all a try-out.

Big interests are having a survey made in Mamaroneck on a piece of property in Mamaroneck Avenue on which will be erected a new theatre. It is to be known as the Acoustic theatre. Probably selected the name because it's so near the Sound.

Cheat Whitney, who formerly lived in the "Home town by the Sea," says "Although Mamaroneck is close to the water, it has no crime wave." Watson, the needle, quick.

Alar Nelson of Stockholm arrived in New York last week. Mr. Nelson is here to study American studio methods and direction. He expects to spend three months in the industry. On his return he expects to build a studio and produce five-reel features.

Well, well! Not so bad, What! Foster Moore, sales manager for Jans Pictures, Inc., left on a flying trip to Montreal Wednesday, Feb. 16, on a business trip for the company. Not a bad notion to go to Foster. Many of the boys would like to slip over the border with you. Here's how:

One of the hardest working men in the industry is A. H. Franschke, publicity representa-tive of Realart, and we are glad to note that he is making inquiries relative to the A. M. P. Unique Lunchen Is Given the News Hounds

The trade press of New York was treated to a novel luncheon at the First Field Artillery Armory, at Broadway and Sixty-eighth street, on February 11, where scenes for "Salvation Nell," the Whitman Bennett production, were being taken. It was advertised as the "last free lunch" to be given by Al McGovern. Free was served in the saloon and on the floor of the armory was an East Side street set with McGovern's famous cafe on the corner.

Free lunch was served inside, as in the old days, consisting of sandwiches, pretzels, pickles and beets, and there was beer to keep the atmosphere correct, but it was of the "near" variety. Sid McGovern served the wet goods from behind a bespotted bar apron and the crowd helped itself to the lunch. Pauline Starke, who plays the lead in the forthcoming First National attraction, helped Whitman Bennett entertain the hungry news hounds.

Sunrise Takes Larger Quarters on March 1

Sunrise Pictures Corporation will move to larger quarters in the Godfrey building, 729 Seventh avenue, New York, on March 1. The company will occupy the fourth floor. The new offices will combine the state right department and the New York exchange.

The company's first production, "The Price of Silence," starring Peggy Hyland, will be published shortly. All of the company's pictures will be issued in the New York territory through its own exchange. Other territories will be state righted.

Walsh-Fielding Prepares
Next Picture for Issue

Walsh-Fielding Productions, Inc., has taken a suite of offices on the third floor of the building at 112-118 West Forty-fourth street, New York. The company is preparing its next feature production, from the pen of Mary Murillo. In this production two prominent Broadway stars will be featured.

The finishing touches on the titling and editing of the present production are being completed by Thomas B. Walsh.

WHITMAN BENNETT FEEDS THE PRESS

While taking scenes for "Salvation Nell," a Whitman Bennett-First National production, starring Pauline Starke, the trade and newspaper representatives were served free lunch at the saloon of Sid McGovern which was one of the sets used.
James Young Will Direct Kipling's First Film for Pathé Distribution

James Young, director of "The Devil," the Associated Exhibitors' production starring George Arliss, will direct for Pathé the first Rudyard Kipling production, "Without Benefit of Clergy." Young was signed for this important task by M. C. Levee, vice-president of the Robert Brunton studios. Randolph Lewis, Pathé representative who assisted Mr. Kipling in the preparation of the scenario for "Without Benefit of Clergy," is now on the coast.

Paul Brunet of Pathé, through whose efforts Mr. Kipling was won over to the screen, readily approved the choice of Mr. Levee.

Lewis in Advisory Capacity

The production end of "Without Benefit of Clergy" is in the hands of Robert Brunton and his organization. Randolph Lewis, who absorbed fully the idea of Mr. Kipling during his visits to the master story teller, will act in an advisory capacity in connection with production.

Before James Young was selected, the entire field was scoured. Mr. Young was chosen for divers reasons. Paramount was the success attending his direction of "The Devil."

Produced in India

Secondly, Mr. Young produced in India, which experience will be invaluable to him in the making of "Without Benefit of Clergy."

The beginning of Mr. Young's career dates back virtually to the first big picture ever produced in this country. After a career of many months producing comedies, beginning with John Bunny and continuing with Sidney Drew, Mr. Young made his first outstanding picture.

Majority of Goldwyn Stories are Original

Company Adhering to Policy of Producing Tales by Noted Authors

That Goldwyn Pictures Corporation is adhering to its announced policy of producing original stories by America's foremost authors, is revealed by an analysis of the list of new subjects selected for production shortly at the Culver City Studios.

Eleven Stories Originals

Of the nineteen stories named, eleven are original screen material furnished by members of the Goldwyn Eminent Authors group, and by other noted writers who have been engaged to contribute to the Goldwyn program, including Rita Weiman, Katherine Newlin Burt and Alice Duer Miller.

Two original photoplays recently have been completed, Gouverneur Morris' "A Tale of Two Worlds," Gertrude Atherton's "Don't Negotiate Your Wife," Rupert Hughes' "Dangerous Curve Ahead" is nearing completion, making fourteen originals either completed or in prospect.

It is also announced that a number of the authors will remain at the studios during the production of their work.

Lists Original Stories

Katherine Newlin Burt is writing an original scenario. Alice Duer Miller is also going to do an original for Goldwyn.

"The First Born" Scores Successfully on Broadway

"The First Born," Robertson-Cole special starring Susie Hayakawa, which opened at the Strand theatre, New York City, January 30, has completed very successful runs at the Strand, Brooklyn, and at the Strand, Newark, N. J.

This production is based upon the play by Francis Powers, and was directed by Ira De Campeau. The Brooklyn papers commended warmly the acting of Hayakawa and the supporting cast, as well as the general artistic and dramatic effect accomplished by the picture as a whole.

Will Book "East Lynne" Through Regular Channels of Distribution

Hodkinson Declares Advent of Any Extraordinary Production Is Test of Sincerity in Policy Of Complete Cooperation

W. W. Hodkinson Corporation has issued a denial of rumors that the company will withhold from its general program Hugo Ballin's "East Lynne." Varied stories are current that Hodkinson will play this picture on percentage or will send it out as a road show. While Mr. Hodkinson feels convinced that "East Lynne" is worthy of any distinction which can possibly be shown to it by some special method of distribution, it is contrary to the recognized policy that has built up the Hodkinson clientele to keep any particular production from his regular associates.

Is Test of Sincerity

"The keystone of the Hodkinson policy," says its pilot, "is to establish the most cordial relations of mutual profit between our organization, as the distributor, and the exhibitors who book our pictures. To our steadfast maintenance of this policy do we credit our growth and the increasing number of the exhibitors who are affiliated with us and who retain that affiliation year after year.

Consequently, the advent of any extraordinary production such as Hugo Ballin's modernization of 'East Lynne' is really a test of our sincerity in the policy of complete co-operation which we have always avowed. The fact that 50,000,000 people know the story from the novel by Mrs. Henry Wood or the various dramatizations that have been played all over the world, the fact that Hugo Ballin has turned out a finished picture that will rank with the greatest screen classics, the fact that we are surrounding this master production with the greatest advertising, publicity, exploitation and exhibitor service campaign in the history of our business—none of these facts would warrant our departure from our recognized policy of 'playing straight with the exhibitor all the way through.'"

Policy Is "Square Deal"

"We have often said, in the trade press and in other mediums, that the Hodkinson policy is based on a square deal all around. We have always meant that sincerely. We have proven that sincerity before and we are proving it again in this instance. "It is only when every distributor will realize that his greatest asset lies in the continued good-will of the exhibitor—based on continued mutual profit—that we shall have the stability and general welfare of our industry approximate the earthly millennium which we should all be striving to attain for the fourth greatest industry in the United States. "'East Lynne' will be distributed on our regulation contracts and in the regulation manner."

King Vidor Claims To Have Originated Film Tinting Idea

King Vidor has issued a statement to the effect that he has suddenly stumbled upon an important scientific fact in film tinting that he believes will have strong bearing upon this angle of the motion picture industry.

His production of "The Sky Pilot" will be, he claims, the first photodrama ever made in which every foot of film is colored in tones and tints true to nature. He also attests that he has successfully induced moods in the drama through color.

He has used various tints to accord with the times of the day and night in which the scenes were shot—soft violet for the early morning, pale yellow for the post-sunrise time, amber for noon and night interiors, and deep blue for the moonlight scenes. Exteriors have verdure tinted with delicate green and snow scenes are a steel blue. Varying shades of pink and green were used in expression of joy or sorrow. Vidor claims that the screen patronage will be unconscious of the coloring to the extent that it will not distract from the force of the theme. He announces that he is now on the lookout for a musician who can synthesize and synchronize music and color.

Eddie Polo Back From Serial Work in Cuba

Eddie Polo, the Universal serial star, and his company, have arrived at Universal City from Cuba, where they have been filming episodes for the forthcoming serial, "The Seal of Satan." The Polo company, headed by P. McGowan, serial director, has been in the West Indies for eight weeks.

It is expected that Polo's trip to the West Indies will be supplemented later by a tour of South and Central America.

Rothacker Plant in West Ready in April

President of Company Will Leave for Coast in March

Watson R. Rothacker, president of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, will be in Los Angeles the first week in March to make preliminary plans for the opening of the second of his world-wide chain of film laboratories.

The new Rothacker laboratory at Melrose and Gower streets will be equipped and ready for business early in April.

Mr. Rothacker leaves Chicago for Los Angeles on the California Limited March 1. He will be accompanied by Charles E. Pain, vice-president of the Rothacker company. They will stop at the Ambassador hotel.

Following the opening of the Coast plant Mr. Rothacker will go to New York to complete plans for a third laboratory there.

He said for Europe on the Olympic June 25 to build a fourth laboratory in London.

Re-Issue of Bible Play Will be Pathe Venture

All copies of Pathe's hand colored Biblical feature, "Behold the Man," will conform to the print used during the exhibition of the production at the Apollo theatre, New York, where on four successive Sundays the picture played to capacity audiences.

In its revised form, "Behold the Man" will be forwarded to each of the thirty-two Pathe branch offices, and publication arrangements will be announced shortly.

Beban Wins Success
In Tour of Country
"One Man in a Million" Booked Over Fox Circuit in Greater N. Y.

"One Man in a Million," the special starring George Beban and distributed by Robertson-Cole, won the same success in Cleveland that it enjoyed in the other cities in the South and Middle West, according to reports which have reached the distributing corporation.

Indicates Record Week
The Metropolitan and Strand theatres of Cleveland wired Robertson-Cole: "In face of openings here and the personal appearance of stars, people of Cleveland jammed the Metropolitan and Strand theatres Sunday to see George Beban and witness his picture, 'One Man in a Million.' Patrons unanimous in praise of picture and Beban's work. Everyone feels we will have a record week's business."

Mr. Beban is now heading westward from Cleveland and will have the management of St. Louis and Milwaukee before he reaches Chicago for a run of three weeks, after which he will go in the direction of the Rockies. Beban is in each city in which he appears and he has been met by a reception committee, has been welcomed by the mayor, and in most cases he has made several addresses while in the city.

Booked Over Fox Chain
In the New York territory the picture has been booked over the Fox Greater New York Circuit. The following theatres will show "One Man in a Million": Ridgewood, Bedford, Islip, Brooklyn, Garden, Jamaica, Audubon, Cretona, Star, Academy, Nemo, Standard and the 103rd St. Theatre.

In Indianapolis when Mr. Beban appeared at the Circle theatre, which seats just a little over 3,000 people, the management was forced to fill every aisle in the theatre, so great was the popular demand for entrance.

Selznick Announces Two Features That Will Be Ready For March Issue
For March, Selznick announces, the publication of two productions, "You Can't Kill Love," with Hedda Hopper and William B. Davidson in the leading roles, and "Gilded Lies," starring Eugene O'Brien. The first production is listed for issue on March 10, and the O'Brien picture on March 20.

In the cast of the former are also Charles Gerard, Betty Hilburn, Maurice Costello and Warren Cook. The story was written by Michael J. Phillips and picturized by Edward J. Montague. Burton was attached.

In "Gilded Lies" the cast includes Martha Mansfield, Frank Whitson, George Stewart, and Arthur Donaldson. John Lynch wrote the story and the R. Cecil Smiths prepared it for the screen. William P. S. Earle directed.

Educational Books Practically Every Big Theatre Circuit in United States

With the signature on a contract with Southern Amusement Company, controlling the Huley-Lynch theatres in Texas and Arkansas, Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., announces that it has completed booking practically every circuit of importance in this country and Canada.

Dallas was one of the last of the educational exchanges to open, and changes in management delayed the completion of contracts in that territory, but according to the New York office that section now will show the same "over the top" business as the rest of the country. Provision for these first runs will make the pictures available for the remainder of the territory.

To Add Other Houses
Included in the theatres which will show the entire Educational product are the Queen in Houston, Victory in Waco, Queen in Galveston, Royal in Little Rock, Ark, Olympic in Wichita Falls, the Queen, Old Mill and Hippodrome in Dallas and all the houses in San Antonio. Assurances have been given that these comedies will be played in the $800,000 Palace theatre which will open in Dallas about July 4.

The arrangements made also include adding a number of other theatres to the list just as soon as they have exhausted the short subject bookings that they have under contract.

In calling attention to the vast number of big chains that have booked its products Educational points to such as: the Rialto-Rivoli-Criterion, the Mark Strand Circuit and the Marcus Loew theatres in New York; Balaban and Katz and Jones, Linick and Schaefier in Chicago; the A. S. Black and Gordon groups and every circuit of importance in all of New England; the Stanley group of houses in Philadelphia; the Rowland and Clark chain in Pittsburgh and its section; the Tom Moore and the Loew houses in Washington; the Jake Wells theatres through Virginia; the Lynch houses in Georgia, Alabama and Tennessee.

Shown in Canada
The Levy theatres in Kentucky; the Latham houses in Cincinnati; the Loew chain in Cleveland; the Lieber houses in Indianapolis; the Saenger circuit in Louisiana, Mississippi and Florida; the Skouras houses in St. Louis; the Kunsky circuit in Detroit; Ruben and Finkelstein in Minneapolis; the Butts circuit through Michigan; the A. H. Blank chain in Iowa and Nebraska; the Frank New man theatres in Kansas City; the entire group of Denver theatres; the Swanson and Nolan houses in Utah; Turner and Dahiken in California; Grauman's theatres and the Gore Brothers-Lesser houses in Los Angeles, and the Jensen and von Herberg circuit through the Northwest. In addition the entire Educational product is shown in all of the sixty Allen theatres through Canada.

Independent Will Offer
Pete Morrison Westerns

A new series of two-reel Westerns, starring Pete Morrison, former Universal star, will be placed on the state rights market soon by Independent Films Association, according to announcement by Eddy Eckels, president and general manager of the organization, who has just completed negotiations with the Morrison forces whereby Independent Films will receive the exclusive distribution of the stories.

The Morrison specials, the first of which is titled "The Long, Long Trail," and is now in its final stages of production at the Independence City studios, Hollywood, Cal., are said to introduce to the screen something entirely new and different in Western pictures of this footage and are stories based on true-life situations. They will be issued at the rate of one a month, it is announced.

Requisites of Perfect Film

John S. Woody Says That Cast, Star, Continuity, Direction, Settings and Photography Constitute the Essentials for Making Such a Production.

John S. Woody, general manager of Reelart, in the following interview expresses his ideas concerning the production of the "perfect picture."

We have arrived at a time now when the general public patronizes, views and approves a picture on its general merit. The era when the success of a production depended solely upon the personal popularity of some single member of the cast, is past.

A careful scrutiny of present day conditions shows that the organizations which are succeeding in a large way, are those which are directing their efforts toward 100 per cent productions and which recognize fully the importance of all factors of the art; the story, direction, cast, personnel and general production quality.

Given the foundation of an excellent story; possessing those desirable traits which lend themselves readily to exploitation; adapted to the screen by experts in scenario construction and continuity; portrayed by casts of which every individual is an artist of real ability, and proven popularity; directed by men who are thoroughly in sympathy with their work and past masters of screen expression; clothed in settings which, in every way, preserve the illusion of the story—given all these competents, plus high quality photography and laboratory work and you have what nearest approaches a perfect picture.

It is pictures which measure up to this standard which Reelart is striving to make and we pride ourselves that we are succeeding in this endeavor. We do not claim to be the only organization which has adopted this policy in the production of pictures, nor do we claim that we are offering the only good pictures on the market, but we do feel that our productions offer the highest possible box office value to exhibitors.

In signing up well-known writers and playwrights, Reelart has evidenced its recognition of the necessity for handling only the highest type of stories obtainable. The casts for every picture released by Reelart have been most painstakingly selected and each part is portrayed by some artist especially selected because of his or her ability to render an exceptional characterization. Our directors are all of established reputation.

One of the angles which a great many producers seem to overlook is the vital importance of attractive business-getting titles. Of course, where these titles are simply repetitions of the names of famous books or plays, the producer assumes no credit because of their attraction value, but Reelart has been particularly fortunate in most of its titles, for example, "The Furnace," "Something Different," "Oh, Lady, Lady," "Ducks and Drakes," "She Couldn't Help It," etc.

This thought that the entire picture is the thing is not some new brilliant idea which has just occurred to me or to others. It has been a fact which has just occurred to me or to others. It has been a fact which has for some time been recognized, and first among those in the industry to arrive at this conclusion were the thinking exhibitors of the country who are very close to their patrons and are quick to sense the trend of popular opinion.

Settlement Made in Jans-Exhibitor Suit
Plaintiff Claims Theatre Man Failed to Abide by Contract

Settlement has been reached in the suit brought by Herman Jans, president of Jans Pictures, Inc., and Jans Film Service, Inc., against M. Machatt, manager of Crescent theatre, Perth Amboy, N. J.

The plaintiff in his charges claimed that Machatt booked "Madonnas and Madmen," for a week on a redemption basis. That $428.20 was turned over to the Jans company for the first two days. That Machatt failed to comply with the terms of the contract and endeavored to shield the picture. Jans, however, refused to leave the theatre with his production.

Jans then charged that Machatt withheld the box office receipts for the remainder of the week for the entire run.

The case was called before Judge Free- man Woodbridge of the New Brunswick district court. Machatt's attorney, however, offered settlement for the balance in full and costs. This was accepted by Jans.

"Servant in the House" is Heralded as Strong Box Office Attraction

H. O. Davis' production of the Charles Rann Kennedy play, "The Servant in the House," is said by its distributors, Federated Film Exchanges of America, to be one of the strongest box office features of the year. The play has been on tour with great success for more than ten years.

The production has been carefully made with a view to retaining all of the qualities of the original play that have made it one of the greatest road shows. Bookings for extended runs have been received from all parts of the country.

Dr. Pauline, Hypnotist, Signs With Educational

Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., has announced that it has signed a contract with J. Robert Pauline, the hypnotist, for the distribution of a series of two-reel comedy dramas to be made by him. The first of these pictures will be delivered on June 15 and others monthly thereafter.

While the new pictures are roughly classified as "comedy-dramas," it is promised that they will be a novel product. It is said that the hypnotic element will enter into them strongly, but that their chief aim will be to create laughs.

Hail "The Mistress of Shenstone"
As Most Ideal Frederick Vehicle

Robertson-Cole shortly will publish "The Mistress of Shenstone." The company states that those who have viewed the picture declare that its artistic and dramatic qualities make it the most ideal vehicle Pauline Frederick has given the public. It is adapted from a widely read novel. Several big dramatic situations have been built up. A worthy cast supports the star. The settings are excellent. The company says these qualities make the production one which is destined to win for every exhibitor.

Is Story of Noblewman
Since the publication of her first picture for Robertson-Cole, "A Slave of Vanity," the company declares the star has become more popular. "The Mistress of Shenstone" tells the story of an English noblewoman. Director Henry King has availed himself of the opportunity to use impressive locations on the West Coast. A palatial home was utilized as the castle of Shenstone.

Roy Stewart in Support
A replica of a famous Cornish inn was erected on cliffs on the Pacific Coast. These irregularities in the topography represented the cliffs of Cornwall. One of the big scenes portrays the heroine and her black and her battle to climb the face of the cliff ahead of the advancing seal. Throughout the picture Miss Frederick wears beautiful gowns and wraps. In her support are Roy Stewart, Emmet C. King, Arthur Clayton, John Willink, Helen Wright, Lydia Yeaman Titus, Rose Gore and Helen Muir.

Jerome Storm Will Direct
Katherine MacDonald Film
Jerome Storm will direct the next picture starring Katherine MacDonald in her tenth Associated First National publication. Upon hearing that Storm was severing connection with the Lillian Gish organization, Manager B. P. Fineman of Katherine MacDonald Pictures Corporation closed a deal by wire with Storm to hurry across the continent and take charge of the MacDonald megaphone. Director Storm arrived in Los Angeles a few days ago and has already started casting for the new production.

Hicks Given Foreign Post by Paramount
Succeeds Lorimore as the Managing Director of Feature Films
John W. Hicks, Jr., assistant sales manager of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has been appointed managing director of Feature Films, Ltd., distributors of Paramount pictures in Australia and New Zealand, according to an announcement made by E. E. Shauer, in charge of the foreign department of Famous Players-Lasky.
Mr. Hicks will succeed Alec Lorimore, resigned. With Mrs. Hicks he leaves on February 17 for San Francisco, where he will board the ventura, which sails March 1 for Sydney.

Is Paramount Pioneer
Mr. Hicks is one of the Paramount pioneers, and his appointment is declared to be a fitting recognition of the services he has rendered the company in the past four years.
The new Feature Films executive began his film career with General Film in 1914 under George Kleine, remaining with that organization until 1917. In that year he went to Kansas City to accept a position under the late A. D. Flintom, district manager for Paramount. His activities in Washington work in connection with the Kansas City, St. Louis, Des Moines and Omaha exchanges.

Former Minneapolis Manager
In 1919 Mr. Hicks was named branch manager of the Minneapolis exchange, where he established a reputation for efficiency and executive ability which won for him promotion as assistant sales manager in July, 1920.
"The appointment of Mr. Hicks as managing director of Feature Films, Ltd., is the first step in plans we have had under consideration for the betterment of the Australian organization," said Mr. Shauer. "Mr. Hicks has made tremendous strides in Australia and New Zealand in the last three years, and today has more than 60 per cent of the total film business in that territory."

Louise Glaum to Star in Next Parker Read Feature
Louise Glaum will star in J. Parker Read, Jr.'s, forthcoming special for Associated Producers. No title has been announced.
It has been announced, however, that Fred Niblo, who made "See, for Read, with Miss Glaum in the title role, and who directed Doug Fairbanks in "The Mark of Zarro," will be behind the megaphone with George DeGroot as head of camera staff. Mahlon Hamilton may play the leading male role.

Lightning Photoplay Service Is Enlarged
Hirsch Named Treasurer and General Manager of New Corporation
Lightning Photoplay Service, New York, organized one year ago, has been enlarged, the new company to be known as Lightning Photoplay Corporation.
Herman Hirsch is treasurer and general manager of the new corporation and Samuel Hasse is president and sales manager. Joe Blott and Sam Merchant head the list of salesmen, while Miss Eleanor O'Brien is in charge of the booking department.
The policy of the company will be to handle only the highest class of productions, according to an announcement just made. "Luxury," a Ruby DeRemer production, has been purchased by the company and is ready for publication.
The Jack Hoxie feature, "The Man from Nowhere," Spotlight comedies and Sport Pictorials also are on the company's program.

Remar”-”b”l”e Business Reported by Selznick
Despite the current rumor of a general business depression throughout the motion picture industry, Samuel Sax, general sales manager of Selznick Pictures Corporation, who recently returned from a ten-day trip to the Pittsburgh branch office, declared that as far as Selznick is concerned business conditions were never better. He emphasized the fact that the Selznick corporation was doing remarkable business with all its productions.

Brilant Completes Continuity for Five-Reel Picture in Forty Hours

What is said to be a record for speed in turning out a working continuity for a five reel motion picture was established by Arthur M. Brilant of New York City, when he completed the story and continuity of "Annabel Lee," a romantic comedy drama, produced by Joe Mitchell Chapelle, the Boston publisher, and published by Joan Film Sales Corporation, in forty continuous hours of work.

Authors Refuse Work

Circumstances played an important part in the work. Finding themselves, through a sudden change in plans, without a story and with an organization of a director and players drawing salary, the producers appealed to several well-known authors but none would promise a script within less than two weeks. They said it was a physical impossibility. Finally Brilant was interested in the proposition and he undertook to turn out a finished continuity under an unusual arrangement.

The arrangement was that besides a fixed sum Brilant was to get a certain bonus for every hour under 144 hours, allowing twenty-four hours to the day, that he saved on the script. The following morning at 8 o'clock Brilant went to work on the story, assisted by two stenographers who relieved each other at half hour intervals.

Uses Three Stenographers

The two girls worked until 5 o'clock that evening when they were relieved by a male stenographer. All through the night Brilant worked without stopping for a moment's rest, until 5 o'clock in the morning when his male stenographer collapsed from the strain.

From 5 o'clock until 9 Brilant did his own typing when the two girl stenographers of the previous day again took up their work. All day they worked at high speed until 5 o'clock when the male stenographer again relieved them. Seven hours later or promptly at midnight the script was finished.

Crandall Exploits Equity-Young Films

Milton D. Crandall, publicity man, has joined the Equity staff.

He will assist in the exploitation of the Clara Kimball Young productions, particularly the last two, "Midchannel" and "Hush." He is now in Dallas, Tex., where he is paving the way for the personal appearance of Miss Young at the Lynch theatres. As a sponsor of motion picture welfare, Crandall occupies another prominent place in the industry. He has actively assisted in defeating censorship. He addressed the Kansas and Ohio state legislatures on several occasions. Recently he spoke at the antiblue law convention in Cleveland.

Owen Moore Feature Big Hit at St. Louis Theatre

"The Chicken in the Case," the current Selznick picture starring Owen Moore, was chosen as the attraction at the opening of the remodeled Pageant theatre, St. Louis, recently, and played to capacity audiences, according to a telegram from Sypros Skouras, proprietor.

France Is Optimistic In Comment Upon the Far East Conditions

R. G. France of Manila, a member of the firm of Wise & Co., distributors of Paramount pictures in the Philippine Islands, has been in New York en route to Manila after a vacation of several months spent in England. France arrived in New York on January 29 and departed on February 3 for Vancouver to embark for Manila.

"When I left Manila last March the motion picture business was most prosperous," he said in discussing conditions in the Far East. "Since arriving in New York I have received cable advices that this prosperity is continuing in so far as the film business is concerned, and I am eager to get back home and get into the harness again.

"The motion picture screen is the one form of foreign entertainment which has made great headway in the Philippines, and American pictures are popular wherever shown. Formerly the natives delighted in cowboy and wild west melodrama, but in the last two years they have begun to show a desire for society and business dramas. Once the process of deflation is completed, I look for greater prosperity in the Philippine Islands, and the motion picture business undoubtedly will enjoy a considerable growth."

Fox Enthusiastic Over Clyde Cook's "Jockey" To Be Published Soon

Advises from Fox Film Corporation state that Clyde Cook will pass under the wire a winner with his newest subject, "The Jockey," not yet published.

The Jockey," it is announced, has broken every booking record heretofore made by a Cook comedy. The Cook comedies are directed by Jack Bystone. In this newest subject, Cook takes the principal part in a comedy horse race and indulges in a boxing match.

Realart Announces Two Available Star Issues

Two star franchise pictures are announced by Realart for immediate publication.

The first is "The Outside Woman," adapted from Philip Bartholomae's stage farce, "All Night Long," and featuring Wanda Hawley, "Out of the Chorus," and Alice Brady's latest picture, based on an original story by Harry Chandlee and William D. Laub, is the other.

William Duncan Completes Serial, "Fighting Fate"

Final scenes for William Duncan's chapter play, "Fighting Fate," have been made on the Mojave Desert. The headquarters of Duncan and his co-star, Edith Johnson, and the Vitagraph troupe of about one hundred players, is at Victorville, Cal. Airplane service connects the party with location and town.

Marjorie Daw, the Nellan star, has gone to New York to play the role of Love in the Famous Players-Lasky production of "Experience" which George Fitzmaurice is to direct.

Lew Cody has begun his vaudeville tour on the Orpheum Circuit.

A co-operative picture making plan has been launched by the Bang Comedy Company with Roy Sanford as director and manager of the new enterprise, "Evidence" will be the title of the first picture. Each member of the company is to share in the profits of the organization's productions, having joined the company with the understanding that no salaries would be forthcoming. Clive De Vinna is the cameraman, Irvin Bacon, star comedian, while the remainder of the cast consists of Helen Holley, Paul McWilliams, Capt. Bingham, Frank Stockdale, the famous dog "Mickey" and E. C. Robinson.

Frank Lloyd, the Goldwyn director, is still confined to his bed by illness.

J. Grues Alexander has been engaged as an addition to the Sessue Hayakawa scenario staff.

Frank Mayo is working in the north woods on "The Magnificent Brute," his forthcoming Universal photodrama. Robert Thornby is directing, Dorothy Devore will be seen in the leading feminine role.

Charles L. Hertzman, director of publicity at Universal City, is rapidly recovering from the illness which has confined him to the Clara Barton Hospital. In the absence of the chief, the publicity department is being run by Malcolm S. Boylan, his first assistant.

William D. Taylor, president of the parent lodge of the Motion Picture Directors' Association for two of its six years life, has been named a third time for the ranking office in the pioneer film organization.

Arrangements are being made to give the disabled soldiers at the Sawtelle Hospital a series of entertainments at which Universal stars will make personal appearances and a recent photodrama showing them in action projected at the same time.

Franklin K. Lane, ex-secretary of the Interior, was the guest of Major Rupert Hughes, at the Goldwyn studios this week.

Harry Arthur, general manager for the West Coast Theatres, Inc., which is the merger of the theatrical interests of Gore-Ramish and Lesser, has returned to Bakersfield, where he will be occupied for another week in the task of aligning the newly acquired theatres into the organization. The new theatres are the California, Hippodrome, Pastime and Bakersfield Opera House. In Bakersfield, and the Sunshine Theatre in Taft.

Richard Marshall has been appointed treasurer of the Ambassador Theatre. He will handle the pastebords at the Ambassador box office assisted by Cleo Wroten. The downtown ticket branch at the Kinema theatre is also under his supervision.

"The Kid" Continuing Triumph at Randolph;

"Kismet" in Fifth Week

"The Kid," starring Charles Chaplin, entered upon its sixth week at the Randolph, Chicago, Sunday, February 20, still going strong, although the house opens at 6:30 a.m. and continues to midnight, and only the feature is being shown.

On the same night "Kismet" opened its fifth successful week at the Ziegfeld in Michigan avenue, where it is showing from noon to 11 o'clock at night. The crowds continue.

Ralph Kettering, statistician for Jones, Linick & Schaefer, states that "The Kid" has already played to 350,000 at the Randolph and will soon pass the half million mark.

Abramson Producing New Film, "Mother Eternal"

Ivan Abramson is engaged in producing a new feature, "Mother Eternal," on the scenario of which he spent nearly six months. The cast is headed by Vivian Martin. Others are Earl Metcalfe, Thurst- ton Hall, Jack Sherill, Vivian Osborne, Pearl Shepard, Cecil Kern and little Ruth Sullivan.
“A SMALL TOWN IDOL” (Associated Producers) is Mack Sennett’s first contribution to the producers’ combination. It is a travesty on the rural drama of screen and stage and Ben Turpin never appeared to better advantage. The comedy is sure-fire and a consistent story is provided the Sennett players.

“GOD’S GOOD MAN” (Stoll) follows the lines laid down in old time melodrama and for that reason may fail to impress many who do not have a fondness for this type of screen entertainment. However it is well acted by an all-English cast of players.

“A PERFECT CRIME” (Associated Producers) is an Allan Dwan production adapted from a Saturday Evening Post story. It furnishes good entertainment and humorously advances a moral that success cannot be gained dishonestly. It is of a popular type and therefore a good audience picture.

“WITHOUT LIMIT” (Metro) is a novel story with an impressive theme. It has been effectively and beautifully picturized by George D. Baker and represents the better type of screen production. Without Limit” is a decidedly worthwhile picture.

“THE EASY ROAD” (Paramount) presents Thomas Meighan in a rather weak and commonplace story whose generally smooth handling is its saving grace. It will probably please Meighan followers and be accepted as light entertainment.

“THE ROAD DEMON” (Fox) offers Tom Mix as a “cowpuncher” automobile racer winning the Los Angeles-Phoenix races on road and speedway. Better in every way than the former Mix features, highly exciting and realistic. Backgrounds of Western scenery extraordinarily good. Clever comedy, and lots of it.

“SEVEN YEARS BAD LUCK” (Robertson-Cole) is Max Linder’s “come-back” to the comedy screen. It is a five reel feature. Novel and original high grade and wholesome, founded upon the theme of superstition. Will be liked everywhere.

“THE GHOST IN THE GARRET” (Paramount) presents Dorothy Gish in a riotously comical comedy-drama. Full of pep and dash and fun with action centering about a “haunted” house and the theft of pearls. A feature that will keep patrons in a gale of laughter and one that will please the youngsters.

“SOCIETY SECRETS” (Universal) stars Eva Novak in a very human story picturing high society with its weaknesses. It should prove an excellent box office attraction inasmuch as its appeal is universal and it has been carefully directed.

“BLACK PANTHER’S CUB” (Ziegfeld) is a powerful and beautifully produced drama starring Florence Reed. It is the first product of the Ziegfeld Cinema Corporation and is decidedly one of the finest pictures of the year. It was made under the skilful direction of Emile Chautard.

“ANNABEL LEE” (Joan) made with a special cast and said to be based on Edgar Allen Poe’s poem, is an ordinary program picture. It has little action and scarcely any heart interest. The direction is mediocre.

“BURIED TREASURE” (Paramount) starring Marion Davies is a Cosmopolitan production presenting a glorified fairy tale with a modern parallel. It is spectacular and attractive to the eye but is without dramatic strength. George D. Baker who directed, made the most of the material at hand.

“WING TOY” (Fox) stars Shirley Mason as a bewitching little maid of the Chinatown colony. An artistic offering having to do with her attempted coercion into marriage with the Emperor of Chinatown and her rescue by a young reporter who loves her. Charming in every way and a picture that will find warm welcome.

“THE BREAKING POINT” (Hodkinson) presents Bevssie Barriscale in a highly dramatic eternal triangle story with effective society setting. The star does exceptionally good dramatic work and wears stunning gowns. An absorbing and entertaining feature that presents a moral lesson to adults. A very good picture.

“THE SAGE HEN” (Pathe) is a mother love story told in pictures placed in the Old West country at the time of the gold rush. One of the best Pathe offerings of the year and played in a clever way by an able cast including Gladys Brockwell, in her best role to date, Lillian Rich and others. An unusually good feature.

“OUT OF THE CHORUS” (Realart) is the latest Alice Brady offering and one of only commonplace value. It will entertain and interest, but will not create unusual comment. The star wears some stunning clothes and the settings are attractive. The story of the marriage of a wealthy man and a chorus lady. Society drama.

“THE TRAIL OF THE CIGARETTE” (Arrow) is the latest of the “Tex” series of detective stories that Arrow is issuing. Reasonably exciting and interesting, although rather confusing. Themed on a murder mystery.

“WHAT’S WORTH WHILE” (Paramount) a Lois Weber production picturing the snobbery of the effete East and a diamond in the rough from the West who teaches his fiancée a lesson. The action is slow and perhaps too psychological where the physical would have been more suitable.

“ROADS OF DESTINY” (Goldwyn) presents Pauline Frederick in a screen version of Channing Pollock’s play based on an O. Henry story. It furnishes excellent screen entertainment and gives Miss Frederick splendid opportunities to display her talents.
BEN TURPIN IN A SMALL TOWN IDOL
(ASSOCIATED PRODUCERS)
A travesty upon the rural melodrama and the motion picture profession. Embellished with elaborately staged Babylonian scenes with comic opera trimmings. Directed by Erle Kenton who has extracted every ounce of fun out of the comedy situations of the story.

"A Small Town Idol," Mack Sennett's first contribution to Associated Producers will undoubtedly prove a good drawing card in any house large or small. Its feature length proportions—it is 6,200 feet long—need not react against it as the comedy is so well maintained throughout the seven reels it does not seem one-half that long.

While it is true there is present much of the old hokum in the way of slapstick comedy there is a consistent story back of it and it is followed through to the end. The scenes in the village church, with Turpin as sexton, are particularly funny. Later he becomes a motion picture star in Los Angeles, when the villain has succeeded in having him run out of town. He has a triumphant return, only to be accused of murder. Angry citizens, headed by the villain, are about to hang him when he is vindicated by his sweetheart's father. The nearlynching bee at the end of the picture gives it the desired punch. It is one of the funniest bits of the feature.

Ben Turpin, as Sam Smith, heads the cast of Sennett players. He later becomes Samuel X. Smyth, the handsome hero of a film company, and it is here some of the most ludicrous stuff is enacted. Phyllis Haver lends beauty and charm to the story, as Ben's sweetheart, Mary Brown. Marie Prevost plays opposite Turpin in his picture escapades and James Finlayson as J. Wellington Jones gives the needed balance as the villain, while Dot Farley as Sam Smith's loving mother has several amusing bits. Charles Murray is cast in a small part as the Sheriff.

"A Small Town Idol" offers infinite possibilities for unusual exploitation. It is a sure-fire, fast-moving and uproariously seven-part feature with the inimitable Ben Turpin busy every minute.

BURIED TREASURE
(PARAMOUNT)
A glorified fairy tale on the triangle idea with a modern parallel, spectacular and attractive to the eye, but lacking in dramatic strength.

SPECIAL CAST IN
STORY OF A BAD EGG
(EDUCATIONAL)
The result of the issue of this distinctly out-of-the-ordinary comedy will be one of the most interesting things in the comedy province to watch hereafter. It is an importation, an English film, and its oddity and decided difference from the American fun picture should be one of the big points in getting it over. There is no doubt but that its humor of titles—characteristically English—will be caught with great relish by the intellectual patron, and no doubt that its lavish setting and lively fun will please everybody. It takes up the story of an American girl in London at the time she is in the market for an English nobleman. She has a notoriously furious temper, and under its lash falls the valet of an impoverished Lord Stonebroke, sent to negotiate for his master as a marriage possibility. The girl seizes upon the servant and drags him into matrimony without listening to his objections. When the identity of the valet is at last discovered, the real nobleman is on the scene and takes his place as the husband.

THE SAGE HEN
(PATHE)

A story of mother love in pictorial terms of the rugged, Western type of opeers. With vivid vignettes in action. Excellent cast, directed with the characteristic skill of Edgar Lewis. A decidedly entertaining feature that should meet with enthusiasm everywhere.

Stories of the days of the California gold rush of the eighties still hold a fascination for Americans, and it was a bright idea that built actor. They portray the love about the locale of that era. The popularity of "Humoresque" has established a standard of comparison for screen stories with this theme. "The Sage Hen," while entirely different, approaches its appeal in many ways. In fact, the patron whose limited intelligence may not permit him to grasp the finesses of "Humoresque," will read the mother love theme more clearly in this story of plain people in rugged lands.

The mother in this story was derided in the world of narrow minds and sharp tongues in which she found habitation and called "The Sage Hen," an Old West term for women of questionable reputation. She was stowed out of town with her young son and thrown with him to save his life when she fell into the hands of Indians. Years later, with her reputation as a girl, a clean woman, married, mothering an orphaned girl, two men come out of her past and jeopardize her reputation's safety. To shield the girl and her son, who are in need, she permits herself to be tortured and tormented. The mystery is eventually cleared and mother love triumphs.

Gladys Brockwell brings a characterization to the role of the Sage Hen that is distinctly artistic and unusual. Wallace MacDonald plays the part of the grown son with agreeable comeliness and skill, and Richard Headrick is a charming little youngster in the childhood scenes. Lillian Huntington, Alfred Allen and Helen Case as Mr. and Mrs. John Rudd, James Mason as Craney, and Albert Morris as Bob complete the cast. All do meritorious work.

Scenes of the picture were taken in Nevada and offer some colorful atmospheric effects. The entire locale is well photographed and the whole is exceptionally good and certain to be received with commendation everywhere. Action is propelled at a rapid rate, suspense is well sustained and photography is artistic.

VANITY PLAYERS IN

OUIJA DID IT
(EDUCATIONAL)

The ouija board's nationwide rage lends a timely theme to this story which will be universal. It is a snappy one-reel mix-up of youth and love in a society setting. Neal Burns and Lauro Steiner are the heroine and hero most concerned and it is their romance that the girl's devotion to the ouija board plays a major part in. The board tells her that George will be her husband. To rid her of the idea that she must obey the board Ted halves his scheme and brings her ultimately to view the situation as he would have her look upon it. It is clean and clever fun of the type demanded by Education and will be liked as a short filler.
MAX LINDER IN SEVEN YEARS' BAD LUCK
(ROBERTSON-COLE)
The inimitable comedian in a genuinely funny feature based upon superstition. A five-reel comedy, good for a succession of laughs. High-grade, original and minus slapstick. Written and directed by the star.

A distinct advance in the making of high-grade, wholesome, five-reel comedies, is achieved in this Max Linder contribution. It marks the French comedian’s return to the screen following war service. It is comedy above the ordinary and will certainly score a hit.

Linder breaks a mirror early in the story and after that, with the imagination that superstition can play upon, Linder pursues him. His fiancée returns his engagement ring. He loses his purse and takes a railway journey that is a short comedy in itself. He impersonates a telegraph operator, lands in a zoo and hobobs with a den of lions as the lion, in the person of several policemen, stands baffle outside the cage. In the end fate decides and his troubles are straightened out. He wins his girl again and the closing scenes show a string of seven high jinks in frock coats, silk hats and milk bottles.

It is one of the most engaging bits of fun that has been put upon the stage in a long time. The picture is all that its producers promise for it and it should go big everywhere.

Dorothy Gish is the sweetheart very pretty, Betty Peterson, Lola Gonzalas, Clarence Ward, Ralph McCullough, Saxon and Joe Martin assist the French comedian. Effective exploitation can be built about the human weakness for superstition.

DOROTHY GISH IN THE GHOST IN THE GARRET
(PARAMOUNT)
A comedy-drama that will be greeted by a riotous and continuous gale of laughter. Will please adults and delight the children. Swift-moving and breezy with action centered about a “haunted” house and a jewel theft.

F. Richard Jones directed.

As a clever and clownish comedienne Dorothy Gish has romped through no more entertaining feature than this in all the long list of successes to her credit in that line. Her antics are side-splitting, and augmented by the effects of “ghosts” in a “haunted” house upon a colored cook, afraid of his own shadow, the result is truly a knockout. During its run in Chicago theaters it was greeted at all times with a sustained gale of laughter. It has a story trend that is new and different and every element that makes the successful comedy-drama has been excellently employed. The exposure which this is passing up one of the season’s distinct successes.

Miss Gish appears as Delisle O’Dell, a perky relation, who comes to visit wealthy relatives, the Dennises. Her boon companions are a bulldog of masculine persuasion, answering to the name of Violet, and a parrot given to refreshing comment upon affairs in general. Suspected of the theft of her hostess’ pearls, Delisle is ordered out. With her minia ture menagerie she happens upon a band of thieves who make their headquarters in a “haunted” house. There she succeeds by playing the part of a ghost in frightening the frequenters and bringing them to justice, the while exonerating herself.

The best scenes are those in which the colored cook figures prominently. The reputed terror of the race for “bants” is played upon skillfully but inoffensively. The pet animals lend some of the live-

LUCK
A nicely human story that has to do with higher social lights, their weaknesses, and the meeting of them. It is a good box office attraction, inasmuch as its appeal is universal. Leo McCarey directed.

Eva Novak is seen to good advantage in her new Universal feature entitled “Society Secrets,” written by Helen Christine Bennett. There are many sympathetic, human touches to this story, based on the foibles of the newly rich who fear that their old fashioned father and mother will disgrace their newly achieved social position and who therefore attempt to keep them at a safe distance.

As the picture progresses the action takes a decided slump. The story is padded with situations that are nicely human but which eventually become a little wearisome. The director has made a good program picture of “Society Secrets,” and Miss Novak’s admirers will in all likelihood be pleased with their favorite in the role of a wealthy society girl who displays a kindly disposition in place of a supercilious one.

There are no sumptuous sets, but for the most part the sets and the photography are good. In support of Miss Novak appear Gertrude Claire, George Berrell, Leonard C. Shumway and Clarissa Selwyn.

The story has to do with a wealthy society girl who becomes interested in her fiancé’s noticeable secrecy about his parents and goes to find out what they are like. The mother, thinking the girl to be the new school teacher, approaches her and timidly asks if she will help her husband and herself to make themselves more presentable in dress and manners. The transformation is eventually completed and happiness is the rule of the day.

FLORENCE REED IN THE BLACK PANTHER'S CUB (ZIEGFIELD)
A powerful and beautifully produced drama, abetted by a cast of popular and exceptionally fine players, directed by the ever skillful and resourceful Emile Chautard. It is an Emile Chautard Production for the Ziegfeld Cinema Corporation.

The initial production of the Ziegfeld Cinema Corporation, "The Black Panther's Cub," directed by Emile Chautard, starring Florence Reed, is decidedly one of the topnotch pictures of the year. Ethel Donohoe wrote the story, combining for her theme the spirit of bunre's poem, "Faustine," and the belief that environment triumphs over heredity. Philip Barothomew adapted the story for the screen, truly a splendid piece of work.

Miss Reed does beautiful work in this picture, proving herself an artist of makeup and an emotional actress of consummate skill. Opposite Miss Reed appears the delightful William Stephenson, Paul Ducet, Misses Alle, Tyrone Power and Henry Carvil.

The photography is beautiful, especially the outdoor scenes. Director Chautard has been a careful eye to his interior settings, and to them all is an air of refinement and richness that convinces one as to the class of people dealt with in this story. A daring bit of double exposure is carried out in a startling manner, in one scene wherein Miss Reed, as Faustine, old, haggard, bitter, lies dying and her hands clasps that of Mary Maudsley, her daughter (also played by Miss Reed) as she crouches on the floor beside her.

While the climax is an obvious one it is logical. The trick of skill that it is a climax in the real sense of the word. The story is effective throughout, its appeal is sincere, and its workmanship splendid.

A very good box office attraction for the exhibitor who not only has the title and the star to exploit, but also a cast of popular favorites.

"The Black Panther" is owner of a rich and popular gambling house in Paris. He is with an iron hand when one day the police compel her to close.

The daughter is given to an old admirer to care for. She grows up. She is "the Black Panther's Cub." Her guardian dies and to save his good name she is hoodwinked into posing as the Black Panther. She returns to the haunt of her former triumphs. She does so, with the understanding that she is through as soon as the mask is assembled.

The daughter, coming from a stock that is bad, is true to the environment she has been raised in. She remains clean, however, and in the end marries the man of her choice.

BUSTER KEATON IN HAUNTED HOUSE (METRO)
Two reels of typical Keaton-Chline comedy packed with a fun that one talks about a haunted house. It is one of the best things Buster Keaton has done. The hero is courting a suffragette establishment. Keaton is cashier in a bank

MURIEL OSTRIDGE AND WALTER MILLER IN
A scene from the Salient Films, Inc. production, "Shocked!" (working title), made under the direction of J. Charles Davis, 2nd.

Variations of the glue pot stunt wherein the employees and customers of the bank get all tangled up with money and machinery, throw a good laugh. A trick stairway that collapses and sends Keaton sliding down its length furnishes much of the fun and is repeated in immense portions in his dream of going to heavenly regions. The counterfeiters dress up as ghosts and run and ramble throughout the bank where Emile Chautard, as Faustine, old, haggard, bitter, lies dying and her hands clasps that of Mary Maudsley, her daughter (also played by Miss Reed) as she crouches on the floor beside her.

While the climax is an obvious one it is logical. The trick of skill that it is a climax in the real sense of the word. The story is effective throughout, its appeal is sincere, and its workmanship splendid.

BESSIE BARRISCALE IN
THE BREAKING POINT (HODKINSON)
A heartrending family story, built on the theme of the eternal triangle. Highly colorful domestic drama, approaching in spots the melodramatic. A tragedy of real people moving easily and naturally in familiar setting and played by a notable cast, directed by Paul Scardon.

Bessie Barriscale has been given the starring vehicle that has been hers for some time in "The Breaking Point," and she makes excellent use of it. Her appearance, prettier than in any picture she has made for some time, her real skill in dramatic art, a story made gripping and tense by the ability of a cast of players who have arrived well in the front ranks of screen folk, all contribute to the real worth of the feature. There is no question but that this lovely story and its presentation will receive it with great enthusiasm.

The cooperation of the author, the Van Loan, and Director Scardon has produced a happy marriage and dramatically. The plot is one to make American men and women stop and question many of the love affairs of today. It is moral and not too obviously emphasized.

The story is that of Richard Janeway's marriage with Ruth Marshall, impelled to leave her by love of the magnificent mother. Janeway, self-indulgent, dissipated and unscrupulous, renues a former interest in, after bit wretchedly in Luana Deeping, a "painted woman." He plans to run away with her, taking his little daughter. Attempting to prevent his departure, his mother is surrounded by her family and friends. The cleverness of the old family doctor and Janeway's mother make the desire to appear suicide and Ruth is exonerated and left to a happy future with the mother-in-law and her own little girl.

Everything about the picture is of high grade. The star wears stunning gowns and many of them. The settings are elegantly attired with the skill that is artistic. Interest is caught at the start and held fast until the end. The cast includes Ethel Granville Truex, Walter Miller, Pat O'Malley, Virginia Hall, Wilfred Lucas, Eugenia Besserer, Joseph J. Dowling and Lydia Knot.

CHRISTIE PLAYERS IN
HEY, RUBE! (EDUCATIONAL)
Bobby Vernon plays his mirth-invoking way through a comedy quite different from his previous role. He is the "Lone Hero" of a country kid in a country school and of a rural lover courting a country maid. He takes the role of the country boy with all the enthusiasm in the world. He plays the part of the country school boy in the school session, one of them the teacher's proclivity for "booze" which he hides behind a wall. He is a real favorite and a frequent refreshment therewith. The driving away of the teacher is attended to before the coming of the country boy and the whole is free from offensive slap stick. It is swift-moving and a sure-fire laugh rouser. Helen Darling, Henry Murdock and Gus Leonard are others of the cast.
SPECIAL CAST IN

A PERFECT CRIME

(ASSOCIATED PRODUCERS)

Good entertainment here in a pleasing amplification of Carl Clausen’s “Saturday Evening Post” story, which humorously achieves the moral that success cannot be had by dishonesty but by self-confidence and wit.

In “A Perfect Crime” Allan Dwan has made a picture that will please the multitudes. He has amplified Carl Clausen’s story, adding to it more of a romance than the original possessed. Very, very, he has picturized the story from a comedy angle.

Told seriously as a probable thing, “A Perfect Crime” would be subject to criticism. But with comedy treatment, wherein rigid logic isn’t insistently demanded, criticism of improbabilities are often forestalled. Mr. Dwan probably appreciated this fact and designed the picture, its serious theme notwithstanding, for entertainment purposes. If this is the case and entertainment was Mr. Dwan’s uppermost purpose he has been successful. “A Perfect Crime” is good entertainment.

The chief figure in the story is a poor bank clerk. He steals a number of bonds from his employer, finding security against detection in his assumption of a confident, assertive characterization, a characterization totally foreign to his real self. The district attorney is out to revenge himself upon the youth for having interfered with him in his brow-beating tactics to subdue the girl in the case, whose dead father he had robbed. The youth, with the confidence that goes with his assumed character, outwits the district attorney and recovers the girl’s money. But he realizes that so long as he is a thief he is a failure so he returns to the bank, uncovers the money and is discharged. He gives a plausible excuse for his disappearance. His romance is concluded when he makes known his story to the girl who agrees to travel with him toward success.

The picture has been done with Mr. Dwan’s usual directorial skill. His featured player is Monte Blue, who is likeable as the clerk. Jacqueline Logan, Stanton Fleck and Hardie Kirkland, the remaining principals in the cast, give good performances.

ALICE BRADY IN

OUT OF THE CHORUS

(REAL ART)

A society drama with a melodramatic tinge. The story of the marriage of a man of wealth and a chorus girl. Reasonably interesting and entertaining. Will please the star’s admirers, but add little to her prestige. Herbert Blache was the director.

The story of a Winter Garden star who stepped from the chorus into the home of a wealthy husband, only to find a hothed of malice directed at her, gives her latest husband a bad time. While it is by no means unattractive in any way, there is a dullness and stilt about the whole that keeps it from being anything more than the ordinarily entertaining feature. It picks up a little at the pinnacle of the dramatic climax, when the husband is believed to have murdered the man who was too devoted to his wife. But this wanes weakly into an abrupt and ordinary conclusion and the remaining impression is one of mediocrity.

The star wears some stunning habiliments and the settings are artistic. The camera work is very good and the direction is excellent. Vernon Steel in the part of Ross Van Beekman is a likable leading man. Charles Gerard as Ormsby, Emily Fitzroy as Mrs. Van Beekman and Edith Stockton as Betty are others of the cast.

Miss Brady plays the part of Flo Madison, the chorus girl who marries the man of wealth. With her entrance into the higher social stratum of her husband’s family, her troubles begin. They are brought upon her by the plotting of her mother-in-law and inspired by a spurned suitor of Flo’s pre-marriage days, one Ormsby. His enforced attentions lead to his mysterious murder and the husband is believed, and believes himself, to have been the guilty party. The wife’s confession in an attempt to shield him and put herself in the light of a wrong-doer, is interrupted by the confession of the real murderer, a man whom the dead Van Beekman had wronged some years before.

THOMAS MEIGHAN IN

THE EASY ROAD

(PARAMOUNT)

The generally smooth handling is the saving grace of this picture which is handicapped by a weak and commonplace story. Will probably please Meighan followers and pass as acceptable, though light entertainment. Tom Foreman is responsible for the direction.

The story is at fault here. It evidently was selected not because of the merit of the story itself but because it has for its hero a type of character Mr. Meighan seems to be expected to play, since he made his big hit in a characterization remotely similar in “The Miracle Man.”

In “The Easy Road” the star is a novelist who has made a name for himself by potboiling. He marries wealth and with his potboiling days over he feels he can take time to write a masterpiece. But, secure against the financial urge, he finds he can’t write. His wife leaves him so that he can make good. He goes down the ladder and is about to commit suicide when he is called upon to rescue a blind girl from a watery grave. He takes her to his studio. The need of money is urgent and he begins to write. He is successful. Then his wife returns. At first she believes her sinister cousin who says that there is another woman in the case but she learns that the woman is the blind girl. The reconciliation follows.

Old in theme and outline the story carries little or no suspense. But it is smoothly told and is satisfactorily directed by Tom Foreman although some of the settings are of decided studio aspect.

Mr. Meighan gets the most out of his role. His leading woman is Gladys George. Lila Lee contributes a fine bit of work as the blind girl.

WITHOUT LIMIT

(METRO)

“Without Limit” is another indication of the trend toward the production of pictures that deal in more than mere superficialities. It is from the Saturday Evening Post story “Temple Dusk,” by Calvin Johnston, and has excellent reason for picturization in a worth-while thought which has been expressed in uncommon and unusually interesting screen

THE THEFT OF THE JEWELS

Scene from the Universal-Jewel production, “Outside the Law,” in which Priscilla Dean is starred, supported by Lon Chaney and Wheeler Oakman.
terms. The thought is that there are people outside as well as inside the temple of righteousness and that the only real answer to true happiness is the charitable spirit of brotherhood in the fortunate toward the unfortunate.

This thought is expounded through a gambler and a minister, two well contrasted figures, by the stand they take in the case of a misguided boy and girl and a materialistic Broadway rout. The youth is the son of the minister. Having fallen from grace he is helped back to the status of manhood by the gambler. The girl on the other hand is helped by the minister because of his sense of duty. Outwardly, the minister and the gambler have different codes but beneath the surface the outcome shows that in their brotherly spirit their religion is the same.

The regeneration of the boy and the enlightenment of the girl are accomplished dramatically. The generosity of the philosophical gambler and the unselfish sacrifices of the less worldly wise minister who lend helping hands to the unfortunate, touch a responsive chord, and develop an unusual amount of heart interest. The conflict is supplied by the materialistic rout. His persistent efforts to set for naught the efforts of the gambler and the minister keep the outcome a matter of suspense. The story catches the interest at the outset and holds it throughout.

The director, George D. Baker, has put the story with fine appreciation of dramatic values. And he has handled his cast with fine understanding. The characters live rather than simply move through the story. Anna Q. Nilsson, Robert Fraser, Robert Schable, Frank Currier, Thomas W. Ross, these and in fact the whole cast offer splendid portrayals. "Without Limit" is decidedly a worthwhile picture.

TOM MIX IN THE ROAD DEMON
(FOX)

One of the best automobile race pictures ever screened, and one which the majority of Mix admirers will consider his masterpiece. A cowboy motor car racer in the Los Angeles-Phoenix road races and speedway contests is Mix's impersonation. Exceedingly good comedy and rarely good photography. Directed by Lynn Reynolds, who also wrote the story and the scenario.

Here is lively comedy-drama de luxe. It is a far bigger boost towards the top in stardom than any of Mix's previous pictures have given him and one that will win him the attention and admiration of even that patronage that has heretofore been indifferent to his efforts. It offers a maximum of exciting fun and action. It contains scenes that are some of the best California and Arizona mountains and desert shots that the camera has yet caught. An unbridled racing car careening madly around the desert and in and out and roundabout a ranch, carrying all obstacles in its wake, is indescribably amusing. The racing scenes are very realistic and particularly thrilling. These were taken at the roadways between Los Angeles and Phoenix. Some of them are caught at an altitude which shows the mountains roads, level above level, with the racing cars speeding over them. The speedway at Phoenix supplies the setting for others.

Mix, as "Hup" Higgins, a cowboy, comes into ownership of a racing car when it is exchanged by a rival gambler missing, for his horse, which is blind. He galivants about the desert with no control over its mad cawtering, halting it only after fellow motorists show the gas tank full of holes. Later, representing O'Malley, a motor car manufacturer who is trying to land his unpretentious Japanese contract, he enters the races. A frame-up against O'Malley on the part of his rivals and his other drivers almost results disastrously for him, but Mix wins the race and the girl in the case and saves the day.

Claire Anderson plays the part of Patricia O'Malley, Hup's sweetheart, Lloyd Bacon is the rival driver, Harold Goodwin, the new Fox star, is in the cast. All give good support.

SPECIAL CAST IN ANNABEL LEE
(JOAN)

This feature has little action and scarcely any heart interest, despite the fact that it purports to be based on Edgar Allen Poe's poem "Annabel Lee."

The makers of this picture acknowledge the debt to the immortal Edgar Allen Poe for the idea and for many of the captions. But there the debt ends. It is said to be based on Poe's poem "Annabel Lee," but to associate the poet's name and his exquisite poem with this production is a rank injustice.

The picture standing on its own merits may be termed an ordinary program attraction. But taking unto itself the name of Edgar Allen Poe, with the idea, presumably, of using it for exploitation purposes, is wrong. It is this kind of high-handed doings which bring upon the motion picture industry the ire and the righteous indignation of cultured people.

The direction is not always adequate and with the exception of a few beautiful exteriors, the sets and the lightings fail to convey the idea of wealth and culture and delicate refinement.

The cast includes Jack O'Brien, who does some very good work as the virile David Martin, who loves and in the end marries Annabel Lee; Lorraine Harding, Florida Kingsley, and others.

The story to all appearances is a sad dilution on Poe's poem. It has to do with the unflinching love, in spite of everything, of Annabel Lee, a wealthy girl, and David Martin, a poor but proud fisherman, given to writing poetry. Annabel's father believes the love of the young people is a passing fancy so he separates them for one year. If at the end of that time they still love he will raise no objection. David departs to salvage the treasure that went down with his father's ship years ago. He is shipwrecked, but is rescued from a desert island and returns in time to win Annabel Lee back to him and away from the wealthy publisher seeking her hand.

Thomas Meighan and Gloria Swanson, two popular Paramount stars, pose for the camera as they discuss the troubles of stars, which consist principally of income tax returns, high rents and clothes. Tom is bearing up well under it all. Not so Gloria, however.
SPECIAL CAST IN
WHAT'S WORTH
(PARAMOUNT)

A rather slow moving drama of the East and West, of snobbery and flannel shirts. A lesson for girls who demand a veneer of society on their husbands. A Lois Weber production.

The story of a snobbish young woman who ultimately comes to her true self and discovers that diamonds in the rough are sometimes more valuable than the polished stones.

The story is fairly well told, but seems to require an excess of sub-titles to get over the situations.

Lois Weber has painted her characters with a delicate brush, but for the average audience, the action is possibly too psychological where the physical would have been more appreciated.

The story in brief concerns a rich young girl who goes west and meets a young rancher who is the idol of her community. Love develops on both sides but the girl decides that her husband must have the polish and veneer of the men of her set in the East. In order to become his husband the Westerner is taken on a tour of Europe for refining purposes and comes back to marry her very much the effete Continental gentleman. She realizes that to her he has lost something of his charm and when she thinks she discovers him in an intrigue with her beautiful cousin, she decides that the only solution to get him back to his own self is to have him return to his original environment in the West. By feigning illness, she persuades him to do so, and gradually before her eyes he becomes the man that she first fell in love with. Later it develops that her husband had been over-doing the part of the Eastern gentleman in order to teach his young wife a lesson, and to convince her that his standards were the true standards rather than the dictates of the drawing-rooms to which she had been accustomed.

CLAIRE WINDSOR is seen as the girl; Louis Calhern, formerly a Morosco leading man, is the Westerner. Others in the cast are Edwin Stevens, Mona Lisa and Arthur Stewart Hall.

PAULINE FREDERICK IN ROADS OF DESTINY
(GOLDFWYN)

Frank Lloyd's screen version of Channing Pollock's play, based on the story of the same name, by O. Henry. A series of episodes with excellent entertainment value giving Pauline Frederick splendid opportunities for emotional acting.

This vehicle is at the same time suggestive of the recent Fox production, "While New York Sleeps" and "Eyes of Youth," in which Clara Kimball Young starred. Through a series of dreams, it shows to the hero the impossibility of escaping the course destined by Fate, no matter to what ends of the world one may go.

The locale is diversified, giving the audience a wide range of entertainments. The original setting is in a small country town. One dream moves the characters to Alaska, with the climax in a Yukon dance hall, and another takes them to the Long Island home of the wolf of Wall Street, while a third shows what would happen if the characters remained in their original environment. There are two murders and a suicide, but the spectator realizes that it is simply a dream, with Fate pointing the way, and they are therefore not repulsive. We see the same characters, true to type, playing different roles in various parts of the world, which presents a rather interesting study in psychology.

The picture is somewhat of a novelty and will be relished on that account. Pauline Frederick gives her usual fine character portrayal, playing three different roles. She is called upon to do some highly emotional acting and into each character she puts the necessary verve and vitality in order that the characters may seem convincing.

John Bowers plays the role of the man to whom Fate points the way. Jane Novak is convincing as the ingenue heroine. Hardee Kirkland has a strong character bit. Willard Louis supplies the humor, and others in the cast are Richard Tucker and Maude George.

THE DOG DOCTOR
(UNIVERSAL)

There is one of the cleverest bull dogs ever shown upon the screen in this two-reel Universal comedy. He does everything but talk and what few human actors there are in the picture have very little to do with it and furnish but a small amount of the comedy. The picture opens with Harry Sweet attempting to stop a trolley car which has its funny side because it is so true to life, but the dog furnishes the big punch to the following scenes. He calls for a little black puppy that is ill, loads him into an ambulance and arriving at the hospital, tucks him into bed. He feeds the other dog patient and apprehends a thief that attempts to steal the puppy. The action is swift and sure and it is a picture that will delight the youngsters and please all lovers of dogs.

Pioneer to Distribute
"The Forgotten Woman"
In America and Canada

Pioneer Film Corporation has obtained "The Forgotten Woman" for distribution in the United States and Canada. The production will receive special attention from all departments of Pioneer.

Sargent Productions of California produced the picture. Pauline Starke is featured. It is claimed that a great expenditure of money was made on the picture.

President A. E. Lefecourt of Pioneer says that the picture is only a "fore-runner of others in the super-feature class which will be released during 1921 under the Pioneer banner."

Two scenes from "The Breaking Point" a J. L. Frothingham production, distributed by W. W. Hodkinson Corp. and starring Bessie Barriscale.
First National

Married Life, a Mack Sennett production.—More laughs than there are red ants at a picnic. If you can't make money on this one go out and hang yourself, for you are no showman.—O. E. Moore, Portland Theatre Company, Portland, Tenn.

Good References, with Constance Talmadge.—Good puller. Very pleasing.—A. C. Evans, Opera House, Greensboro, Ala.—Neighborhood patronage.

Peaceful Valley, with Charles Ray.—Fine picture. Ray extra good. Not a kick on this. Keep Ray in the rube roles. I wish Son, Orpheum theatre, Lancaster, Wis.—Neighborhood patronage.

Married Life, a Mack Sennett production.—A picture any exhibitor should boost.—a good box office attraction that will give satisfaction to the majority.—F. L. Clarke, Cozy theatre, Hazen, Ark.—Neighborhood patronage.

Unseen Forces, with a special cast.—A good picture with a good moral. It satisfied our patrons.—C. E. Power, Power theatre, North Branch, Minn.—Small town patronage.

Two Weeks, with Constance Talmadge.—A prize winner. Had more comments on this than any picture for a long time. Consider draws out those who aim to attend only the best nights.—W. L. Beebe, Opera House, Manitto, Ill.—Small town patronage.

Go and Get It, a Marshall Neilan production.—Fine photography. An appealing love story. Intensely interesting. Well developed and a corking good special.—P. E. Moore, Portland Theatre Company, Portland, Tenn.

Nomads of the North, with a special cast.—Even better than The River's End. A picture any exhibitor should boost.—A. S. Widaman, Centennial theatre, Warsaw, Ind.

The Jack-Knife Man, a King Vidor production.—A splendid picture for any audience. A good lesson.—G. Nutter, Royal theatre, Republic, Kan.—Small town patronage.

The Love Expert, with Constance Talmadge.—This star is one of the real comedians. Her pictures all clean, full of laughs and beat any so-called comedies, and this picture beats them all for novelty as well as comedy.—Wells, Star theatre, Milford, Mich.—Small town patronage.

Passion's Playground, with Katherine MacDonald.—Fine. Pleased them all and drew me a little extra business.—G. F. Rediske, Star theatre, Ryegate, Mont.—Small town patronage.

In the Heart of a Pool, an Allan Dwan production.—We did not care for this one. Rather daring at this time to use.—C. E. Power, Power theatre, North Branch, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

Curtain, with Katherine MacDonald.—Average business. Pleading story. Fine production.—A. C. Evans, Opera House, Greensboro, Ala.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Jack-Knife Man, a King Vidor production.—One of the best pictures ever run here. Pleased everybody.—Fred Frisbie, Croxton theatre, Angola, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

In Search of a Sinner, with Constance Talmadge.—This is some picture. In spite of bad weather we packed them in to capacity. Book it. You can't go wrong on Connie. Business good. 15c and 20c.—W. F. Baker, Boone Way theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ky.—General patronage.

The River's End, a Marshall Neilan production.—Did not get to see it personally. Everybody seemed highly pleased. I judge from the way it was received it must have been 100 per cent entertainment.—J. C. Jenkins, Auditorium theatre, Neligh, Neb.—Small town patronage.

Two Weeks, with Constance Talmadge.—One of the best Talmadges we have run. Satisfied 100 per cent.—L. P. Lewis, Lone Star theatre, Jasper, Tex.—Small town patronage.

Old Dad, with Mildred Davis.—About on a par with her other pictures. Mildred does not draw for us.—C. E. Power, Power theatre, North Branch, Minn.—Small town patronage.

Tarzan of the Apes, with Elmo Lincoln.—Wonderful. Don't waste time attracting children. They will flock in. If it is not high-class, who think it is serial stuff. Tell them of the fine English scenes, the strong plot, of finished acting of Thomas Jefferson and others. Remembering for every kind of fan. We ran Hawaiian stringed orchestra (no piano). Music fitted to a "T." Running fire of applause. Sea of new patrons at 10c and 20c.—Philip Rand, Rex theatre, Salmon, Idaho.—Small town patronage.

The Thunderbolt, with Katherine MacDonald.—I screened this picture and then refused to show it to my audience because of a glaring suggestive scene. The story is weak and has for its basic idea race suicide. Why a director will inject as strong a suggestion in a picture as is shown in this one is beyond my comprehension. Will the time never come when directors will turn their attention to decency?—J. C. Jenkins, Auditorium theatre, Neligh, Neb.—Small town patronage.

The Turning Point, with Katherine MacDonald.—A sure misfire. This was so slow that it hurt business. Booked it for two days, but took it off the second night. Jenkins of Neligh was right.—B. C. Brown, Star theatre, Viroqua, Wis.

Don't Ever Marry, a Marshall Neilan production.—One of the very best. The freckled faced boy pulls for me. A box office winner.—G. G. Nutter, Royal theatre, Republic, Kan.—Small town patronage.

The River's End, a Marshall Neilan production.—This picture is old release, but did not hurt its drawing power, as we had big and well-pleased patronage. In fact, I was told by many that it was the best picture ever shown here.—New Cozy theatre, Winchester, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

Bill Apperson's Boy, with Jack Pickford.—Good drama. Personally I liked it, but failed to please the audience.—E. H. Lewis, Long Star theatre, Denison, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Thunderbolt, with Katherine MacDonald.—Good average picture.—G. G. Nutter, Royal theatre, Republic, Kan.—Small town patronage.

In Wrong, with Jack Pickford.—A good program picture.—Peter Kraith, Olympic theatre, Denison, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Idol Dancer, a D. W. Griffith production.—This went over very good. Did not raise prices and my patrons were satisfied.—B. C. Brown, Star theatre, Viroqua, Wis.

The River's End, a Marshall Neilan production.—Great. Only one bad program picture yet in this current production. Business only fair, but no fault of picture. Pleased those who saw it. Had strong competition.—T. N.
Hackett's theatre, Port Gibson, Miss.—Neighborhood patronage.

Fire-Brand Trevison, with Buck Jones.—A dandy good Western. Buck Jones is sure coming to the front.—John Aden, Kialo, Indian Terril, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

Love's Harvest, with Shirley Mason.—Boys, here's one of those pictures that the whole family will enjoy. Shirley is O. K.—Olen Reynolds, Pearl theatre, Hymera, Ind.—Small town patronage.

The Mountain Woman, with Pearl White.—This was a good picture. Star good, but does not draw very good.—H. J. McElhent, Gem theatre, Ord, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

From Now On, with George Walsh.—Too long and tiresome. Seven reels entirely too much, unless you have something really big. Will just get by if you don't advertise it too strongly.—F. L. Clarke, Cozy theatre, Hazen, Ark.—Neighborhood patronage.

Girl of My Heart, with Shirley Mason.—A very nice picture, but a good program picture. Spalding Bros. Gem theatre, Taylorville, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Cyclone, with Tom Mix.—Our best dramatic picture. They come regardless of weather. Theatre always packed when we play Mix. His acting is real. No faking and his horse is most as good as Tom.—Fred W. Wells, Star theatre, Milford, Mich.—Small town patronage.

Partners of Fate, with Louise Lovely.—Rather weak when it comes to drama. Star and very good cast save this from being mediocre.—W. H. Crel, Suburban theatre, Omaha, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

Her Honor, the Mayor, with Eileen Percy.—Will pass. This is my last Fox picture. They have nearly ruined my business. May be all right for a city, but too good for small "bergs."—G. F. Rediske, Ryegate, Mont.—Small town patronage.

The White Moll, with Pearl White.—This is a good picture, if you patrons like crook plays. This is in eight reels, which is about two too many.—C. S. Ford, Princess theatre, Reinbeck, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

Drag Harlan, with William Farnum.—Well acted picture that pleased big house for me.—Hackett & Krauss.

MARK TWAIN'S GREATEST COMEDY SCREENED

A scene from "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," which was staged for William Fox by Emmett J. Flynn and is said to be one of the year's most ambitious spectacles.
EXHIBITORS HERALD
March 5, 1921

E. Berlin, Grand theatre, Rock Falls, Ill.

The Feud, with Tom Mix.—Boys, hop to this one. Mix is sure at his best. Mix is a well-known player in the Lyric theatre, Alexandria, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

Wings of the Morning, with William Farnum.—A very good picture. Great acting and many changing scenes.—Fred W. Wells, Star theatre, Milford, Mich.—Small town patronage.

Riders of the Purple Sage, with William Farnum.—A very good picture, liked by all who saw it. Also played The Rainbow Trail, which all liked.—John L. Naiman, Lyric theatre, Terril, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

Camille of the Yukon, with Miriam Cooper.—Here is a good Northern picture with all the trimmings of the dance hall and snow scenes.—Olen Reynolds, Pearl theatre, Hymera, Ind.—Small town patronage.

Wolves of the Night, with William Farnum.—This is a fine picture; it is the best to my notion that we ever had. Farnum sure draws for me.—John L. Naiman, Lyric theatre, Alexandria, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Texan, with Tom Mix.—This is sure one of Tom Mix's best pictures. Played it on my poorest night and packed the house.—E. Berlin, Grand theatre, Rock Falls, Ill.—Small town patronage.

Wings of the Morning, with William Farnum.—This is not a Western picture, but you can boost it, for it is good.—C. S. Ford, Princess theatre, Reinbeck, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

Three Gold Coins, with Tom Mix.—This is the best one we have had of Tom Mix to date.—Olen Reynolds, Pearl theatre, Hymera, Ind.—Small town patronage.

The Man Who Dared, with William Russell.—A very good picture. One that will please everybody. Comments very good.—A. E. Berlin, Grand theatre, Rock Falls, Ill.

Goldwyn

Stop Thief, with Tom Moore.—A good comedy picture. You can assure your patrons satisfaction with this offering.—B. C. Brown, Star theatre, Viroqua, Wis.

Going Some, with a special cast.—An old hit. It is a real good picture and makes them come out telling you how much they liked it. Pleased 100 percent.—B. F. Sharp, Tumble In theatre, Sinton, Tex.—Rural patronage.

It's a Great Life, with a special cast.—It is a pleased and business satisfactory. Not sed.—John Hain, Star theatre, Donora, Pa.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Silent Princes, with Mabel Normand.—I had seen some bad reports of this picture, and was prepared for not liking it, but to my surprise my patrons all loved it. Played it in a big house against The Great Redeemer and Fatty Arbuckle.—Eugene Saunders, Pearl theatre, Harvard, Ill.—General patronage.

The Revenge of Tarzan, with Gene Pollar.—This was way below the other Scene from "Don't Neglect Your Wife," a Gertrude Atherton story produced at the Goldwyn studio on the West Coast.

"Tarzan" pictures.—Not nearly as good as Tarzan of the Apes and The Romance of Tarzan.—John Naiman, Lyric theatre, Alexandria, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

"Jes' Call Me Jim," with Will Rogers.—A 100 per cent picture. Drew good business. Clean as a whistle. Wish we could get more like this one.—E. Power, Power theatre, North Branch, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

Stop Thief, with Tom Moore.—A most improbable picture and the poorest this good star has appeared in so far.—A. S. Widaman, Centennial theatre, Warsaw, Ind.

What Happened to Rosa, with Mabel Normand.—Mabel Normand's average. She is losing ground. High time she gets back under Senett's wing. Neither seems to be able to produce another Mickey without the other.—John Hafner, Princess theatre, Donora, Pa.

The Truth, with Madge Kennedy.—A good picture and well acted.—C. S. Ford, Princess theatre, Reinbeck, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

"Jes' Call Me Jim," with Will Rogers.—I advertised in advance the fact that here was a good one and even the preachers said it was a perfect picture. If all were as good as this, exhibitors would have no worry.—B. C. Brown, Star theatre, Viroqua, Wis.

The Strange Boarder, with Will Rogers.—First time for star here, and he made quite a hit. Picture will please everybody but the wild West crowd. Will be glad to get Rogers again.—P. L. Clarke, Cozy theatre, Hazen, Ark.—Neighborhood patronage.

Toby's Bow, with Tom Moore.—Tom Moore is the best one of the three Moors. This one was all right.—Olen Reynolds, Pearl theatre, Hymera, Ind.—Small town patronage.

The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come, with Jack Pickford.—Excellent Patrons still talking about it. Book it, as you are sure to please patrons and send them away satisfied.—Merle E. Rhoda, Palace theatre, Royalton, Minn.—Small town patronage.

Help Yourself, with Madge Kennedy.

—This is the worst we have had in a long time. Stay off of one or the soft pedal.—C. T. Metcalfe, Opera House, Greenfield, Ill.—Small town patronage.

The Turn of the Wheel, with Geraldine Farrar.—Fair. Failed to draw. Pleased 75 per cent.—G. F. Rediske, Star theatre, Ryegate, Mont.—Small town patronage.

The Girl From Outside, with a special cast.—Of its kind it's the best. All the Rex Beach productions are exceptionally good.—Nelson H. Floyd, Princess theatre, Okolona, Miss.—Neighborhood patronage.

Heart of the Sunset, with a special cast.—This was fine. Give us more like this. Many compliments on it.—John L. Naiman, Lyric theatre, Alexandria, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

High Pockets, with Louis Bennison.—Bennison very good in all I have seen. An absolute winner.—Sudie I. Haney, Liberty theatre, Des Moines, N. M.—Small town patronage.

Lord and Lady Algy, with Tom Moore.—Just a fair program picture.—C. S. Ford, Princess theatre, Reinbeck, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

The City of Comrades, with Tom Moore.—This was a good one. Tom Moore very satisfactory.—Will H. Bremer, New Cozy theatre, Winchester, Ind.

The Street Called Straight, with a special cast.—An exceptionally good picture. Held interest throughout and proved a worthy entertainment.—B. C. Brown, Star theatre, Viroqua, Wis.

The Test of Honor, with John Barrymore.—An excellent production. Acting of Barrymore is superb. Received many compliments on the work.—J. Herbert Talbert, Legion theatre, Norwich, Kan.—Small town patronage.

One of the Finest, with Tom Moore.—Very good, as is the usual case with all Tom Moore pictures, although not one of his latest. Star draws better with each picture.—Merle E. Rhoda, Palace theatre, Royalton, Minn.—Small town patronage.

Pinto, with Mabel Normand.—This is a pretty good one, but Mabel Normand is no drawing card any more with her class of pictures.—Olen Reynolds, Pearl theatre, Hymera, Ind.—Small town patronage.

Heart of the Sunset, with Anna Q. Nilsson.—An old hit. It was a first class picture and a very good one that will please any audience.—Dr. F. M. Childs, Cozy theatre, Villisca, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Street Called Right, with a special cast.—This is a very good picture, but it failed to go over at our theatre.—Fred S. Meyer, Palace theatre, Hamilton, O.—Transient patronage.

The Pest, with Mabel Normand.—The very worst picture I have ever had.—Will H. Bremer, New Cozy theatre, Winchester, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Street Called Straight, with a special cast.—A good picture with a good moral, and should please any audience. Played it at 13c and 25c and pleased my people.—H. A. Wishard, Wishard theatre, Bloomingfield, la.—Home patronage.

Hodkinson

The Coast of Opportunity, with J. Warren Kerrigan.—Pleased well-filled houses. Offers something different in the way of a class. The picture comes before audience is permitted to become bored, as is the case with many good average pictures.—Harold F. Wendt, Rivoli theatre, Toledo, O.—Downtown patronage.

The Kentucky Colonel, with a special Scene from the Selznick feature, "Poor Dear Margaret Kirby," Elaine Hammerstein's current starring vehicle.

cast.—Better than a lot of so-called supers. Don't be afraid to book anything Hodkinson puts out. They are as good as any and made better and most.—Nelson H. Floyd, Princess theatre, Okolona, Miss.—Neighborhood patronage.

The U. P. Trail, with a special cast.—Very good. It's a long time since I got a Western picture to draw big and satisfy the patrons at the same time. The U. P. Trail has done both.—John Hafner, Princess theatre, Donora, Pa.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Kentucky Colonel, with a special cast. Not a special, but a good picture.—S. C. Ford, Princess theatre, Reinbeck, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

Riders of the Dawn, with Roy Stewart.—A good picture, but will not draw any more than any other Western picture. Poor paper on this picture.—Olen Reynolds, Pearl theatre, Hymera, Ind.

Desert Gold, with E. K. Lincoln.—This sure went over big for two nights. A fine picture.—John L. Nainan, Lyric theatre, Alexandria, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Harvest Moon, with Doris Kenyon.—When they get better than this they are out of regular program pictures class. Some of my patrons said it was the best picture they ever saw, and they have seen the best. Admission, 15c and 25c.—Nelson H. Floyd, Princess theatre, Okolona, Miss.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Silent Barrier, with a special cast.—About 50-50. Only good on an off day.—John Hafner, Princess theatre, Donora, Pa.—Neighborhood patronage.

Down Home, with a special cast.—

---

Fine. Worth more than regular admission.—Nelson H. Floyd, Princess theatre, Okolona, Miss.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Lone Wolf's Daughter, with Louise Glum.—This picture went over in real nice style, and gave universal satisfaction. Played to good business for three days.—Fred S. Meyer, Palace theatre, Hamilton, Ohio.—Transient patronage.

Metro

Clothes, with a special cast.—Not a special by any means, but very good.—Nelson H. Floyd, Princess theatre, Okolona, Miss.—Neighborhood patronage.

Burning Daylight, with Mitchell Lewis.—Did not please over 20 per cent of audience. Top price, 40c.—Giacoma Bros., Crystal theatre, Tombstone, Ariz.—General patronage.

The Great Redeemer, with a special cast.—Very good picture, and drew big.—John Hafner, Princess theatre, Donora, Pa.—Neighborhood patronage.

Burning Daylight, with a special cast.—They were well pleased with this one.—L. A. Hasse, Majestic theatre, Mauston, Wis.

Alias Jimmy Valentine, with Bert Lytell.—This one should have been the greatest box office value I have ever had, but a great many maintained that they had seen it and there was no use to try to talk them out of it. They had seen the old World picture of the same name a few years ago.—Will H. Bremer, New Cozy theatre, Winchester, Ind.

Please Get Married, with Viola Dana.—Extremely silly. Unappreciated by churchgoers.—P. F. Moore, Portland Theatre Co., Portland, Tenn.

Please Get Married, with Viola Dana.—This is fine. Made my people laugh, and that's the kind we need. My patrons told me it was fine.—W. W. Weltz, Star theatre, Lake City, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

Alias Jimmy Valentine, with Bert Lytell.—Good, but not as good as Wallace Reid was in the subject.—Hackett & Krauss, Hackett's theatre, Port Gibson, Miss.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Walk-Offs, with May Allison.—A good program picture. One of the popular here. Always draws.—W. L. Beebe, Opera House, Manito, Ill.—Small town patronage.

Lombardi, Ltd., with Bert Lytell.—Would advise the small town exhibitor to let it alone. This "dago" stuff don't go in pictures for us. Unappreciated an actor to appear in such stories. What a pity to waste film like this. Stay off.—McClure & Faulkner, Comique theatre, Jamesport, Mo.—Neighborhood patronage.

THE WILLOW TREE, with Viola Dana.—This was sent us free for our Eurovision Benefit, and we were showered with compliments by our patrons. A beautiful Japanese story with a good ending and such a darling little star that only the grouch would kick on it.—Mrs. Lloyd Junkins, Queen theatre, Aspermont, Tex.

Alias Jimmy Valentine, with Bert Lytell.—A dandy good feature. One that will please them all.—F. C. Burr & Son, Orkholm theatre, Lancaster, Wis.—Neighborhood patronage.

Madame Peacock, with Nazimova.—Wonderful acting, but so much posing that it is absolutely sickening. This picture ruined her drawing-power here. It's far from a special.—Nelson H. Floyd, Princess theatre, Okolona, Miss.—Neighborhood patronage.

A Chorus Girl's Romance, with Viola Dana.—A real comedy-drama. In The Brat class and just as good. Get it and go as far as you like on it and you won't beat your money.—O. E. Pierce, Theatorium theatre, Portland, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Walk-Offs, with May Allison.—This is a clever, clean comedy-drama. Pleases any kind of audience.—W. W. Weltz, Star theatre, Lake City, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Chorus Girl's Romance, with Viola Dana.—It will be hard to find an audience that will not delight. It's first class and a clean picture.—B. C. Brown, Sun theatre, Portland, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Willow Tree, with Viola Dana.—Pleasant large audience.—Fred Frisbie, Croxton theatre, Angola, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

Fair and Warner, with May Allison.—A pretty good picture.—McClure & Faulkner, Comique theatre, Jamesport, Mo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Dangerous to Men, with Viola Dana.—Very good picture. Poppy in spots, but drew good business on second night.—O. W. Jastram, Strand theatre, Pecatonica, Ill.—Small town patronage.

---

PARAMOUNT

Brewster's Millions, with Fatty Arbuckle.—This is a great comedy. Fatty at his best. Played it two weeks and had a packed house every day.—James D. Kennedy, Isis theatre, Indianapolis, Ind.—Downtown patronage.

The Life of the Party, with Roscoe Arbuckle.—Better than The Round-Up, but disappointing to all of Arbuckle fans who remember the old slapstick comedies. A good picture.—F. L. Clarke, Cozy theatre, Hazen, Ark.—Neighborhood patronage.

Huckleberry Finn, with a special cast. We felt rather shaky the day before we showed this. We felt sure we would lose owing to the slump in business. However, we turned them away half an hour after opening which tells the story. Not a wonderful picture, but a wonderful drawing card.—W. H. Creal, Suburban theatre, Omaha, Nebr.—Neighborhood patronage.

Why Change Your Wife? a Cecil B. DeMille production.—Great picture in spite of bad weather. Paramount exploitation is splendid, and is very business. Advanced prices.—O. J. Dyvig, Palace theatre, Nevada, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

A Girl Named Mary, with Marguerite Clark.—This picture does not do Miss Clark justice. She has seen her in better. She is not cast right.—Hackett & Krauss, Hackett's theatre, Fort Gibson, Miss.

The Lottery Man, with Wallace Reid. Excellent. Outstanding to please anywhere.—Sudie I. Haney, Liberty theatre, Des Moines, N. M.—Small town patronage.

Mary's Ankle, with Douglas McLean and Doris May.—Very clever comedy-drama. We booked a comedy to play with them and apparently one of our boys.—Edwin Lake, Lake theatre, Baker, Mont.

Terror Island, with Houdini.—Contains much action as any 15-chapter serial. Excellent water scenes and underwater photography is good.—Bert Norton, Kozy theatre, Eureka, I1l.—Neighborhood patronage.

THE COPPERHEAD, with Lionel Barrymore.—Ran this Lincoln's Birthday. Packed them in and played them.—L. C. Beebe, Opera House, Manitowoc, Ill.

Black Is White, with Dorothy Dalton.—Good picture. Was appreciated by all.—Bert Greene, the Brot Johnson, Ord, Nebr.—Neighborhood patronage.

A Girl Named Mary, with Marguerite Clarke.—A perfect drama. Should have a second run. A window play and is comedy to act as relief to principal heavier plot. This has not and gets little drabby. Story has heart appeal and is interesting. Splendid acting by good cast. For high class trade. Lost money. Girl stars fail to draw here.—Philip Rand, Rex theatre, Salmon, Idaho.—Small town patronage.

Crooked Straight, with Charles Ray.—Not up to the standard Ray pictures.—John Aden, Rialto theatre, Terrell, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

Sand, with William S. Hart.—One of Hart's best. Plenty of action.—Hackett & Krauss, Hackett's theatre, Fort Gibson, Miss.—Neighborhood patronage.

Sand, with William S. Hart.—An old-time Hart picture that drew well and pleased all. Was too short, though.—Bert Norton, Kozy theatre, Eureka, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Alarm Clock Andy, with Charles Ray. —Just a fair picture, Ray has made twice as good as this.—W. H. Creal, Suburban theatre, Omaha, Nebr.—Neighborhood patronage.

His House in Order, with Elsie Ferguson.—Fairly good program picture with good cast. Beautiful scenery.—Edwin Lake, Lake theatre, Baker, Mont.

Too Much Johnson, with Bryant Washburn.—Too light. Played to small crowd. Lay off of this one. The only Paramount star that draws is Hart.—F. E. Kaufman, Electric theatre, Union, Ia.

The Law of Men, with Enid Bennett.—This is another good one from Famous Players. Bennett is like their other stars. She pleases most of them.—L. M. Rothweiler, Palace theatre, Bion, Kans.—Small town patronage.

The Miracle Man, with a special cast.—A great picture. All that they said it was. Good, but I lost money on it.—W. H. Gilfillan, Lotus theatre, Red Lake Falls, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Woman in the Suitcase, with Enid Bennett.—Very good picture.—Sudie I. Haney, Liberty theatre, Des Moines, N. M.—Small town patronage.

Told in the Hills, with Robert War- nce.—Fair. Beautiful scenery, but Warrick not a strong card here.—Merle E. Rhoda, Palace theatre, Royalton, Minn.—Small town patronage.

Away Goes Prudence, with Billie Burke.—Fairly entertaining picture that drew good house.—Bert Norton, Kozy theatre, Eureka, I1l.—Neighborhood patronage.

Square Deal Sanderson, with William S. Hart.—Very good. Patrons here always say something good for Hart.—L. M. Rothweiler, Palace theatre, Bion, Kans.—Small town patronage.

Behind the Door, with Hobart Bosworth.—This certainly pleased our patrons and they all told us so. Without doubt one of the most heart appealing photoplays on the screen. We consider this one of the best.—W. F. Baker, Boone Way theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ky.—General patronage.

Mary Ellen Comes to Town, with Dorothy Gilbby.—A good picture. Star shines in a role different from usual. Fair business two days.—W. H. Creal, Suburban theatre, Omaha, Nebr.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Grim Game, with Houdini.—Very good. Interesting picture.—W. H. Gilfillan, Lotus theatre, Red Lake Falls, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

Paris Green, with Charles Ray.—One of the best pictures I have ever played.—Sudie I. Haney, Liberty theatre, Des Moines, N. M.—Small town patronage.

23½ Hours Leave, with Douglas MacLean and Doris May.—This kind don't get old. If you haven't played it you owe it to your patrons to do so. One can't retain a grouch after seeing this.—Nelson H. Floyd, Princess theatre, Oko- lona, Miss.—Neighborhood patronage.

Young Mrs. Winthrop, with Ethel Clayton.—A picture with a moral. Place it on your program. It will be a credit to your house.—Raymond Schneider, Midget theatre, Metamora, I11.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Poppy Girl's Husband, with Wil- liam S. Hart.—One of Hart's poor ones. Not good business, but did not please.—L. M. Rothweiler, Palace theatre, Bion, Kans.—Small town patronage.

The Roaring Road, with Wallace Reid.—A real high class picture. Wonderful story well directed. Lots of comedy re- lied on.—F. E. Moore, Portland Theatre Co., Portland, Tenn.

The Life Line, a Maurice Tourneur production.—Very good picture. Pleased

Boots Kane for Cabinet Portfolio

“For Secretary of State in President Harding’s Cabinet: Arthur S. Kane of New York.”

Thus the “Second Thought” column of the Philadelphia Public Ledger, Jey E. House, columnist, heads its ministerial ticket. Mr. House believes that the selection of Mr. Kane would be a happy solution of the friendly controversy which has arisen between the respective supporters of Charles Evans Hughes and Elihu Root.

Mr. House made known his determination to send Kane at a dinner of the Kansas Society of New York, held at the Hotel McAlpin, January 29. Mr. Kane is a former president of this organization and Mr. House is a former mayor of Topeka. On that occasion the present Philadelphian offered Mr. Kane the state portfolio on a silver platter, borrowed from one of the banquet tables.

“But I don’t want the job,” protested Mr. Kane. “I don’t consider myself equipped for it.”

“Forget it,” said Mr. House.

“Any man who can handle picture stars and never row with them is a born diplomat.”

Consequently, despite the picture man’s declination of the honor, the columnist proceeded to publish his slate in the Philadelphia paper.

MIRIAM COOPER

In a scene from the R. A. Walsh production, "The Oath," a First National attraction.

Suburban theatre, Omaha, Nebr.—Neighborhood patronage.

Her First Elopement, with Wanda Hawley.—Miss Hawley is sure making good. This picture is a safe play for any theatre. Will stand boosting.—C. T. Metcalfe, Opera House, Greenfield, Ill.—Small town patronage.

The Law of the Yukon, with a special cast.—Very good, as you can get all the men out to see this, and some of the ladies. A right good feature. Sure some snow scenes: Acting good. Photography good, also direction.—McClure & Faulkner, Comique theatre, Jamesport, Mo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Eyes of the Heart, with Mary Miles Minter. to push this, due to adverse report I had seen. Push it hard and it will make good in any house. Is a fine picture and Simon is on the job all the time.—A. E. Anderson, Pastime theatre, Stratford, S. D.—Neighborhood patronage.

The New York Idea, with Alice Brady.—Drew well. Pleased better class of patrons. Good stuff.—A. C. Evans, Opera House, Greensboro, Ala.—Neighborhood patronage.

Her Beloved Villain, with Wanda Hawley.—Good picture but not quite as good as Miss Hobbs. Star draws well.—H. J. McBeth, Gem theatre, Ord, Nebr.—Neighborhood patronage.

Something Different, with. Constance Binney.—Another fine Binney picture. She is a prime favorite here, and her pictures so far have been excellent.—A. S. Wideman, Centennial theatre, Warsaw, Ind.

Anne of Green Gables, with Mary Miles Minter. This is a picture that like it will please the majority of people. Played to full house on stormy night.—H. J. McBeth, Gem theatre, Ord, Nebr.—Neighborhood patronage.

She Couldn't Help It, with Bebe Daniels.—Not so good as previous efforts. Comedy-drama for Bebe, and this is not a comedy-drama.—O. E. Pierce, Théâ-terium theatre, Portland, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

You Never Can Tell, with Bebe Daniels.—This was Bebe's first attempt, and she made a hit. Let's have lots more just as good. Many good comments. Business good.—Pfeiffer Bros., Opera House, Kenton, Ohio.—General patronage.

Miss Hobbs, with Wanda Hawley.—Very good comedy drama.—John Steichen, Aurora theatre, White Lake, S. D.—Neighborhood patronage.

A Cumberland Romance, with Mary Miles Minter.—Our box office receipts were larger on this than any picture Minter picture. She is improving, but I'll give Monte Blue some credit for drawing for this. He is especially liked here.—A. N. Miles, Eminence theatre, Eminence, Ky.—Small town patronage.

Nurse Marjorie, with Mary Miles Minter.—Good as are all Realarts I have shown.—O. O'Kelly, Majestic theatre, Reedsburg, Wis.—Small town patronage.

Judy of Rogue's Harbor, with Mary Miles Minter.—Good program picture.—John Steichen, Aurora theatre, White Lake, S. D.—Neighborhood patronage.

Food for Scandal, with Wanda Hawley.—Wanda is making good as a star. Picture pleased all. Business only fair on account of star not being known.—Pfeiffer Bros., Opera House, Kenton, Ohio.—General patronage.

The Luck of the Irish, with a special cast.—Was a real picture. A crackin' good story. Well acted. Good photography. The kind of a picture my patrons like.—C. L. German, Royal theatre, Bonner Springs, Kans.—Neighborhood patronage.

Sweet Lavender, with Mary Miles Minter.—Have seen reports where exhibitors have been disappointed in this. However, it is a good, clean picture and my box office report shows that my patrons are looking for this kind of entertainment. Mary Miles Minter is as good as Mary Pickford ever was.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy theatre, Winchester, Ind.

Soldiers of Fortune, with a special cast.—A great picture. Pleased all. Realarts all good. Anyone not using them is not using the best. Book them all.—C. H. Johnston, Merriman theatre, Merriman, Neb.—Small town patronage.

Oh Lady, Lady, with Bebe Daniels.—Bebe Daniels is the best ever, and Harrison Ford also. Others are mighty good support and production is first class. Reelart surely scores again. I don't want any better pictures or a better star than Bebe Daniels.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy theatre, Winchester, Ind.

The Luck of the Irish, with a special cast.—Truly a good picture. Star well supported by cast.—J. F. Kudlacek, Swan theatre, Swanton, Neb.

Robertson-Cole

The Stealers, with a special cast.—Booked this one two days, and played to big business. Patrons well pleased. Could use another feature like this one.—H. Mayer, Electra theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Man Beneath, with Sessue Hayakawa.—Picture very good, but star not liked here. Small crowd.—E. E. Harman, Opera House, Elgin, Ore.

The Love Call, with Billie Rhodes.—Good picture. Many told us so. Pleased my audience. She is a good actress. Book this one.—Joseph F. Spangler, Civic theatre, Beaver, Okla.—General patronage.

The Heart of Juanita, with Beatriz Michelena.—Not much to this one. My patrons did not care for it.—George E.
Jack Hoxie in a scene from his first Arrow feature, “The Man from Nowhere,” which has just been published.

Taylor, Idle Hour theatre, Dunlap, Iowa.
—Neighborhood patronage.

Kismet, with Otis Skinner.—Wonderful picture. Fine photography, but did not draw me any business. Played two days and starred to death.—H. Mayer, Electra theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Flame of Hellgate, with Beatriz Michelson.—A good Western program picture. Will not stand a raise in price.—P. G. Held, Sterling theatre, Fairmont, Nbh.—General patronage.

The Flame of Hellgate, with Beatriz Michelson.—Good picture and work of star good. First scenes were poor. They forgot to put the pap in them. Played it with An Eastern Westerner, so it went over.—Pau. L. Shew, Wonderland theatre, Clinton, Ind.—General patronage.

The Grey Wolf’s Ghost, with H. B. Warner.—Good program picture. Not one that drew for us, but this was not fault of the feature.—C. Hales, Rivoli theatre, Alton, Iwa.—Neighborhood patronage.

Bare Fisted Gallagher, with William Desmond.—This is an excellent program picture and will please 100 per cent where Western stuff is in demand.—E. F. Haman, Opera House, Elgin, Ore.

So Long Letty, with a special cast.—Not as good as the title and stills would indicate, although a pleasing comedy-drama.—A. S. Widaman, Centennial theatre, Warsaw, Ind.

Life’s Twist, with Bessie Barriscale.—This picture was considered by my audience as one of her best, and it drew a good house two days.—Eugene Saunders, Palace theatre, Harvard, Ill.

Modern Husbands, with Henry Walton.—Drew a fair house and gave satisfaction.—G. F. Rediske, Star theatre, Eyegate, Mont.—Small town patronage.

Kitty Kelly, M. D., with Bessie Bariscase.—Do not think much of it. Was disappointed in it.—W. H. Gilliland, Lotus theatre, Red Lake Falls, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Flame of Hellgate, with Beatriz Michelson.—A good Western picture.—Peter Krauth, Denison theatre, Denison, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Other Half, with ZaSu Pitts.—This star is very homely, but that fact adds to her charm for the parts she plays remind me forcibly of Dorothy Gish. Her pictures always clean and very interesting.—Fred W. Wells, Star theatre, Milford, Mich.—Small town patronage.

The Wonder Man, with Georges Carpentier.—Good feature. Picture took very well with our people.—F. C. Burr & Son, Orpheum theatre, Lancaster, Wis.—Neighborhood patronage.

Dangerous Waters, with William Desmond.—Very good picture.—W. H. Gililand, Lotus theatre, Red Lake Falls, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

Selznick

A Fool and His Money, with Eugene O’Brien.—The very best O’Brien picture we have had. Good plot, beautiful scenery and an expert cameraman helped to make this the winner it is. The mad dash for the Swiss border over the snow in sleighs called forth a great round of applause. We heartily recommend Select service.—Mrs. Lloyd Junkins, Queen theatre, Aspermont, Tex.—Small town patronage.

The Chicken in the Case, with Owen Moore.—Owen Moore is impossible. He is as lazy as a hound dog. At least this is what my patrons say.—Will H. Bremer, New Cozy theatre, Winchester, Ind.

Out of the Snows, with a special cast.—Very satisfactory picture to a big Saturday crowd. Snow scenes good, but photography very poor.—John Hainer, Princess theatre, Donora, Pa.—Neighborhood patronage.

Out of the Snows, with a special cast.—Good picture of the North that will please the crowd if you can get them out. Fine snow scenes and a good fight.—F. L. Clarke, Cozy theatre, Hazen, Ark.—Neighborhood patronage.

Broadway and Home, with Eugene O’Brien.—A fair program picture. If you like O’Brien you can get by with it.—A. S. Dugan, Centennial theatre, Warsaw, Ind.

Out of the Snows, with a special cast.—A very interesting North Woods picture. Photography fine, scenes beautiful, direction all that could be desired. It ought to pass as A-1 entertainment with any audience.—J. C. Jenkins, Auditorium theatre, Neigh. Neb.—Small town patronage.

A Regular Girl, with Elsie Janis.—Intended to be a good picture, but it sure fell flat with us.—Mrs. McWally, Opera House, Greenfield, Ill.—Small town patronage.

The Country Cousin, with Elaine Hammerstein.—Lots of good comedy. Pleased everybody.—L. P. Lewis, Lone Star theatre, Jasper, Tex.—Small town patronage.

Everybody’s Sweetheart, with Olive Thomas.—Her last, but not her best. Business fine as usual.—John Hainer, Princess theatre, Donora, Pa.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Poor Semp, with Owen Moore.—A fairly entertaining program picture.—A. S. Widaman, Centennial theatre, Warsaw, Ind.

The Girl of the Sea, with a special cast.—Patrons said it was wonderful, the views of under sea life and growth, but we were not as fortunate and disappointed as usual. When one sees pictures constantly they are harder to please than others.—Fred W. Wells, Star theatre, Milford, Mich.—Small town patronage.

The Girl of the Sea, with a special cast.—This is a picture out of the ordinary. Well liked and many comments.—C. S. Ford, Princess theatre, Reineck, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Prohibition Wife, with Norma Talmadge. Here’s one that did the work for me. Audience well pleased, and a good crowd. One of the classiest program pictures we ever ran.—B. F. Sharp, Tumble In theatre, Sinton, Tex.—Rural patronage.

The Gift Supreme, with a special cast.—This is one of the best pictures that I ever saw. If you have a chance look at this picture book this one and advertise it.—A. E. Berlin, Grand theatre, Rock Falls, Ill.—Small town patronage.

Darling Mine, with Olive Thomas.—Very good. We are sorry that this star is gone. She’s one of those few who always brings them out and pleases.—John Reynolds, Pearl theatre, Hymera, Ind.—Small town patronage.

The Better Wife, with Clara Kimball Young.—Placed all the women. Charming, Fine. Story touching.—L. P. Lewis, Lone Star theatre, Jasper, Tex.—Small town patronage.

The One Way Trail, with Elydie Steele.—This is a very fine picture. The star’s work is wonderful. She is sure a comer.—R. K. Stonehouse, Win- ber theatre, Eldora, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Gift Supreme, with a special cast.—This is one of the best pictures I have ever played. You can make a killing in booking this one. Advertised it strong. Run two days and you will clean up on it.—A. E. Berlin, Grand theatre, Rock Falls, Ill.

United Artists

The Mollycoddle, with Douglas Fairbanks.—Of course we looked for big business on this and we got it. Douglas is as popular as ever.—B. C. Brown, Star theatre, Viroqua.

Polypolly, with Mary Pickford.—This picture was a good puller and pleased.

Pollyanna, with Mary Pickford.—This was a big hit. Too much Sennett two-reel stuff in it.—Giacoma Bros., Crystal theatre, Tombstone, Ariz.—General patronage.

Down on the Farm, a Mack Sennett production.—Not a big hit. Much Sennett two-reel stuff in it.—L. M. Rothwell, Palace theatre, Biron, Kans.—Small town patronage.

Polypolly, with Mary Pickford.—One of Pickford's best. Drew unusually well and patrons pleased. Charged 15 and 30 cents.—Merle E. Rhoda, Palace theatre, Royalton, Minn.—Small town patronage.

Universal

Once a Plumber, with Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran.—A comedy-drama like this is a good tonic for Saturday nights. Drew well and patronage is still possible every other week. This one, in spite of what many say to the contrary, proved to be a mirth-quake for our audience. Regular admission 15 and 25 cents.—Mrs. Lloyd Junkins, Queen theatre, Aspermont, Tex.—Small town patronage.

White Youth, with Edith Roberts.—Not in the class with The Adorable Savage. Story rather tame and star has little to do. Not a poor picture, however.—W. H. Creal, Suburban theatre, Omaha, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

Fixed by George, with Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran.—Just fair. Business poor, as these stars do not go very well with us.—Spalding Bros., Gem theatre, Taylorville, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Wanted at Headquarters, with Eva Novak.—A hit. Little program picture. Miss Novak does fine work in this and it will please the majority of your crowd.—F. L. Clarke, Cozy theatre, Hazen, Ark.—Neighborhood patronage.

In Polly's Trail, with Carmel Myers.—People did not seem to care a great deal about this picture. Very few liked it.—John Aden, Rialto theatre, Terril, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

Hearts Up, with Harry Carey.—While this is not as good as some of Carey's pictures it went over big against a William S. Hart picture. Carey always gets the money for me. Business good.—T. N. Magruder, Elite theatre, Jola, Kans.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Golden Trail, with Jane Novak.—This is the kind of a picture that always pleases the most of my people. A fine picture and drew a big house.—Eugene Saunders, Palace theatre, Harvard, Ill.—General patronage.

The Phantom Melody, with Monroe Salisbury.—This is a fair picture. Some very good scenery in it and fine photog.—L. A. Hasse, Majestic theatre, Mauston, Wis.

Human Stuff, with Harry Carey.—Certainly not what I expected of Carey.—Sudie I. Haney, Liberty theatre, Des Moines, N. M.—Small town patronage.

Everything but the Truth, with Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran.—Real good comedy.—Sudie I. Haney, Liberty theatre, Des Moines, N. M.—Small town patronage.

"I'LL TAKE CARE OF THIS FELLOW"

Eva Novak and her rescuer in "The Torrent" find themselves in the hands of two tough gentlemen. (Universal)

Vitagraph

The Courage of Marge O'Doone, with a special cast.—Kanzi in two nights and several came both nights, it took so well. Everyone said it was great. Played to advanced prices and had them turning up and a waiting line outside.—Fred W. Wells, Star theatre, Milford, Mich.—Small town patronage.

The Garter Girl, with Corinne Griffith.—Good program picture. Have seen her in better pictures.—Hackett & Krauss, Hackett's theatre, Port Gibson, Miss.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Vengeance of Durand, with Alice Joyce.—A very fine production and Alice Joyce highly pleasing.—Will H. Bremer, New cozy theatre, Winchester, Ind.

The Prey, with Alice Joyce.—A mighty fine picture. Vitagraph has some good pictures.—F. C. Burr & Son, Orpheum theatre, Lancaster, Wis.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Midnight Bride, with Corinne Griffith.—Good program picture.—Hert Norton, Kozy theatre, Eureka, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

When a Man Loves, with Earle Williams.—A good average picture with Williams playing very good.—New theatre, Winchester, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

Specials

The Chamber Mystery (Arrow), with a special cast.—A good comedy-drama that failed to pull on account of stars being unknown. Town of 25,000, twelve miles from us, ran it on Sunday following us and did big business.—R. O. Rhoades, Adelphia theatre, Converse, Ind.—Small town patronage.

Danger Valley (Independent), with Neal Hart.—This is the best of the Neal Harts yet run here. It is interesting. Carries a good story, and a couple of good fights. Will please most of them.—F. L. Clarke, Cozy theatre, Hazen, Ark.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Forbbidden Woman (Equity), with Clara Kimball Young.—Big business. Very pleasing and artistic production.—A. C. Evans, Opera House, Greensboro, Ala.—Small town patronage.

Skysfire (Independent), with Neal Hart.—A very good Northwest Mounted Police story. Some very beautiful colored mountain scenery. It has action and a good plot. H. F. Longaker, Mountaineer theatre, Alexandria, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Birth of a Race (Birth of a Race Co.), with a special cast.—I contracted for this picture as an extra special, but I certainly fooled myself. It's so cut up that it's not worth showing. Charges $25 and 55 cents. Should have charged 20 and 17 cents. Don't book it.—L. M. Rothweiler, Palace theatre, Bismarck, N. Dak.—Small town patronage.

She Played and Paid (Joan), with Fannie Ward.—We booked this for a big picture and it was. Drew well and was well liked also. New program picture.—New theatre, Minneapolis, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Stream of Life (I. C. F. C.), with a special cast.—A good clean moral picture. Patrons say it's the best picture ever run. Broke house records. You can get it from International Church Film Corporation, Kansas City, Mo. You won't go wrong in showing it at advanced prices.—L. M. Rothweiler, Palace theatre, Bismarck, N. Dak.—Small town patronage.

The Desert Scorpion (Pioneer), with Ernest Cobb.—This is a real Western that will both pull and please if your patronage likes Westerns.—F. E. Kaufman, Electric theatre, Union, Ia.

Hell's Oasis (Independent), with Neal Hart.—If your people like Westerns here is one that will drag them in and then please them.—Eugene Saunders, Palace theatre, Harvard, III.—General patronage.

The County Fair (Tourneur), with a special cast.—A good program and it got the people out. Liked by most everyone.—W. B. Sweezy, Dortha theatre, Manville, Wyo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Eyes of Youth (Equity), with Clara Kimball Young.—Only a program picture. Too deep. Did not take. Too long and drawn out. Seven reels that should be five.—W. F. Baker, Boone Wayne theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ky.—General patronage.

The Chamber Mystery (Arrow), with a special cast.—This is a very pleasing comedy-drama. Good for Friday and Saturday showing. Poor business, extreme cold.—E. T. Walton, National theatre, New Bedford, Mass.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Woman Untamed (McGovern), with a special cast.—This picture made a mighty hit because it was different. Many traveling men stopped to tell me how it interested them.—Eugene Saunders, Palace theatre, Harvard, Ill.—General patronage.

Husbands and Wives (Gaumont), with Vivian Martin.—Different from the usual Vivian Martin pictures on account of the Southern atmosphere, and the beautiful scenes in and around Atlanta, Georgia. Good Saturday crowd.—W. F. Baker, Boone Wayne theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ky.—General patronage.

The Inner Voice (Pioneer), with F. K. Lincoln.—Played this picture to a Moose benefit and they all thought it a great picture and appropriate.—Eugene Saunders, Palace theatre, Harvard, Ill.—General patronage.

Serials

The Son of Tarzan (National), with a special cast.—Opened this serial with Stalking His Life to the largest crowd we ever had to see a serial. This is the first serial we have held up good, but our patronage has dropped some due to poor local conditions. Marked improvement in Olen Reynolds, Pearl theatre, Hymera, Ind.—Small town patronage.

The Lion Man (Universal), with a special cast.—We are on the 14th episode of this serial and holding up good. Seemed to please.—Hackett & Krauss, Hackett's theatre, Port Gibson, Miss.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Adventures of Ruth (Pathe), with Ruth Roland.—Am on sixth episode. I am doing better than with Jack Dempsey on it. Very good serial.—W. H. Gillilan, Lotus theatre, Red Lake Falls, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Adventures of Ruth (Pathe), with Ruth Roland.—This serial held up well. You bet, they can play safe on it.—J. L. Naiman, Lyric theatre, Alexandria, Nebr.—Neighborhood patronage.

Bride 13 (Fox), with a special cast.—By request from my patrons and friends. I discontinued the serial on the fourth episode. People refused to let their children see this picture. Too gruesome and too dark.—Edwin Lake, Lake theatre, Baker, Mont.

The Moon Riders (Universal), with Art Acord.—Good for a special. Good photography. Good riding and lots of action.—Birt Corporation, Third picture—O. E. Pierce, Theathorium theatre, Portland, Ind.

The Lost City (Warner Bros.), with Juanita Hansen.—Best serial ever run. Just finished last episode, and found it held up to last. Give us more like it.—R. K. Hansen, Cozy theatre, Burr Oak, Kans.—Small town patronage.

Daredevil Jack (Pathe), with Jack Dempsey.—Made no money for me, may draw some places, but it is nothing to rave over.—W. H. Gillilan, Lotus BEVELED MYSTERY (Vitagraph), with Antonio Moreno.—Good serial. Held up patronage through last night’s record. —G. G. Nutter, Royal theatre, Hymera, Ind.—Small town patronage.

VEILED FINGERS (Pathé), with George B. Seitz.—Geo. B. is a wonder. Grab this. Boost it big and watch ‘em trill in. Pathé has got them all skinned on serials. Give them a tryout. We’ll say you tell ‘em.—McClure & Faulkner, Comique theatre, Jamesport, Mo.

Bride 13 (Fox), with a special cast.—Well, this serial has got the action and a little different, but we don’t like the suggestive titles and actions. Not for children.—Olen Reynolds, Pearl theatre, Hammond, Ind.—Small town patronage.

The Son of Tarzan (National), with a special cast.—This is a close second to Kaelin Williams. The best box office serial ever made.—Louis H. Frank, Halsted theatre, Chicago, Ill.

The Silent Avenger (Vitagraph), with Will Duncan.—This is one of the best serials I have ever run, but patronage fell off in Jasper and I have added a two-reel comedy Chaplin.—L. P. Lewis, Lone Star theatre, Jasper, Tex.—Small town patronage.

The Son of Tarzan (National), with a special cast.—Broke house record. Probably the best bet of the season. Played to more money than super-feature.—C. A. Raub, Luna theatre, Kankakee, III.

The Silent Avenger (Vitagraph), with Will Duncan.—Please all. Holds a full house every week. Run with The Veiled Mystery.—L. P. Lewis, Lewis theatre, Blox, Tex.—Small town patronage.

The Son of Tarzan (National), with a special cast.—Absolutely capacity on first three episodes.—Fred Cleveland, Circle theatre, Chicago, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Shootin’ Kid (Universal), with Hoot Gibson.—Good clean Western like this will build up trade on serial night. Ran with King of the Circus and Edgar Takes the Cake, Goldwyn comedy. A very laughable and clean moral provocative. Excellent combination of small attractions.—Philip Rand, Rex theatre, Salmon, Idaho.—Small town patronage.

Haunted Spooks (Pathé), with Harold Lloyd.—This is the best comedy I have ever run. I thought the people would go wild. Harold sure makes you dust up.—S. R. O.—R. K. Stonebrook, Wins- ter theatre, Eldora, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

Toonerville Trolley Comedies (First National).—Have played three very suggestive and different from others.—Fred Frisbie, Croxton theatre, Angola, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Simp, and Don’t Blame the Stork (Educational), with special casts.—Both very good educational comedies. Have all been excellent.—H. J. Longaker, Howard theatre, Alexandria, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

Jester Comedies, with Twede Dan.—Have run three of these and they averaged a pretty fair.—O. W. Jastram, Strand theatre, Pecatonica, Ill.—Small town patronage.

A Close Shave (Sennett-Paramount), with Ben Turpin.—Fair comedy. Got a few laughs. Nothing extra.—T. N. Magruder, Elite theatre, Jola, Kans.—Neighborhood patronage.

You’ll Be Surprised (Educational), with a special cast.—If your people like good two-reel comedies book Educational, if you have not done so. They are all knockouts.—A. E. Berlin, Grand theatre, Rock Falls, Ill.

Neighbors (Metro), with Buster Keaton.—A scream from start to finish. Audience literally ate it up. A corking good two-reeler, says our people.—Giacomo Bros., Crystal theatre, Tombstone, Ariz.—General patronage.

Educational Comedies.—Have run about twenty of them and have not played a poor one yet.—Fred Frisbie, Croxton theatre, Angola, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

Cleaning Up (Warner Bros.), with Al St. John.—These comedies would get a laugh out of the sphynx. Two reels.—Bill Leonard, Mystic theatre, Cedarvale, Kans.—Neighborhood patronage.

Four Times Foiled, and A Freak Start (Educational).—Better than the average. I have seen a few better, but they hold the crowd, and if the series is as good as the first two they will be better than usual, by far.—W. L. Beebe, Opera House, Manito, Ill.—Small town patronage.

The Head Waiter (Vitagraph), with Larry Semmon.—These comedies are hard to beat.—Fred Frisbie, Croxton theatre, Angola, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

A Blue-Ribbon Mutt (Century), with a special cast.—This is a great comedy. My patrons all like Brownie. This dog can’t be beat. Book Century comedy. D竦 naughty and your comedy worries will be over.—T. N. Magruder, Elite theatre, Jola, Kans.—Neighborhood patronage.

Paragon Comedies, with George Clark.—If you’re looking for slapstick comedy, you can’t go wrong on these. Have run three and received favorable comments on every one.—M. W. Larkin, Mystic theatre, Rushville, Ind.

THE SHOOTIN’ KID (Universal), with Hoot Gibson.—Good clean Western like this will build up trade on serial night. Ran with King of the Circus and Edgar Takes the Cake, Goldwyn comedy. A very laughable and clean moral provocative. Excellent combination of small attractions.—Philip Rand, Rex theatre, Salmon, Idaho.—Small town patronage.

Haunted Spooks (Pathé), with Harold Lloyd.—This is the best comedy I have ever run. I thought the people would go wild. Harold sure makes you dust up.—S. R. O.—R. K. Stonebrook, Wins- ter theatre, Eldora, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

Equipment Progress

The Progressive Supply House; What It Means to the Industry

What Is Being Done by the Equipment Companies—How They Anticipate the Exhibitor’s Wants

By H. A. R. DUTTON

President Exhibitors Supply Company

Not so many years ago when an individual conceived the idea of opening a moving picture theatre, all that was necessary to crystallize the idea was an empty store, a few hundred folding chairs, one picture machine, a muslin sheet and a slide reading, "Just a Moment, Please." There have been rapid strides, however, since those "nickel show" days. Today that exhibitor draws the business who has kept up to the minute on all improvements in equipment.

Theatre equipment to most exhibitors today still means booth equipment and screens. The up-to-date exhibitor theatre equipment means all of the many things that are being continually placed before him to throw about his house an air of refinement, comfort, coziness and beauty combined with unbroken, clear, bright projection.

Progressed Long Way

From the old days of the one-reel-at-a-time projection we have progressed a long way. The old store front is now the beautiful lobby. The old boards for display paper are now replaced by the beautifully designed lobby display frames. The old system of tearing tickets from a roll and handing the ticket and change to the patron is now obsolete with the automatic ticket seller and the change maker automatically doing the work. Tickets are no longer snatched by the doorman, the patron himself drops them into the ticket chopper.

After passing into the theatre, it is no longer necessary to stumble down the aisle in pitch darkness looking for a seat, as the aisle light located along the aisles light the way without destroying the brightness of the picture on the screen.

Then after the seat is found, Mr. Patron sinks into a comfortable opera chair, placed so that a good view of the screen can be had.

Little does the patron of the up-to-date theatre realize when he starts viewing the picture what developments have been made to give him that beautiful unbroken picture.

Development of Equipment

If he could step up to the screen he would find that the old muslin sheet has become a heavy gauze material and if he cared to investigate he would be surprised to know that the shade in color was scientifically made to blend with the colors of the day. These are lamps, at that distance, and that the grade of roughness on the screen was for his accommodation, making it possible for him to get a good view from any point in the theatre.

The booth would give him the surprise of his life. The one hand driven machine of "nickel show" times now has become the latest of the exhibitor driven. At no time even if a machine breaks down, will he be compelled to read "Just a Moment, Please," as No. 3 machine is called on to take the work.

The projection machines he would find rigged up with a peculiar little machine, called an Automatic Arc Control, that every little while buzzes away, keeping the carbons at the right distance apart so there will be no shadows on the screen.

The Generator Sets

A few questions about certain machines in the corner would bring him the information that the reason the picture he views is even in light without splutter and flicker was because those machines are generator sets to turn alternating current into direct and keep the light at a definite brightness. Again one extra machine being used to insure him of no annoying breaks.

Further investigation would show that lenses, carbons, condensing lenses, in fact every minute detail had been carefully worked out to give him the perfect picture in the perfect atmosphere.

Perhaps the greatest factor in bringing all these details near the point of perfection is the supply house. If the exhibitor would only stop to think a moment, he could not help but realize how much real hard labor and thought the supply companies put in to make it possible to bring the motion picture theatre up to a point of the ideal place of entertainment.

Supply Men’s Initiative

Our company, I know, has put in a tremendous amount of time, money and hard work to be able to offer all of the latest and best improvements to the exhibitor. The greatest part of my own personal work for our company is along this line. It almost seems to me that I am on the road all the time.

Our endeavors also have been to make ourselves the last word in the supply business, giving 100 per cent service at all times and to make it possible for the exhibitor to come to us for his complete equipment and know that he is getting only the latest and most improved, whether it was a thumb tack, an opera chair, or booth equipment.

I am firmly convinced that the supply business is just as important, if not more so, than the producing business. If it were not for the men who were continually working out new ideas on theatre equipment, the motion picture theatre would not have progressed so far from the old "nickelodeon" days as it has.
Indirect lighting equipment and unbroken alignment of seats upon a well-pitched floor assure good views of the screen from any part of the theatre which Fred S. Meyer, managing director, has brought into national prominence by his modern showmanship methods.

Avoid Polishing Brass Rails

Newman Official Offers Tip on How to Keep This Kind of Equipment in Shape by Different Methods

Some pertinent facts concerning the care and lowering of up-keep on brass rails are contained in a statement of an official of the Newman Manufacturing Company, Cincinnati, pioneer manufacturers of brass railings and frames. The executive addresses his remarks direct to the exhibitor and gets at the roots of a trying annoyance.

"Day after day, and the better part of every day, your porter sweats and sweats over the polishing of the brass railings in your theatre. The time he spends in removing tarnish represents a substantial sum on the debit side of the ledger every week," he said.

"Those blankety-blank railings need polishing again,' you say. And your porter plods out for the 3,000th time to brighten 'em up. Yes, they look nice when he finishes, but tomorrow morning it must be done all over again.

Use Service Available

"We have been investigating this business of polishing brass work and we have come to the conclusion that your cost of up-keep can be materially reduced in this direction.

"Perhaps you have installed railings made by a thoroughly reliable concern, but have not taken advantage of the service they are prepared to give. From the depths of their experience in such matters they will gladly inform you fully as to the best methods of polishing, the right kinds of polish to use, the prevention of tarnishing, and so on.

"As a matter of fact, your porter will wear out his good right arm brightening up brass work in the morning, and all afternoon and evening folks will be dulling its lustre by a dozen different methods.

"What's the use?

"From where we sit it would appear that all the work and worry on the part of you and your staff, incidental to cleaning and polishing brass, can be entirely done away with. Here's the answer in a nutshell:

"Whatever railings you can spare should be taken up, wrapped in thin paper, packed in excelsior and then shipped to the nearest brass works. They will scour them, replace them in any one of a dozen finishes which do not require polishing, and generally overhaul them while so doing.

Popular Finishes Named

"The more popular of these plated finishes which require little or no attention, in the order of their importance, are as follows: Statuary bronze, nickel, lacquered (polished) brass, brass oxidized, copper oxidized, brushed or dull brass, verdigris. They cost a little more than the so-called standard brass finish. But the initial expenditure will be more than offset by the saving in labor.

"If there should be any railings in your house which positively cannot be spared, these should be carefully cleaned, then lacquered. Any person without experience can do the lacquering; it's practically the same as painting woodwork with an ordinary flat brush.

"If you have not yet made arrangements for installing railings in a new theatre, or if you find it necessary or advisable to replace less sightly and substantial railings with brass, or if you decide to install additional railings for the convenience, safety or decoration of your patrons—take our advice (the consensus of manufacturers' opinions) and decide on brass railings electro-plated in statuary bronze or any of the other non-polish finishes. They will prove a delight to the eye and a source of never-ending satisfaction.

"Other fixtures, including brass poster and photo frames, can be finished to match your railings. If you adopt our suggestion you will beautify the brass work throughout your theatre and cut down your upkeep cost."

PLAYS FOR DANCE AND FILM

Dan Barton of Bartola Musical Co. Meets Hard Requirements in Novel Way

Dan Barton of the Bartola Musical Instrument Co. has an advantage of having been a musician for many years before entering the organ field. This advantage has been keenly demonstrated at the recent dedication of the Bartola Musical Instrument in the Markle Theatre & Dance Hall owned by Robert Markle and Roy Small of Wymore, Neb. The theatre is unique, inasmuch as under the same roof and in the same auditorium a motion picture show and a dance are conducted at the same time. The building is a large auditorium and on one half is a complete theatre equipment, while on the other half is a finely equipped dance hall.

The idea was worked out to meet competition of the present dance craze and dance pavilions in Wymore. The problem was the music and after trying orchestras of the jazz nature and otherwise, which was found not feasible, Mr. Barton was called in at the suggestion of Mr. H. H. Haven, the Bartola representative in Nebraska. Mr. Barton designed and a combination is played by a pianist which successfully plays the picture and furnishes the dance music at the same time. Let it be understood that the music and the dancing are going on at the same time, therefore the difficulty of proper music can be readily appreciated.

The results of the installation have been more than satisfactory, as Mr. Small reports the installation is making money for him in the present and future and increased attendance.
FIRE GUTS FRAME PLANT
Home of Consolidated Portrait and Frame Company Destroyed in Early Morning Blaze

Damage estimated at $100,000 was caused by a fire which gutted the plant of the Consolidated Portrait and Frame Company, 1029 West Adams street, Chicago. Inflammable materials caused the fire to spread rapidly and only heroic work by firemen prevented the spread of the blaze to adjoining buildings. Investigation of the fire, which is believed to have been caused by combustion of oil rags or varnish compounds, has been begun by Maj. Shirley T. High, recently appointed fire attorney.

DE KRUIF RESIGNS POSITION
George De Kruf, in charge of advertising and sales promotion for the Exhibitors Supply Company, with headquarters in Chicago, has resigned to become general manager of the Certified Checoupon Company, a new profit-sharing coupon enterprise in which he is financially interested. Mr. De Kruf was instrumental in launching the Federal Coupon system in Chicago. He is well known to local film people, having been for the past five years engaged in various activities in the industry.

REPORTS BETTER BUSINESS
A general improvement in business conditions is noted by Robert Gumm, Indianapolis manager of the Exhibitors Supply Company. Mr. Gumm reports the sale of seven projection machines in his territory during the first half of the present month.

CHEAP VIOLINS RESEMBLE STRADIVARIUS IN TONE
Jules Mastbaum Investigating Secret Process Said to Have Been Found by German Scientist

Musical circles in Philadelphia, in common with musicians over the United States, are with interest awaiting news from Germany where, according to what appears to be reliable information, a man named Ohlhaver has discovered a secret process whereby cheap violins are made to resemble the genuine Stradivarius in tonal qualities.

Jules E. Mastbaum, president of the Stanley Company of America, has entered into negotiations with representatives of Ohlhaver in Germany with a view to making arrangements for the exclusive rights to use the process in the United States.

"According to word which we have received from Germany the results this man Ohlhaver has achieved with the ordinary violin is little short of marvelous," said Mr. Mastbaum in discussing the matter.

"Our agents report that Ohlhaver has given a demonstration that excited the wonder and admiration of more than a thousand critical music experts and artists, who heard the violin played upon after being put through this process. We have been informed that the tones of violins after having been treated with the process are little inferior to the Cremona instruments."

COMPLETES NEW FACTORY
Individual Drinking Cup Company of New York Doubles Output With Easton, Pa., Addition

The Individual Drinking Cup Company, original makers of the paper drinking cup, 320 West Nineteenth street, New York, has just completed a large new plant at Easton, Pa., where they announce facilities have been installed which will permit doubling the present output of their product, which the company believes, is at the present larger than the output of any other manufacturer in their line.

Millions of these paper cups are sold to theatres, particularly around the New York district, where the company's sales campaign has been prosecuted more vigorously than in other parts of the country.

According to statistics furnished by the company, over 75 per cent of New York's theatres are using the Dixie cup service and a majority of these are using the Dixie penny-in-the-slot cup vendor. In addition to this, the Dixie service is installed in thousands of locations throughout the United States, including a great many railroads, hotels, department stores, offices and soda fountains.

Reichenbach “Kids”
Chicago Film Fans
Publicity Won for “Outside The Law” by Freak Ads
In Newspapers
Harry Reichenbach, publicity satchel, who at present is directing the publicity drive for “Outside the Law” in Chicago and vicinity, gave the motion picture fans something to puzzle over in the afternoon newspapers of February 19.

“Soak It In Cold Water!”
In announcing that the production would open at Barbee’s Loop theatre, Sunday, February 27, Reichenbach headed his advertisements with the following words:

“Cut this advertisement out, soak it in cold water two minutes, then hold to light and read.

At the bottom of the advertisements was a message in shorthand signed by Carl Laemmle, which assisted in the effectiveness of the hoax.

Whether the ad was soaked in water or not, it is certain that few people passed it without giving it a thorough reading.

Other Stunts Put Over
The advertisements form a small part of the Reichenbach campaign. A dozen other stunts are impressing the title “Outside the Law” on the millions in Chicago and the central west.

The Priscilla Dean tam has been breaking in fashion columns and pages of newspapers and winning displays in millinery stores.

Police Woman Continues
Trying to Show Picture
Alice Clement, Chicago police woman, who produced a film titled “Dregs of a Big City,” which is intended to depict the seamy side of life in Chicago, has renewed her efforts to obtain a permit from the city of Chicago.

Her latest move is to bring mandamus proceedings against Chief of Police Fitzmorris. A writ was obtained January 17 and on February 17, she attempted to have the police chief cited for contempt for failing to comply.

Odor Bomb at Prairie
Persons responsible for the odor bomb outrages at Chicago theatres renewed their activities during the past week, singing out the Prairie theatre, 5748 Prairie Avenue. It is the third time the Prairie theatre has been the object of attack, the wires having been cut at one time and a bomb opened at another time.

Lillian Walker Honored
Lillian Walker, well known motion picture star who is now in vaudeville, was the honor guest at a luncheon at the College Inn Monday, February 21, attended by Chicago newspaper men.

Theatres Big Aid
In Field Benefit
For Crippled Ones
Chicago theatres did their bit last week to assist in making a success of the benefit wrestling match staged under the auspices of Mrs. Marshall Field for the benefit of the little crippled children of the city’s poor.

Trailers, showing Mrs. Field and several crippled children, together with an appeal to the public to support the benefit, were shown in connection with “Way Down East” and at all the Balaban and Katz, Jones, Linick & Schaefer, Lubliner & Trinz, and Ascher Brothers theatres.

The negative of the trailer was made without charge by Watterson R. Rothacker, president of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company. Harry Berman of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company and Aaron Jones of Jones, Linick & Schaefer met the cost of the positive prints.

Max Levey Added to Pioneer Sales Staff
Max Levey, former manager of the Chicago office of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation, has joined the sales staff of the Pioneer Film Corporation of Illinois. He will act as special representative and will tour the key cities of Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin.

Odor Bomb Thrower
Fined $50 by Court
No Defense Is Offered When Case Is Brought Up at Englewood Station
Eddie O’Brien, alias Murphy, was fined $50 in the Englewood police court last week on a charge of throwing an odor bomb in the Rex theatre at Sixty-ninth and Racine.

No defense was offered.
This is the first conviction arising out of the recent odor bomb activity. Within the last few weeks, theatres in every part of Chicago have had to cope with this nefarious practice.

Owing to the recent outbreak of odor bomb throwing, action has been threatened by the state attorney’s office.

Favorite Players Have
Two deRemer Features
The Favorite Players Film Corporation of Chicago is planning a sales drive throughout its territory on three newly acquired feature productions.

In addition to “The Wrong Woman,” which stars Montagu Love and Olive Tell, it has purchased rights to “The Way Women Love” and “Luxury,” in which Ruby deDemer is featured.

MRS. FIELD MEETS CHICAGO EXPLOITERS

Mrs. Marshall Field appears in the center of the picture which was taken at a recent meeting of the Chicago Motion Picture Press Club. At her right is Herman Black, publisher of the Evening American, and at her left Major Fred McLaughlin. In the background, left to right, appear LeMar H. Mason, Irving Mack, Beatrice Barrett, Abe Steinberg, A. E. Barrymore, Walter L. Hill, Dan Roche, Mary Kelley and Ralph T. Kettering.
B. A. Wormald of the Marquette theatre, La Salle, Ill., who has just returned from Cincinnati, tells us he was busy annexing some ideas down in that part of the country with regard to enlarging his theatre. Shhh!! Why not step on the little ol' choo choo and come Chi-ward? Just heave a flock of glances toward our two latest—the Senate and Tivoli, thatsall. . . .

With Harry Grampp closing a deal giving him the remaining pair of theatres in Beloit, Wis., looks like Harry had it on the great Atlantic cable for "a string." Harry admits there are a few theatres in this territory not on his chain as yet. . . .

After much paging and wirelessng plentiful for the handsome and debonair bon vivant, erstwhile First National representative, Gradwell Sears, we note this dashing young swain is now a member of the Favorite Players crack sales organization. Thats all, "Vun," we'll say you know how to pick 'em.

Some of the boys must have been telling Al. Normal. Chi had swapped climates with Los Angeles, for Al and his family are expected to hop off the Caliifornia Limited some day the latter part of this week. Nix Al, they all come back!

It has been reported that Izy Gumbiner has just taken over the Banner theatre on the Northwest side, adding another splendid link to the fast growing chain of the Gumbiner enterprises.

Among the notable hangers-on at the Convention of the Federated Exchange and the cause of much curiosity to the assembled press representatives, was the handsome and ever gallant "Rabbi" Fitzpatrick. The press was given to understand that he was a member of Fitzpattick-McElroy enterprises, of Chicago, who had just closed a big deal between the Federated and his company. With the Federated in session from ten in the morning until after eleven each night, the many attending delegates were in a quandary arranging for the entertaining of their lady folks and with the modest though always willing "Rabbi" the only
"him" not attending the meeting, 'tis easily understood his phenomenal popularitiy with the fair members, who agreed unanimously, "Rabbi" Fitzpatrick was the Convention hero. (Another Chi victory, ahem!)

EDGAR R. RIEDEL, for the past several months district manager in this terri-ory for the Special Pictures Corporation, resigned last week. He anticipates leaving for the East the latter part of February, announcing his new affiliation at a later date. . . .

With the Hon. W. N. Savage, mayor of Alton, now located in the new executive business chambers of the Savage Amusement Enterprises, we believe just a word or so more rather apropos. Just at present his Honor the mayor owns the billpostin plant, three theatres, an aero-dome, several road shows and the steamboat line which plys up and down the great Mississippi River from Alton, The new business quarters is worth investing. . . . They represent the utmost in modernity. Our congrats, Mayor—may your mayoralty seat become a perpetuity. . . .

HARRY WEISS, president of Superior Screen Service, returning from a two-weeks hibernation among the Illinois and Indiana exhibitors, tells us the consensus of seventy-five exhibitors questioned was: "Business is not as good as it was during the war, BUT when the bottom is reached it will still be as good by DOUBLE as it was BEFORE the war.
There is not a house in either State losning money. Besides, there are twenty-five new theatres planned or in course of construction within the next year time.
Here's hoping Harry's March foist trip will bring us more optimistic oratory.

J. H. O'DONNELL, owner of the Washington theatre, Washington, Ind., is spending the winter in Florida. The natives down there report that this innimitable Celt had an immodesty schedule for "departing Cuba steamers" perfectly memorized in a little over three minutes after "lighting from his Pullman compartment. By the way, J. H., if you can pick up a couple of volumes of Cuban history we know how a few students that would never forget your altruism.

The new theatre recently opened at Bloomville, Ind., belongs to Armbruster
& Randigger, a Chicago duo, well known to local film circles. The live wire state business very good. So get busy, you knaves of the grip and see what the boys can use. . . .

RAY BRIAN of the Capitol theatre,
Pekin, is again on the job, concluding an eight weeks' quarantine from an attack of typhoid. Put it there, Ray, we are all glad to see your smiling visage illumine the Capitol's lobby.

Associated Producers, Inc., founded last April and releasing its first production in September, 1920, to date has released a total of nine productions.

When the industry in general heard that seven Producers planned to operate their own distribution, and on a 20% basis, we were freely scoffed at by the professional elements of the business.

Today—six months since September—Associated Producers, Inc., is on a profit-making footing and is operating a complete distributing machine within the 20% of original prediction and intention.

Wires Allen T. Himmons, of the Allen Theatre: "'Outside The Law' a positive knockout. Everybody tickled to death. The most people that ever came to see a picture at the Allen Theatre. At least fifteen hundred turned away first day. Broke all records. Universal certainly put over a wonderful advertising and exploitation campaign."

SECOND SHOWING in Washington

Another hot wire: "Moore's Rialto Theatre engagement of 'Outside the Law' one of the biggest in the history of the house. Mr. Moore just booked picture for his Garden Theatre, which is only two blocks from the Rialto, for a second showing."
Allan Dwan presents

A comedy drama from the Saturday Evening Post story
by CARL CLAUSEN
Personally directed by Mr. DWAN

A PERFECT CRIME
The modern Munchausen—
That's Monte Blue in this latest Dwan Production. It is indeed "A Perfect Crime" to tell the tales Mr. Blue as Wally Riggs, does. Your audience will enjoy them with real zest —and then, when the "twist" comes, wonder why such a perfect liar would walk so stupidly into the hands of his arch enemy, who in this case happens to be the district attorney.

The district attorney! Yes, you've caught it—Drama. Along with the high comedy. Plus that terrific "twist" in the story.

Small wonder our branches are wiring back congratulations on "the different picture!" And that we, in turn, congratulate our exhibitor-customers.
A DIFFERENT PICTURE—AT LAST!

Allan Dwan has made it—that long-awaited photoplay which can thrill with its drama, tickle the risibilities with its comedy, tug at the heart strings with its pathos, and do them all equally well. "A Perfect Crime" is perfectly different, perfectly adapted to the showman who knows that 95% of what is termed "showmanship" consists of getting away from the usual—making the public sit up and talk! Presented by Mr. Dwan with a typical Dwan cast, headed by Monte Blue and Jacqueline Logan.
She married him for better or for worse — and the fight she waged was a winning one.

Wherein a Bully Gets His

Just one of the high lights in Irvin V. Willat's epic of the sea is the fight between young Bradley Nickerson and the bucko mate of the "Thomas Doane." There's a thrill in every foot of the picture and a love story that will appeal to everyone. Mr. Willat,—artist that he is,—has never created a better production.

ETHEL GREY TERRY

"THE CHILD STAYS WITH ME!"

This was the culminating tragedy of their ill-starred union. All too well did the little mother know the fate that awaited her baby girl if the beast whose name she bore were allowed to work his will. And so, with the courage that is born of despair, she took a desperate step—and found that it led to happiness.
Out of the Chorus into the "400"

That was the sudden leap which Flo Madden took after one of the performances of the Winter Palace Revue.

After the first deliriously happy days of her honeymoon came many lonely hours—the studied cruelty and scorn of her husband's aristocratic people—their plots to alienate his love—hours of heartache and misunderstanding.

Is it any wonder she allowed herself to dream sometimes of the old days—those friendly, happy chorus days of laughter and excitement and applause?

Here is a picture that holds your heart in a grip of thrilling emotion. Superb drama it is—with splendid inspired acting such as Alice Brady alone can do!
As Great A Role
As "Madame X"

You remember her in that great Goldwyn Picture, "Madame X." Here she is in another big role in the screen version of the famous play that ran one full year on Broadway.

Goldwyn Picture
EXHIBITORS will always remember "Madame X" because of the extraordinary manner in which it swayed the emotions of an audience.

"Roads of Destiny", which gives Pauline Frederick an equally powerful role, will cast the same sort of spell upon your patrons. It is a picture that will shove your attendance marks far past the line of every-day profits.

GAYETY COMEDIES
VANITY COMEDIES

52 One-Reel Comedies a Year

As usual, Educational is first with a weekly service of one-reel comedies which fit anywhere, in any program, in any theatre.

And—Gayety and Vanity Comedies are backed by Educational character—of production, action and acting.

Full of fast fun, Gayety and Vanity Comedies never lag. They invariably put pep into your program.

That sterling quality which has been characteristic of Educational's releases ever since this type of entertainment was introduced into the motion picture industry guarantees the speed of these comedies.

Many programs need just a one-reel comedy to make them complete. That is why Gayety and Vanity Comedies exist. Educational's policy is to enable exhibitors to build well-balanced programs with the least effort.

Gayety and Vanity Comedies were originated to meet an existing need—not merely to give exhibitors something more to buy.

MAN vs WOMAN

A NEW CHRISTIE TWO-REEL COMEDY

Reflects the Usual High Quality of all
CHRISTIE COMEDIES

“Almost as good as a CHRISTIE COMEDY” is a phrase used to describe the exceptional efforts of casual comedy producers. Al. Christie produces 26 comedies a year and has never yet failed to make a hit with a single release!

Every Christie Comedy is personally supervised by Al. Christie.

Christie Comedies have the personality of their producer, not merely his name.

And—Al. Christie is the most experienced producer of two-reel comedies in the world today, as well as one of the most gifted and finished.

Christie's unbroken series of successes shows that luck or accident play no part whatever in his ability to hit the bull's-eye of public favor.

This proved ability to release a first-class two-reel comedy every other week throughout an entire year has made Christie's name on motion picture comedies mean what “Sterling” means on silver.

MAN vs. WOMAN is high-class without being high-brow. It strikes a new note in comedy which has an appeal to every type of motion picture patron.

Every exhibitor is demanding “bigger and better” pictures.

Every exhibitor says “My house is always open to really big pictures,—but I can’t get enough of them.”

Here is a picture which on its proven record is really “bigger and better.”

It was made by exhibitors for exhibitors in full knowledge of what constitutes box-office value; it has star, story, direction, production, cast and title.

It is then the perfect type of the production which every exhibitor realizes is necessary to his interests. As such it is of very great importance to you.

What the critics say:

BEST PICTURE EVER

"Never anything like it ever screened before. Charles Ray is better and more clever than ever. Splendidly done without a subtitle. No other screen actor is as capable of so expertly expressing what he thinks. Everyone is bound to love it. It will tickle you as no picture ever has."

—Chicago Daily Journal.

HUMAN BIT OF ART

"A very human bit of art. The audiences had the best sort of time

DON'T MISS IT

"It's a joy and a surprise. A picture that is true to life, human and skillfully handled. The grown-up boys showed their delight by continuous laughter. Don't miss it."

—Chicago Daily Tribune.

RAY AT HIS BEST

"Charles Ray at his best. Incidents of your own boyhood. Side splitting adventures. A boy, who as Ray makes him, is a fine portrait to —Chicago Daily Tribune.

NOT A SUBTITLE

"It is so cleverly acted and produced not a subtitle is used or needed.
Charles Ray does his best work. The picture will go down in history and

During the next few months many exhibitors will have the question of a downward revision in admission prices thrust upon them. This will occur not from any equitable reasons but simply as an incident of the widespread economic readjustment that is taking place.

An exhibitor who permits himself to drift blindly into this situation will be doing a very unwise thing. Without waiting for the question to be brought home to him, it now devolves upon every theatre man to inform himself intelligently upon the facts of the matter and to be prepared to maintain the only correct position which is that it is neither reasonable nor possible to lower theatre admission charges.

The motion picture industry is only in a very indirect manner concerned in the economic readjustment that is taking place. This accounts for the business being in a thoroughly sound and prosperous condition in every branch. Theatre attendance not only has not decreased but there are indications that new millions are being added to the motion picture public of America. Chief among the reasons for this is that the finer pictures which are now being exhibited in finer and greater picture theatres are numbering among picture patrons thousands who never previously attended.

There are but two basic considerations upon which the future prosperity of this industry rests: Theatre attendance and admission prices. The question of theatre attendance may be dismissed with little consideration; the public is coming in increasingly greater numbers and will continue to come. The question that must be carefully considered hinges upon admission prices. Any general decrease in admission prices will seriously imperil the industry because the present level of revenues is only sufficient to maintain theatre and production standards and to provide for the necessary advancements.

From this statement of the situation it will appear that a very grave responsibility devolves upon the exhibitor. In instances where the price question is raised it is not desirable that the exhibitor merely assume an arbitrary position; it becomes his right and duty to make the facts known to his public and when the facts are known the public will be convinced that the theatre is eminently entitled to the revenue it is now receiving.

The gravest danger of the situation is passive acceptance of the glib argument that motion picture theatres have taken advantage of wartime conditions to screw prices up to the top notch. This is a scurrilous argument which is not compatible with the facts in any manner. It must be met and branded as a lie.
The Samuel Gompers pronouncement on censorship, printed in last week’s issue, may be used most effectively by exhibitors throughout the country. Mr. Gompers’ opinion is a direct and logical statement, indicating a thorough understanding of the essentials of the question. Important in itself, yet with the added significance of Mr. Gompers’ name, this statement remains as an effective instrument to bring to bear upon the censorship situation. Exhibitors should aid in the important work of seeing that this statement is freely circulated among the membership of the American Federation of Labor.

It is to be hoped that in the spirited little contest that has developed between Mr. Robert W. Priest and the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc., none will lose sight of the conspicuous fact that illustrations have appeared in certain trade publications which have been a source of solace and satisfaction to those who would tighten the bonds of censorship upon the industry. If we were called upon to fix the responsibility for the appearance of these objectionable illustrations we would be compelled to include a rather numerous group and Mr. Priest would in no way be among the most conspicuous principals. To our mind the important thing at this time is for responsible persons to guard against the reappearance of matter that might be properly criticized, rather than uselessly expending effort in argument as to who did and who didn’t in a days gone by.

There is perhaps a no more widely acclaimed authority on juvenile delinquency in America than Judge Ben Lindsey of Denver. Judge Lindsey has devoted the greater part of his adult life to this work and his efforts have received international recognition. Consequently, the following declarations of Judge Lindsey are of unquestionable value and importance:

“My experience in the juvenile court is,” said Judge Lindsay in a recent address, “that Sunday movies are positively in the interest of morality and good citizenship. If the children and their parents have no Sunday moving pictures to go to the children are almost sure to go on the streets, back alleys, barns and dark places.

“I do not recall a half dozen cases in the twenty-one years I have been on the bench where any of our officers could trace crime among children to the moving pictures.”
Censor Advocates
Losing Fight for Indiana Measure
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)
INDIANAPOLIS, IND., March 1.—With the present session of the state legislature nearly finished, the motion picture censorship bills appear well on the road to being lost in a sea of wilder-ness. The men who introduced the bills seem bewildered as to their value, while supporters of this or that proposed law among women's clubs and other organizations are fighting among themselves on the question of picture control. Meanwhile, two censorship bills have been killed and the one remaining has been amended to please various sets of proponents.

Another bill has been introduced to make Sunday motion pictures for pay and Sunday baseball for pay illegal. The penalty for violation by picture men would be a fine of not less than $250 nor more than $500.

Missouri Advance Deposit
Bill Ready for Final Action
Measure Provides That Trust Fund Be Established
For Payment on Productions When Latter
Are Delivered to Exhibitor
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)
JEFFERSON CITY, MO., March 1.—The Missouri state senate has engrossed a bill calculated by its sponsors "to protect motion picture exhibitors throughout the state when they invest in films and are compelled to place advance deposits and then fail to receive the films."

Senator Pensev of Butler introduced the measure. It was amended by the judiciary committee but not so as to interfere with the purpose of the law.

Provides For Trust Fund in Local Banks
Briefly the bills proposed that when exhibitors make advance deposits on films prior to play date the money must be placed in a bank or trust company in the city or county in which the theatre man resides. The money will be retained as a trust fund to be paid out only when certain films have been delivered for exhibition.

Exhibitors of the state believe that such a law will correct the evils which they allege are due to the advance deposit system. The bill introduced fol-lows closely the present law in the state of New York.

Demand Bicycle Riding Ability Of Embryo Film Stars

Kansas City Publishers Sell $3 Book to All Who Aspire to Take Part in Motion Picture It May Produce

PRODUCTION heads of firmly established film companies will undoubtedly inspect critically "The Dominant Power," announced as a "coming feature production based on the popular new book" of the same title by the Popular Players Company, Kansas City, Mo. Literature of that concern now being circulated in the Northwest outlines a method of procedure which contrasts sharply with studios and exteriors in bulk.

The "Official Characterization Blank" supplied citizens who believe themselves fitted for motion picture work is especially interesting. It is in three plainly separated divisions.

The first division contains space for "Date received," "Blank No.," "Classification" and "File No." The applicant is warned not to write in that space.

Second division provides space for attachment of a photograph, then lists 26 questions which range from "What is your complexion?" to "Can you ride a bicycle?" The final question is apparently included to discourage the insincere. It reads: "Are you absolutely sincere in desiring to secure a place in the cast for the coming feature production, based on the popular new book, "The Dominant Power'? Do you understand, however, that final judgment will be based on personal adaptability which will be determined by a committee headed by a casting director, and are you satisfied with this arrangement?'" The signature line follows.

The third division is ruled off by a heavy broken border. No reference to it is made above that line. It reads:

Popular Players Company, Kansas City, Mo.

Gentlemen: I desire to become a member of the cast in your coming feature production, "The Dominant Power." In order to acquaint myself with the plot, sub-plots, continuity of scenes and characters so that I will be prepared to take any part that should be assigned to me without delay, I am herewith ordering a copy of the Popular Players Company, 1411 Wyandotte street, Kansas City, Mo., for a copy of the popular new book, "The Dominant Power," upon which the film will be based; also forward to the United Publishing Company my subscription to the Home Friend Magazine, which is to contain material of interest to all interested parties.

Enclosing $2.00 to cover the cost of same.

Send book and magazine as per order (Space for address follows.)

* * *

Should a picture produced by the Popular Players Company, a strangely selected title by the way, reach the screens of the country, it will be closely examined by "old line" producers. The methods of cast selection, pre-publication, exploitation, etc., are, to state the case conservatively, unique, innovational, peculiar.

Have book publishers and motion picture producers overlooked a glittering opportunity these many years? Are the stars of established standing less capable and less "sincere" than the hosts of embryo actors occupying inconspicuous positions in private life but so devoted to the screen as to be willing to buy the works to be pictured on the mere chance of being selected for work in its production?

There are two definitions of the word "exploitation." Just which definition applied to the Popular Players Company's enterprise is not entirely clear.

Time will determine.

Griffith Films Will Compete in Boston (From Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, March 1.—D. W. Griffith's "Dream Street," based on one of Thomas Burke's Limehouse stories, will play indefinite engagements at the Majestic theatre, Boston, and the Chestnut Street Opera House, Philadelphia, opening simultaneously on May 2. The pictures will open in New York, April 3, as the Central theatre, as previously announced.

With the opening of "Dream Street" in Boston and New York, Mr. Griffith will be playing in opposition to himself. "Way Down East" is being shown in the two cities mentioned.

Will Play at Strand (From Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, March 1.—The next two United Artists pictures will play the Strand theatre instead of the Capitol, where recent "Big Four" pictures have been shown. The two are Douglas Fairbanks in "The Nut" and Mary Pickford in "Through the Back Door." The Fairbanks picture will be shown the week of March 6. No date has been set for the engagement of the Mary Pickford subject.

Public Sentiment Blow to Crafts Efforts at Capital

Indications Are That Majority of Commissioners at Washington, D. C., Will Oppose Any Legal Censorship Measure
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 1.—Efforts of reformers to jam censorship down the throats of exhibitors proved unsuccessful yesterday when theatre men and producers, fortified by public opinion, rallied to the assistance of the local industry.

From all indications the decision of the commissioners of the District of Columbia will be that the present laws are adequate and that censorship is not needed.

Griffith Talks Against Censorship Measure

Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts, superintendent of the International Reform Bureau, Dr. Lucius Clark, representing the churches, and lesser lights led the fight for regulation. Opposing this coercive legislation were David Ward Griffith, Monsignor Cornelius F. Thomas, pastor of St. Patricks Roman Catholic church, Charles C. Foster, who holds a high official position in the District, B. I. Boudren, representing the Hamilton Savings Bank, and W. Stephen Bush, speaking for the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

How public sentiment properly organized will rally to the aid of the industry in its fight against censorship was strikingly demonstrated. It was evident from the opening of the hearing that a decided majority of the crowd filling the room to overflowing was in sympathy with the motion picture men.

Say "Inspection" Wanted

The agitators emphasized that they do not want a blue Sunday and are making no attempt to attain such. They want federal censorship, they testified, but until that can be accomplished they desire local regulation. Throughout the hearing Dr. Crafts and his associates fought shy of the use of the word "censorship," claiming that they wanted inspection similar to the inspection of foods, so as to assure "clean pictures."

Although none of their statements that nothing but objectionable films are shown here, not one of those talking for the reformers could name a production considered improper.

Attack Dr. Crafts

Dr. Crafts was the object of attack regarding alleged untruthfulness in presenting his case to the various civic bodies of the city. The hearing was marked by several clashes between witnesses while many outsiders tried in vain for a chance to talk.

Mr. Griffith spoke eloquently. He traced the history of censorship showing that it has been a means of oppression in all ages. Bursts of applause frequently interrupted his talk.

"First Step in Suppression"

Admitting that some films were shown that should never have been produced, Mr. Griffith argued that the same was true of books. He declared that censorship was the first step toward supression of the freedom of speech and its attendant ills. He pointed out that the first censorship in the world was in Germany, the next in Russia and, he declared, both were examples of absolute monarchy where the people were absolutely and completely under the control of the government.

A censorship here, he stated, would be the first step toward the introduction of other laws restricting speech, whereas, if the industry is not hampered, but receives the cooperation of the public, objectionable films can be driven out of existence without any legislation.

Great credit for the management of the hearing must be given to Julian Brylawski, "Daddy" Brylawski and Harry Crandall.

(From Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, March 1.—Hiram Abrams, president of United Artists, returned to New York yesterday from a vacation in Palm Beach.

"The Most Valuable Service"

A definite indication of the scope and information power of EXHIBITORS HERALD's department, "What the Picture Did For Me," is to be had in an analysis of the matter printed in the department in this issue.

Reports from theatres of every character and size, in every type of community are included.

Exhibitors in thirty-eight states and Canada have contributed accurate data on the drawing power of pictures played, disclosing a valid, nation-wide appreciation of the productions mentioned.

"What the Picture Did For Me" stands out as the most valuable service obtainable for the exhibitor and for the industry at large.
Radical Licensing System to Control Exhibition of Films Proposed by Illinois Women

A licensing system which would prohibit absolutely the exhibition of pictures considered objectionable by the censorate is proposed by the Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs.

Such a measure has been drafted by Mrs. Guy Blanchard, chairman of the motion picture committee of the federation, which met in Chicago last week.

Plan Springfield Headquarters

Headquarters of the censorate would be maintained at Springfield. All productions shown in the state would first be granted a license. Should a license be refused the picture would have to be shelved in this state.

In discussion on the subject of motion pictures Mrs. F. R. Moulton declared educational films more "fascinating" than productions starring Douglas Fairbanks, which, she declared, contain too much trick photography.

Want Films in Schools

"Now a film showing the evolution of a butterfly, its development from a caterpillar through the chrysalis stage until it emerges like a gorgeous fairy," she said, "is much more entertaining than a "leap for life." The entire process requiring several weeks is speeded up so that the metamorphosis takes place within fifteen minutes.

The federation also wants attention given to the exhibition of educational films in schools.

Small Boy" Agrees To Censor Pictures

(Special to Exhibitors Herald) SACRAMENTO, CALIF., March 1.—"I don't feel that I want to give all my time to censoring films. However, my small boy has agreed to relieve me of the full responsibility and serve for nothing."

This statement is made by Will C. Wood, state superintendent of public instruction. Under the provisions of the censorship bill in the legislature regulation would be controlled by the superintendent and the state board of education.

May Vote on Sunday Closing in Enid, Okla.

(Special to Exhibitors Herald) ENID, OKLA., March 1.—City commissioners, following a request of the Ministerial Alliance that show places be closed on Sunday, indicated that a referendum might be taken on the question. The alliance also asked that the board of censorship be revived.

(Special to Exhibitors Herald) NEWARK, N. J., March 1.—A new $400,000 theatre will be erected at 208 Ferry street.

Federal Censorship Proposed in South Dakota Legislative Action

(Washington Bureau Exhibitors Herald) WASHINGTON, D. C., March 1.—A national law providing for film censorship is favored in South Dakota, according to a resolution of the state legislature which has been received by the speaker of the house of representatives, the president of the senate and members of the state delegation in congress.

"There is a widespread agitation for a better supervision of moving pictures which are to be shown in places of public amusement," it is declared in the resolution. "There is now no government regulation for review and approval of such films to be transported in interstate commerce and shown to the public, and state review and legislation interferes with and makes a burden on the local exhibitor instead of correcting the subject at the source of production."

"Therefore, we petition the congress of the United States to enact such remedial legislation as will require the producers of all moving pictures calculated to be offered for transportation in interstate commerce and showing to the public to be reviewed by a legal board under authority of congress to the end that all such films may have legal approval for public showing uniformly in public places of amusement within the states and territories of the United States and not be subject to individual, local or state restrictions."
Solons Say Censor Bill "Impossible"
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

DES MOINES, Ia., March 1.—The cartel affairs committee which has been considering the motion picture censorship bill introduced in the house by Representative John Olson declares the measure is "impossible." The committee holds the opinion that it would be impossible to redraft the measure.

which has considered the ordinance proposed by Alderman T. O. Dahl. The ordinance would have prohibited crime films.

Militant Clergyman
Plans Competition to Force Sunday Closing
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

COKEVILLE, Wyo., Feb. 28.—Rev.
William Jobush, pastor of the Community Presbyterian church, has issued an ultimatum to local theatre owners to discontinue Sunday shows or face competition in the line of motion pictures at his church three times a week.

He states that his entertainments will be free, the expense being met by taking up a collection and selling ice cream after the picture has been projected. He says he is to be supplied with film by Church
Film Corporation.

It is believed that his entertainments, if they materialize, will create new patrons for the theatres instead of decreas-ing their business.

Bill Would Prohibit Nudity and Cruelty
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

WHEELING, W. Va., March 1.—A merciless measure introduced in the senate by Delegate D. O. Foult would make it a criminal act to present or aid in the presentation of a picture which shows nudity, cruelty or crime. Violation would be punishable by a fine of $1,000, or six months in the county jail.

Poster Bill Becomes Law Despite Its Veto
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

SEATTLE, Wash., March 1.—Despite the veto by Mayor Caldwell of the council, bill for regulation of motion picture displays becomes a law. The corporation counsel holds that as the veto was not filed with the city clerk within ten days it automatically becomes a law.

Build Concrete Theatre

Enforcement of Drastic Law
At Kalamazoo Requires That

"Howdy, Old Kid"

Theatre Men Contend That Its Revival Will Mean Closing of Some of the Playhouses in the Michigan City
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

KALAMAZOO, Mich., March 1.—Kalamazoo exhibitors are confronted by a law which may mean the closing of some of their theatres.

A state law governing the display of posters has been so interpreted as to include motion picture advertising and film scenes. Chief of Police Ben F. Taffee has announced that the law will be enforced "dis-cretely."

Exhibitors claim that there is a possibility that enforcement may close a numer of houses. According to their interpretation of the law, only travellers and educational weeklies would be permitted exhibition.

Chief Taffee has informed the theatre men that they must legally censor their films. He declared that every complaint of violation will be investigated and proper action taken.

The law specifies that "it shall be unlawful for any person to post, place or display on any sign board, billboard, fence, building, sidewalk, or other object, or in any street, road, or other public place, any sign, picture, printing, or other representation of murder, assassination, stabbing, fighting, or of any personal violence, or of the commission of any crime, or any representation of the human form in an attitude or dress which would be indecent in the case of a living person, if such person so appeared on any public street, square or highway."

What action will be taken by the possibility is not known. The difficulty they see in censoring their own pictures is that their viewpoint may differ from that of some patron. The result of this might be that they would be charged with violation of the law, although conscientious in their work of censoring.

What Exhibitors Are Saying About
EXHIBITORS HERALD

"As one of your new subscribers, it affords me pleasure to write you that I am most pleased with EXHIBITORS HERALD. It fills the bill in every respect and after going over the pages, one certainly knows it all (for the time being) in the film world."—William M. Drake, manager Strand theatre, Newark, N. J.

"We think the different departments of your magazine are the best. We must have EXHIBITORS HERALD."—Earl Bookwalter, manager Ideal theatre, Halstead, Kans.

"EXHIBITORS HERALD is about the only motion picture publication which permits the exhibitor to speak right out in meeting and tell the truth as he sees it."—E. E. Sprague, manager Lyric theatre, Goodland, Kans.
Hodkinson Warns Producers to

Heed Signs of Time

Says Industry Must Pay Attention When Men With Unselfish Motives Demand Censorship

WHILE firmly opposed to censorship or other drastic regulation, W. W. Hodkinson, president of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, sees in the present situation a warning which every producer must heed at once.

Demands for censorship from professional reformers and jealous theatrical interests mean nothing, he says, but continues:

"When a demand for censorship or other drastic regulation is voiced by men and women who have no selfish motives, it is the plain duty of the leaders of this industry to pay attention."

"I want to suggest once more the need of immediate action," he declares, in his concluding statements, and points out where he believes there is need for care in production. His statement is as follows:

"A glance at the news columns of the trade press shows that censorship measures have been introduced in almost every state where the legislature is now in session. We are facing an extraordinary situation. Never before has there been such a widespread agitation for censorship of motion pictures, born, no doubt, of the anti-picture propaganda which has been packing a clever and systematically by the enemies of the industry. In a recent letter to the New York Times I have indicated some of the sources of this anti-picture propaganda and as far as this propaganda can be traced to the jealousy of theatrical interests, the seekers after notoriety there is no special occasion for alarm. There is, however, a new element in this agitation which cannot be dismissed lightly, and it is that great groups of sincere men and women who have hitherto been friendly and well-disposed toward the pictures but whom the greed and recklessness of certain producers are about to drive into the ranks of opponents of censorship."

"The industry as a whole has been remiss in performing its full duty to the public. When a demand for censorship or other drastic regulation is voiced by men and women who have no selfish motives it is the plain duty of the leaders of this industry to pay attention."

The Worm Turns

NEW YORK, March 1.—Time was when producers of road shows defied their audiences and issued them with a Motion Picture. Now the worm has turned. The new D. W. Griffith twenty-four sheets on "Way Down East" was this line prominently displayed: "Not a Stage Play.

Exhibitors Predict

Censorship Beaten

In North Carolina

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEW YORK, March 1.—The outlook for defeating censorship in North Carolina is hopeful, according to an optimistic telegram received at the headquarters of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry from Percy W. Wells, president of the North Carolina Motion Picture Theatre Owners. In his wire Mr. Wells thanks the National Association for its aid in opposing the censorship bill, also praises the work of Thomas Dixon and E. F. Dardine, who represents the National Association in censorship matters in North Carolina. Mr. Dixon, well known as an author, went to Raleigh at the request of the National Association and appeared before the General Assembly in opposition to the censorship measure.

Northwest Advertiser

Enters Eastern Field

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., March 1.—J. L. Johnston has resigned as director of advertising for Finkelstein & Ruben. He will go East to enter a larger field, his future plans to be announced later. Mr. Johnston, called up by the Minneapolis exhibitors for nearly two years, was one of the first sectional exchanges. Publicity men have joined Universal in 1916. He has fostered cleaner and more legible advertising copy and during his two years with Finkelstein & Ruben he has demonstrated his ideas to a decided advantage.

Carmel Myers Makes

Her Marriage Known

LOS ANGELES—Carmel Myers, Universal star, has been married for a year and a half to J. N. Kornblum, a musical composer and impresario, it has just been made public.

Miss Myers and Kornblum guarded the secret carefully until a few days ago, when his latest musical comedy, "Blue Eyes," opened in New York. As soon as she heard of the success of the piece Miss Myers announced her marriage.

El Paso Theatre

Sold to J. C. Quinn

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

EL PASO, TEX., March 1.—Winch & Campbell have sold their ownership of the Wigwam theatre to John C. Quinn, managing director of the Rialto theatre. The latter proposes to change the theatre's name to the Texas Grand and to book road shows for it. He will also close the Rialto.

Biggest Meeting in History Planned by N. Y. Exhibitors

Comprehensive Advertising Campaign Is Expected to Assure 100 Per Cent Attendance at the Rochester Convention

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

ROCHESTER, N. Y., March 1.—Biggest exhibitors convention in the history of the state!

This is the announcement of the local organization of theatre men which is conducting a comprehensive advertising campaign heralding the convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of the State of New York at the Seneca hotel here on April 5, 6 and 7.

Use Every Medium of Advertising and Publicity

Every possible medium of advertising and publicity is being used. All exchange mail going to the theatre men contains a reminder of the meeting. I. M. Salyards, chairman of the executive committee, has hung signs in every exchange in the state. He has prepared cartoon postcards for wide circulation. The cartoon depicts a man and his wife carrying a suitcase. Under the picture is printed this statement: "Wiley and I are going to the Rochester convention of exhibitors of the State of New York. Bring Yours!"

Something unusual in the way of advertising an exhibitors convention is being conducted by the Rochester newspaper. Through the activities of W. A. Calihan all of the papers have begun eight weeks prior to the meeting a teaser campaign which is expected to be effective.

Plan Dance and Banquet

In addition to the business sessions at which many important questions will be discussed a dance on Wednesday night and a banquet on Thursday are planned. Prominent members of the state legislature have been invited to attend the dinner.

The executive committee which is handling all details consists of Mr. Salyards of the Victoria theatre; W. H. Kelly, secretary, Victoria; George H. Caffery, treasurer, Clinton; George Kress, chairman of the entertainment committee. J. Greenstone of the Empire, is chairman of the committee on concessions; F. J. Koch of the Lyndhurst hotel; Chairman H. Whitaker, Stahler of the Rose Garden, chairman of the banquet committee, and John J. Farren of the Victoria is handling arrangements for the ball.

Would Regulate Slides And Views in Michigan

LANSING, MICH., March 1.—A bill introduced by Senator John W. Smith of Port Huron would place censorship in the hands of the superintendent of public instruction and two employees of his office. A fee of $1 for each reel not exceeding 1,000 feet would be charged for reviewing. One dollar also would be the fee for inspection of a set of views or slides. Fifty cents would be charged for reviewing church and educational films.

ANN ARBOR, MICH., March 1.—The Parent-Teachers' Association has requested the local theatre exhibit during the Easter school vacation pictures of special interest and value to children.

Censorship Up in Missouri House Despite Its Defeat by Committee

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

JEFFERSON CITY, MO., March 1.—By a vote of 98 to 19, after a spirited debate, the house of representatives placed on the calendar the bill creating censorship. The criminal jurisprudence committee had reported unfavorably on the bill. This is one of the few cases in the history of the state legislature in which a proposed law killed in committee was later engrossed on the house calendar.

The action was taken on motion of Representative Sunderewith of Bates county who declared there was widespread demand for film regulation. Representative Vandeventer of Christian county led the opposition, stating that the measure was an infringement on personal rights. He stated that operation of censorship would cost the tax payers $21,020 a year.

Exhibitors and other film men appeared this week before the senate judiciary committee in opposition to the censorship bills. Sidney Baker, representing the Film Board of Trade, and Fred Wenberg, vice-president of the St. Louis Motion Picture Exhibitors, made the principal arguments against the bills. Charles T. Sears, president of the state organization, also appeared to oppose the legislation.
Suggests Extending Censorship to Shop Window Displays

Texan Urges Reforming Advocating Picture Censorship to Go After Merchants Who Display Underwear and to "Cleanse" Public Library

Texas has often been spoken of as the state with "...en of iron and women of gold." Apparently it is also the home of many men with a sense of humor.

Lloyd B. Thomas, former editor of the Taylor County Times of Abilene, Tex., is one of these.

Abilene is now threatened with the creation of a local censorship of motion pictures, the leading advocate of which is B. A. Cox, a man who does not attend motion picture theatres.

Lloyd B. Thomas, who is anxious to defend Abilene's one remaining amusement, has taken a course which promises complete success. He is not advocating the defeat of the Cox measure. Instead, he is advocating its passage after it has been strengthened by six amendments he has prepared.

Here are the amendments to the Cox ordinance which Thomas proposes:

First: That it be deemed a pecuniary offense for any merchant to display in his shop windows any piece of women's wear of any description or any men's underwear, socks or shirts.

Second: That a fine of from $500 to $1,000 be the penalty for any Abilene merchant using the names of any part of the "intimate" feminine wearing apparel in any of his advertising matter or listing the same by name on a statement when presenting a bond to a customer for such articles.

Third: That the schools and colleges of the town be hereby commanded to not use Greek or Latin text books wherein are contained pictures of ancient and perhaps nude statues or paintings of historic value, or furthermore from using any history as a text book wherein is given an account of any case of murder, arson, murder, or any mention of any war, secession, rebellion or other fight or disagreement, and that a school found guilty of violating any provision of this ordinance be promptly closed by proper officers of the law.

Fourth: That a fine of $100 be imposed on any minister or Sunday school superintendent, public speaker or leader who reads from the Bible as now printed and furnished locally, any of the chapters, verses or portions thereof which either directly or indirectly mention wine or strong drink, whereby the minds of our people may become poisoned, and, further, that the council of Abilene appoint a committee of five with special police powers to collect all Bibles now in use and cut therefrom all mention of such occurrences as the drunkenness of Noah, murder of Abel, and all accounts of wars, plots, seditions and sudden deaths, whether by mortal or divine direction, and that as soon as possible a special edition of the Scriptures be prepared and posted for distribution in this city.

Fifth: That all newspapers, whether either printed, sold or distributed in this city, and all periodicals or magazines so distributed in this city, be prohibited if they contain any items or accounts of fights, brawls or murders, suicides or death from any but natural causes.

Sixth: That all public and private libraries of the city be immediately seized and held until therefrom may be removed every great masterpiece in literature, for no real masterpiece that we have ever heard of exists but contains some word or mention of some act of violence or deed of passion.

Production Rights in Peru Granted Ojeda

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

LAX ANGELES, March 1.—Manuel Ojeda, Los Angeles film man, will produce in Peru. He has obtained from President Agusto R. Legula a patent of introduction giving him sole rights to introduce motion picture equipment, a concession of 100 acres of land, permission to import equipment without payment of duty, and permission to take pictures throughout the country.

It is also stated that he has made arrangements with the Empress De Teatro C. Cinneas, Ltd., to show pictures in 152 theatres on the West Coast of South America. Ojeda is enthusiastic over picture prospects in Peru.

Borah Would Protect Right of Free Speech

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 1.—Senator Borah has introduced in the senate a bill providing for immediate removal from office of any officer, agent or employe of the United States who unlawfully interferes with the civil rights of citizens or persons within the United States.

Drastic punishment provided includes a fine of $10,000, imprisonment for not more than five years, or both, and the right reserved to the person maltreated or his house or office searched without proper warrant, or denied lawful freedom of speech, to sue for personal damages, $10,000 being the least sum which can be recovered.

The Idaho senator charged there is an increasing disregard for the great civil guarantees of the constitution.

Capital to Regulate Storage of Prints

Picture Interests Offer No Opposition to Measure As Drafted

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 1.—New regulations regarding the storage of motion picture films in the District of Columbia probably will be made effective within six weeks.

A public hearing on the proposed regulations, drafted by the chief engineer of the fire department, was held by the District commissioners on February 23, at which no opposition was presented by the representatives of the industry.

The motion picture men told the commissioners that the changes in storage conditions proposed in the regulations would mean a great added expense to the exchange men, but that the requirements would be met as soon as possible. The regulations are now in the hands of the chief engineer for final consideration, after which they will be submitted to the commissioners for approval. After being approved they will be published and will become a law a month later.

Protests Seizure and Sale
Of Films by Customs Agent

Cromelin States That This “High Handed Arbitrary Action Is Unjust and Unfair” to the Motion Picture Industry

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)
NEW YORK, March 1.—Paul H. Cromelin, chairman of the export division of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, has protested vigorously the seizure and sale of motion pictures by the collector of customs of New York. The protest was made to the secretary of the treasury.

The protest was based upon a notice advertising the sale of a miscellaneous lot of film consisting of approximately 171 reels which had been seized to the seizure room of the customs house on February 23. Mr. Cromelin, in a letter to the secretary of the treasury, states that it is not customary in the motion picture industry to sell films outright, but to lease them, and that the sale of any films by the customs officials for unpaid duties is a dangerous practice.

“There are a number of pirates in this industry who are watching every opportunity to get possession of films such as these, which they put out with disregard to the original owners and lessees,” wrote Mr. Cromelin in his protest to Washington.

Mr. Cromelin, who is president of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, was not notified of the sale until the day it took place. He immediately telegraphed a formal protest to the collector of customs as follows:

Action Is Unjust
“On behalf of the motion picture industry I protest emphatically against the sale of motion pictures notice of which dated February 21 has just been received signed Peter F. Bradley, acting deputy collector to take place at 10 o’clock today February 23 at the seizure room 941 Washington street.

“Regardless of whose property may be involved in this high handed arbitrary action practically without notice is unjust and unfair to a great industry whose representatives have been assured in Washington such a course would not be taken and we insist and demand that the property of motion picture exporters and importers be protected against such confiscatory action as is announced in the notice of sale complained of.”

Would Prevent Repetition

Mr. Cromelin states that he had no information as to the identity of the films and that the protest was made primarily to put the industry on record in opposition to the principle involved. In his letter to the secretary of the treasury, he requests that instructions be issued to prevent a repetition of such action which gave rise to the complaint.

Aeroplane Advertises
National Premiere of “The Perfect Crime”

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)
DAVENPORT, Ia., March 1.—“The Perfect Crime,” Allan Dwan’s latest production for the Associated Producers, was given its premiere showing here Sunday.

Unusual interest was aroused due to the fact that the print which was shown was brought from Chicago by aeroplane Saturday. Berger Tomte of the Chicago office of the Associated Producers accompanied the driver of the aeroplane on the trip.

Petitions Would Keep Tillson in Kalamazoo

KALAMAZOO, Mich., March 1.—Efforts to have LeRoy Tillson continue as manager of the Regent theatre instead of taking over the management of the new $600,000 Butterfield theatre in Lansing are being put forth by local friends of this popular theatre owner.

Local clubs and business organizations are sending petition and letters to Col. Butterfield, owner of the theatres, asking that Tillson be retained here.
Censorship Situation Inspired
N. A. M. P. I. Appeal

Says CARL LAEMMLE

THAT the invitation to exhibitors to join the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry published in the Moving Picture Weekly by Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, was made with a view to cementing producers and exhibitors together in a nation-wide censorship fight, according to a telegram sent by the Universal chief to Eugene B. McCurdy, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Maryland, whose organization took exception to his appeal for the National Association.

Mr. Laemmle assured Mr. McCurdy that he never has been a party to any attack on exhibitor organizations.

Mr. Laemmle's telegram is as follows:

"Article in Moving Picture Weekly inviting exhibitors to join National Association no reflection whatsoever on any other organization. Had no idea it would be taken as such by exhibitors. Was inspired solely by censorship crisis and our desire to cement industry and do everything possible for exhibitors and ourselves to counteract censorship. I was not present at meeting, but was advised by telegraph of all that took place. I have never been and never will be a party to attacks on exhibitor organizations. If I thought the National Association was doing this, which I know it is not, I would resign."

The Laemmle—Cohen Wires

N EW YORK, Mar. 1.—The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America through Sydney S. Cohen, president, on Friday made public copies of the correspondence exchanged between the organization and Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, over the night letter sent out by Mr. Laemmle urging exhibitors to join the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. The wires follow:

Laemmle to Cohen

"Article in motion picture weekly inviting exhibitors to join national association no reflection whatsoever on any other organization. Had no idea it would be taken as such by exhibitors. Was inspired solely by censorship crisis and our desire to cement industry and do everything possible for exhibitors and ourselves to counteract censorship. I was not present at meeting but was advised by telegraph of all that took place. I have never been and never will be a party to attacks on exhibitor organizations. If I thought the national association was doing this I would resign. Think you must have misunderstood Universal's motives. Our record in past years should be guaranty of good faith. How can your joining national association for censorship fight possibly hurt your exhibiting association? Show me this and I will take decisive action."

Cohen to Laemmle

"Your wire convinces me that real evidence concerning attempts by politicians of national association of motion picture industry to wreck and disrupt Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America is kept from you. Talk of cooperation for purpose of combating censorship mere subterfuge to cloak Brady's real activities. Same insincere and hypocritical and so fault of Brady that attack resulted in failure and proved boomerang. We have evidence one of your employes on Universal stationary saucy insulting and inflammatory opinion against Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

"We cannot understand bow your representatives in New York could permit you to be maneuvered into position of attacking independent exhibitors' organization by leading your support to producer exhibitors in their attempt to monopolize and control our industry. Our organization one of protection not for profit and is greatest bulwark you, your company and all independents can have. Universal only independent organization to solicit membership in producers' organization and exhibitors everywhere being successful action and move by your company despite camouflage excites alarm among all independents.

"Do you approve of Brady statement before judiciary committee of Chicago common council that he was opposed to children under sixteen going into motion picture theatres and would not permit his daughter Alice to see any motion picture until his wife or himself had reviewed and censored picture? This speech of Brady has done irreparable damage to exhibitors. Are you prepared to assist to making uniform and equitable contract as agreed upon in December conference in New York between committee Motion Picture Theatre Owners and manufacturers and producers?"

Church Attendance on Sunday Is Bigger Than Patronage at Theatre

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

SIOUX CITY, IA, March 1—Agitation for the proposition that Sunday amusements make inroads on church attendance prompted a survey of the situation here.

An observer, making the investigation on a Sunday night recently, found that many of the people who attend the churches patronize the motion picture theatres. The results of the investigation show that 24,658 persons attended churches on the Sunday in question, whereas, only 17,950 persons paid for motion picture entertainment.

The investigation was made on a normal Sunday and the figures are considered a fair estimate of the general situation.

France Relies on U. S. for 75 Per Cent of Its Films

European Republic Produces Approximately 10 Per Cent of the Pictures Exhibited in the Theatres of That Country

France relies almost wholly on American motion pictures for that form of amusement.

A recent survey reveals that 75 per cent of the pictures exhibited in that country are of American production. Producers of the European republic make only 10 per cent of the pictures required by the theatres. The remaining 15 per cent is furnished by Italy, England and Sweden.

English Pictures Show Increase in Sales

On the other hand an investigation of the market in England indicates a slump in American productions. English producers are enthusiastic with the progress they declare they are making. Various reports show that the new theatres springing up over the country are using between 60 and 80 per cent of English pictures.

The Stoll, Hepworth and Harma companies declare they are receiving many orders from foreign countries for productions with English locales. English productions have found favor especially in the Scandinavian countries.

Industry in Embryonic Stage

Some of the companies in England even claim that they are meeting competition in the foreign market on an even basis with American producers. This does not hold true, however, in France.

It is said that in France the motion picture industry has not reached the stage of development found in America several years ago. Prior to the war France was beginning to take the business manufacturing motion pictures seriously. The war, however, deterred this progress.

Produce Thirty Annually

Approximately thirty pictures are produced annually in France. As yet there are no recognized stars in the country. This is due partly to the lack of finances. The pictures made in the republic find a market in South America, the Balkans and in Egypt.

New York Bronx Will Have Two New Houses

NEW YORK, N. Y., March 1.—The Bronx will have two big new theatres to cost $750,000. The more expensive one, on which $400,000 will be expended, will be built on the block bounded by Brown place, Brook avenue, 137th and 138th streets. It has been sold to Har-ling and Blumenthal. The theatre will seat 1,700.

For the other house, a syndicate headed by Samuel Friedenberg, has purchased a site at the northwest corner of Burnside and Creston avenues. The theatre will seat 1,650. The cost will be $350,000.

Warners to Produce Educational Comedies

LOS ANGELES, March 1.—Warner Brothers have leased the Special Pictures studio in Santa Monica boulevard and La Brea Road and have assumed the contracts with Ford Sterling, Louise Fazenda, Charlotte Merriam, Chester Conklin, Reggie Morris and others. DENIES EXHIBITORS DINED BRADY

Charles H. Burkey takes issue with N. A. M. P. I. Over Announcement of Progress of Brady's Trip as Appearing in Recent Issue of "Exhibitors Herald"

Charles H. Burkey, well known Kansas City exhibitor, who is a member of the executive board of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, has issued an emphatic denial of the N. A. M. P. I. statement that William A. Brady was the guest of honor at a banquet given by Kansas City exhibitors.

His statement takes the form of a communication to EXHIBITORS HERALD which printed the story given out by the N. A. M. P. I., under date of February 26.

The communication from Mr. Burkey is herewith presented in full:

"In your last issue under the caption of 'Brady Continues Trip For Closer Harmony,' the following statement appears:

In Kansas City he (Brady) addressed a gathering of 200 exhibitors and exchange men of Kansas and Missouri. This meeting was held at the Hotel Muehlbach and was preceded by a banquet in Brady's honor by the exhibitors.

"This statement is untrue and is a gross injustice to the 100 per cent exhibitors of Missouri and Kansas. In the first place, the exhibitors did not tender any dinner or give any entertainment whatsoever for William A. Brady. In the second place, there were about eight exhibitors at the dinner who were there at the invitation of members of the Film Board of Trade as individuals. The exhibitors did not endorse nor commend Brady nor what he stands for. In fact his visit here has been condemned by Kansas and Missouri exhibitors. The entire affair was purely an exchange managers' affair in every way.

"Mr. R. G. Luggett, president of the Kansas State Exhibitors Association, was at the banquet as a guest. In the course of the evening he was called upon for a short talk. He stated in very clear language the attitude of the exhibitors of both states. First, that before Brady or his National Association of Motion Picture Industry can ask for our co-operation, they must first show their good faith by performing their pledge at the international conference, which began on December 11th and lasted ten days, the result being that the producers agreed to establish a credit system and to agree to the equitable contracts; second, that in all events, all co-operation must come through the executive offices of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

"We deplore the statement printed as it puts our exhibitors in a false light. We do not believe that you printed it knowing of its falsity but that you were entirely mis-informed.

"We ask that you publish this statement in a prominent position in your next issue so that your readers may be correctly informed.

[EXHIBITORS HERALD, in printing the announcement of the N. A. M. P. I., indicated the fact that it was a statement emanating from the N. A. M. P. I.]

Disagreement Ends Sunday Prosecution

Jury Fails to Agree When Exhibitor Is Tried Under Blue Laws

(PORTLAND, IND., March 1.—After being out more than twenty-four hours a jury in the circuit court here reported a disagreement in the case against Walter Schwier, charged with violating the Sabbath by operating a motion picture show. Schwier and Walter Hines, operator of another picture theatre here, were arrested several weeks ago on complaint of representatives of the Ministerial Association. The case was bitterly contested. It is said the state will ask for a new trial.

Jacob Denney, attorney for the defense, arraigned the prosecution in his remarks to the jury, saying that it was not so much an effort to do good, in closing the picture shows, the Ministerial Association sought, but rather the efforts of an ecclesiastical oligarchy.

Considerable discussion among the two factions has been engendered since the trial opened, and a fight was narrowly averted at the door of the courthouse when L. G. Sheehan, who favored the closing of the picture shows, and Phil Stachler, a jeweler, opposed to such action, engaged in a heated argument. A crowd of a hundred or more gathered around the men and the police were forced to disperse them.

Dorothy Dalton Cast

In DeMille Production

LOS ANGELES, March 1.—Cecil B. DeMille, director-general of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and producer of specials for Paramount, has announced he’s selected Dorothy Dalton to play the leading feminine role in his next all-star production.

Following her appearance in a number of society roles for Paramount, Miss Dalton recently completed "The Idol of the North" at the Long Island studio. In this she returns to her favorite character type, that of a Western mining camp heroine such as she played in "The Flame of the Yukon" and "Flare-Up Sal."

Gasnier Finishes First

Robertson-Cole Special

NEW YORK, March 1.—The first of the four specials produced by Gasnier for Robertson-Cole will be "Good Women." A print of the picture has been received at the Robertson-Cole offices here. C. Gardner Sullivan wrote the story. In the cast are Rosemary Theby, Hamilton Revelle, Irene Blackwell, Earl Schnec, William P. Carleton, Arthur Stuart Hall, Rhea Berg and Eugene Bennett. The picture is scheduled as a spring publication.

Loew Says Good Ads More Effective Than Risque Title

Theatre Man Sounds Warning on Acute Censorship Situation In Address Before Advertisers Association in New York

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEW YORK, March 1.—“Good exploitation will do the work of the suggestive title and of the suggestive advertisement, and do it far more effectively.”

Marcus Loew, in a talk before the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, summed up his argument against salacious advertising in this statement.

Warns of Acuteness of Censorship Situation

A warning against the acuteness of the censorship situation facing the industry was sounded by the theatre magnate. This situation, he declared, was the result of the misleading use of titles and advertising in the presentation of pictures. He continued:

“It is not the man or woman who actually goes inside the motion picture theatre and sees a film who is clamoring for censorship. It is the person who has never or very seldom been inside a theatre and who judges the picture entirely by a certain, suggestive kind of title and poster which occasionally crops out. The individual who has seen the picture is, as a rule, well satisfied with the industry and is not clamoring for reform, because it is a fact that the average screen production today is free from objectionable features.

Fans Are Satisfied

“During a talk I had with a former state executive who is an ardent motion picture fan, he emphasized the point that the people who know the motion picture and follow it are satisfied with the product, but that it is the person who does not know the actual finished product, who never goes inside a theatre and who judges the industry from impressions gained from titles and advertising who clamors for censorship at every opportunity.

“Gentlemen, the censorship problem is not a very serious one and a very imminently one. It remains for the industry to do its own housecleaning. The big mistake that is still occasionally adhered to is that salacious titling and obscene advertising is often regarded as box office value.

Mr. Loew related an offer made to him in St. Louis to rent one of his theatres for a picture which he designated by title and which was declared to have an unusually suggestive name.

Film Is a Failure

“I emphatically told the gentlemen who approached me on this matter,” Mr. Loew continued, “that they could not have my theatre for such a picture under any conditions or at any figure. Personally, I have little faith in the box office value of a title that seeks to draw people in merely by suggestiveness. Such a picture may make a promising showing for a few weeks but will eventually fall flat because it is being sold on premises that are false and erroneous.

“The time is ripe now to approach the heads of all the big producing companies and engage them in keeping all motion picture productions clean. In fact, at a meeting of many of the biggest producers recently, it was unani-

Just a Coincidence!

According to the Chicago daily papers a lone bandit who had concealed himself in the theatre for three hours, surprised and robbed the watchman, Martin Marsi, of $9 on Sunday night. The theatre was Barbee’s on Monroe street.

Of course the fact that “Outside the Law” is playing there this week, and that Harry Reichenbach is exploiting the picture by various means, has no bearing on the case. It was just a co-incidence, that’s all.

Priest Answers A. M. P. A. Critics

President of The Film Market Challenges Members to "Allow Their Work to Speak for Them and Not Make Themselves Ridiculous" by Censuring Others

A CHALLENGE to members of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers to "allow their work in the trade papers, etc., to speak for them, and not make themselves ridiculous by assuming a position in connection with an independent picture that the records of some of its prominent members will not sustain" is made by Robert W. Priest, president of The Film Market, Inc.

Censure by the A. M. P. A. of an advertisement appearing in connection with Mr. Priest's picture, "The Supreme Passion," prompted the president of The Film Market to issue his challenge.

"Why, Mr. President of the A. M. P. A.," asks Mr. Priest, "does your organization pick out especially an independent production for such an attack as this, when advertisements for which some of your members stand responsible are offensive and objectionable beyond any comparison? The circumstance is easily interpreted.

"If anything in the world is calculated to contribute to promote a general censorship of the screen, it is such advertising as that to which I have called attention, and not such as I have been responsible for. The tone of such advertising as I cite is reflected through all the work of these men, its influence extending to exhibitors and to the public mind. Its ultimate effect is public disgust.

"I would call attention to the fact that the illustration in my advertisement was an artistic creation drawn by an artist from a noted work of art, whereas the illustrations I have referred to, and for which members of the A. M. P. A. have stood sponsor, are mostly all photographs of girls and women, and men, made for a purpose too plainly apparent and with no thought behind them other than appeal to the sensational."

Referring to the advertising and illustrations which he says members of the A. M. P. A. have stood sponsor, Mr. Priest continues:

"These photographs and drawings of women half stripped in struggles against dishonor, of nudity with no appeal to real art, women naked in bathtub baths and bathing girls in vulgar postures revealing every line of their figures in the most suggestive and alluring way, are certainly a thousand per cent more suggestive and to be criticized than anything contained in my advertising."

In conclusion Mr. Priest says:

"As to my posters, when they are issued, they will compare more than favorably from the standpoint of decency with any made under the direction of my critics, and will be fully in consonance with the theme of my photoplay, 'the supreme passion' of human life—that love that survives the destruction of physical beauty and every vicissitude of fortune."

Advertisers Dinner Will Set Precedent

Additional Features to Make Event Greatest in History of Association

(From Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, March 1—"The Naked Truth" event, the formal annual function of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, which will be held at the Biltmore hotel on Friday night, promises to eclipse the anticipations of its promoters.

Reichenbach on Program

Last minute additions to the program have been made. Harry Reichenbach, entertainer par excellence at A. M. P. A. dinners, has arrived from Chicago. Harry is curtailing his country-wide tour in exploitation of a picture to return to New York for the dinner. In addition to providing extemporaneous entertainment, Harry will have a leading part in the headline act of the bill entitled "The Big Five."

Two additional acts have been announced on the program within the last week. Vivian Moses of Fox is responsible for the first one, which will be nameless, but which was written by Mr. Moses, Leslie Jordon and E. P. McMahon, who will take the principal characters in the sketch. This will be a travesty on putting over a "sure fire" road show flivver in limousine style.

Meyers in Sketch

"A Mere Detail" is the title of the sketch written by Dan Carson Goodman and described as an economic tragedy in one reel with a filler which will be enacted by Maurice Meyers, Claud LaBelle, Vincent Trottia, Fred Baer, E. P. McMahon and W. F. Eberhardt.

Events of the past week have pointed to "The Naked Truth" dinner as one of the biggest formal functions ever held within the motion picture industry and the most ambitious undertaking ever attempted by the publicity, advertising and exploitation men. All of the executives of the prominent distributing, producing and exhibiting interests have assured their presence as well as the editors of the trade papers.

South Bend Theatre

Has Formal Opening

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

SOUTH BEND, IND., Feb. 29.—The new Blackstone theatre, seating 2,500 patrons and erected at a cost of approximately $500,000, was formally opened recently with a reception to the stockholders, city officials, clergy, the press and a number of out-of-town guests.

The musical program was given by the Blackstone symphony orchestra of seventeen pieces under the direction of Angelo Vitalé; selections on the pipe organ by Granville Tomssett, a local artist, and by Miss Esther Thisselton of Chicago, who sang.

Hosts at the reception were the following officers: C. E. Potts, president; John J. Weber, vice president; Donald McGregor, general manager; Frank C. Toepp, treasurer; Howard W. Yant, secretary; John G. Yeagle and G. A. Farbaugh, councilors. Beginning tonight, G. E. Berksen will serve as house manager. He comes to this city from Chicago.
Putting Atlanta, Mo.,
On the Hoover Map

Inkster, N. D., has a population of 300 people. H. G. Bemis of the Gem Theatre raised a fund of $48.75 for the European Relief Council.

Now comes a report from At-lan, Mo., a town less than twice the population of Inkster. This is what J. Greene Mackenzie of the Picture House did.

"I really think we have him (Bemis) beaten a little. We are a little town less than twice the size of Inkster, but we mailed a check to the Hoover relief headquarters for an even $100. This was the result of a Sunday night picture of "The Storm," a Sunday night in our town up to that time was an unheard of possibility. Of course we raised a storm of protest, since there are five churches in the burg. Guess $100 wasn't so bad, was it?"

New York Governor
Would Censor Films

Too Many Pictures, He Says, Have Obvious Appeal to the Morbid

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

ALBANY, N. Y., March 1.—Advocacy of a state board to censor motion pictures was made last week by Governor Millner, but we mailed a check to the Hoover relief headquarters for an even $100. This was the result of a Sunday night
picture of "The Storm," a Sunday night in our town up to that time was an unheard of possibility. Of course we raised a storm of protest, since there are five churches in the burg. Guess $100 wasn't so bad, was it?"

Father of Seven Girls

The governor's remarks were occasioned by the introduction of Assemblyman Clayton's bill for the appointment of a board of censors consisting of three members—note in Exhibitors Herald of
March 5.

The governor, who is the father of seven girls ranging in age from 10 to 24 years, said:

"My children, as others, are all interested in moving pictures, and occasionally prevail upon me to go with them.
With very rare exceptions it so happens that, when I have gone with them, the picture has not appeared to me to be suitable for children, young people, or, in fact, anybody else to see."

Would Censor Films

"Too many films have an obvious appeal to the morbid and sensual. I haven't any doubt they ought to be censored, but have not yet given the question as to how it should be done any serious thought."

"I am pleased to see that the legislature is considering the subject."

The bill is now in the hands of the ways and means committee. No date has been set for a hearing.

Max Goldstine Goes

Senate Bill Proposes That Famous Films be Preserved

Provisions Considered of Such Value Would Be Retained by National Museum Director—
Phelan Sponsors Measure

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 1.—The saving of the most famous motion pictures of our day for the benefit of posterity is the plan of Senator Phelan of California, who has introduced a resolution in Congress providing for the collection of such moving pictures as well as phonono-graph records which are considered of sufficient value to be saved.

The only expressed objection to the plan is voiced by Herbert Putnam, librarian of congress, who points out that five facts stand in the way of the proposed collection, as follows: (1) They are fragile; (2) they fade rapidly; (3) they are very combustible; (4) the cost to the copyright proprietor of producing each copy is so considerable that the contribution of them would be a heavy tax; and (5) contrasted with other material —books, maps, music and prints—they could not render any useful service except when reproduced with apparatus not now possessed.

These criticisms of the plan, however, which were voiced before the resolution was introduced, did not deter Senator Phelan, but certain provisions were incorporated in the measure, which reads in part as follows, to meet them:

"Whereas modern invention has made possible the recording of historical events and the reproduction of speech and music in a manner capable of being made permanent; and

Wants Picture Preserved

"Whereas such records will be lost to the world unless adequate means are taken to preserve them: Therefore be it Resolved, That the librarian of congress shall cause to be sent to the director of the national museum, after registration, one copy of each motion picture film registered under the provisions of the copyright laws of the United States, and, if, in the opinion of the director of the national museum, a motion picture film as a registered record is a historical or otherwise noteworthy event, he shall cause the same to be stored for the use and benefit of future generations.

Motion picture films which, in the opinion of the director of the national museum, do not record such events shall be screened by such director to the person, firm, corporation or association securing the copyright.

Will Renew Films

"In all cases in which motion picture films are retained by the director of the national museum under the provisions of this resolution he shall have such films renewed once every five years.

That motion picture film and phonograph, graphophone and talking-machine records preserved for the use and benefit of future generations under the provisions of this resolution may be exhibited or rented for use and exhibition under bond for the safe return hereof."

Irvin S. Cobb to Write Titles for
"Peck's Bad Boy"

America's great humorist, Irvin S.
Cobb, has entered motion pictures. Word comes from Irving M. Lesser in Los Angeles that Cobb has signed to edit and write the titles for "Peck's Bad Boy," reporting to Coogan. Cobb is now in Los Angeles en route up the Pacific Coast on his speaking tour. He plans to return to Los Angeles within two weeks and will immediately occupy a desk in the Lesser's office.

That Cobb's entrance into the pictures will not soon flutter away, is evidenced in the fact that his family will probably come to Los Angeles where they will remain with the author while he wields his pen in behalf of "Peck's Bad Boy" and other silent drama products.

Woody Says Only Films Whole Family Can Enjoy Will Survive

REALART Official Declares Censorship Movement Indicates Resentment Toward Crime Films.

The only type of picture that will succeed and survive in the future will be the clean production, suitable for the whole family, according to John S. Woody, general manager of Realart.

There can be no doubt that at the present time there is a definite resentment against crime pictures and pictures playing up the sex appeal," stated Mr. Woody.

"That is evident from the present agitation for censorship. Such pictures are suggestive and furnish reformers with effective weapons with which to attack our industry.

"If this resentment, which is smoldering, bursts into flame, it will threaten the very existence of motion pictures. For it will affect not only the objectionable class of productions, but all others as well.

"In some sections this feeling is developing alarmingly. Governor Miller of New York has just come out in favor of state censorship. He objects to pictures because, as he puts it, "too many of them have an obvious appeal to the morbid and the sensual.

"Heretofore, censor boards, which have sprung up throughout the country, have many of them been smothered by the weight of public opinion. But now the tendency is to support these institutions.

"Furthermore, this tendency is growing, and will become much stronger unless immediate steps are taken to remove objectionable elements from pictures. The screen must be kept clean, and the cleansing process must be begun at once.

"Sex appeal, it seems to me, has long been accepted by scenarists and directors as love appeal, and acting with this belief they have given their pictures to the public. Today we know that the screen wants. It is the love appeal, and between these there is a vast difference.

"I firmly believe that the type of picture that is going to succeed is the clean, wholesome picture, suitable for presentation to the whole family. That is, and always has been, Realart's belief. It was the aim we had when we started producing pictures, and it is our aim now. Our slogan is, 'Clean entertainment for the whole family.'"

“The public, through its committees and welfare boards, is looking for good pictures—for clean entertainment. That is more than evident from the following letter sent us by the chairman of the better films committee of the Chicago Woman's Aid:

"'First of all, it says, 'I want to congratulate you upon the production of your latest picture, 'The Snob.' Such pictures bring a message of better things in motion pictures for children and I am sure there would be less agitation for censorship if producers would understand the worth of such pictures. . . .

Sincerely yours, Mrs. Harriet Michaels, chairman better films committee, Chicago Woman's Aid.'"

That clean entertainment pays is apparent. A recent committee picked at random from widely separated sections of the country:

"The Olympus (Wash.) Recorder says of Her First Loveage: 'Clean as a hound's tooth and sparkling with all the vim and vigor of the out-of-doors.'"

“What the Picture Did for Me’
Aids Buster Keaton’s Success

Frank appreciation of the assistance rendered by the “What the Picture Did for Me” department of EXHIBITORS HERALD in shaping the production policies which have carried Buster Keaton to phenomenal success is expressed by Lou Anger, production manager of the Comique Film Company, sponsor for the Buster Keaton comedies.

“I always follow this department with interest for it expresses the unbiased opinions of exhibitors who know,” writes Mr. Anger.

“This department is the barometer by which we judge as to the success or failure of our comedies. Glowing testimonials from exhibitors, telling of the manner in which their audiences accepted our fun films, go a long way in shaping our future policies. When exhibitors, through this important department, praise a film, it can be accepted as an unprejudiced report. Consequently I never overlook scrutinizing the department weekly. I want to congratulate the EXHIBITORS HERALD on its department whose followers, I believe, are countless.”

Hoover Campaign at L. A. Nets Thousands
Screen Stars Make Personal Appearance at Twelve Hour Show

Thousands of dollars were added to the Hoover relief fund by receipts from the benefit performance held in Los Angeles at the Philharmonic Auditorium. The mammoth affair was arranged by Sol Lesser.

Through Mr. Lesser’s enterprise many screen and stage stars appeared on the program, which was continuous from noon until midnight. Among the many stars' photographs and personal belongings added several hundred dollars to the total receipts.

Auditorium Is Filled
The Auditorium seats 4,000 persons. It was filled to capacity during the twelve hours.

Stars who were introduced to the crowds by Charles Murray and Fred J. Butler were Carter De Haven, Harold Lloyd, Jackie Coogan, Ben Turpin, Wesley Barry, Walter Hiers, Maria Golden, Ora Cogan, Francisco, William Desmond, Wallace Reid, Bebe Daniels, Josephine McLaughlin, Jack Hoxie, Don Muller, The Campbell Sisters, Billie Rhodes, Ed Flanagan, Billie Burke, J. H. O. Hensley, J. C. Howard, John E. Yawaka, Johnnie Jones and his Ma, Dr. Carlos de Alva, Elinor Sutherland, Dorothy Roberts, Mayron Ayre, Ruth Foster, Virginia Fox, May Allison, Elvira Tennis, Julia DeWolff, Marion Morgan Dancers and many others of equal note.

Cobb Makes Talk
One of the features of the program was the introduction of Irvin S. Cobb, who was in Los Angeles on a speaking tour. Union stage bands, musicians, projectionists and ushers donated their services. Foster & Kleiser, the outdoor advertisers, gave one hundred 24-sheet stands to the cause, and printers offered all lithographs, heralds, programs and tickets printed gratis. The proceeds of the show consequently were net.

Valuable aid in putting the “big show” over was received through the Western Motion Picture Advertisers. Through their cooperation, stars, authors and producers were on hand when the curtain was raised for the opening of the show.

Frisco Collects Big Sum
Reports from San Francisco and Minneapolis indicate that the campaign is getting bigger in both territories. Exhibitors in Frisco raised $26,000, which was practically 10 per cent of the total collections there. In the Minneapolis territory more than $43,756.65 has been turned over to the Hoover fund.

Pathe Exchange Again the “House of Short Subjects”
Associated Exhibitors Assumes Responsibility for Sales of Feature Pictures in Towns of Over 1,500 Population

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEW YORK, March 1.—Pathe Exchange, Inc., again becomes the “House of Short Subjects.”

Under the reorganization plan of Associated Exhibitors that company assumes responsibility for the sale of Pathe features in towns exceeding 1,500 in population. In towns of less than 1,500 Pathe’s short subject salesmen will continue to handle Pathe and A. E. features.

Concentration Advisable, Believes Paul Brunet

Paul Brunet, president of Pathe, has long held that the best interest of Pathe would be served by concentrating all its activities and resources in the development of the tremendous possibilities of the short subject field, including serials.

Announcement of the reorganization of Associated Exhibitors was detailed last week by Exwramos Herian. This reorganization, in the opinion of Mr. Brunet, means a brilliant future for the company. Samuel Harding of Kansas City is president of the new concern and Arthur S. Kane is chairman of the board of directors.

Success Is Assured

“The selection of two such notable personages as Samuel Harding and Arthur S. Kane as the directing minds of this organization cannot fail to insure its success,” said Mr. Brunet.

“As an exhibitor Mr. Harding has long since gained the highest reputation for ability and resourcefulness. He typifies the leader in showmanship, and with his thorough knowledge of the problems of the exhibitor, he will be a prime mover in the further progress of the Associated Exhibitors.

Long a Dominant Factor

“Any organization would be proud to have as a leader a man of the calibre of Mr. Arthur S. Kane. In the producing and distributing end of the industry Mr. Kane has for years been a dominant factor. He possesses, too, the fullest confidence of the exhibitor, a reputation gained through square dealing and honest efforts on behalf of the motion picture theatre owner.

“Mr. Kane, from his entrance into the industry, has been an influence for good in this business of many ramifications. Withal, he has a keen picture perspective. His judgment of the merits of production is outstanding. He is also a forceful organizer, and I am happy to be associated with a man of his calibre in the directing of what we all hope will be a bigger and better Associated Exhibitors.

Admirer of Gustonovic

“I have ever been an admirer of Mr. Paul Gustonovic, the vice-president. Like Mr. Harding, he has been a moving factor in the field of motion picture showmanship. He will be an able leader in the coming affairs of the Associated Exhibitors.

“Elmer Pearson, director of exchanges of Pathe, who will sit on the board of directors, is a shrewd judge of pictures and of selling conditions. Mr. Pearson will advise with the Associated Exhibitors sales force on all matters in which his opinion will be of value.”

The first week of March will be signalized by the issuance by Pathe of a series of one-reel pictures, “The Adventures of Bill and Bob.” These boys are 11-year-old twins who actually trap before the camera the wild animals that infest the West and upon whose capture bounties are placed by state and nation.

Another noteworthy March event will be the issue of Ruth Roland’s next serial, “The Avenging Arrow.”

"Black Beauty"

Five scenes from Vitagraph’s eight-reel feature, adapted from Anna Sewall’s famous classic. Jean Paige appears as “Jessie;” James Morrison as “Blomefield;” George Webb as “Beckett” and Black Beauty as himself. David Smith Directed.
VITAGRAPH has one of the prize pictures of the year in "Black Beauty."

The translation to the screen of a book as universally loved and known as this story, involved the difficult two-fold task of keeping the book's trend as closely as possible and of incorporating all the elements of the popular picture drama. This, in "Black Beauty," has been masterfully achieved.

The picture, both for the familiarity of its story and for its intrinsic artistic value, should, sweep the exhibiting world not only in near months, but for years to come. For "Black Beauty" is a picture made as much for the years distant as for those at hand. It should outlive many, many pictures as carefully produced, but, by the variance of their nature, lacking its elements of appeal.

This story of the horse, whose fictional history has been written so closely into that of the childhood of the greater part of the living race of English-speaking people, and into that of the several nations into whose language it has been translated, plays upon the human heartstrings to an extent that even the most elaborately and lavishly staged productions lacking its points of appeal will never reach. Even its own romantic trend is subordinated and one's sympathies are made to follow primarily the incidents in the life of the animal star.

Helplessness is always touching, be it of human or beast. Present it to the American heart that warms so kindly toward the dumb world, add to it as sweetly told a tragedy of love as that of Jessie Gordon's and Harry Blomefield's in "Black Beauty," and the success is certain. "Black Beauty" is a novelty in manner of presentation. Its titles tell the story in first person by the horse, Black Beauty, and they faithfully follow the book's wording. Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester have gracefully and effectively added enough to the story to make stronger its slight thread of romance and have transformed it into charming screen entertainment by adding to, rather than subtracting from its charm.

The film has all the required elements of screen appeal: comedy, suspense, drama and pictorial beauty. There is naturalness about the characters as the cast portrays them that makes them live as really to the beholder as one's animate friends and associates. In their bereavement one suffers with the Gordon family as with one's living neighbors, and the same disgust is aroused by the cowardly Beckett and the vain Lady Wynwaring as that engendered by human weakness.

It is vividly human and in its manner of presentation is stripped to the absolute artistic essentials. Every scene and every movement is made to count, and the interest is so closely held that there is a tendency to weariness by the time eight reels have been rolled off. For this reason the picture could be improved by further cutting even at the sacrifice of parts of its excellent footage.

* * *

Little folks, as well as adults, will enjoy every foot of the feature and gather unto themselves the lesson of kindness to dumb animals that it teaches. David Smith, the director, has made much of its opportunities in the making of "Black Beauty" from Anna Sewell's book.

The heroine, Jessie Gordon, is made a delightful person by Jean Paige. James Morrison makes a decidedly likable Harry Blomefield, and George Webb is a handsome scamp in the role of Beckett. The part of the latter's underling, Darby, is made one of the compelling points of the production by Bobby Mack. The remainder of the cast merits high praise as individuals and in unit.

Photography and lighting are excellent indeed. Shots in which hunters are seen from the Gordon windows, scenes in a smithy wherein an effective lighting of half the film, representing the forge's glow, is achieved, are among many, sets and locations of beauty.

The dramatic sequence results from the attempt of Beckett, ne'er-do-well, to force Jessie, the daughter of the lord of Birtwick Manor, to marry him. Despite her love for Harry, Jessie consents to marry Beckett in order to save the honor of her dead brother, who has been made a victim of his villainy. Interwoven with this plot is the story of the horse Black Beauty.

From the exhibitor's standpoint "Black Beauty" should be one of the greatest money-makers of the year. It should go over big in both the first-run and the neighborhood houses.

First Run Theatres
Book Single Reelers

Educational Reports Demand
Far Greater Than First Estimated

Although the two brands have been available to exhibitors less than three months, Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., reports that the demand for the Vanity and Gayety series of single-reel comedies has far passed first estimates. The company reports also that they have received bookings in first-run theatres of importance that have set a new mark for pictures of the length.

Distribute Four Series

Although the four series of two-reelers distributed by Educational were booked on practically every big circuit solid, Educational states that the same organizations almost without exception have also taken the single-reelers and that these big chains now are showing its whole product. The single-reelers have been especially welcomed by the big houses in cases where they have had unusually long features and were still unwilling to omit a comedy from the bill.

Among the theatres showing all of these single-reelers are the Stanley houses in Philadelphia; the Jensen and von Herberg houses in the Pacific Northwest, the Parkway group in Baltimore, Tom Moore's houses in Washington, the Rowland and Clark chain in the Pittsburgh district, the Libson theatres in Cincinnati, the Ascher houses in Chicago, the Skouras theatres in St. Louis, the A. H. Blank theatres in Nebraska and Iowa, the Ruben and Finkelstein theatres in Minneapolis and Loew theatres in Cleveland and a number of others.

Assign Special Directors

Educational has arranged to have special directors devote their entire time to these pictures and the players will appear in no other pictures. The Vainys which are now ready for showing are "Tea for Two," "Without a Wife," "His Four Fathers," "Mind Your Business," "Quit If You Think You Can," "Naughty Mary Brown," "Dead Easy," "Hubby Behave," "Take Your Time," "Best Temporary Route" and "Rocking the Boat." The completed Gayetys include "Ain't Love Grand?" "Sand Witches," "Rest in Peace," "Blondes," "His Bitter Hall," "Mixed Bedrooms," "Turkey Dressing," "Dummy Love," "Zero Love" and "Money Talks."

Beban in Chicago

To Stage Feature
At Three Theatres

George Beban, star of "One Man in a Million," which is being distributed by Robertson-Cole, is in Chicago for a period of three weeks which is to be apportioned over three week-stands. The first of these will be at the Riviera theatre and the second at the Tivoli theatre, both of which houses are managed by Balaban and Katz.

In Milwaukee, the last city in which Mr. Beban appeared, his production was shown at the Merrill theatre. In Detroit he made three personal appearances daily in connection with "One Man in a Million."

From Chicago Mr. Beban will go to Minneapolis, and thence will continue his tour which is to end at the Pacific Coast in May. Meanwhile, in leading cities all over the country "One Man in a Million" has become available from Robertson-Cole exchanges and has started to be shown.

Dolores Cassinelli to Appear at Barbee's
"The Hidden Light" Goes Into Theatre in Loop on March 27

As a special attraction in connection with the showing of "The Hidden Light" at Barbee's Loop theatre, Chicago, which goes in there March 27 for an indefinite run, the management through Gollos Enterprises has arranged for the personal appearance of Dolores Cassinelli, the star of the picture.

Miss Cassinelli is a Chicago girl, having been educated at the Holy Name Convent, and entered upon her screen career at the old Essanay plant. "The Greek Singer," "When Soul Meets Soul," and "Do Dreams Come True" were some of the pictures made for this company.

Miss Cassinelli is supported by an all-star cast in "The Hidden Light" and the production, which was written and directed by Abraham Schomer, is said to give her unusual opportunities for displaying her talents as a screen artist. Gollos Enterprises has obtained the rights to "The Hidden Light" for the Central West territory and has outlined an exploitation campaign that will make the picture a by-word in every household. Irving Mack is handling the exploitation. The Lubliner and Trinz theatre circuit has obtained "The Hidden Light" for an extended run.

Form Brooklyn Company

BROOKLYN, N. Y.--Gates Amusement Corporation has been formed here with a capital stock of $10,000 by D. Bloom, S. Kottler and B. Solomon. Its address is 1258 Forty-third street.
Nine Companies Locate in Chicago's Exchange Center

Other Branches Now Having Offices in the Loop Will Transfer to South Wabash Colony At a Later Date

Chicago's new exchange center is becoming populated. Nine companies now comprise the film colony in South Wabash avenue. With one exception—Famous Players-Lasky Corporation—all companies are newcomers in the district. Approximately fifteen other concerns are yet to transfer from the loop.

District Begins at Van Buren Street

The new exchange center extends down Wabash from Van Buren to Tenth street. Eight of the companies are located within a radius of three blocks, Pathe being the only one somewhat removed from the district. This company is located permanently at 418 South Wabash.

The Fox building is an attractive one-story structure 55 by 165 feet. The face of the building is in brick, set off by semi-circular windows of arch. Every facility for capable and effective operation has been proved in this building.

Expansion Is Possible

In planning the Fox offices Manager Clyde Eckhardt took into account the future as well as the present. The spacious quarters will permit great expansion, every department being given ample room for the performance of efficient service.

The interior, in addition to its serviceable and commodious aspect, is very agreeable to the eye. The offices are finished in walnut with walls in light tan. A sunken roof provides window space and plenty of light. Steam and hot air keep the offices at a moderate temperature at all times.

inspection and shipping rooms are heated entirely by air, the apparatus for this system being located on the roof. A modern sprinkler system provides fire protection.

Six Vaults Installed

Six vaults and six inspection rooms constructed in accordance with city regulations are located in the rear of the building. In this part of the structure and up a flight of stairs is the projection room.

The passageways and offices are so arranged that the booking, poster and shipping rooms and other departments located in the rear can be reached without interference with office business.

The new Vitagraph building is two stories high, having a frontage on Wabash of forty-two feet and a depth of 102 feet. The entire first floor is devoted to the receiving room, shipping department, poster room, vaults and inspection rooms.

Offices on Second Floor

On the second floor are the executive offices. Vitagraph occupied its new home on February 7. Two vaults and five inspection rooms are located in the building. On the third floor is the projection room. The building makes an imposing appearance in Wabash avenue.

The building at the corner of Eighth which is being converted into exchanges already is occupied by Associated Producers, United Artists and Pioneer. The three companies have approximately 2,300 square feet of floor space each.

Associated Producers has two vaults and one inspection room, while Pioneer has one vault and one inspection room. Six thousand square feet of floor space gives Robertson-Cole spacious quarters. There are four vaults and three inspection rooms in the building and a projection room seating 100 persons.

In March Wabash Film Exchange will open offices at Eighth street. Other exchanges now located at 5 and 207 South Wabash, 8 South Dearborn and in the Orpheum and Consumers buildings will take their place in the new exchange center at a later date.

“Big Four” Members May Produce in Mexico

Whether or not members of United Artists will produce at least one picture each in Mexico rests upon the report to be made by Robert Fairbanks, brother of Douglas, and Ted Reed, the director, who now are investigating conditions in the southern republic.

If conditions are found to be favorable, there is a possibility that at least three of the United Artists may make one production each in Mexico. The information obtained by Robert Fairbanks and Reed will be available not only to Douglas Fairbanks, but to Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin and D. W. Griffith, the other members of the Big Four.

It is thought by the company that through motion pictures a new medium is offered to cement more solidly amicable relations between the United States and Mexico.

The suggestion has been made at various times to the members of the United Artists, especially to Douglas Fairbanks, that much can be done to destroy forever any feeling of ill will that may exist by producing in Mexico a number of motion pictures with Mexican settings. The report furnished by Doug’s brother and his director will supply information that will determine the advisability of attempting to produce in the southern republic.

For a considerable time Douglas Fairbanks has had under consideration a plan for making pictures in foreign countries. It was his intention originally to make “The Three Musketeers” in France. This idea was abandoned, however, when investigation showed that at least six months would be required to do the picture abroad. Doug believes that a picture can be made in Mexico in a much shorter time.

“The most important thing to ascertain in connection with the making of a picture,” said Robert Fairbanks, “is the availability of facilities. No matter how beautiful a country may be scenically, or how different, unless it is accessible and unless the materials with which to work are easy to get, it is not advisable to undertake picture production.”

Independent of Missouri
Buys Standard Company

ST. LOUIS, MO.—Standard Film Company, with offices at 3317 Olive street, has been purchased by Independent Film Company of Missouri, headed by F. J. Fegan. J. E. Callahan and J. Ray Weinbrenner are associated in the purchase. L. J. Bona will remain as manager. A branch office will be opened in Kansas City and the company will distribute films throughout Missouri, Kansas and Southern Illinois.

A scene from “A Small Town Idol,” starring Ben Turpin, and a group of Sennett players, which include Phyllis Haver, Marie Provost and Charlie Murray, made by Mack Sennett for Associated Producers, Inc. Right—Portrait of Mack Sennett, the comedy king.
Mr. J. F. Gloom etc.

J. FULLER GLOOM, A FICTITIOUS PERSONAGE adequately described by that name, was buried with great ceremony in DeFuniak Springs, Fla., recently, 3,000 persons, more than double the listed population of the little city, attending. A special newspaper was published in celebration of the event, which came at the end of a widely advertised week of "Gloom Days" during which, according to report, "calamity-howling, crane-hanging and dire prophesying" was declared officially in order.

Read the complete story of the event on page 44 of The Literary Digest for February 26. Excerpts from The Joy Special, the newspaper above mentioned, disclose the details of the enterprise and the magnitude which it assumed.

Any progressive newspaper should consider favorably a suggestion for adaptation of the idea. The exhibitor who advances the suggestion, possibly in connection with a motion picture of suitable nature, should profit greatly.

THE GENERAL INCREASE in newspaper advertising rates reported during the past year has had at least one important beneficial result. Exhibitors have used better advertising than ever before. It cost them more. Men are more critical of what they write in telegrams than in letters. The same tendency has brought about general improvement in the theatre advertising of the nation. The increase in patronage due to better advertising doubtless has more than compensated for the increase in rates. Another good reason for the intervention of Mr. J. Fuller Gloom.

THE UNIVERSAL FILM Manufacturing Company announces that in future Universal short subjects will be given publicity and exploitation equal to that accorded feature length productions. That is in line with the trend of picture popularity. Individual exhibitors will do well to adopt like methods.

A THIN LINE DIVIDES THE spectacular and the ridiculous in exploitation and presentation. Keen showmanship might be defined as the ability to determine with nicety the exact position of that line. To be laughed at is much more disconcerting, and disastrous in the advertising sense, than to be ignored. The nearer the line is approached the more effective the exploitation becomes, but it is better to advertise not at all than to overstep. A delicate work, exploitation and, like most delicate work, rich in reward to the capable workman.

CHICAGO NEWSPAPER critics have included in reviews and comments published in recent weeks reference to the damaging influence of censorship as applied to the productions in discussion. That amounts to advertising censorship as a matter of direct concern to everyone. A few motion pictures may gross a slightly smaller total in Chicago theatres because of such comment. But the motion picture, in the general and permanent sense, will be benefited in the end.

HUNT STROMBERG, INCE exploitation expert, has experienced gratifying results following distribution of stills showing members of the "Lying Lips" cast in automobiles, lingerie, etc., to retail dealers in the various products. The "fashion stills" are used in the retail dealers' newspaper advertising as illustrations, the name of Thomas H. Ince, the player or players whose pictures are used and the title of the picture being included in the copy. The stunt permits of unlimited development and may be used as effectively by the individual exhibitor as otherwise.

EVERYBODY UNDERSTANDS simple English. The Harvard graduate reads the grade school textbook easily. So does the man in the street. But the man in the street does not readily grasp the meaning of the Harvard graduate's polysyllables and complex sentence structures. The advertising writer wants everybody to read and understand his copy. By artifice he can make everybody read it, but only by using simple English exclusively can he make everybody understand it. And the simplest English is the best.

TWO HUNDRED CITIZENS of Washington, D. C., participated in "Griffith Night" at the Shubert-Garrick theatre, where "Way Down East" is in engagement. The invitation was a general one issued to all whose surnames were the same as that of the man who produced the picture. A simple stunt that got voluminous publicity due to the fact that many prominent families of Washington were of that name. A stunt that can be duplicated by any exhibitor using the name of any star, director or other figure in a current feature.

CHICAGOAN WHO ATTENDED the opening of the Senate theatre, newest and greatest of the Lubliner & Trinz chain of seventeen, sought out Sam Trinz and warmly congratulated him upon the firm's accomplishment. He concluded his remarks with, "Yes, it's the greatest nickel-show I ever saw," spoken with utmost sincerity. The patron is one of a vanishing type. The "nickel-show" period is safely past and practically the universal public realizes the fact. Superior entertainment, advertised in superior manner, has raised the theatre standard immeasurably in the last few years. And the end is not yet.
Showmanship Suggestions in the Stills

NOVELTY exploitation and presentation of exceptional character may be based upon the above still from "Edgar's Feast Day," next in the Goldwyn series of Edgar comedies taken from Booth Tarkington's stories. Papier mache may be used in constructing the required figures, and children of the neighborhood will gladly lend their services in street and stage work. The important identification of exploitation with attraction may be effected by means of throw-away literature or by banner, the former means being preferable. An arrangement with merchants by which they will supply the required materials in return for space upon the printed matter will reduce the expense of the work.

THE "Izajinx" idol figures importantly in the plot of "The Outside Woman," Wanda Hawley's Realart production, being represented as of fabulous value and diligently searched for after its loss. A "Lost Idol" exploitation stunt, conducted with newspaper or other cooperation, should produce excellent results for the exhibitor who uses the attraction.

"MAN VS. WOMAN" Christie Educational comedy, may be advertised effectively by street work in which characters attired similarly to those seen in the still participate.

EXHIBITORS who have not utilized the fashion show in connection with the past attractions of suitable nature are given another opportunity with the publication of "Extravagance," a Metro production starring May Allison, a still from which is reproduced above. The spring styles are now engaging the attention of the feminine patronage. This interest will increase as Easter approaches. Showmen who can arrange to use the attraction on Easter Sunday or shortly before will undoubtedly find it a simple matter to persuade merchants and newspapers to enter with enthusiasm into the promotion of the enterprise.
CONSIDERABLE space in this department of the March 5 issue of Exhibitors Herald was devoted to a discussion of the feature-length slapstick comedy as an advertising problem. In that discussion was pointed out the necessity for plainly indicating in all representation of such an attraction the fact that it is not drama nor anything other than what it is. The obvious advantage of bringing the theatre an audience composed wholly of patrons who like that form of entertainment need not be commented upon further.

With the publication of the pictures presented herewith, showing two instances in which feature-length comedies produced by Mack Sennett and distributed by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., were so plainly labeled as to make misapprehension as to the nature of the production practically impossible concrete demonstration of the abstract statements made is rendered possible.

The lobby display for “Married Life” arranged by R. E. Bamberger at the Bleich theatre, Owensboro, Ky., made it all but impossible for a patron to enter the theatre without knowing that the picture is a comedy of the Sennett type. At the same time it made it impossible for a pedestrian favoring that form of entertainment to pass the theatre without knowing that such a picture was being shown thereat.

The Bleich audience, it was thus assured, was made up of patrons who like comedy. That is just about the best assurance of satisfaction that can be had.

When “Love, Honor and Behave,” which followed “Married Life” on the First National publication schedule, was shown at the Alhambra theatre, Los Angeles, no less positive results were accomplished. Here two distinct novelties were introduced, the flatiron cutouts and the humorous slate stunt adding to the effectiveness of the display as a label and as an attraction.

In both instances the management took steps to eliminate from their audiences patrons who might be disappointed to learn that the feature of the program was of comic nature. In doing that very important thing they likewise increased their total attendance by attracting particularly those who prefer the lighter form of entertainment.
Chinese Orchestra Feature Of "First Born" Prologue

Edward L. Hyman, managing director of the Strand theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., conducted one of the most thorough advertising campaigns of recent months in behalf of "The First Born," Sessue Hayakawa's Robertson-Cole production, following through as is his custom with a prologue and supporting program of exceptional unity and forcefulness. The photograph reproduced herewith shows the Strand stage with the prologue in progress.

A genuine Chinese orchestra was employed by the Strand theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., in presentation of "The First Born"

The advertising campaign was started a week in advance of the opening, toy balloons bearing the theatre trade mark, the name of the picture and the playing dates being distributed to the youngsters of Brooklyn. In the house organ for the previous week an insert was used to call especial attention to the attraction.

The publicity drive was launched after Mr. Hyman had procured a real Chinese orchestra to participate in the presentation. That provided foundation for a number of news stories in which due mention was made of the

The presentation opened with a Lincoln program used as overture by the orchestra. This was followed by a scenic photographed in Canton, China, and the the prologue set was disclosed.

A Chinese soprano sang "The Chinese Lullaby," and toward the end of the number the Strand quartette joined her. Red and blue lights then emphasized the Chinatown setting and the orchestra played a number. A characteristic dance followed, and the tenor of the quartette repeated "The Chinese Lullaby," a little Chinese boy appearing as the crowning touch of realism.

Exhibitors throughout the country are experiencing marked success in the exploitation of the Fontaine Fox Toonerville Trolley cartoons distributed by First National, due to the readiness of newspapers carrying the cartoons to cooperate in publicity. The Kinema theatre, Los Angeles, is one of many institutions reporting excellent results following proposals to editors that news mention be made of the theatre engagement in return for screen allusion to the newspaper strip. The same suggestion should meet with like favor in connection with other cartoon comedies, the service used by local newspapers determining results.

Freckle Contest Given New Twist At Sandusky, 0.

The freckles contest which has been used with considerable success in various parts of the country as exploitation for "Dinty," Marshall Neilan's First National attraction, was given a new and decidedly effective "twist" by George Schade, of the Schade theatre, Sandusky, O., during the recent engagement of the film in that city. The photograph reproduced herewith is that of the youngster who won the contest.

Mr. Schade startled readers with his simple advertisement for colored boys with freckles, and with the additional information that the one who proved to have the most freckles would be employed throughout the showing of the picture at the Schade theatre.

The natural assumption was, of course, that colored boys do not have freckles, but this was demonstrated unfounded, in fact, when the winner of the contest was announced.

Aside from the voluminous comment caused by the advertisements great publicity was gained through the news columns of the newspapers, where the reporters wrote humorously which term in newspaper writing is generally synonymous with "at great length," of the contest.

A new twist, it has been said, is as good as a new idea. Be that as it may, there cannot be too many twists, and the Schade addition to the original stunt is a worthy one.
Parsons Stresses Value of Simplicity

In Talk on Motion Picture Advertising

P. A. PARSONS, Pathé advertising manager, in an address to the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers on February 16, touched upon points that are of great interest and practical value to all who advertise the motion picture business. Though prepared for and delivered to the advertising representatives of the various film companies, the facts brought out are benefit materially by reading the following extract from the views expressed by a man equipped by experience and study for discussion of the subject.

The subject which I have chosen for this paper is "Simplicity." I feel that with such a subject I can make no better introduction than to read from a speech which better illustrates that quality than any descriptive words that I can use, and that must remain a shining example as long as the English language endures. For more than seven years ago, our fathers brought forth upon this continent a new nation, conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal.

"Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that nation or any nation so conceived and so dedicated, can long endure. We are met on a great battle-field of that war. We have come to dedicate a portion of that field as a final resting-place for those who here gave their lives that that nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this."

"But in a larger sense, we cannot dedicate, we cannot consecrate, we cannot hallow this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here, have consecrated it far above our poor power to add or detract. The world will little note, nor long remember, what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us, the living, rather, to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be dedicated to the great task remaining before us—that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion—that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain—that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom and a regeneration of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the earth."

FIFTY-SEVEN years ago, the man whose birthday we celebrated February 12, delivered, on the battlefield of Gettysburg, the speech of which I have read a portion. If great thoughts, perfectly expressed and uttered at a time when men need to hear them and be influenced by them, have within them the seed in immortality, then Lincoln's Gettysburg speech is deserving and will receive the admiration and respect of uncounted generations to come.

What was there in Lincoln's speeches that gave them the power to burn into men's understanding, that make them so easy to remember and quote, that made them so potent in their argument that opposition crumbled and scoffers heard and were convinced?

We have it on the authority of a venerable man whose story appears in last week's Collier's, that he heard the Gettysburg speech and ever since has been able without study to repeat it almost word for word. Ida Tarbell, one of Lincoln's biographers, in compiling the facts of his life, interviewed many persons who had known him and found that with many of them it was very easy to quote word for word from his sayings and speeches. Analyze his speeches and you will find one unvarying characteristic common to them all. It is simplicity, the rare power to so clothe his thoughts that a child may read or hear and understand. There is no excess baggage of wordage, no redundancy, few words of more than two syllables, and most of the words used are of good, honest Saxon ancestry, the same kind that John Bunyan used, the kind that were used in the King James version of the Bible. Counting the words in the extract from the Gettysburg speech which we have read, we find that there are some 260 and of the 260 there are less than a dozen adjectives.

We advertising men in the motion picture business stray far from the paths which Lincoln has amply demonstrated are the "fitting and proper" ones to follow. Two hundred and sixty words with only ten adjectives, and those inconspicuous! Would any of us ever write an ad of that length and so far repress ourselves? Would we not comb the thesaurus for little-known adjectives; for sonorous-sounding synonyms?

We are in the amusement business and we all unconsciously write and plan our ads on a 24-sheet basis, viz., striving to attract attention with loud yells when our whispers can be heard, if we whisper—something worth while. Instead of giving the exhibitor a good, solid diet of meat and potatoes, we cloy him with the cake of adjectives and with the pastry of elaborate art. Here is an excerpt from an ad that appeared a month or two ago:

"A glittering and gorgeous fantasy, poetic in conception, tremendously dramatic in its development, and illuminated with the histrionic genius of so and so, the star." There was a lot more of it, but I will spare you. In a sentence of 23 words, the writer used five adjectives, one-half the number that Lincoln used in over 260. Do you think that that style of advertisement writing is going to be read?

Personally, I don't, and yet I have offended along the same lines as the writer of that ad. Competition is so keen in this field that it is a natural tendency to over-praise and to over-write. We forget that the exhibitor has been seeing the same sort of adjunctive parade year after year on hundreds of pictures and is absolutely cold to its appeal.

A NOTHER error that I think we have fallen into is the one of over-emphasis on art. Art is of very real value in advertising, but it is also true that in a business such as ours it should be secondary in importance to the sales message itself. A staple commodity that has proven itself, one that everyone knows, does not have to be re-sold with every advertisement. Advertising keeps it in the minds of the dealers and the public.

Three focal points dominate the lobby display used by B. F. Keith's Eighty-first Street theatre, New York, for "The Devil," the Associated Exhibitors production. An interesting illustration of an important point brought out by P. A. Parsons, Pathé advertising manager, in his address to the A. M. P. A.
A very short message with the balance of the advertisement taken up by a good art display may therefore be used to good advantage.

But in this business the only standardized picture that I know of is the Pathe News, and that is standard by reason of very unusual circumstances; an uninterrupted history of over ten years, priority of kind, an exceedingly well established name, and unchanging high quality. You will pardon, I hope, this mention of a release which, as it happens, is the property of the house with which I am connected, but were it the property of a competitor I would have as willingly paid it tribute.

We have, therefore, in this field, an advertising problem which is unique and I think unparalleled in any other business. We must sell our product over and over again. Past successes mean little. Each picture must be taken and advertised upon its own valuation. Therefore, straight out-and-out sales talk, couched in simple language, and telling the truth, should be, and I believe, is the best way for us to advertise.

* * *

You have, all of you, noticed the advertising on Big Ben clocks. It has impressed you and you have thought it good, and the whole advertising world has given it unqualified approval. That expression, "big honest face," as applied to a clock impressed me when I first saw it and gave a clock personality for the first time. Read those Big Ben ads. They are always simple in design, type and text. The writer delivers a message that all can understand.

He does not say, as we perhaps would, "Here is the greatest clock of all time, magnificent in appearance, absolutely in-fallible in its time-keeping qualities, an adornment for the parlor, an essential in the kitchen and a necessity in the boudoir, characterized by ninety per cent of the population of this country and Europe as a crowning achievement in clock making, and as an innovation which advances civilization." Oh no. He writes two or three simple sentences in simple words of one or two syllables; he gives to his ads personality; he makes his clocks and his messages human. He seems to be conscious of the great example of Abraham Lincoln. He doesn't talk down, he talks to.

Daniel Webster was probably the greatest orator that America has produced. His speeches will always live in the school books as examples of perfect oratory and splendid diction. But who quotes Webster? Who remembers his speeches save those who have studied them? Webster has gone into the school books and the libraries of the world's best orations, while Lincoln has passed into the hearts and minds of men. Does not the difference lie mainly in simplicity?

* * *

Every advertisement has, or should have, a focal point. Multiplying of the focal points, if confusing, makes it difficult for the reader to get the message, and practically eliminates the casual reader, who is a mighty important personage and should be catered to. Seven or eight illustrations and badly scattered text are pretty frequent in the advertisements in our trade. In other words, there is a multiplication in focal points and the ad suffers. We are talking to busy men. Make it easy for them to stop at our ads!

The same principles apply to general advertising. Why waste money on non-essentials, with too much cake and too little good white bread, with a plethora of adjectives and a paucity of that good common sense—simpleness?

Takes Options on Windows For Poster Display Right

Frank A. Cassidy, Paramount exploitation representative at the Cincinnati, O., exchange, set an important precedent when he obtained from real estate dealers of Columbus, O., options giving him sole right to display posters in a number of prominent windows vacant at the time. That is an innovation with promise.

The occasion for the unusual step was the approaching exhibition of "Forbidden Fruit," Cecil B. DeMille's Paramount production, at the Majestic theatre. Special posters were being prepared for the advertising campaign and Mr. Cassidy wished to be absolutely sure that ample space for their display would be available.

The special posters used are photographically reproduced here with their composition is such, obviously, as to warrant the measures taken in their behalf. Few more effective compositions have been received in recent contributions. With the color of the original the effect undoubtedly was excellent.

The option idea admits of elaboration.

An arrangement which assures to the theatre man the right to display his advertising material in given locations at any and all times is one worth making.

The Columbus options applied to windows which were vacant at the time, but it should not be difficult to reach an agreement whereby posters or other advertising matter of sufficiently high grade might be used in the most prominent locations in any city.
BERNARD DEPKIN, manager of the Strand theatre, Baltimore, Md., used a special matinee for children in the engagement of “The Last of the Mohicans” and experienced the gratifying results seen in the above reproduction of a photograph taken just prior to the performance.

Theatres Gain Local Prestige Following Exploitation of “Last of the Mohicans”

Some pictures are money-makers. Others make for theatre prestige. Occasionally the qualities of both types are found in a single production, which circumstance sets that picture apart from the pictures of its time.

Reports from many quarters indicate that in “The Last of the Mohicans,” Maurice Tourneur’s Associated Producers, Inc., production, exhibitors have found such an attraction.

The photograph reproduced at the top of this page shows the crowd of children that attended a special matinee performance of the production given at the Strand theatre, Baltimore, Md. It is typical of many photographs and more reports received from practically every section of the country.

Exhibitors have used the picturization of James Fenimore Cooper’s novel to excellent advantage. They have interested educators, club officials and municipal officials in the engagement, with the result that co-operation of unusually beneficial and productive character has been experienced.

Box office receipts have shown the monetary profit of this work.

They have not shown and cannot definitely show the even greater profit gained in the form of heightened prestige for the theatres using the attraction in this manner.

Pictures that bring the exhibitor into direct contact and harmonious co-operation with local personages of importance are comparatively rare. When one is available the exhibitor who gives proper thought to the permanency of his local standing does not ignore the opportunity at hand.

He enters into the work with enthusiasm. He acts unselfishly in the business of bringing the juvenile population to the theatre. He does all in his power to make such an engagement an unqualified success in point of patron satisfaction.

Friends for the theatre are made in this way. And the motion picture theatre needs friends today as never before. The civic elements interested in such an engagement are the elements ordinarily most active in censorship and kindred agitation.

The home office of Associated Producers, Inc., has shown marked willingness to aid the exhibitor in promoting cooperation of this type. Chief Little Bear, an Indian actor, has been employed for presentation and exploitation of the picture. In addition to this and other aids given, the distributing organization provides exhibitors playing the picture with detailed accounts of past campaigns which have netted desirable results.

The work is decidedly worth while. The exhibitor who uses the production and does not make the most of it for his own permanent benefit is overlooking a valuable opportunity.

A young lady in obviously expensive attire, blindfolded and bearing a nearly lettered banner paraded the streets of St. Louis, Mo., in behalf of the Liberty theatre engagement of “Blind Wives,” the Fox production.

E. C. Gary, Paramount exploitation representative at the Omaha, Neb., exchange, established what is regarded as a world’s record by selling space for a double truck advertising “Something to Think About,” showing at the Auditorium theatre, Holdredge, Neb., in two hours.
Stock Paper Serves Istrione In “Stealers” Lobby Display

A. B. Cook, manager of the Istrione theatre, Jackson, Miss., reports big results obtained with his street representation of “The Stealers.”

A. B. Cook, manager of the Istrione theatre, Jackson, Miss., demonstrated effectively the possibility of combining economy and advertising when he constructed with stock material and one special banner the lobby display for “The Stealers,” the Robertson-Cole production, which is photographically reproduced herewith. Study the illustration.

Mr. Cook’s report to Robertson-Cole regarding the engagement states that “matinees were well attended and the evening business was capacity.”

The most expensive campaign could not have produced a much better report. “Capacity,” the term applied to the evening attendance, is commonly interpreted as meaning that the theatre accommodated the greatest possible number of patrons. More than that no amount of exploitation or advertising could have made possible.

Greater exploitation might have increased the matinee business, possible to such an extent as to warrant the additional expense, but the Istrione engagement, as reported, cannot be judged as other than satisfactory.

The present trend in theatre advertising is along the line indicated. Exhibitors are giving greater thought to the very important matter of making every expenditure in exploitation produce commensurate results.

So long as zeal in this endeavor does not result in too stringent control of the theatre exchequer the tendency is a commendable one. The keen business judgment that has brought the theatre to its present state of security as regards its business foundation will, in all probability, prevent any detrimental result.

Aside from this possible danger, the policy in practice is altogether desirable. Under any circumstances, the exhibitorial dollar should be made to produce the greatest possible return. Intensive advertising invariably raises the ratio of productivity. The man who learns that big results may be had with comparatively slight expense learns simultaneously that greater expense can be made to bring greater results than formerly.

That knowledge is of value. It leads to better advertising, which is the one thing more desirable than the frequently advocated “more advertising.”

More and better advertising, an admirable combination, is obviously the thing which the theatre needs most, today as ever.

Material advance is being made toward this goal. The attainment of the designated end will bring about a general enrichment of the industry, the importance of which cannot be overemphasized.

An amateur sceneriavist contest was conducted by the “San Francisco Bulletin” for 18 days prior to the California theatre showing of Selznick’s “The Wonderful Chance,” contestants being required to describe their most wonderful chance in scenario form. H. H. Ian Loan, author of the picture, contributed a special article in connection with the contest and the theatre reported capacity business as a result of the enterprise.

Programs That Pay

The theatre house organ is important or unimportant as an advertising instrument in proportion to the care or lack of care with which it is prepared. Ideas for improvement are of great value, each innovation which increases the reader’s interest in the theatre publication adding indirectly but surely to the box office sales report. The features of various programs here listed are especially worth while. They may be combined in a single program.

THE PALACE THEATRE, HAMILTON, O., a sixteen-page booklet, contains an editorial page devoted to theatre news and subjects of general interest, an invitation to readers to contribute being included with the sole restriction drawn against politics. A prize is offered by Fred S. Meyer, managing director, to those who own complete files of the house organ since initial publication.

THE NEWARK, NEWARK, N. J., sixteen pages, four in two colors, carries the following week’s program on the front cover, the present program on pages 8 and 9, and a star portrait on the back cover. Other pages carry advertising and novelty text matter. Four-page insert, miniature reproduction of pages 1, 8, 9 and 16 of the following program, carried weekly.

THE CALIFORNIA, LOS ANGELES, sixteen pages with cover of heavy stock, devotes an entire page to neatly set musical program giving names of selections which accompany picture, house musical conductor’s program being used.

THE SAENGERETTE, published for all the Saenger theatres in New Orleans, La., consists of sixteen pages and cover of special stock. A compactly made up fund of general picture information. One page devoted to “Puzzle Corner” presenting genuine puzzles for correct answers to which box candy or admission tickets are given.

THE NEW GARRICK, MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., publishes a four-page folder of coated stock, giving entire front cover to star portrait and name of theatre. Excellently chosen type admirably displayed set forth program on inside pages. Back cover carries advance notice for other theatres of Finkelstein & Ruben chain.
New York Strand Prologue for “The Kid” Produced With Quartette and Simple Set

“The Kid” is a box office picture. The records established by Charles Chaplin’s “First National” feature in Chicago and elsewhere are ample proof of that statement.

The natural tendency, unfortunately, is to “let down” on exploitation in such cases. Too many exhibitors take the stand that a real box office attraction doesn’t require presentation or other special endeavor in its behalf.

There are interesting exceptions to the rule.

JOSEPH PLUNKETT, managing director of the Strand theatre, New York, was familiar with the records established with the picture prior to the opening of the Strand engagement. He proved himself an exception to the exhibitorial rule in giving it full benefit of his demonstrated presentation ability. Accompanying illustrations show the stage setting used at the Strand and the players employed in the prologue.

The Strand quartette and one additional player were used in the prologue. The two views of the stage feature presented herewith serve amply for purposes of adaptation.

Adaptation is the important thing. It is to show American exhibitors how the picture was presented at the Strand, in order that they may see the wisdom of using like methods, that this story is written.

The Strand setting was such as the majority of exhibitors will have little difficulty in duplicating. Many of them now have stock scenery which may serve as it is or with slight alteration.

The prologue may take whatever form is commensurate with the talent available. A straight musical program by a male quartette attired in keeping with the atmosphere of the play will be found effective. Whatever elaboration may be possible under local conditions will, of course, heighten the value of the presentation.

In whatever manner the prologue is staged, the picture will impress more forcibly because of its use. A production which drew big business to the Randolph theatre, Chicago, a downtown house, for seven weeks, without presentation of any sort other than organ accompaniment, unsupported by short subjects, may be expected to surpass even that enviable record by a considerable margin if given the benefit of the best auxiliary features at the exhibitor’s command.

“The Kid” can carry the burden of entertainment unaided. But that is not a valid reason why it should be forced to do so.

Every exhibitor should extend himself in its behalf. If presentation heightens the effectiveness of a mediocre feature, how much more worth while must it be in connection with a feature of demonstrated merit.

The point is one that should be missed by no showman who attaches proper importance to the progress of the motion picture theatre as an entertainment institution.

Old keys to which were attached red cards reading, “Front Door Key—Majestic Theatre,” were distributed about Davenport, Iowa, and an advertisement appeared offering free admissions to “The Devil’s Pass Key” as reward for their return. F. L. McNames, Universal publicity man, directed the stunt and reports big returns in the form of comment publicity.

The Strand quartette and one additional actor were used in Joseph Plunkett’s presentation of “The Kid” at the Strand theatre, New York.

Harold F. Wendt, publicity director for the Rivoli theatre, Toledo, O., employed telephone operators at two hotels to devote their idle time to calling up subscribers and asking if they were going to see “A Child for Sale” at the Rivoli. Packed houses and waiting lines were experienced.

A house organ of just about ideal size is published by the Wyckoff theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., the four pages containing not a line of paid advertising but a veritable encyclopedia of valuable information concerning coming attractions.

Lawrence Beatus, manager of the Palace theatre, Washington, D. C., entertained the children from 14 charitable institutions during the recent run of Mary Pickford’s United Artists production, “The Love Light.”
Exploitation Stories
Recorded by the Lens
Showing the Trend of Advertising Activity

LOUIS K. SIDNEY, manager of the William Fox theatres, Denver, Colo., has made of the Rivoli lobby a national institution as regards exploitation. The above display, used for "Dangerous Business," Constance Talmadge's First National attraction, is typical of the Rivoli standard.

A SLIGHTLY more elaborate combination of cutouts and straight matter was employed for another First National attraction, "The Master Mind," starring Lionel Barrymore. Both displays are of the style consistently maintained throughout the year.

NIGHT view of the Palace theatre, Wichita, Kan., showing the heart cutout border used by Stanley Chambers, manager, for Charles Ray's First National production.

CARDS placed in store windows of all classes served the Strand theatre, Laredo, Tex., as exploitation for the showing of "Go and Get It," Marshall Nellan's First National attraction.
A N atmospheric prologue embodying the ideas suggested before publication date in this department was used by the California theatre, Los Angeles, in behalf of "Hold Your Horses," the Goldwyn production featuring Tom Moore. The characters used in the prologue, it is obvious, may be employed also for exterior exploitation. Every well-equipped theatre has in stock the street drop necessary for the staging of the presentation.

STRAIGHT advertising methods brought stand-out crowds to the Pantheon theatre, Toledo, O., during the engagement of "Passion," the First National attraction starring Pola Negri.

GRACE CLARK DE GRAFFE, prominent in musical circles of Des Moines, Ia., sang at the Garden theatre in connection with the showing of Universal's "Once to Every Woman."

THE FAITH HEALER," George Melford's forthcoming Paramount production, is to be advertised with the three sequence posters reproduced above, the posters to be displayed one each week for three weeks preceding the opening. Each is in three colors and contains only the lettering shown in the reproductions. The Famous Players-Lasky exploitation department is now distributing the posters to the various exchanges.
Riesenfeld’s “Buried Treasure” Prologue Adaptable for General Theatre Purposes

The exhibitor who introduces a new production to the screen public of the world assumes a responsibility which can be shared with no one.

His handling of the premiere is a matter of great interest to every theatre man in the country. Upon the success or failure of his presentation depends in great measure the degree of enthusiasm with which showmen who subsequently use the attraction enter into the work.

Perhaps because of their demonstrated ability in handling new and untried attractions, a limited number of American exhibitors are commonly entrusted with national premieres.

Hugo Riesenfeld, managing director of the Criterion, Rialto and Rivoli theatres, New York, is one of this number.

“Buried Treasure,” the Cosmopolitan production featuring Marion Davies, to be distributed by Famous Players-Lasky, will doubtless be given in many of its subsequent showings the benefit of presentation modeled in some degree after that accorded it by Mr. Riesenfeld at the Criterion, where it is now in engagement. Accompanying illustrations give convincing evidence as to the magnitude and quality of the Riesenfeld presentation.

Josef Urban, who designed settings for the motion picture, prepared the Criterion stage setting. It consists of a garden wall, in which is set a barred window, back of which is seen a hill country background, contributing detail carrying out the atmosphere of “Old Spain.”

The orchestra plays “The March of the Toreadors” as the ensemble sings for a quartette of dancers in characteristic measures. This is followed by “Serenade de Murica,” a Spanish folk song, sung by a baritone soloist to mandolin and guitar accompaniment, a dance duet accompanying the closing bars of the number.

The entire prologue, so far as talent is concerned, was produced by the New School of Opera and Ensemble, an organization in the founding of which Mr. Riesenfeld actively participated, and to Josiah Zaro, director of the organization, Mr. Riesenfeld gives the major portion of the credit for the results obtained.

But the managing director’s generous disposal of credit detracts in no degree from the importance of his accomplishment in the estimation of those who have watched his work.

Hugo Riesenfeld, managing director of the Rialto, Rivoli and Criterion theatres, New York, established an important precedent for American exhibitors who will use “Buried Treasure,” the Cosmopolitan-Paramount production starring Marion Davies, when he conducted the national premiere of the picture at the Criterion. The above scene shows the stage with prologue in progress, setting being the work of Josef Urban, who designed the settings for the motion picture. Below is seen a night view of the theatre front during the first week of the indefinite engagement.
STUNTS

A local benefit staged at the Majestic theatre, LaCrosse, Wis., was capitalized by William Freise, assistant manager, who obtained a front page story of Justine Johnstone’s entry into motion pictures, Realart’s “Blackbirds” being the feature in engagement.

* * *

The print of “Passion,” First National attraction, supplied to John A. Schwalm, manager of the Rialto theatre, Hamilton, O., was supposedly kept in a safety deposit vault specially engaged for the purpose. A deftly imparted “tip” to a Hamilton reporter resulted in a story prominently displayed on page 1.

* * *

Front page position was also given a story describing the special showing of “The Mark of Zorro,” Douglas Fairbanks’ United Artists production, at the Strand theatre, Fremont, O., at which five companies of Boy Scouts were present. Not the least important statement in the story, from the theatre viewpoint, was one to the effect that the boys cheered the picture so lustily that the management had decided to hold it over for another day’s showing.

* * *

C. B. Woods, manager of the Palace theatre, Fort Smith, Ark., gave a press showing of “Go And Get It,” Marshall Neilan’s First National production, on the Sunday before the opening of the engagement. Theatres are not permitted to operate on Sunday in Fort Smith. The press enjoyed the picture. They wrote reviews for the Monday issue—and editorials advocating Sunday opening.

* * *

The Howard theatre, Chicago neighborhood house, announces on the screen throughout the week “Attend Community Church Services Here Every Sunday Morning at 11:45.” It is not logical to believe that a theatre devoting hours which might be used for profitable exhibition of motion pictures to the cause of religion is likely to be singled out by that type of agitator who advocates a Blue Sunday.

HARRY REICHENBACH, exploitation specialist in charge of the campaign introducing “Outside The Law,” Universal feature, to Chicago, used many novelties of adaptable nature prior to the opening of an indefinite engagement at Barbee’s Loop theatre on February 27. Not the least interesting of these is the dodger reproduced in two illustrations presented herewith.

The front of the dodger is reproduced above. It carried at the top the instructions essential to the intelligent reading of the copy. When held to the light the characters printed upon the back of the dodger, reproduced below, merged perfectly with those printed upon the front, forming the text, “Barbee’s Loop Theatre, Commencing Sunday, February 27. Priscilla Dean, in the greatest melodrama of all times, Outside The Law.”

The attention compelling power of the affair is conveyed in the reproductions. Undoubtedly the dodgers distributed were read by persons to whom straight advertising matter of the sort appeals vainly.

Comparatively little expense is involved in the composition of the dodger. An ordinarily resourceful job printer should duplicate the job with little difficulty.

That the idea is adaptable is obvious. It follows that exhibitors everywhere will make use of it.

Small Town Patrons Are Most Critical

Bruce Kixmiller of Bicknell, Ind., Declares That "Lots of Pictures Get by on Broadway That Die of Neglect in Communities With Population Between 5,000 and 10,000"

WHEN it comes to knowing exactly what they want in the way of entertainment—down to the sixth decimal point, if you please—and insisting upon getting it, the theatriers of a small town have Broadway, New York, the Loop, Chicago, and Market street, Philadelphia, lashed to the mast. Such is the contention of Bruce C. Kixmiller, who operates the Colonial theatre, Bicknell, Ind.

"You can't monkey with the tastes of small town theatriers; they are the most fastidious people on the face of the earth," said Mr. Kixmiller. "New Yorkers and the people in any large city will stand for a lot that no small town would put up with for a minute. Lots of picture 'get by' on Broadway that die of neglect in towns of five and ten thousand population. *

"Of course it works both ways. The Colonial's patrons, for instance, are quick to complain about something they don't like, but they're equally ready to stop on the way out and tell you emphatically about something they've seen that they do like. No exhibitor in a town like Bicknell need ever complain that he doesn't know what his patrons want or that he can't find out. He can't help finding out, because they make it their business to see that he does."

"Bicknell is a town of about 6,000, and the Colonial, which seats about 640, is the holder of the Associated First National sub-franchise. "The town is the center of a prosperous coal mining district, and the mines are being operated on a basis of five days a week. So you see there is plenty of money in the town, and it is spent liberally, although discriminately, on entertainment. In spite of the fact that 85 per cent of my patrons are of the laboring classes, I have to be careful in the selection of my programs. They are the very people who have precise ideas about what appeals to them and what doesn't. And they love no time in making their likes and dislikes known."

"Each attraction plays the Colonial two days. "I'm a firm believer in higher prices for out-of-the-ordinary attractions," went on Mr. Kixmiller, "and the people of Bicknell will pay more for an exceptional picture without hesitation or complaint. Of course it's got to be 'Triple X,' but if it is they'll buy. It's been my experience in Bicknell that the folks there would rather have a first-rate picture at a first-rate price than a cheap picture at a cheap price. And I'll bet the same thing is true of scores of other small towns just like Bicknell. I've tried it and I know."

"It is interesting to know that Mr. Kixmiller, in addition to being a successful exhibitor, is also a coal operator. And though he would not admit to having legislative ambitions, it is not at all unlikely that some fine day may find him sitting for his district in the Indiana legislature."

Goldwyn Books Into Three Big Circuits

Contracts Just Signed Call for Eleven of Latest Productions

Goldwyn has just closed contracts with three more important chains of theatres for the showing of Goldwyn's recent productions, in addition to the contract recently entered into with the Poli Circuit calling for three and four-day showings of six new Goldwyn productions in theatres in New England and Pennsylvania.

The three most recently concluded bookings are for the following eleven productions:

Loew Books Pictures

These pictures have all been booked in the Loew theatres for showings totaling several hundred days in scores of the airies all over the country. In the Stanley Circuit, embracing nearly all of the motion picture theatres of Philadelphia and the neighboring territory, and in twenty theatres of the Black Circuit, covering the New England territory.

Arrange Big Exploitation

Goldwyn is arranging for more than the usual amount of exploitation in connection with these showings.

The same group of Goldwyn pictures are booked on the Ascher circuit in Chicago. They are also booked to play at the Capitol theatre, New York; the California theatre, Los Angeles, and the Merrill theatre, Milwaukee.

Paramount to Have Kent Week in March

Interest of New York and New Jersey exhibitors over Paramount's "Kent Week," which runs from March 27 to April 2, has so far exceeded expectations that Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and Arthur Kober, the head of the studio, have decided to extend the "Kent Week" to the southern part of the country and have scheduled a "Kent Week" for the first week in April in southern cities.

This is a major exploitation move by Paramount, and it is designed to head off any rival exploitation moves by independent exhibitors or producers, and to give Paramount a clear advantage in a market where it has traditionally had a strong position.

Ziegfeld's New Feature

Reported Well Received

W. K. Ziegfeld's first independent production, "The Big House," is said to have excited enthusiastic comment as a result of its single professional showing which was held at the Times Square theatre, New York. The photodrama has a cast including Florence Reed, Norman Trevor, Tyrone Power, Henry Stephenson, Earle Foxe, William Roselle, Paula Shay, and Mlle. Dazie.
Albert Smith Arrives in West to Carry Out Big Feature Program

Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, has arrived at the Vitagraph studios of that company with a schedule of special feature plans which promise a busy year for the company. Reaching the West simultaneously was George Randolph Chester, who personally will direct his latest story, "The Son of Wallington." It will be in seven reels.

Mr. and Mrs. Chester recently completed the new story, which is in no sense a sequel to any of the previous Wallington creations of Mr. Chester. Its publication in Collier's Weekly will be completed simultaneously with the publication date of the motion picture version. "The Son of Wallington" will be the first of the big specials to be undertaken in 1921 at the Western Vitagraph studios.

To Adapt Curwood Story

Upon his arrival, Mr. Smith announced that "The Son of Wallington" would be rapidly followed by James Oliver Curwood's "Flower of the North" which is to be directed by David Smith. Plans for these two big productions and the numerous other pictures scheduled by Mr. Smith are keeping the complete staff of Vitagraph's Western studio busier than it has been for years.

Earle Williams has started his new production, "The Secret of the Silver Car," from Wynnham Martyn's novel of the same title. The continuity is being prepared for Antonio Moreno's newest feature to follow "Three Sevens."

Announce Semon's Next

Larry Semon is starting his second special comedy of the year, "The Rent Collector," which will follow "The Hick."

William Duncan is finishing his chapter play, "Fighting Face," and his next production is being prepared and will soon be started.

Capital Reports Sales of Late Lester Cuneo Films

The following sales of territorial rights on the Lester Cuneo features, being made for Capital Film Company, are reported this week:

Sol Lesser, All Star Feature Distributors, Los Angeles; California, Nevada, Arizona and the Hawaiian Islands; P. O. Olesker, Associated Film Exchange, Baltimore; Maryland, Virginia, and the District of Columbia; W. G. Underwood, Specialty Film Company, Dallas; Texas; Oklahoma and Arkansas; E. M. Niggel, Apex Pictures, Pittsburgh; Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

ALEDO, ILL.—Manager J. C. May has installed a new modern projection screen in his Empire theatre here.

Butler Will Star in Irving Lesser Films Series of Five Part Comedy Dramas to Be Produced at Brunton Plant

Irving Lesser has closed a deal whereby David Butler will star in a series of 15 reel comedies which will be made under Lesser's banner. The pictures will be known as David Butler Productions. Studio space has been leased in the Robert Brunton Hollywood studios. Exterior sets are being built on the Brunton lot.

The first production will be adapted from "Sophie Semenoff," by Wallace Irwin. Fred J. Butler, young Butler's father, has written the story in which his son in all his theatrical and screen endeavors, will take charge of the production.

George W. Stout, who has been identified with Keisel & Baumann, Mack Sennett and Haworth Productions, has been appointed business manager of the Butler organization.

Mr. Lesser, with this new acquisition, has added a third production unit to his name. His second, "Perils of Rene," starring Jackie Coogan, is now completed, with Irvin S. Cobb writing the title paragraphs. This coming soon to the first of the stories. Cobb completes the captions the Peck film will be published.

Byron to Get New House

BYRON, ILL.—Frank Spoor is planning the erection of a motion picture theatre to seat 350 patrons.

Work Will Begin Soon on Snowy Baker Productions

Preparations are under way for the filming of the first of the series of Snowy Baker Productions at the Selig studio.

Reg. L. (Snowy) Baker, millionaire sportsman, will be the star of these pictures which will be produced by Col. William N. Selig and Sam Rork. The first story has been selected and the cast is being assembled.

Christie's "See My Lawyer" to Be Published Soon by Robertson-Cole

Robertson-Cole announces the publication in the near future of "See My Lawyer," a special production directed by Al Christie and starring T. Roy Barnes. It is an inimitable Christie comedy-drama played on the camera type which is expected by the company to establish wonderful box office records and hang up another mark for producers to shoot at.

Barnes a Stage Favorite

T. Roy Barnes has long since been a favorite on the legitimate stage. He probably is best remembered in the leading role of "See My Lawyer" when Max Marcin's comedy was produced on Broadway by A. H. Woods. In adapting the play to the screen Al Christie added a little pep and Barnes, appreciating the fact that the camera gave him a wider scope, outdid himself.

In the supporting cast are Grace Darmond, Lloyd Whitlock, Jean Acker, J. P. Lockney, Tom McGuire and Bert Woodruff. All are familiar known throughout the country.

Lloyd Whitlock is practically established as a star in his own right. He has a leading part in "One Man in a Million," with George Beban. J. P. Lockney has appeared in a dozen pictures turned out of Hollywood within the last year.

Sets Are Gorgeous

"See My Lawyer" is a photographic masterpiece. There are many big and gorgeous sets both exterior and interior. The story is worked out in a perfectly logical manner with the entire cast working hard all the time to produce dramatic and humorous effects.

Of especial interest to the exhibitor are the exploitation possibilities. These are taken full advantage of in the extensive campaign being laid out in the "See My Lawyer" press book, which is shortly to be published by Robertson-Cole. For the mailing list are contrived a number of teaser schemes which are calculated to stir up a maximum of interest in any community if rightly carried on.

Chatburn Buys Four Jans Features for Southwest

Herman F. Jans of Jans Pictures, Inc., has closed a deal with D. W. Chatburn Enterprises of Los Angeles for California, Arizona and Nevada.

Chatburn Enterprises has been negotiating for a considerable time for the four Jans productions: "Love Without Question," "A Woman's Business," "The Wings of Pride" and "Madonna's and Men," but did not conclude negotiations until February 3. This deal is to practically close the entire territory of the world for all four pictures.

Aschers Contract for Paramount Productions

Aschers Brothers have signed a contract for the next six months product of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Joseph Gilday, new district manager for Paramount, handled the deal.
Single Reeler Shows Perils Faced
By Bruce in Photographing Scenic

Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., is calling attention of its sales forces this week to a single-reel Robert C. Bruce scenic which the company regards as one of the most remarkable pictures that it has ever published. It is uniquely titled "The Man Who Always Sat Down" and records what is said to be the first motion picture camera flight ever made over the Matterhorn and Mount Blanc. During the making of the picture the lives of Bruce and his pilot were several times in grave danger, and the film record is said to strikingly illustrate this.

Will Publish in April

This picture will be issued in April as the first of the seven Scenes Beautiful which Bruce made on his recent visit to Europe and which he has just finished cutting and titling. England, Scotland, France, Italy and Switzerland were the countries visited.

A remarkable play on nationalities marked the making of the picture, for it was taken from a German airship (a Fokker) which was built by a Hollander and piloted by a Swiss who could speak only French for an American who could speak only English. The pilot was Lieut. Max Cartier, one of the most daring aviators in Europe, and his skill was needed as the machine hit the air pockets about the two peaks.

Not Issued As Special

During the flight the machine circled and went over the top of the Matterhorn, which reaches 14,700 feet, and Mount Blanc, which is 800 feet higher, and the highest peak in Europe. Splendid views not only in panoramas, but of the sides of the peaks, are found in the picture, including several in which the machine was driven straight at the snow-clad mountains. The views are declared to be so completely out of the ordinary and the peril of the aviators so evident that the picture will bring a thrill to every audience.

Although the picture will be published as the first of the Bruce European Scenes and not among the special list, Educational has asked its sales forces to call attention to the fact that though exhibitors will not have to pay an increased rental for this film, it is worthy of being featured as they have rarely exploited a single-reel before.

"Hearts of the Range"
Gets Wide Distribution

To cope with the demands of state rights buyers throughout the country, J. Joseph Sameth, producer of "Hearts of the Range," has perfected arrangements by which he will be able to send thirty more prints to various parts of the United States immediately.

Officials of Forward Film Distributors, 110 West Forty-first street, New York, who are in charge of the distribution of this Western drama, promise much for "Hearts of the Range."

"Wealth" Will Be Next
Ethel Clayton Feature

Herbert Rawlinson has been signed to play the leading male role opposite Ethel Clayton in "Wealth," which is to be a William D. Taylor production for Paramount, the story by Cosmo Hamilton.

The supporting cast will include also Larry Steers, J. M. Dumont, Claire McDowell, George Periolat, Jean Acker, Richard Wayne and Peggy Prevost, sister of Marie.

May Yohe to Appear
On Serial Program
Arrangements Already Made
With Author of "Hope Diamond Mystery"

Arrangements have been made to have May Yohe, formerly Lady Francis Hope, make personal appearances at the premiere screening of "The Hope Diamond Mystery," the new fifteen episode serial to be published by the Howells Sales Company, Inc., being shown.

Given Sensational Publicity

It is probable that May Yohe has had more sensational publicity than any actress in the history of the theatre. Starting out as the daughter of a poor dressmaker in Philadelphia she rose to fame almost overnight as the star of a musical comedy; then the wife of Lord Francis Hope, and possessor of the famous Hope diamond. But she was not satisfied with this. Putnam Bradley Strong came across her path and deserting fame, fortune and position she left Lord Francis and eloped with Strong. She had a tempestuous time with him until her fortune of jewels amounting to over $1,500,000 had been wasted in riotous living by her wastrel lover.

Diamond Cause of Misery

Finally in dire poverty and fighting for her daily bread she was forced to take a job as scrub woman in the office of a San Francisco shipyard. She worked at this all during the war barely making enough to keep body and soul together. She believes that all of this misery was brought upon her by her intimate association with the Hope diamond.

"Outside the Law"
Breaks Precedent

Tom Moore, manager of the Rialto and Garden theatres in Washington, D. C., has just broken one of the oldest precedents of his Washington houses. He has booked a picture for a week's run in the Garden, which has just completed a week's run at the Rialto.

The picture is "Outside the Law," the Tod Browning Universal-Jewel production starring Priscilla Dean. During its recent run at the Rialto it was an unusual success, it is said. Manager Moore watched many thousands turned away from his doors. Every available inch of room in the Rialto was occupied. For this reason he rebooked the picture for the Garden.
Storey Sales Chief of Associated Exhibitors

E. Eschmann Succeeds Him as Pearson's Assistant

With Pathe

John E. Storey, for the past year assistant to Elmer Pearson, director of exchanges of Pathe Exchange, Inc., has been named sales manager of the reorganized Associated Exhibitors, Inc.

Eschmann Is Promoted

E. A. Eschmann, feature sales manager of Pathe, succeeds Mr. Storey as assistant to the director of exchanges.

Mr. Storey is one of the oldest members of the Pathe sales force, which, incidentally, has been purchased nearly four years ago as manager of the Kansas City branch. From that post he was named manager of the Pacific Coast division, and his work in that capacity was noteworthy that almost exactly a year ago he was brought to the home office as assistant to Director of Exchanges Pearson.

Entered With Vitagraph

Strangely enough, it was under the guidance of Mr. Pearson that the Associated Exhibitors made his entrance into the film industry. It was in April, 1916, that Mr. Storey made his debut as a film salesman, operating out of the Kansas City office of the Vitagraph company which at that time was managed by Mr. Pearson. It was only shortly after that his success was hastened by the managerial reins of the Kansas City office of the George Kleine system. Subsequently Mr. Storey became allied with the Pathe forces and he has worked for that organization consistently since.

Charles Ray Makes Bow as a Director

In his next picture for First National issue, an adaptation of the late Charles E. Van Loan's "Scrap Iron," Charles Ray makes his debut as a director.

This feature, like "The Old Swimmint Hole," has another novelty in title presentation. The public is looking always for something new in Ray pictures, something that represents an honest effort to further the art of picture-making. And, it is said, Ray has yet other ambitions and other new thoughts to give the world.

"Out of the Dust" Has Been Bought by Pioneer

Pioneer Film Corporation has purchased the rights to "Out of the Dust," the John P. McCarthy production, which has been the subject of comment in film circles for some time and which was inspired by the paintings of Frederick Remington. Russell Simpson and Robert McKim have the important roles, while little Pat Moore has a part in the picture.

Third Week of Schallenberger Month Indicates Record Period for Arrow

During the absence of W. E. Schallenberger, president of Arrow Film Corporation, from the home office, a sales campaign designated as "Schallenberger Month" is being conducted. Mr. Schallenberger is in California.

Three weeks of the drive, which is limited by the dates February 7 and March 6, indicate that it will be a record month for Arrow sales. The campaign is under the directorship of W. Ray Johnston, vice-president.

New Contracts Received

New contracts have been received at the home office within the last week from Dallas, Tex., Oklahoma City, New Orleans, Atlanta, Charlotte, N. C.; Washington, D. C.; Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Cincinnati and Detroit, also from New York and New England.

These contracts were all obtained by Arrow's special representatives and in addition to these, there have been a number of sales made by mail.

During the first week, the following sales were recorded:

Frank of Chicago Buys

The two De Remer features for northern Illinois and Indiana to Louis Frank of Chicago.

Ten features starring Dustin Farnum, Gladys Hulette, Kitty Gordon, Gladys Leslie, Charlotte Walker and Kathryn Adams for Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas to the Independent Film Service Company of Dallas.

Other Contracts Signed

Other sales were made to Tucker Brothers Amusement Company for Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas; Ohio Film Classics Corporation of Cleveland; Liberty Film Exchange of Washington, D. C., for Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia; Arrow Exchanges, Inc., for New York City and northern New Jersey; Greater Features, Inc, for Minnesota, North and South Dakota; for Greater New York and northern New Jersey, to I. E. Chadwick of Merit Film Corporation, New York City; eastern Pennsylvania and southern New Jersey to New Film Exchange of Philadelphia.

"Bury Old Man Gloom" Is Slogan Of Salesmen During Pathe Drive

The sales forces of Pathe and Associated Exhibitors plan to inter "Old Man Bloom" during March, the month designated as "Brunet Optimism Month," in honor of the president of Pathe. The slogan for the month is "Bury Old Man Gloom." Prizes ranging from $100 for salesmen of the winning branches to $720 to the successful branch staffs will be awarded. In every instance where a tie might result, the capital prize will be awarded to each of the contestants.

Includes A. E. Salesmen

The Associated Exhibitors sales force will be included in the competition, as much as they will be selling virtually all Pathe product. Each Associated salesman in the winning branches of each of the four divisions will be included in the list of $100 prize winners. These prizes will be equally borne by Associated and Pathe.

In each instance where there is an assistant branch manager, he will receive a prize equal to that of the cashier and branch booker, which is 20 per cent of the $600 award going to the winning office. This is exclusive of the $100 prize going to every salesman on each winning team.

Award Special Prize

A special prize of $100 will be awarded in each of the four divisions to the salesman showing the greatest percentage of increase in new business written on a basis of his record for the previous two months.

Theatre for Colored Folk

CINCINNATI: O. — Approximately $1,000 will be spent in the construction of a motion picture theatre for colored patronage, to be built at the north-west corner of Lincoln avenue and Alma place. Walnut Hills Gray & Johnson will be the owners.

Fox News Claims to Have Beat on Pictures of Bergdoll in Germany

The first big news reel beat of 1921, showing Grover Cleveland Bergdoll, the fugitive millionaire draft dodger in Germany, has been achieved by Fox News, according to an announcement by the Fox offices. Published in the issue of Vol. 2, No. 42, it ranks in news interest with the famous pictures of D'Annunzio's entry into Fiume, the pictures of the Thanksgiving Day riot in Fifth avenue and the signing of the articles for the Carpenter-Dempsey fight.

The Bergdoll pictures were taken in the village of Eberbach, Baden, where the Philadelphia slacker is living in luxury and where an attempt to kidnap him was made recently by United States secret service men.

Miller Takes Scenes

Chief credit for the enterprise which made the pictures possible must go to Capt. Paul Miller, Fox News staff cameraman stationed at Berlin. He joined Fox News a year ago, after his discharge from the army. His knowledge of German helped him induce Bergdoll to pose, for the draft ducker had refused to meet any American cameraman.

The pictures show Bergdoll sitting at the wheel of his $10,000 Benz car with Eugene Stecher, his Philadelphia chauffeur, who escaped from America with him and now is his bodyguard. It was Stecher who bore the brunt of the fight with the Americans who attacked Bergdoll in the attempt to take him to the occupied zone. Bergdoll's cousin, Friedenberg, who took part in the fight, also is shown in Fox News.

Lives With Grandfather

Bergdoll is living with his grandfather, Herr Behmann, a millionaire. Behmann is shown with him in some of the Fox News pictures. According to Miller, Bergdoll is having a royal time and seems to be abundantly supplied with money. The news interest is increased by a series of shots of Bergdoll made in America at the time of his arrest and trial.

Kinograms on Program

At Ambassador in L. A.

The Ambassador, the new Los Angeles theatre in the Ambassador hotel, has selected Kinograms, which are being published through Educational Exchanges as its news weekly.

The selection was personally made by S. Barrett McCormick, its managing director. The Ambassador is showing only feature pictures at their initial showing, and for a single week. After their run they are transferred to one of the other Los Angeles houses. McCormick has booked many of the Educational short subjects, including "In Dutch," one of the World Wanderings series which was used the second week of the opening.

ALBION, MICH.—American Amusement Company has closed a deal for the Pryor site in Michigan avenue for the erection of a new theatre.
Big Growth of Selznick Interests
In Australia Is Noted in Reports

Three Branches at Melbourne, Sydney and Adelaide Are in Full Operation. According to Executives in Charge There

Several announcements of interest have been issued from the New York offices of Selznick.

Louis Brock, foreign manager, announces that he has received reports from D. J. Selznick and John Corbett Jones, managing director and general manager respectively of the Selznick headquarters in Australia, stating that the growth and influence of Selznick interests throughout Australia during the last twelve months has been little less than phenomenal.

Three Branches Operating

Three branches are now in full operation at Melbourne, Sydney and Adelaide. Officials there are confident of bigger and greater business this year.

Another announcement is of the appointment of William Stoetmer as general business manager, of the Selznick News Weekly. Mr. Stoetmer may go to Europe to organize a foreign camera staff.

In announcements concerning current publications and new productions, the statement that Eugene O'Brien's latest, "Gilded Lilies," will be issued on March 20. With the completion of Mr. O'Brien's last picture Martha Mansfield will begin work on her first starring vehicle, "The Fourth Sin." Alan Crossland will direct.

Plays Opposite Tearle

In the forthcoming Conway Tearle picture, "The Man of Stone," Winiord Westover will play opposite the star. Henry Kolker will direct, according to Myron Selznick, production manager. The first interior scenes for the new Elaine Hammerstein picture, "Handcuffs and Kisses," have been under the direction of George Archainbaud.

Praises Miss Hammerstein

One of the many instances that are constantly proving the popularity of Miss Hammerstein came to light this week in the form of a letter from J. J. Cavanaugh, manager of the Opera House-Piedmont, W. Va., who declares that "Pleasure Seekers," starring Miss Hammerstein, is the best production he has ever shown at his theatre.

"During my experience in the show business," he says, "I have never offered to my patrons a picture that gave as much satisfaction as 'Pleasure Seekers,' which I used on February 14. I have paid big money for a great many pictures and have shown the best of them, but never have I heard on any other picture the commendation from my patrons that was inspired by 'Pleasure Seekers.'"

Betty Compson Signs for Five Years With Famous

Betty Compson, whose performance in George Loane Tucker's "The Miracle Man" scored great favor, has signed a contract for five years as a star in Paramount pictures.

Miss Compson, who arrived in New York recently for the purpose of affixing her signature to the Lasky contract, has returned to Hollywood. She will begin work April 1 on her first Paramount starring picture.

DIGEST of PICTURES of the WEEK

WHAT kind of pictures do you buy, Mr. Exhibitor? Do you buy those which have unique high lights that may be advertised and are likely to be talked about, or the other kind. Do you buy pictures with "punch," "action," "class?" These are points that are considered by every producer and director when making a picture because they know in advance it must be disposed of to the distributor and thence to the exhibitor.

Photoplays with "punch" sell easiest, film salesmen tell us, and the exhibitor finds them easiest to sell to the public, but it is equally true that they are not the only ones that can be made profitable. Very often a well-made little feature can be exploited and put over with considerable profit and credit to a theatre that comes along unheralded by the producers.

Along this line it has been suggested that if distributors and exhibitors would get together as to the market's requirements, perhaps there would be fewer failures and better pictures. Be that as it may, there has been marked improvement in the features offered of late and the present week's output numbers several high-class productions.

"BLACK BEAUTY" (Vitagraph) will score as one of the year's pacemakers and will be as good for years to come as at the moment. A completely artistic translation of one of the most popular books ever written, with the screen portrayal enhanced in charm. One of the best pictures of screen history. Should go tremendously big everywhere. (Review appears on page 43 of this issue.)

"STRAIGHT IS THE ROAD" (Paramount) is a lightly treated crook reformation story with Matt Moore as the featured player. Gladys Leslie appears in his support. The picture has moderate entertainment value.

It was directed by Robert G. Vignola.

"IF ONLY JIM" (Universal) is a western drama with Harry Carey cast as the lazy, indolent miner, who would work if only other things didn't interfere. He presents a fine character study, but the story lacks incident and is incoherent in development. Jacques Jac-card directed and it has splendid photography.

"WHEN DAWN CAME" (Producers Security) is the story of a physician's fall from grace and his ultimate regeneration through the love of a blind girl. The story has its appealing moments and is well presented by a cast headed by Colleen Moore and L. C. Shuman.

"THE AVENGING ANGEL." (Pathe) presents Ruth Roland in a stirring and interesting serial, the scenes of which are laid amid the romantic splendor of Old California. It is bound to please followers of the continued picture play.

"THE CONCERT" (Goldwyn) taken from a popular stage play in which Leo Ditrichstein starred, is a pleasing picture. The well-written subtitles and general high tone of the production are a credit to the Goldwyn organization.

"WHILE THE DEVIL LAUGHS" (Fox) stars Louise Lovely in a story of the underworld, in no way lurid nor offensive, but weak of plot. Moderate entertaining value, the best scene a graphic reproduction of a tenement fire with the star's rescue of her screen sweetheart.

"THE MISTRESS OF SHENSTONE" (Robertson-Cole) is Pauline Frederick's latest offering and one that is exceedingly good. Should be received with favor everywhere. Star plays with great skill and wears many stunning gowns. An English love story adapted from the book by its name. The problem of a woman who learns that the man she expects to marry was responsible for her husband's death.

"THE PRICE OF POSSESSION" (Paramount) presents Ethel Clayton in a highly pleasing role. Theme built upon a woman's determination to hold an English manor with her title disputed by a man. A love story smoothly and pleasantly told and an artistic picture.

"CHICKENS" (Paramount) is a Thomas H. Ince comedy-drama featuring Douglas MacLean in likeable role. The story of a city youth's attempt to run a chicken farm to reimburse himself after losing a fortune. A trend of romance and "down-on-the-farm" comedy touches that are appealing. Should be generally liked.

"THE PLAYTHING OF BROADWAY" (Real-put) offers a very pretty star in a spiritless and stilted feature. A story of the settlements and a romance between a doctor and a dancer who turns volunteer nurse. Moderately entertaining. Good photography and direction.

"THE TIDAL WAVE" (Stoll) is the picturization of a popular story by Ethel M. Dell, widely read English writer. A love story with slight melodramatic tinge that includes the rescue of a girl infatuated with a worthless artist, by a sailor lover. Beautiful coast and sea scenes.

"SUNSET JONES" (American) is a five-part "Flying A" special with unusual Western development. A high grade feature skillfully played by a cast of favorite players, including Irene Rich, Kathleen O'Connor, Charles Clay and James Gordon. Good plot and picturesque scenic effects. The story of a gang leader's bringing to retribution by his wife's former sweetheart following a train robbery and his life as a "bad" man.
PAULINE FREDERICK IN THE MISTRESS OF SHENSTONE
(ROBERTSON-COLE)
Screen's foremost artiste in a superiorly played role widely different from her past performances. A society drama with the star wearing stunning gowns and hats. Story charmingly told pictorially with an excellent cast and superb artistry. Direction was in the hands of Henry King.
A play that is far better in comparison with the screen production than the book from which it was taken. Florence Barclay's story has been turned to excellent advantage to meet Miss Frederick's requirements for the picture.
The plot is one that will be generally interesting, for it concerns a compelling problem of the heart. The star appears as Lady Myra Ingleby, the widow of an English officer who was killed in war by the terror of a comrade. Preferring not to be told the name of the latter, fearing that she might meet him and recall from his touch, under an assumed name, she retires to a Cornish coast inn and marries Airth and loves him. Even when she learns, following their return to town, that he is Lord Airth and the man responsible for the death of her husband, she rises above her resentment in her love for him. It is not so easy for him and he refuses to marry her. There comes a false report of her husband's safety that is temporarily disconcerting, but in the end love triumphs over doubt in the mind and heart of Airth and renews them.
Miss Frederick's skill is that of the qualifying mistress of her art. It is tremendously good. She gives just the proper balances of emotion, poise, grace and beauty and makes of the role a vividly real and living personality. In fact, the same vivid virility which she brings to her part tinctures the entire feature. It is played with appealing naturalness and graceful artistry by a cast which has admirably modulated its skill to accord with the dignity of the whole. Roy Stewart is thoroughly the artist in the role of Airth.
One of the outstanding remembrances of the play is the trio of maiden ladies who seem to have stepped from pages of Dickens to the screen. Scenes at the inn and along the coast that include an exhausting and perilous rescue from the tide of Lady Ingleby by Airth, are wonderfully impressive in their beauty and forcefulness. The picture can be praised with lavishness of enthusiasm in advertising and the exhibitor is wise who particularly calls it to the attention of the discriminating patronage.

BUSTER KEATON IN THE HIGH SIGN
(METRO)
Buster Keaton again rings the bell with "The High Sign," in which he displays his ability by playing the combined roles of murderer and lifeguard. Credit must be given to Keaton and his director, Edie Cline, for their successful attempt in introducing novelty in their comedies. In "The High Sign" Buster is supported by his old teammate, Al St. John, and Bantine Burkett. The picture which is in two reels is far ahead of the usual slapstick.

SPECIAL CAST IN THE TIDAL WAVE
(STOLL)
A picturization of a story by Ethel M. Dell, widely read English writer, produced with English settings and cast. A story of the sea coast, with a graphic rescue from tidal dangers, a good-looking heroine and hero and many picturesque backgrounds. Moderately entertaining.
Aside from the entertainment value of this feature, which is strong enough to interest and compel close attention from start to finish, it has an asset in its English coast settings that is worthy of emphasis in advertising.
Excellent scenes of the sea during the lashing of a tidal wave along the coast, endangering the lives of a young lady and an artist who has coaxed her to pose in a perilous place, supply the majority of picturesque backgrounds. The struggle in the water and along the cliffs when the girl's sweetheart rescues the cowardly artist, provide the most compelling action. They are well portrayed, the work of the sweetheart Matt, played by Sidney Brewster, being particularly good. The feminine lead, Carmen, a spirited young woman of Spanish-English ancestry, is given appealing personation by Poppy Wyndham. Annie Esmond and Adam Nelson and Pardee Woodman are others of the excellent supporting cast.
The play has a suggestion of the melodrama peculiar to the English novel and Drury Lane drama, but this is not so forceful that it in any way detracts from the merits of the production as a smoothly played, romantic story of peasant people.
The girl Carmen in the story becomes infatuated by the artist, Gerald Knight. Her lover, Matt, knowing him to be a rascal, saves her from danger in the tidal wave and saves the artist because of her intercession for him. Following the latter's failure to reappear, Carmen is suspicious of Matt's report that he followed her wish. In the end he convinces her of his honesty and she finds complete satisfaction in their mutual love.

RUTH ROLAND IN THE AVENGING ARROW
(PATHE)
Ruth Roland is presented in a thrilling new serial laid amid the romantic splendor of Old California. In addition to an interesting story and beautiful scenery, the star's work is bound to please the thousands of Ruth Roland fans.

The new serial in which Pathe presents its star, Ruth Roland, is one calculated to appeal to that portion of Americans specially interested in dashing action, the hair-rising climax, and the teasing "Shown at this theatre next week" sign.

The first three episodes give promise of an enthralling finish. The suspense is capably handled by Directors William Bowman and W. S. Van Dyke, and the cameraman, whose name is not given, deserves honorable mention for his beautiful shots, practically all of which are exteriors.

"The Avenging Arrow" is a serial that measures up to the old-time box office attraction that goes with the name, Ruth Roland.

JUSTINE JOHNSTONE IN THE PLAYTHING OF BROADWAY
-REALART
A very pretty star in a mediocre picture with stilted plot and titles, but not altogether unattractive. A story of the settlements with a romance between an actress and a doctor. Directed by Jack Dillon. It is fortunate that Justine Johnstone is possessed of the attractiveness of face and figure that are hers if she is to be supplied with no better vehicles than this. The play is the first Realart issue in months that has fallen below the superior standard to which it has so successfully clung. The titles and plot are mediocre and the entertainment value is reduced considerably by reason of these shortcomings.

The story is that of a popular Broadway dancer, the pet of the "Thirty Club," a New York organization of bachelors. Certain of its members make the bet that she, for all her wide popularity, cannot conquer the heart of a doctor which is apparently invulnerable to feminine charms. She follows him into his field of work in the slums. As a volunteer nurse she proves a valuable aid to him and eventually falls genuinely in love with him. To gain funds for the emergency house that is his ambition for the neighborhood, she goes back to dance for the "Thirty Club." The doctor, seeing her there, is shocked and disillusioned, but misunderstandings are ultimately cleared and both return to the work in the neighborhood where they are loved, pledging their lives to one another and to its aid.

ETHEL CLAYTON IN THE PRICE OF POSSESSION
(PARAMOUNT)

There is a distinctly and dainty feminine charm about Ethel Clayton, and the choice of the role of Helen Barston, given her in "The Price of Possession," is happy opportunity for her to make the most of this appeal. Ethel Clayton is one of the women stars well ahead in the popularity van and the exhibitors who book her pictures are meeting the tastes of fans in legion.

There is no shade of doubt as to the universal success to be scored by this feature. It is high class romantic drama presented in dignified and elegant settings in and about a great English manor house.

The star plays the role of a charming young widow whose claim to ownership of the manor is challenged by a cousin and a man by his own name. She clings with tenacity to her holdings and relinquishes her claim only after a series of stirring developments that make her yield, really in love for the cousin. She is about to give up the estate when the real heir avows his love and the heart is won.

Miss Clayton as the young widow is altogether gracious, graceful and artistic in her performance. Followers of an uncommonly good choice for the cousin and plays with great attractiveness. He has a dual role for a brief time in the picture and who, for that matter, is the Australian bush. Maude Gordon Turner, Reginald Denny, Isabel West and others are also in the cast.

SPECIAL CAST IN STRAIGHT IS THE ROAD
(PARAMOUNT)

"Straight Is the Road," based on a magazine story by Ethel Watts Mumford, is the familiar plot of a pair of unlikely crooks who make their way to the country to rob a house that has every outward indication of being a gold mine, and who, for that matter, are the most unpretentious, remained at the place to eventually fall under the influence of the motherly aunt and the sweet country maid, thus achieving reformation. The story has a flavor, though not the charm, of the stage success, "Turn to the Right," and embodies all the tried elements of sentimental appeal.

Due to its frequent tellings, the outcome is never in doubt, and the continuity within and director evident together, realizing the handicap of the story, have treated it more as a romantic comedy. There are innumerable comic touches, some simple and irrelevant and some of good values, as, for instance, the scene wherein the heroine, while in the act of picking some valueless trinkets from the jewel case sees the commandment, "Thou Shalt Not Steal" on the wall. He replaces the trinkets, but turning sees the motto, "God helps those who help themselves." Forthwith he follows the suggestion of the latter proverb.

Many of the titles written in a punning fashion successfully strive for laughs. These titles, together with the comedy touches, keep up a moderate interest in the picture.

The story will not bear critical analysis. The action is at times arbitrary and implausible. However, the comedy treatment is apt to disarm some of the criticism that would otherwise be directed at the picture. It will hold it accepted for what it is, romantic entertainment. As such the picture has moderate entertainment value.

Matt Moore is the hero and Gladys Leslie, the country maid. Mabel Bart, George Parsons, Henry Sedley and Van Dyke Brooke are the remaining principals.
WHILE THE DEVIL LAUGHS
(FOX)

A story of the underworld, given the touch of human appeal and interesting action. The struggle of a girl thief to go straight against great odds that almost bring about her yielding to temptation. Weak story, but presented in entertaining way. George William Hill directed.

Aside from a spectacular tenement fire in which Louise Lovely risks her life to rescue her sweetheart—a really stirring and remarkable bit of stage business—this feature has little to recommend it. It has one glaring shortcoming in the introduction. A wealthy home is shown, probably for the purpose of comparison, which is thereafter in no way connected with the plot's development, except that it belongs to a man who buys a patented dishwasher from the young lover. This latter incident appears inconsistent when one recalls the previous indifference of the buyer towards the machine. His sudden decision to buy it at any price is in no way accounted for.

Louise Lovely is playing the part of Mary, does creditable work. William Scott plays the part of a Billy, her sweetheart, and there is a dishwashing machine, the sale of which they hope will take them to "where the raisins grow." Mary has an invalid mother, who dies; a father who leaves, and a younger brother. From then with his love for the brew, which finally brings a disaster by fire, and a little boy who is fatherless. It is when the lad's life is despised that Mary makes her vow to "go straight." Adversity pursues them with the loss of the mother, and then with the brother. Then the boy persists to win her back into her old life. The faith of the young lover in his patent is at last rewarded, when things look the darkest, and Mary is saved from disgrace.

WHEN DAWN CAME (PRODUCERS SECURITY)

This is a Hugh Dierker production, made from an original story written by Mrs. Dierker, and directed by Colin Campbell. It has its appealing moments and carries a powerful lesson back of it.

When Dawn Came tells the story of a physician's rapid rise to fame; his degeneration into a tramp, through the faultlessness of a woman, and his ultimate regeneration through the love of a little blind girl. The story shifts rapidly from the slums of New York to Fifth avenue, thence to an old mission in lower California. Very effective bits of photography in the last half of the picture, taken around the retreat at San Juan Capistrano add to the picture's value. There is some fine character drawing in the role of Mary Harrison, as played by Colleen Moore, and Father Michael Farrell, as portrayed by James O. Barrows. L. C. Shumway is cast as Dr. Brandon.

Louise Lovely and support in a scene from "While the Devil Laughs," a new Fox Picture.
Douglas MacLean in a scene from "Sunset Jones" (American)

Douglas MacLean in a comedy-drama with a rural locale and the ignorance of a city chap who exposes to operate a chicken farm. Youth and romance supply its entertaining trend. MacLean "fans" will derive much pleasure from it. A Thomas H. Ince production directed by Jack Nelson.

MacLean, as spick and span-sartorially as if he stepped along Fifth avenue of an Easter Sunday, wanders the highways and byways of country places in this latest of his features. He seeks the rural haunts possessed of a fortune and a neat little motor car, but he loses both. However, he wins a girl: a pretty one and one with enough good sense to take unto herself the mortgage that the lad's rival for her affections holds upon his chicken farm. It is this rival, a tight-fisted country swain, who gets the motor car and who, the observer fears, for a while, will get the girl. It is a perennial delight to picture patrons to have the conditions of "ignorance" exchanged from country to city people, and the vast amount of innocence and ignorance with which MacLean, as Dennis Stanwood, of the metropolis, tackles the chicken business, will inspire many a hearty laugh. The picture is of the wholesome, clean-cut sort of "The Rookies Return," and it is safe to prophesy that it will score even wider favor than did that feature.

The administration of rat poison in an astonishing quantity to the chickens by the colored "valet" of Stanwood's, has amazing results in the laying line. Things typically small-town according to cellulosic interpretation have an artistic and mirth-provoking appearance in this picture. The village church, the sewing society, a hasket social and the like are included in these. Types are well presented by a cast doing good work. It includes Gladys George in the role of the sweetheart. She makes a satisfactory substitute for Doris May although of different type. The photography is excellent and backgrounds of country scenes are very attractive.

SPECIAL CAST IN

THE CONCERT

(GOLDWYN)

Well written titles and general high tone of production make pleasing this picturization of Herman Barr's stage play. Victor Schertzinger directed.

Making an attractive picture from Herman Barr's stage play, "The Concert," must have presented its difficulties. The play was successful largely because of fine stars in the principal roles and material of this sort is difficult to transfer effectively to the screen. But thanks to cleverly written titles, for which Rupert Hughes is said to be responsible, and a workmanlike production of fine tone done under the direction of Victor L. Schertzinger, the picture has been most satisfactory made. "The Concert" is a pleasing picture.

The theme is that we savor things but that we are seldom satisfied with these things after we obtain them. Delphine Hart craves the love of Augustus, an erratic fiddling musician, who is the love object of scores of other women. She induces him to go to a mountain retreat with her. They become wed. Augustus and the trusting husband of Delphine follow them and give the adventurers a taste of their own medicine, with the result that Mrs. Hart is forced to return to her husband and Augustus to his wife.

Much slender in plot, the story holds the interest throughout for reasons noted. Lewis Stone, Myrtle Stedman, Raymond Hatton and Mabel Julienne Scott have the principal roles, and each gives a most creditable performance.

Nomads of the North, with a special cast.—A wonder. Good business.—The kind.—W. D. Uglow, Crystal theatre, Burlington, Wis.—General patronage.

The River’s End, a Marshall Neilan production.—A fine picture. Big business two days. One of the shows that you can go the limit on. You can’t go wrong. Book it and boost it.—T. Henry Hartley, Border theatre, Rock Island, Ill.—Small town patronage.

The Turning Point, with Katherine MacDonald.—Very good MacDonald. Has not caught on to The Beautiful Market or The Thunderbolt standard. That is it. Did not please my patrons as well.—B. L. Hubbard, Hub’s theatre, Bishop, Tex.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Thunderbolt, with Katherine MacDonald.—A good production that will please anywhere. Drew well and pleased all. Book it for a good program.—W. F. Baker, Boone Way theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ky.—General patronage.

Peaceful Valley, with Charles Ray.—Fine. People like pictures of this kind and it pleased every one. Charles Ray is a favorite here.—F. D. Hall, Wonderland theatre, Madelia, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

Even as Eve, with Grace Darlington.—A good picture. Pleased 100%—M. Danits, Dixie theatre, Winona, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

A Perfect Woman, with Constance Talmadge.—One of the cleverest comedies Constance Talmadge has made. 70-25c.—Bert Norton, Kozy theatre, Danforth, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Turning Point, with Katherine MacDonald.—Fine picture. Settings superb. A trite slow in action but pleased well.—Charles Haltz, Princess theatre, Danforth, Ill.—Small town patronage.

Wrong, with Jack Pickford.—Good picture. Will please majority wherever shown. Best Pickford we have shown here.—Smith Brothers, Patrician theatre, De Kalb, Tex.—Small town patronage.

Twin Beds, with Mr. and Mrs. Carter DeHaven.—The best box office attraction for some time.—Mrs. C. L. German, Royal theatre, Bonner Springs, Kans.—Neighborhood patronage.

Twin Beds, with Mr. and Mrs. Carter DeHaven.—A better than ordinary comedy that drew very good crowd. Clean picture. 10-30c.—Bert Norton, Kozy theatre, Eureka, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Devil’s Garden, with Lionel Barrymore.—Poor comments. Personally think Barrymore a wonder. Average business.—W. L. Uglow, Crystal theatre, Burlington, Wis.—General patronage.

Two Weeks, with Constance Talmadge.—Good picture. More than pleased. Everyone spoke highly of it.—Charles Haltz, Princess theatre, Danforth, Me.—Small town patronage.

Don’t Ever Marry, a Marshall Neilan production.—This is without doubt the best comedy I ever played. If your business is slack book this one and get some pep in your audience. Bill it big.—C. E. Hippler, McCloud theatre, McCloud, Calif.

Go and Get It, a Marshall Neilan production.—A great production from every angle. Everybody loud in their praise. This picture was the talk of the town for two days. Business big.—
One of the humorous incidents from Paramount's "Brewster's Millions," adapted from George Barr McCutcheon's novel and Winchell Smith's play, in which Roscoe Arbuckle is starred.

House, Denison, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Jack-Knife Man, a King Vidor production.—Although this is a good production, it only pleased about 90% of our patrons. Business fair.—Pfeiffer Bros., Opera House, Kenton, O.—General patronage.

Back to God's Country, with Nell Shipman.—Great picture. Please 100%. Played this two days at 10 and 3:30. If you have not played this be sure and play it. It will make you money.—P. G. Hefel, Sterling theatre, Patmont, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

Dinty, a Marshall Neilan production.—This is a carking good picture. One that everyone will like and tell you so. Everybody will enjoy it.—F. Zimmerman, Rex theatre, Aurora, Minn.—Small town patronage.

The Romance of Tarzan, with Elmo Lincoln.—Big business. Picture went over fine. Lincoln a good card for us. Splendid cast, elaborate production.—A. C. Evans, Opera House, Greensboro, Ala.—Neighborhood patronage.

Virtuous Wives, with Anita Stewart.—The best picture we have had of this star in a long time, but she gets the crowd and that is the kind we want.—William G. Atkinson, Star theatre, Rockingham, N. C.

The Yellow Typhoon, with Anita Stewart.—Plenty of action in this production. About as good as any Stewart to date. Comments from the patrons all good. Business good.—Pfeiffer Bros., Opera House, Kenton, O.

The Family Honor, a King Vidor production.—A splendid, clean picture. Lots of good comments. Our first regular program number from First National and surely pleased the house.—C. H. Thomas, Community theatre, Galva, Ia.—Small town patronage.

The Mind the Paint Girl, with Anita Stewart.—An unusual picture. Characters portrayed are very different from the usual make up of present day pictures.

One of the humorous incidents from Paramount's "Brewster's Millions," adapted from George Barr McCutcheon's novel and Winchell Smith's play, in which Roscoe Arbuckle is starred.

A clean play with real men and women as they are, with not the slightest thing suggestive.—Smith Read, Patriot theatre, Dekalb, Tex.—Small town patronage.

Go and Get It, a Marshall Neilan production.—Very good picture well liked. Lost money, due to weather mostly.—Majestic theatre, Reedsburg, Wis.—Neighborhood patronage.

Forty Minutes from Broadway, with Charles Ray.—A dandy comedy drama that was enjoyed by all. Ray does splendid work in this one. Sure to please.—F. Zimmerman, Rex theatre, Aurora, Minn.—Small town patronage.

Fox

The Big Punch, with Buck Jones.—Buck Jones is always good. This picture is a good one. Play it.—James A. York, Auditorium theatre, Monroeville, Ala.—Neighborhood patronage.

The White Wolf, with Pearl White. Just a fair picture. Run better program pictures. Please 50%. This was the first time I had played this star for two years.—T. Henry Hartley, Border theatre, Rock Island, Que., Can.—Small town patronage.

The Plunger, with George Walsh.—A knockout. Pleased large crowd from start to finish. Believe Walsh is getting better all the time though after each succeeding picture we think it is his best. Lots of punch to this one. Book it.—Smith Read, Patriot theatre, Dekalb, Tex.—Small town patronage.

Tiger's Cub, with Pearl White.—We heard quite a number of favorable comments from our patrons on this picture but followers of Pearl White want to see her in something with the old time serial fire—something with lots of action. This is a good picture however.—Harry M. Palmer, Liberty theatre, Washington, Indiana.—General Patronage.

Tiger's Cub, with Pearl White.—Did not go very well here. Star not a favor-EXHIBITORS HERALD, Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen:

I have been "mooching" off the "What The Picture Did For Me" department for some time, and feel that I should reciprocate with a little information myself. It is about the only motion picture publication which permits the exhibitor to speak right out in meeting and tell the truth as he sees it.

BIG HAPPINESS (Robertson-Cole), with Dustin Farnum.—Just fair. If your patrons like a dual role and a heavy dramatic story, you may get better results from it than I did. I was overwhelmed with congratulations because I showed this picture. Never have made a cent with a Robertson-Cole picture yet.

GO AND GET IT (First National), a Marshall Nellan production.—A real audience picture away from the beaten track and has plenty of pepper, thrills and comedy. Stood up well two nights and a matinee.

PART II (Fox and Jeford), O M AND BATH (Metro), with a special cast.—I decided some time ago that our brother in crime, Jenkins, of Neligh, Neb., was a pretty good "picker" of first aid to the box office, so I decided to string along with him on this picture and let him do the exploitation. I put on an advance teaser campaign that packed the house like a can of pre-war sardines. The seats were all filled thirty minutes before the show started, the audience being made up of many a brother and sister who had never gone to the theatre by stepping into my theatre before, and on each face was an eager expression of "Here I am—now go on and shock me." As the little flashed out, it had been thought of Mr. Jenkins' tribute and set myself to receive many words of praise after the show, but—O Tempus, O Mores! Bro. Jenkins did you really see this picture or were you out of town when you ran it? Can it be possible that—? But no Ibraks has been dry as a prohibition enforcement officer for seven years. This picture starts like a gentle zephyr in June, with a "whiff" of fresh air, and eventually blossoms out into a wet firecracker. My patrons say that they always thought I was a liar but here they know better.—E. E. Supplee, Lyric theatre, Goodland, Kansas.

Hodkinson

Riders of the Dawn, with a special cast.—Another good Western. Lots of action, plenty of scenery. Westerners coming back in favor or Riders of the Dawn and The U. P. Trail are exceptional. They both drew well and satisfied the patrons.—John Hafner, Princess theatre, Donora, Pa.—Neighborhood patronage.

Riders of the Dawn, with Roy Stewart.—A good program, but I had hard luck getting the money for me.—J. L. Naiman, Lyric theatre, Alexandria, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

Love, with Louise Glau.—Fairly entertaining; Glau is losing her popularity with each picture.—T. M. Davidge, Queen theatre, Durant, Okla.—General patronage.

No. 99, with J. Warren Kerrigan.—You can make no mistake in booking Kerrigan's pictures as they sure are good ones, and he will sure get you the money.—A. E. Berlin, Grand theatre, Rock Falls, III.

Riders of the Dawn, with Roy Stewart.—Advertise big. Raise your admission and rest assured that your patrons will be pleased.—Nelson H. Floyd, Princess theatre, Okolona, Miss.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Westerners, with Roy Stewart.—Good picture to fair business. Book it.—E. E. Galley, Crystal theatre, Wayne, Neb.—General patronage.

The Best Man, with J. Warren Kerrigan.—This is one of the best Kerrigan pictures I have ever played. You can book this one and raise your prices.—A. E. Berlin, Grand theatre, Rock Falls, III.

The Lord Loves the Irish, with J. Warren Kerrigan.—Not a picture to rave over, but will get by.—C. S. Ford, Princess theatre, Reinbeck, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

Metro

Someone in the House, with a special cast.—A very satisfactory entertainment for the average person.—G. W. Yeaton, Ioka theatre, Exeter, N. H.—Neighborhood patronage.

A Mistfit Wife, with Alice Lake.—Pleased. Makes a coking good regular program picture.—Giacoma Bros., Crystal theatre, Tombstone, Ariz.—General patronage.

A Chorus Girl's Romance, with Viola Dana.—Good program picture.—Jaspar theatre, Reddings, Wis.—Neighborhood patronage.

Dangerous to Men, with Viola Dana.—A great little picture and star made a hit in this. Boost it as it will please all.—G. W. Johnson, Mystic theatre, Marmarth, N. D.—General patronage.

The Price of Redemption, with Bert Lytell.—Wonderful picture. Could not be better. Acting was great. He sure is a real actor. My people ask for more like it. Book this one. You would not make a mistake by booking it because it is a wonderful picture. Boost it, boys. Make good on it.—P. Cazzara, Happy Hour theatre, Cresson, Pa.—Neighborhood patronage.

The GREAT REDEEMER, with a special cast.—A very good picture for a Sunday night. Book it, and give the preacher a free pass. He will be a booster from then on.—B. E. Hippler, McCloud theatre, McCloud, Cal.

Blackmail, with Viola Dana.—Very good picture.—L. M. Kuhns, Gibson, N. M.—Mining camp patronage.

The Best 'o Luck, with a special cast.—Fairly good player.—O. R. Nation, Strand theatre, Davis, Calif.—Small town patronage.

The Price of Redemption, with Bert Lytell.—Title does not fit the picture. Story is not weak and will hold your audience. Play it as a special.—T. M. Davidge, Queen theatre, Durant, Okla.—General patronage.

Lombardi Ltd., with Bert Lytell.—Can't say much for the picture for it was pretty soft, but one thing it did was to show that Bert Lytell is a real actor and can do any sort of a part given him. It was not his fault the picture was a fizzle.—R. Ross Riley, Wigwam theatre, Oberlin, Kans.—Small town patronage.

The Brat, with Nazimova.—A decided disappointment after seeing Revelation. Raised admission. Good attendance but no boosters for second night.—F. E. Sabin, Majestic theatre, Eureka, Mont.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Willow Tree, with Viola Dana.—Not so good as this star usually offers. The effect was good, but I don't think that these oriental pictures take in my theatre.—T. Henry Hartley, Border theatre, Rock Island, Que., Can.—Small town patronage.

The Cheater, with May Allison.—Did not please and star no pull for me. Lost money on it.—G. W. Johnson, Mystic theatre, Marmarth, N. D.—General patronage.

A Chorus Girl's Romance, with Viola Dana.—Will entertain any normal American. If anybody gets out of your theatre dissatisfied he is simply a fit subject for the bug house. If you are in need of some extra cash, now is the time to get it. You will not have a single complaint. Viola Dana is just spunky enough to be delightful.—Mrs. Wm. Kimbro, Greenland theatre, Greensboro, Ga.—Small town patronage.

Daring Hearts, with Francis Buschman and Beverly Bayne.—While not a new picture, was one that pleased a small house. While we are not booking war pictures, this one had just enough incidents of the world war to form an excellent acting piece.—Mrs. Robison & Lewis, Gaiety theatre, Starke, Fla.—Small town patronage.

The Right of Way, with Bert Lytell.—A little too long, but interesting and picturesque.—W. L. Openin, Ioka theatre, Manito, Ill.—Small town patronage.

The Willow Tree, with Viola Dana.—Just ordinary program picture. Not a special. My people did not rave over it.—Hackett & Krauss, Hackett's theatre, Port Gibson, Miss.—Neighborhood patronage.

Please Get Married, with Viola Dana.—Boys, you got to hand it to Viola. She gets them all with her smile and real acting. Hackett has a jewel in this actress, and they seem to be holding on to her.—R. Ross Riley, Wigwam theatre, Oberlin, Kans.—Small town patronage.

Hearts Are Trumps, with a special cast.—Better than the average feature picture.—G. W. Yeaton, Ioka theatre, Exeter, N. H.—Neighborhood patronage.

Burning Daylight, with Mitchell Lewis.—This pleased the majority, but did not compare with the book as so much was left out. Took well.—G. W. Johnson, Mystic theatre, Marmarth, N. D.—General patronage.

Fair and Warmer, with May Allison.—About the best comedy we have had. Sure pleased a big crowd.—R. Ross Riley, Wigwam theatre, Oberlin, Kans.—Small town patronage.

The Right of Way, with Bert Lytell.—Well directed drama, and went over big. Book this picture and clean up.—Hackett & Krauss, Hackett's theatre, Port Gibson, Miss.—Neighborhood patronage.

Nothing but the Truth, with Taylor Holmes.—Just an average picture.—Jaspar, Majestic theatre, Mauston, Wis.

A Chorus Girl's Romance, with Viola Dana.—Some picture. Viola always gets them in for us. This had a real sung to it but a lot of good picture in it for good measure. The window cards on this gives one the wrong impression of.—L. G. Guffey, Bonner Springs, Kans.—Neighborhood patronage.

Shore Acres, with a special cast.—Put this on with One Week. Splendid program. Everybody likes it.—Mrs. Wm. Kimbro, Greenland theatre, Greensboro, Ga.—Small town patronage.

Alias Jimmy Valentine, with Bert Lytell.—Disappointed.—No good for average patronage, failed to register. Poorly acted drama and dragged. Hands off.—Hackett & Krauss, Hackett's theatre, Port Gibson, Miss.—Neighborhood patronage.
Held in Trust, with May Allison.—I want to say May Allison is surely a first rate star and this story was fine from beginning to end.—New Cozy theatre, Winchester, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

Dangerous to Men, with Viola Dana. Miss Dana is about the cleverest little actress in the business and this was a fine picture.—R. Ross Riley, Wigwam theatre, Oberlin, Kans.—Small town patronage.

Paramount

The Prince Chap, with Thomas Meighan.—Well and played about 75 per cent.—L. M. Kuhns, Gibson theatre, Gibson, N. M.—Mining camp patronage.

Midsummer Madness, with a special cast.—No wonder poor cobblers are rampant in every state when such pictures as this are shown. The producers and scenario writers are to blame. Here is a picture that will help Dr. Wisher Crafts to gain his fight against objectionable films.—George H. Cook, Hub theatre, Mill Valley, Cal.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Round-Up, with Francis Arbour. While a good picture it did not please the Arbour fans. In fact, it is hard to see where “Fatty” is the star in this.—Raymond Dana is Gert, Mayflowerest litre, Florence, Kans.—General patronage.

The Toll Gate, with William S. Hart.—Played Hart in The Money Currall at 30 and 15 and lost money, so on The Toll Gate I secured special music, raised admissions to semi-special prices 40 and 15 and got safely by with larger attendance. Picture pleased.—Philip Rand, Rex theatre, Salmon, Idaho.—Small town patronage.

Why Change Your Wife? a Cecil B. DeMille production.—With this very excellent picture we demonstrate to ourselves that we simply cannot make any money on such productions. The picture is the talk of the town. Those who saw it said it was the best ever with the exception of The Miracle Man. If you figure that it is worth while to play a feature like this once in a while to bolster up the reputation of your theatre, then by all means get your name on a contract.—Harry M. Palmer, Liberty theatre, Washington, Ind.—General patronage.

The Toll Gate, with William S. Hart.—The biggest Hart picture I ever played. Advanced admissions to poor business.—W. L. Uglow, Crystal theatre, Burlington, Wis.—General patronage.

The Frisky Mrs. Johnson, with Billie Burke.—Picture very disappointing. A regular fluffer, Star drew good business for one day.—A. C. Evans, Opera House, Greensboro, Ala.—Neighborhood patronage.

Huckleberry Finn, with a special cast.—Good picture and follows the story well. Book this subject.—Hackett & Krauss, Hackett’s theatre, Port Gibson, Miss.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Misleading Widow, with Billie Burke.—This is a good comedy drama that will please 100 per cent.—W. A. Forsyth, Temple theatre, Standish, Mich.—Small town patronage.

The Sea Wolf, with a special cast.—First day good, second day fair. Third day weak. Fourth day terrible. Fighting all the way through. Too gruesome. Would have been better.—R. C. Stueve, Orpheum theatre, Canton, O.—Transient patronage.

Crooked Straight, with Charles Ray.—A crackin’ good picture. Please the ma-

Johanna Enlists, with Mary Pickford.—Very good patronage on this picture. Everybody pleased.—H. S. Henderson, Family theatre, Eagle Rock, Va.—Small town patronage.

The Third Kiss, with Vivian Martin.—Best Vivian Martin picture I have ever played. Good program picture. Many said they liked it.—W. F. Baker, Boone Way theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ky.—General patronage.

Something to Think About, a Cecil B. DeMille production.—Good picture although a little too sad. Reel after reel of nothing but tragedy.—L. M. Kuhns, Gibson theatre, Gibson, N. M.—Mining camp patronage.

23½ HOURS LEAVE, with Douglas MacLean and Doris May—Dandy comedy. One of the audience became so enthusiastic that he insisted on going to the screen and shaking hands with MacLean.—J. B. Endert, Endert theatre, Crescent City, Cal.

Greasied Lightning, with Charles Ray.—A riot for me. Every time I show Charlie I dust off the S. R. O. sign and hang it in the lobby before the first show starts. More power to him.—E. N. Biddle, Strand theatre, Paoli, Ind.—Small town patronage.

The Lottery Man, with Wallace Reid.—Made a big hit. Packed the house and everybody showed that they enjoyed the picture immensely.—J. Herbert Talbert, Legion theatre, Norwich, Kans.—Small town patronage.

His Wife’s Friend, with Dorothy Dalton.—Poor picture. Dalton is “ougsagged” with us. We have run all of her pictures and with but few exceptions the pictures were not liked.—J. B. Endert, Endert theatre, Crescent City, Cal.—General patronage.

Little Miss Rebellion, with Dorothy Gish.—Pleasing but platy. Very light, but full of clever situations. A very satisfactory program picture.—Giacoma Bros., Crystal theatre, Tombstone, Ariz.—General patronage.

The Ghost in the Garret, with Dorothy Gish.—Here is a good picture. If you want to please your patrons book this. Good clean comedy. My patrons certainly enjoyed this picture. The best this little star has made in a long time.—George H. Cooke, Hub theatre, Mill Valley, Cal.—Neighborhood patronage.

Alias Mike Moran, with Wallace Reid.—A wonderful picture that gets the business and pleases 100 per cent. Walley always good here. One of Walley’s best.—W. F. Baker, Boone Way theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ky.—General patronage.

Jack Straw, with Robert Warwick.—Warwick is well liked here. It is a good picture. You can’t go wrong on it.—M. Danits, Dixie theatre, Winona, Miss.—Neighborhood patronage.

All-of-a-Sudden Peggy, with Marguerite Clark.—Ordinary program picture. Her’s are nearly all along the same line.—C. H. Thomas, Community theatre, Galva, la.—Small town patronage.

Everywoman, with a special cast.—Had more favorable comments on this picture than any we have ever run. It was the talk of the town. Advertised extensively and 25 per cent of the attendance came from 3 to 15 miles to see the show and no kick from any of them.—J. Herbert Talbert, Legion theatre, Norwich, Kans.—Small town patronage.

The Valley of the Giants, with Wallace Reid.—Pretty good, but not up to the standard of Double Speed.—Alvin S. Frank, Jewel theatre, Lafayette, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Wanted, a Husband, with Billie Burke.

Blaming Films for Crime Ridiculous

The "Omaha Bee," one of the leading newspapers of the central west, brands the belief that censoring motion pictures is needed and the present crime wave as "ridiculous." Here are a few of the things that it brands as "Great American Myths":

1. There is a painless way to raise $4,000,000,000 in taxes.

2. That if the pictures are censored the crime wave will subside.

3. That if hick pockets are abolished liquor drinking will end.

4. That farmers wear whiskers and have their mattress stuffed with $100 bills.

5. That spending money for useless things gives someone a job and hence makes the nation wealthier.

The editorial has been quoted by scores of other newspapers.

—A light comedy drama. Just a fair program picture, and entertaining.—Raymond Schneider, Midget theatre, Metamora, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Roaring Roan with Wallace Reid.—Best Reid I have run to date. Pleased 90 per cent. Some auto races. Plenty of action. Reid always pleases my patrons.—B. L. Hubbell, Vertis theatre, Bishop, Tex.—Neighborhood patronage.

A Girl Named Mary, with Marguerite Clark.—A pleasing cast and picture. Wonderful story. Would be fair for a feature. I have run pictures that got lots more money for me.—W. E. Baker, Boone Way theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ky.—General patronage.

Scarlet Letter with Robert Harron.—Old timers like it, but failed to please the ladies. Too hard boiled.—E. F. Salon, Majestic theatre, Eureka, Mont.—Neighborhood patronage.

Pathe

The Girl in the Web, with Blanche Sweet.—Very pleasing. One of the best of the Blanche Sweet comedies. See results.—E. Hejtmaneck, Opera House, Clarkson, Nebr.—Small town patronage.

The World and His Wife, with Alma Rubens.—Presentation is good. Liked by my people.—Hackett & Krauss, Hackett's theatre, Port Gibson, Miss.—Neighborhood patronage.

The MONEY CHANGERS, with Roy Stewart.—Thank God a few honest film salesmen still sell pictures. The story of one that sold me this one told me to go the limit on advertising, and I did it and cleaned up. A mighty good story that is full of action.—H. W. Poole, Liberty theatre, Klamath Falls, Ore.—Neighborhood patronage.

Tarnished Reputations, with Dolores Casanelli.—This is a dandy picture and pleased everyone. Pathe programs with me have been 99 per cent good.—Bill Leonard, Mystic theatre, Cedarville, Kan.—Small town patronage.

A Broadway Cowboy, with William Desmond.—I overcame bad conditions last night by playing this corking good cowboy feature. It is doing a good business and is increasing by playing Pathe features.—H. W. Poole, Liberty theatre, Klamath Falls, Ore.—Neighborhood patronage.

The A. B. C. of Love, with Mae Murray.—An old one that went over good to house below average.—O. R. Nation, Strand theatre, Davis, Cal.—Small town patronage.

The Little Cafe, with Max Linder.—The worst yet. This is French comedy and did not appeal to me. I was ashamed of it and hid while the people were leaving.—Mrs. Wm. Kimbro, Greenland theatre, Greensboro, Ga.—Small town patronage.

Dollar for Dollar, with Frank Keenan.—This is a good picture. Pleased them all.—L. E. Hasse, Majestic theatre, Mauston, Wis.—Small town patronage.

Smoldering Embers, with Frank Keenan.—Great and will please all.—G. W. Johnson, Mystic theatre, Marmarth, N. D.—General patronage.

Carolyn of the Corners, with Bessie Love.—Can be compared with any popular child picture, and not suffer from it. Impressive story of_holder.—H. W. Poole, Anderson, Cal.—Small town patronage.

Her Unwilling Husband, with Blanche Sweet.—Keeps them watching Good program picture. Everyone seemed to like it.—Watt & Simmons, Bijou theatre, Cerron, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Web of Deceit, with Dolores Casanelli.—Fair program picture. Pleased about 75 people.—W. A. Hass, Majestic theatre, Mauston, Wis.

Brothers Divided, with Frank Keenan.—Keenan in one of his best roles. This picture pleased all.—Joseph R. Sullivan, New Orpheum theatre, Ada, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

Passers-By, with Herbert Rawlinson.—Good feature. It is natural. It will satisfy any audience.—E. Hejtmaneck, Opera House, Clarkson, Nebr.—Small town patronage.

Realtart

The Plaything of Broadway, with Justine Johnston.—This is a very good picture, but some scenes are not for the family circle.—Peter Krauth, Opera House, Denison, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

Food for Scandal, with Wanda Hawley.—Six reels of good entertainment. You can't do a better than Hawley to deliver the goods.—Mrs. Wm. Kimbro, Greenland theatre, Greensboro, Ga.—Small town patronage.

The Snob, with Wanda Hawley.—Clean and wholesome. No slapstick and a spellbinder. No matter what sort of an audience it will more than please. Go strong on this. It's there.—A. B. Anderson, Pastime theatre, Stratford, S. D.—Neighborhood patronage.

The New York Idea, with Alice Brady.—A little better than most Realtart pictures, but Alice is not the girl she used to be. Business fair.—Pfeiffer Bros., Opera House, Kenton, O.—General patronage.

The Soul of Youth, with Lewis Sargent.—Good business. Excellent picture. Clever cuts cut pictures gives a thrill.—A. C. Evans, Opera House, Greensboro, Ala.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Judy of Roger's Harbor, with Mary Miles Minter.—Minter has always pleased my patrons. Only wish she made more pictures.—S. E. Brooks, Bell theatre, Kaukauna, Wis.—Neighborhood patronage.

Miss Hobbs, with Wanda Hawley.—Pleased all. Have not played a poor Realtart yet.—O. R. Nation, Strand theatre, Davis, Cal.—Small town patronage.

Blackbirds, with Justine Johnstone.—This is the first picture of this star to be played here. Drew well and seemed to please the majority.—H. F. McBeth, Gen theater, Ord, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

You Never Can Tell, with Bebe Daniels.—Believe me, Bebe knows how to wear a bow and they are, rather splendid. Gailey, Sheriff, a splendid rather my this beautifully staged production. Bebe Daniels is a screen beauty. You may look your patrons squarely in the face when you put this on because you may rest assured they will thank you for this picture.—Mrs. Wm. Kimbro, Grand theatre, Greensboro, Ga.—Small town patronage.

All Souls’ Eve, with Mary Miles Minter.—A very good and interesting picture. Miss Minter well liked here—Peter Krauth, Opera House, Denison, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

Soldiers of Fortune, with a special cast.—Splendid picture worthy of the name special.—J. B. Endert, Endert theatre, Crescent City, Cal.—General patronage.

Art of Green Gables, with Mary Miles Minter.—This is my first Realart and must say it was wonderful. Sure is “real art.”—L. A. Hasse, Majestic theatre, Mauston, Wis.

The Deep Purple, with a special cast.—Seemed to please all. Poor business. Did not draw.—E. E. Gailey, Crystal theatre, Wayne, Nebr.

Robertson-Cole

The First Born, with Sussew Hayakawa.—I think this is Hayakawa’s best. At times tears come to your eyes and at other moments Hayakawa’s comedy touches make you laugh.—T. M. Davidge, Queen theatre, Durant, Okla.—General patronage.

Bright Skies, with Zasu Pitts.—This was a good comedy-drama. My patrons were sure well pleased.—E. T. Craftts, Pastime theatre, Seelyville, Ind.—Small town patronage.

The Temple of Dusk, with Sussew Hayakawa.—This was certainly a good picture. I think this Jap a fine player.—J. A. Wright, Lone Star theatre, Ovalo, Tex.—Small town patronage.

The Gray Wolf’s Ghost, with H. B. Warner.—Very good. Warner is new here. He made an immediate hit with our audience.—J. B. Endert, Endert theatre, Crescent City, Cal.—General patronage.

So Long, Letty, with a special cast.—Production of stage play very good. An attraction like this makes you forget everything but the picture. A crowd getter.—T. M. Davidge, Queen theatre, Durant, Okla.—General patronage.

The Third Generation, with a special cast.—This was a rather good picture. I didn’t hear any complaints about it.—E. T. Craftts, Pastime theatre, Seelyville, Ind.—Small town patronage.

Man’s Desire, with Lewis Stone.—Splendid picture of the Northwest. The kind that 90 per cent like. I sure have to report favorably on this one.—J. B. Endert, Endert theatre, Crescent City, Cal.—General patronage.

Selznick

The Greatest Love, with Vera Gordon.—A picture almost the equal of Humoresque but does not have the drawing power.—Raymond Gear, Mayflower theatre, Florence, Kans.—General patronage.

His Wife’s Money, with Eugene O’Brien.—This is a very pleasing program picture. Was well satisfied with this feature.—A. E. Berlin, Grand theatre, Rock Falls, Ill.

The Woman Game, with Elaine Hammerstein.—Good program picture.—W. C. Whitt, Home theatre, Anderson, Cal.—Small town patronage.

The Daughter Pays, with Elaine Hammerstein.—Plot runs one reel too much. Rather drawn in places. Hammerstein is very pleasing.—T. M. Davidge, Queen theatre, Durant, Okla.—General patronage.

Darling Mine, with Olive Thomas.—Here is a splendid picture. You will make no mistake in booking it. Many complimentary remarks.—Adolph Kohn, Pastime theatre, Granville, N. Y.—Neighborhood patronage.

Picadilly Jim, with Owen Moore.—Clever. Everybody pleased.—F. E. Sabin, Majestic theatre, Eureka, Mont.—Neighborhood patronage.

She Loves and Lies, with Norma Talmadge.—Fine. Many patrons said this was the best I ever had and I have played some good ones. Personally I did not consider it great, but it certainly is good all the way through. Bock it. Select is always good.—W. F. Haycock, Star theatre, Callaway, Nebr.—Neighborhood patronage.

Everybody’s Sweetheart, with Olive Thomas.—Not quite up to the other pictures of Miss Thomas, but a very pleasing picture after all. Star is popular and this being her last picture it drew a good house.—B. Plavich, Orpheum theatre, Converse, Ind.—Small town patronage.

A Regular Girl, with Elsie Janis.—Ideal picture for American Legion or patriotic programs. Circus stuff not much. Don’t advertise it specially.—J. Christensen, Star theatre, Sandusky, Mich.—Small town patronage.

She Loves and Lies, with Norma Talmadge.—This is one of the best Select pictures I have ever run and I have had a good many. Book it and boost it.—Geo. Eberwine, Auditorium theatre, Marblehead, O.—Small town patronage.

Just a Wife, with Roy Stewart and Leatrice Joy.—A fine picture. Interest well sustained and shows splendid direction. Pleased a good sized crowd.—Mrs. Lloyd Junkin, Queen theatre, Aspermont, Tex.—Small town patronage.

The Probation Wife, with Norma Talmadge.—Good and pleased them all. Ran Chaplin in The Floorwalker with it and it went over big.—L. A. Hasse, Majestic theatre, Mauston, Wis.

Love and the Woman, with June Elvidge.—A good average program picture that will please this star’s admirers.—H. Daspit, Atherton theatre, Kentwood, La.—Neighborhood patronage.

She Loves and Lies, with Norma Talmadge.—First two reels rather slow and the next four reels make it a good comedy-drama. Good enough.—Olen Reynolds, Pearl theatre, Hymera, Ind.—Small town patronage.

The Gift Supreme, with Edythe Sterling.—If you want a good special feature that will sure go over big and send your people out of your house saying, “That is sure a good one.” I played this on my poorest night and did fine with it. Prices 2c.—A. E. Berlin, Grand theatre, Rock Falls, Ill.

Universal

Honor Bound, with Frank Mayo.—Mayo’s all good. This is a dandy but his pictures won’t pull in my house for some reason. Had Human Stuff booked and they sent me this one. Put my business on the bum for two days.—William Thacher, Royal theatre, Salina, Kans.

The Torrent, with Eva Novak.—Picture well named. Star’s acting and support better than in Wanted at Headquarters. Just a trifle brutal but our patrons like it.

“SHERIFF, I’M YOUR MAN”

One of the tense scenes from “Dead or Alive,” the third of the Jack Hoxie features made for Arrow.
rough stuff.—Watt & Simmons, Bijou theatre, Crookston, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

Rich Girl, Poor Girl, with Gladys Walton.—Fine picture for the children, but adults, especially men, passed it up. One of the poorest drawings Sunday pictures I've had for months.—J. B. Stine, Gem theatre, Clinton, Ind.—General patronage.

In Folly's Trail, with Carmel Myers.—Good picture. Good puller. Brought in 25 per cent more than Once to Every Woman and pleased my people better.—O. R. Nation, Strand theatre, Davis, Cal.—Small town patronage.

La La Lucille, with Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran.—If you have an intelligent class use it. Regardless of some of the knock these comedies have received, this is certainly a good one and the others fair.—G. W. Yeaton, Joka theatre, Exeter, N. H.—Neighborhood patronage.

Overland Red, with Harry Carey.—Good picture, but not a Harry Carey feature. Drew a large crowd as he is a favorite star here.—Paul Dahlstrom, Bungalow theatre, North Powder, Ore.—Neighborhood patronage.

La La Lucille, with Lyons and Moran.—This is very good comedy and caused lots of laughter.—Adolph Kohn, Pastime theatre, Granville, N. Y.—Neighborhood patronage.

Wanted at Headquarters, with Eva Novak.—Fair picture. Not very speedy, but will please day. Good business.—E. E. Galley, Crystal theatre, Wayne, Neb.

In Folly's Trail, with Carmel Myers.—Just a fair program picture. Patrons made no comment as they passed out.—Adolph Kohn, Pastime theatre, Granville, N. Y.—Neighborhood patronage.

West Is West, with Harry Carey.—Drew good business, but play not up to the old standard of Carey's pictures. Deplorably shy on action and suspense. Star can do much better.—J. B. Stine, Gem theatre, Clinton, Ind.—General patronage.

Mad Marriage, with Carmel Myers.—A new picture, 1921 release, and a dandy. She is coming back strong.—R. Ross Riley, Wigwam theatre, Oberlin, Kans.—Small town patronage.

Blue Streak McCoy, with Harry Carey.—This is the first Carey picture I ever run. If the rest are like this I don't want them. Nothing to it.—H. J. Mc-

Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle assists Pat Sullivan, as he sketches "Ethel," the Lasky studio cat, for his "Felix the Cat" series of the Paramount Magazine.

Vitagraph

Bob's Candidate, with Corinne Griffith.—Nice smooth little drama. Clean and pleased large audience.—Hacket & Kraus, Hackett's theatre. Port Gibson, Miss.—Neighborhood patronage.

Diamonds Adrift, with Earle Williams. Much ado about nothing. Give Earle Williams a real story once in a while. His starring vehicles are too flimsy and light.
EXHIBITORS HERALD
March 12, 1921

T. M. Davidge, Queen theatre, Durant, Okla.—General patronage.

His Darkest Hour, with Harry T. Morey.—Good program picture. Admis- sions, 5c. Larry C. Held, Sterling theatre, Fairmont, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Purple Cipher, with Earle Williams.—Very good. A different kind of Williams picture. Did not please as well as The Man from St. Cloud. New York, N. Y.—Neighborhood patronage.

They played an—-program, with various actors. Chained out at matinee.—R. C. Steuve, Orpheum theatre, Cauton, O.—Transient patronage.

Cyclone Bliss (Arrow), with Jack Hosie.—This is not up to star's standard work and did not please.—G. W. Johnson, Mystic theatre, Marmarth, N. D.—General patronage.

A Western Adventurer (W. S. P. C.), with William Fairbanks.—Action aplenty. Looks as if William Fairbanks is going to be a winner.—T. M. Davidge, Queen theatre, Durant, Okla.—General patronage.

Sky Fire (Pinnacle), with Neil Hart.—Most satisfactory picture for all classes. Built around the Aurora Borealis.—W. H. Hamann, Strand theatre, Kingsport, Tenn.

The Purple Cipher, with Earle Williams.—Very good. A different kind of Williams picture. Did not please as well as The Man from St. Cloud. New York, N. Y.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Falcon (Equity), with David Griffith.—This is not up to star's standard work and did not please.—G. W. Johnson, Mystic theatre, Marmarth, N. D.—General patronage.

A Western Adventurer (W. S. P. C.), with William Fairbanks.—Action aplenty. Looks as if William Fairbanks is going to be a winner.—T. M. Davidge, Queen theatre, Durant, Okla.—General patronage.

What The New York Newspaper Critics Said About “Black Beauty” Now Playing at the Strand Theatre

“It is a far better product than the book itself, and it is probable that Anna Sewell would say as much. Must be considered as one of the fine pieces of motion picture work of the season. A picture play deserving of large patronage and long life.”—New York Morning World.

“Charm and good taste—the production and direction seem with them. ‘Black Beauty’ is the sort of wholesome entertainment that builds sturdy tissue in the interesting picture industry.”—New York American.

“Right after the two weeks’ run of ‘The Kid’ the Strand Theatre presents this week ‘Black Beauty’—another of the best pictures of the season. The picture is so refreshing in its atmosphere, so kind in its message and so clean in its purpose that it cannot fail to captivate the hearts of motion picture patrons.”—New York Morning Telegraph.

“The presence of the various stable characters makes this picture one of the alluring novelties of the season. A very attractive production which, in the immortal words of any clothing advertisement, is ‘fitted to customers of all ages.’”—New York Herald.

“‘It’s a job to be proud of, I think, having made ‘Black Beauty’ into a picture which will please infant and adult, a job which so easily might have been badly done, but is not. At the Strand there were hosts of un-naturally quiet little boys marshalled in to see it. They thought it was ‘great stuff.’”—New York Daily News.

“A picture that will attract thousands of animal lovers to the Strand this week. The film version of this tale follows the book closely.”—New York Journal of Commerce.

“So skilfully has Vitagraph told this story on the screen that to many it will seem even better than the book itself.”—New York Evening Telegram.

“As a picture it is indeed a novelty for which the producers deserve more than the usual credit.”—New York Globe.

“On the silver sheet ‘Black Beauty’ is in many respects a remarkable picture. There are thrills aplenty likewise, the race for the train in the final scene being one of the best filmings of its kind the motion picture world has produced, with a succession of sensational riding feats. Jean Paige has an appealing beauty. She screens and plays extremely well. Her supporting cast is of the best.”—New York Evening Mail.

“One of the unique offerings of the season is ‘Black Beauty,’ which atones for many a vampire-laden blight of the past. It’s a relief to meet with actors who aren’t always trying to register. Jean Paige leads the human battalion and does it as one to the manner and the saddle born.”—New York Evening Sun.

“‘Black Beauty’ scores. There is an excellent race to climax the story.”—New York Journal.
Am playing a return date in March. You can't go wrong on it.—E. S. Brooks, Bell theatre, Kansas City, Mo.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Cold Deck (Thos. H. Ince), with William S. Hart.—While this is a re-issue and third time shown in McGhee, people enjoyed it as much, or better, than the late Hart pictures.—E. A. Bar adel, Palace theatre, McGhee, Ark.—Neighborhood patronage.

Serials

The Son of Tarzan (National), with a special cast.—A good serial. The attendance is increasing now, being small at start because of cold weather. Also running The Moon Riders, which is a dandy Western serial.—R. Ross Riley, Wigwam theatre, Oberlin, Kans.—Small town patronage.

Velvet Fingers (Pathé), with George P. Seitz.—If any fanatic reformers see this we will be in for "town" censorship.—E. E. Gailey, Crystal theatre, Wayne, Neb.

Bride 13 (Fox), with a special cast.—A wonderful serial and gets money. Something out of the ordinary, but the plot is horrible and some of the scenes hardly get by. Do not believe that this will get by in some southern towns.—D. J. Yeung, Dreamland theatre, Brownsville, Tex.

Fighting Fate (Vitagraph), with William Duncan.—I am on the second episode of this serial, and it is sure going over big. This is one serial you want to book as it is sure a winner.—A. E. Berlin, Grand theatre, Rock Falls, III.

The Lost City (Warner Brothers), with Juanita Hansen.—The best serial we have ever run. Any exhibitor who fails to play this is passing up real money.—F. D. Hall, Wonderland theatre, Madelia, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Veiled Mystery (Vitagraph), with Antonio Moreno.—On the eighth episode. Giving entire satisfaction. Crowd gradually increasing. Always received with acclamation.—S. R. Tiller, Lone Star theatre, Caryville, Tenn.—Neighborhood patronage.

Daredevil Jack (Pathé), with Jack Dempsey.—First episode went big. Packed house. Pleased all. Looks like it's going to pull. They said that they would be back next week.—William Thacher, Royal theatre, Salina, Kans.

The Lion Man (Universal), with Jack Perrin.—On 15th episode. Holding up well. Have used better serials.—Hackett & Krauss, Hackett's theatre, Port Gibson, Miss.—Neighborhood patronage.

Elmo the Fearless (Universal), with Elmo Lincoln.—This serial pleased about 50 per cent of serial fans. Too much of the same-ness throughout. I cannot recommend this as a drawing card.—Adolph Kohn, Pastime theatre, Granville, N. Y.—Neighborhood patronage.

The LION MAN (Universal), with Jack Perrin.—Just finished this serial and advise every small town exhibitor to get it if he can. Six years ago I swore off running serials. This more than doubled my Saturday receipts. Am open on Saturday and Sunday only. Patronage just wild about it. Bad weather kept none away. On the last night I had to close the box office, the first time ever. Am going to use KING OF THE CIRCUS next.—Geo. Eberwine, Auditorium theatre, Marblehead, O.

The Veiled Mystery (Vitagraph), with Antonio Moreno.—Just completed this serial and can say it was a good one. Drew well and held up good. Vitagraph serials always have the same kind of stunts. We have run three and find that way.—C. L. German, Royal theatre, Ronner Springs, Kans.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Lost City (Warner Bros.), with Juanita Hansen.—This is one of the best serials we ever run, and we run them all. You cannot go wrong on this one. Book it.—Spalding Bros, Gem theatre, Taylorville, III.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Midnight Man (Universal), with James J. Corbett.—Just finished this. It is great. A business builder for small towns. If you turn your head to sneeze you will get the full benefit.—S. R. Tiller, Lone Star theatre, Caryville, Tenn.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Son of Tarzan (National), with a special cast.—Business increased 30 per cent on a Monday. Best serial I ever ran. Audience wild over it.—H. Scholl, Mabel theatre, Chicago, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Purple Rider (Vitagraph), with Joe Ryan.—Just started this serial. Seems to hold but it is too early to judge.—Hackett & Krauss, Hackett's theatre, Port Gibson, Miss.—Neighborhood patronage.

Ruth of the Rockies (Pathé), with Ruth Roland.—On the ninth episode and interest holding up. Every one seems to be pleased with this serial and I think it is a good one.—Adolph Kohn, Kohn's Theatre, Granville, N. Y.—Neighborhood patronage.

Ruth of the Rockies (Pathé), with Ruth Roland.—This serial is good and holds the crowds. Has been out every day and at the box on Saturday. Run at both places with Select pictures.—L. P. Lewis, Lone Star theatre, Jasper, Tex.—Small town patronage.

The Son of Tarzan (National), with a special cast.—Very good. Best opening on a serial ever run.—H. H. Burns, Farmer theatre, Chicago, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Short Subjects

The Red Hot Trail (Universal), with a special cast.—A fine, clean Western drama that will please as well as Hoot Gibson.—Philip Rand, Rex theatre, Salmon, Idaho.—Small town patronage.

Up in Ali's Place (Sennett-Paramount), with a special cast.—Had them screaming on this comedy. The bathing beauties were there.—Hackett & Krauss, Hackett's theatre, Port Gibson, Miss.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Huntsman (Fox), with Clyde Cook.—This is a corking good comedy and took well. It brought consistent laughter.—G. W. Johnson, Mystic theatre, Marmarth, N. D.—General patronage.

The Valley of Ten Thousand Smokes (Educational), with a special cast.—A real special produced under supervision of the National Geographic Society. Ask your school superintendent to co-operate and you will be surprised. It's a winner.—F. Heijmanek, Opera House, Clarkson, Neb.—Small town patronage.

The Scarecrow (Metro), with Buster Keaton.—One of the best comedies ever released on any program. Buster has Lloyd, Arbuckle, Chaplin or any of them beaten a mile. The coming big one.—G. W. Yeaton, Ioka theatre, Exeter, N. H.—Neighborhood patronage.

Stung Again (C. B. C.), with Hall Room Boys.—This went over good. Damn good comedy.—William Thacker, Royal theatre, Salina, Kans.

Torchy (Educational), with Johnny Hines.—First Torchy. Went over good. All Educationalists so far have been good.—O. R. Nation, Strand theatre, Davis, Calif.—Small town patronage.

Neighbors (Metro), with Buster Keaton.—As good as any comedy with Bus-
The Tale of a Dog (Universal), with Browne.—A clean, laughable, fine slap stick comedy. Good for any program. Book with Philip Rand, Rex theatre, Salmon, Idaho.—Small town patronage.

Tipped Off and Superstition (Universal), with Hoot Gibson.—Hoot Gibson is the biggest drawing card and best liked player appearing in two-reel Westerns to-day. His plays are full of action and the right comedy element to please all fans of all ages. Book them.—J. B. Stine, Gem theatre, Clinton, Ind.—General patronage.

His Home Sweet Home (Vitagraph), with Larry Semon.—This is a dandy comedy and will get the laughs. Should go great in any house.—G. W. Johnson, Mystic theatre, Marmarth, N. D.—General patronage.

Wet and Warmer (First National), with a special cast.—A two-reel comedy and the average.—Raymond Gear, Mayflower theatre, Florence, Kans.—General patronage.

Betty Sets the Pace (Arrow), with Muriel Ostriche.—This is certainly a delightful comedy and the cast and comedies are both good clean comedies. We do not care for the bathing girl class of comedy.—J. A. Wright, Lone Star theatre, Ovalo, Tex.—Small town patronage.

THE KICK IN HIGH LIFE (First National), with Charles Conklin.—One of the best slapstick comedies I have ever run. They laughed so hard that one patron broke a seat back.—F. D. Hall, Wonderland theatre, Madera, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

Don't Tickle and The Huntman (Fox), with Clyde Cook.—Laughable slap-stick comedies. Cook not yet known, so not a drawing card.—J. B. Stine, Gem theatre, Clinton, Ind.—General patronage.

Torchy Comedies (Educational), with Johnny Hines.—These comedies are in a class by themselves. Will please every one and even those patrons who do not ordinarily like comedies.—F. D. Hall, Wonderland theatre, Madera, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Grand Canyon (Prizma).—Another good color comedy of our exhibitor owes it to his patrons to show these Prizmas. They impress as nothing in black and white can.—Jean Lightner, Regent theatre, Alameda, Calif.— Neighborhood patronage.

The Flivver Wedding (Federated), with Monty Banks.—This is one of the best I have ever run. People were so pleased with this comedy they talked of it days afterwards.—J. A. Wright, Lone Star theatre, Ovalo, Tex.—Small town patronage.

Alleagant Fox (Fox), with Clyde Cook.—This comedy is excellent and people are asking when the next one is coming. Cook is different and that is what they like.—F. D. Hall, Wonderland theatre, Madera, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

Larry Semon Comedies (Vitagraph).—If your patrons like good clean comedies, book all this series.—W. A. Forsyth, Temple theatre, Standish, Mich.—Small town patronage.

Rolin Comedies (Pathé).—These one reel comedies are in most cases very good, especially those in which the little colored boy appears. This lad is clever.—Adolph Kohn, Pastime theatre, Granville, N. Y.—Neighborhood patronage.

Chester Comedies (Educational), with Snooky, the Humazard.—Any exhibitor who passes up these wonderful comedies is dead—that's all.—F. D. Hall, Wonderland theatre, Madera, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

Larry Semon Comedies (Vitagraph).—The best liked comedies of them all. My patrons like him more each time I show him.—W. F. Haycock, Star theatre, Callaway, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

Camping Out (Paramount), with Roscoe Arbuckle.—For comedy this one exceeds anything I have ever shown. If you want to get the laughs book this picture. Pleased them all.—Paul Dahlstrom, Bungalow theatre, North Powder, Ore.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Szechner-Caddock Wrestling Match.—We found this a very unique and entertaining picture. It is a good vulgar.—Earl Snell, Majestic theatre, Reno, Nev.—General patronage.

Dull Care (Vitagraph), with Larry Semon.—A good comedy. All of the Larry Semon comedies have been good.—Adolph Kohn, Pastime theatre, Granville, N. Y.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Toonerville Trolley (First National).—Something decidedly different in comedy that sure pleases. Drew thanks from a big majority of our patrons. You have to stay up all night to beat First National though, and even then "it can't be bid."—C. L. German, Royal theatre, Bonner Springs, Kans.—Neighborhood patronage.

Haunted Spooks (Pathe), with Harold Lloyd.—A dandy comedy. This is the best of the first Lloyd series. A good drawing card.—Joseph R. Ulman, New Orpheum theatre, Ada, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

Arbuckle Comedies (Paramount).—All the two-reel Arbuckle comedies are good. We are using several the second time.—W. A. Forsyth, Temple theatre, Standish, Mich.—Small town patronage.

The Fly Cup (Vitagraph), with Larry Semon.—One of the best comedies we ever ran. Pleased everybody.—Fred Frisbie, Croxton theatre, Angola, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

Mermaid Comedies (Educational).—Absolutely the best slap-stick comedies we have had the pleasure of running in this theatre.—F. D. Hall, Wonderland theatre, Madera, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

Up in Alf's Place (Sennett-Paramount), with a special cast.—The poorest excuse for comedy I ever saw.—Bert Norton, Kidney theatre, Eureka, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Communications regarding condition of film, service conditions, rental prices, etc., should be mailed separately. Reports for this department must be confined to the actual drawing power record of productions.
New York Notes About Film Folk

By J. B.

At the coming election in Tarrytown, N. Y., a proposition will be put up to the taxpayers to decide whether Sunday motion picture shows will be permitted in the village. Tarrytown is situated but a step from Sleepy Hollow.

The police of Mamaroneck Mt. Vernon and New York have been asked by distracted parents to institute a search for Lucille Mezinsky, nineteen-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Mezinsky of Mamaroneck, N. Y., and Margaret Braun of Mt. Vernon who dropped out of sight last Thursday. The parents of the girls believe they have abandoned the Business College which they were attending at 123rd Street, New York city, and ran away to join a motion picture company in New York or Los Angeles. Miss Braun has never been in a studio but Lucille Mezinsky has worked for D. W. Griffith at the Oriente Point studio and had a part in "Way Down East." She is a statuesque beauty of the brunette type, about five feet seven inches tall, and weighs about one hundred and thirty pounds. Their eyes are large and sparkling and her complexion is dark olive.

In a disastrous fire at Mamaroneck, N. Y., Feb. 21, several of D. W. Griffith's employees had very narrow escapes. They were compelled to leave the house so hastily that they had no chance to save any of their belongings. Charles E. Mack, Frederick Stephens, Stanley Kirchoff and Philip Brady lost everything in the fire. Kind friends fitted them out with temporary wardrobes.

We are glad to chronicle the fact that Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Lewis, who have been under the weather from the effects of colds, have recovered and that they expect very soon to seek the balmy climate of New York to complete the cure. Welcome to our city!

Joe Reidy, Pathe's peerless publicity purveyor, has been suffering from a cold for the past week and he was so hoarse over the telephone that we could hardly get a word of what he said, but being more or less accustomed to the various forms of the press departments we surmised that Joe was saying, "For the love of Mike, don't neglect Pathe's publicity just because I'm speechless. Come across!" All right, Joe. Hope you will soon be able to put your customary vocal force behind your requests.

Walter K. Hill's "Film Smiles and So Forth" is going over big. Walt Mason and Walt Hill are neck and neck on the smiles thing and some say Hill coined the phrase, "The voice with the smile wins."

Charles Davis, 25th, and a company of eight players have just returned from Maryland where they have been working on exteriors for the second Muriel Ostriche picture. Hazel Home, who was recently engaged by Salient Films, was one of the party.

Sidney Garrett has changed the name of his company from Sidney Garrett, Inc., to Sidney Garrett Productions, Inc. Quite some change, "Sid," and in the long run it's the change we're looking for.

Dorothy Valentine Cleveland, who has been associated with W. W. Hodkinson Corporation for the past eight months, has joined the Ziegfeld Film Corp. Dorothy is a capable publicist and this, combined with her charming personality, gives her considerable advantage over most of the press soroity.

Dorothea R. Hertzog, the well known short story writer, who has been on the reviewing staff of Exhibitors Herald, has been appointed associate editor on Motion Picture Weekly, the sister publication.

Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, having exhausted the available supply of good pictures in Los Angeles, is motoring from there to San Francisco. Dr. is not accustomed to bad weather and wonders how and when to sandwich in a little play. The play is the thing.

Charlie Seay, w. k. director, returned to New York from Maine last week. Charlie has been cast in his critical eye over the beautiful scenes of the state not with the idea of purchasing it, but of picturing it.

DeMille's Barrie Play

Opens in London in April

Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, announces that William DeMille's Paramount production of Sir James M. Barrie's play, "What Every Woman Knows," will have its English premiere at the Palace theatre, London, about April 1.

At the opening performance Barrie will be present, along with other notable figures in British literary and theatrical circles. The role of Maggie Wylie, played on the stage by Maude Adams, is taken by Lois Wilson, while Richard Bennett's role of the eccentric John Shand is played by Conrad Nagel.

Penrhyn Stanlaws Will Direct Betty Compson

Penrhyn Stanlaws, the noted artist, who has been studying the production of Motion pictures for the past year at the Camera and West Coast Paramount studios, has signed a five-year contract to direct Paramount pictures and will direct Betty Compson in her first Paramount starring feature.

The title of this picture is "At the End of the World," and will be an adaptation of the European stage success of the same name by Ernest Klein.

Plan Pottsville Theatre

POTTSTVILLE, PA.—Chamberlain Amusement Enterprises, Inc., contemplate the erection of a $200,000 theatre here. At the same time plans are being made for the erection of a quarter million dollar theatre here and it is expected that work on its construction will begin in the early spring.
Metro Will Have Notable Premiere
For “The Four Horsemen” March 6

Distinguished Audience Will Attend Lyric Showing of “Million Dollar” Adaptation of Novel by Vincente Blasco Ibanez

A notable premiere will be given “The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse” at the Lyric theatre, March 6, on March 6, to a distinguished audience will view Metro’s “million dollar” picturization of Vicente Blasco Ibanez’s novel.

The premiere will be under the personal supervision of Hugo Riesenfeld, managing director of the Rivoli, Rialto and Criterion theatres.

Adapted by June Mathis

“The Four Horsemen” is a Rex Ingram production from a screen adaptation by June Mathis.

Plans are being made for the reception at the premiere of Don Juan Rialto and Dr. Thomas Le Breton, the Spanish and Argentina ambassadors at Washington; the official consular representatives in New York and in the speaking countries; Archer M. Huntington and other officials of the Hispanic Society of America, together with prominent authors, newspaper and magazine editors, college professors, artists, as well as notable figures in the film and theatre world.

Among those for whom reservation already have been made are Don Ramon P. De Negri, Mexican consul general; Don Cesar Guadencio, consul general of Uruguay; Don Gustavo R. de Icaza, consul general of Ecuador; Don Eduardo Higginson, consul general of Peru; Don Eleandro Berra, consul general of Spain; Don Ernesto C. Perez, consul general of Argentina; Don T. Romero, consul general of Salvador; Don Gabriel A. de Amenabar, consul general of Cuba; William Wallace White, consul general of Peru; Don Belisario Porras, Jr., consul general of Panama; Don Francisco Villacorta, consul general of Guatemala; Don Emilio Edwards, consul general, Chile; Don Hielo Lobo, general of Brazil; Don Jose, Campbell, president of the Union Benefica Espanola.

Newspaper Men Invited

Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, Prof. Brander Matthews, Prof. G. C. Odeill, Dr. E. J. Wheeler, Dr. Frank Crane, John O’Hara Conquers, Winston Churchill, Frank A. Vanderlip, Ellis Parker Butler, Perrison Maxwell, Frank Crowninshield, Ray Long, Herbert Kaufman, Arthur Brisbane, Carl Hovey, Eugene V. Brewater.

Special Music Arranged

With its colorful, picturesque episodes in the Argentine, its throbbing romance against the gay background of Paris and its stirring, epic sweep of drama in the big Marine scenes, the screen version of “The Four Horsemen” offers unusual scope for musical interpretation. An elaborate music setting, to be rendered by a symphony orchestra, is being arranged by Dr. Riesenfeld, together with other appealing interpretive features, and it is predicted that this record-breaking photodrama’s metropolitan debut will set a new mark in the annals of filmdom.

Paramount to Distribute

African Expedition Film

Announcement comes from Famous Players-Lasky Corporation that it will issue eight reels of the Paramount-Vandenbergh African pictures, obtained by Dr. Leonard J. Vandenbergh during his year of exploration of British East Africa and Uganda, in April. They will be available to exhibitors in series of four pictures, each two reels in length.

The Paramount-Vandenbergh expedition brought back from Africa about 40,000 feet of film for scientific record. The 8,000 feet to be published comprises the best of this.

“Fighting Crime Wave”

Selznick Cartoon Jibe

One of the features incorporated in the Selznick News reel is a cartoon called “Fighting the Crime Wave.” It is a travesty on the crime conditions being faced throughout America and the efforts being made to check it are presented in a highly ludicrous and mirth provoking manner.

Realart Increases Its Coast Scenario Staff

Percy Heath Is the Latest Acquisition of Producing Corporation

Realart’s West Coast studios, devoted to Mary Miles Minter, Wanda Hawley and Bebe Daniels productions, has increased its staff of scenarists to five writers.

The latest addition is Percy Heath, former dramatic critic, American author of “Sari” and former publicity agent for David Belasco, Henry W. Savage, Charles Dillingham and others.

Specializes on Comedy-Drama

Mr. Heath, it is announced by Elmer Harris, supervising director of the studios, will specialize on comedy-drama adaptations for Bebe Daniels and Wanda Hawley.

Newspaper men will recall Mr. Heath as one of the little group who achieved the sensational feat of publishing a Baltimore paper in Philadelphia when the fire of 1904 made it necessary to dynamite the plant of the old Baltimore Herald.

Author of Short Stories.

Mr. Heath is the author of a number of successful vaudeville sketches and short stories. Among the latter are “Soldiers of Misfortune” and “The Doctor’s Dilemma.” His work in motion pictures includes adaptations of “Down by the Rio Grande,” “Burnt Wings,” “Chorus Girl’s Romance” and “Inner Sight.”

With the addition of Mr. Heath, Realart’s Western scenario staff numbers five—Elmer Harris, supervising director; Alan Eyton, Edith Kennedy and Douglas Doty, former editor of Century Magazine.

Ross Publishing Company Adopts Policy of Expansion in Publicity

In its recent reorganization meeting Ross Publishing Company, Inc., 1443 Broadway, New York, adopted a new business policy, allowing for the expansion of its activities in both the publishing and publicity fields and elected new officers.

Clement A. Dodson, the new president, is sales and advertising manager of a big New York commercial institution and is well known in the advertising world. Maurice Meyers, vice-president, formerly was personal representative of Sol Lesser, both in the East and in Los Angeles. Milton L. Silver, who was one of the original incorporators with Mr. Dodson, retains his office as treasurer. The secretary is John P. Dornan, who enters the Ross Publishing Company from various outside activities.

Biographies Are Published

Charles Donald Fox, former president, has disposed of his holdings to other members of the corporation.

The initial publication of the company, "Who's Who on the Screen," contains 424 pages of photographs and biographies of practically every prominent player, director and executive in the film industry.

The first edition of 5,000 copies is nearly exhausted; it is announced. Testimonials from exhibitors and photoplay editors are coming in daily as to the invaluable aid "Who's Who" affords them in making up programs and film pages.

Though the demand for this expensive edition has been great, the company feels that a more popular priced edition will put it within the reach of every fan and at the same time afford wider publicity to the players listed in its pages. With this thought in mind every effort is being made to anticipate the demand with a new and revised "Who's Who on the Screen." This new edition will go to press some time in March.

Publish "Mirror Books"

"The Little Movie Mirror Books," a novelty in motion picture publications and an original idea conceived by Ross Publishing Company, has caused many complimentary comments to be made. These little books are 4 1/2 x 6 inches in size and contain sixteen pages of intimate story and exclusive pictures on a single star. In addition there is a four-color cover with a pen and ink sketch of the star on the back cover and a unique letter written by the star to the fan.

"Little Movie Mirror Books" on William S. Hart, Lilian Gish, Mae Murray, Harriet Hammond, Bert Lytell, Ben Turpin, Wesley Barry, Colleen Moore, Donaldina, Viola Dana, Corinne Griffith and Wallace Reid are being distributed through newsdealers everywhere.

In all cases the cooperation of the companies handling the distribution of the photoplays in which these stars appear has been enlisted to help push these books to the advantage of everybody concerned.

Head of English Firm

Arrives in America to Study Local Condition

George Clark, president of George Clark Productions, has arrived in New York from England, for a short stay, during which he has planned to look over the American field with a view to becoming better acquainted with conditions here and to start a campaign for his two stars, Ivy Duke and Guy Newall.

George Clark productions are being published in this country by Stoll Film Corporation of America, and it is at the latter's main offices at 130 West Forty-sixth street, New York, that Clark is making his headquarters. Two of the Clark productions, "Squandered Lives" and "The Lure of Crooning Water," have been issued. Others which will follow are: "Testimony," "The Garden of Resurrection" and "The Persistent Lovers."

Theatre Company Formed

DULUTH, MINN.—Lyceum Company, which will operate the Lyceum theatre, has been incorporated by J. B. Clinton, Charles P. Meyers and M. D. Day with a capital stock of $50,000.

Pronounce Picture Sure-Fire Success

Priest Production Inspired by Theme of Poem by Moore

The offices of Robert W. Priest announce that state right buyers who have viewed "The Supreme Passion" declare it is a sure-fire box office attraction and a powerful photoplay. The story is by Robert McLaughlin and Charles T. Dazey.

The story is based upon the proposition: "Is a woman loved for beauty of body or beauty of soul?" and was inspired by the theme of Thomas Moore's poem, "Believe Me, If All Those Endearing Young Charms."

Mr. Priest is elated over the result of what he terms intensive editing of a big photoplay and the result is a magnetic title wedded to a fascinating story. The adjective "supreme," as used in the title, defines the highest and most exalted passion which the human mind may know—the pure and lasting love of a good man for a good woman, when misfortune, apparently resulting in the blastedness of physical beauty, overtakes her. No photodramatic story has so closely adhered to a theme originating in a great mind, it is said, as does the story of "The Supreme Passion" to the immortal lines of Thomas Moore.

Horwitz Forms National State Right Organization

Joe Horwitz of "Mickey" fame, head of Joe Horwitz Productions, formerly of Detroit, Mich., has organized to operate nationally, with headquarters on the fifth floor of the Columbia theatre building, Forty-seventh street and Seventh avenue, New York, and announces the purchase, for the United States and Canada of "Dollars and Destiny," a new five-reel production starring Paul Cappelleti.

Mr. Horwitz will have associated with him as general manager Charles A. Meade, who is well known throughout the industry, having been associated for many years with Pathé, Vitagraph and more recently with C. B. Price Company, Inc.
What The New York Newspaper Critics Said About "Black Beauty" Now Playing at the Strand Theatre

"It is a far better product than the book itself, and it is probable that Anna Sewell would say as much. Must be considered as one of the fine pieces of motion picture work of the season. A picture play deserving of large patronage and long life."—New York Morning World.

"Charm and good taste—the production and direction team with them. 'Black Beauty' is the sort of wholesome entertainment that builds sturdy tissue in the interesting picture industry."—New York American.

"Right after the two weeks' run of 'The Kid' the Strand Theatre presents this week 'Black Beauty'—another of the best pictures of the season. The picture is so refreshing in its atmosphere, so kind in its message and so clean in its purpose that it cannot fail to captivate the hearts of motion picture patrons."—New York Morning Telegraph.

"The presence of the various stable characters makes this picture one of the alluring novelties of the season. A very attractive production which, in the immortal words of any clothing advertisement, is 'fitted to customers of all ages.'"—New York Herald.

"It's a job to be proud of, I think, having made 'Black Beauty' into a picture which will please infant and adult, a job which so easily might have been badly done, but is not. At the Strand there were hosts of un-naturally quiet little boys marshalled in to see it. They thought it was 'great stuff.'"—New York Daily News.

"A picture that will attract thousands of animal lovers to the Strand this week. The film version of this tale follows the book closely."—New York Journal of Commerce.

"So skilfully has Vitagraph told this story on the screen that to many it will seem even better than the book itself."—New York Evening Telegram.

"As a picture it is indeed a novelty for which the producers deserve more than the usual credit."—New York Globe.

"On the silver sheet 'Black Beauty' is in many respects a remarkable picture. There are thrills aplenty likewise, the race for the train in the final scene being one of the best filmings of its kind the motion picture world has produced, with a succession of sensational riding feats. Jean Paige has an appealing beauty. She screens and plays extremely well. Her supporting cast is of the best."—New York Evening Mail.

"One of the unique offerings of the season is 'Black Beauty,' which atones for many a vampire-laden blight of the past. It's a relief to meet with actors who aren't always trying to register. Jean Paige leads the human battalion and does it as one to the manner and the saddle born."—New York Evening Sun.

"'Black Beauty' scores. There is an excellent race to climax the story."—New York Journal.
With the Procession in Los Angeles

By Harry Hammond Beall

IRVIN S. COBB, he of the round frame who gained fame with his expression "As much privacy as a gold fish," has been engaged by Irving Lesser and the Warner boys to write humorous sub-titles for "Fag's Bad Boy," in which young Jackie Coogan, Chaplin's foil in "The Kid," is being starred. The deal was made while Cobb was lecturing here and the famous humorist brought to the Pacific Coast producers' kindest greetings from Col. Fred Levy of Louisville. The Colonel and Cobb were boys together in Paducah, Ky.

Perce Heath, formerly Eastern dramatic critic and exploiter-general for limb and lingering revues, has apparently worked his way into the heart of the film colony here since Harry Klem first brought him out to Universal City two years ago. Percy has joined the Kealart scenario staff and will specialize on comedy-drama adaptations for Bebe Daniels and Wanda Hawley.

With the clink of glasses and the clatter of feet on the dance floor, the annual session of the Federated Film Exchanges of America came to an end at Sunset Inn, Santa Monica, Wednesday night of this week. All of the Eastern film men voted that Los Angeles could run rings around New San Francisco when it comes to having a good time.

Mike Levine, vice-president and generalissimo of the Robert Brunton studios, is back from the East crying "Wolf, Wolf" with regard to film studios in Florida. Levine claims that New York producers who wish to move their studios to Florida have no trouble in securing loans, while those who desire to move their productions to Los Angeles have little or no success in obtaining funds. He states that certain organizations in Florida are making every effort to make Jacksonville the center of the industry and that unless banks take steps toward encouraging the cinema industry by making necessary advances this city will lose millions of dollars in profitable business.

Morris Ryskind, author of "Unaccustomed as I Am," is a familiar figure around the Alexandria Hotel now, usually in company with Bernie Fineeman, the Katherine MacDonald chief executive who has engaged the Eastern writer to do titles. Ryskind has the distinction of having the "horniest" pair of horn-rimmed spectacles in the West Coast film colony.

During the absence of Oliver Morosco, George E. Bentel, his general manager, has moved the official headquarters of the film productions from the Egan Little Theatre building to the Chapman building at Eighth and Broadway. There both Bentel and the corpulent Morosco publicity man, Charlie Brandlerman, have been installed in a suite of luxurious offices.

The lobby of the Hotel Alexandria resembles that of the Hotel Astor in New York because of the great assembly of Eastern film luminaries. Among the better known figures of the industry who have been seen in the lobby are W. W. Hammons, president of Educational; Doc. W. R. Shal-nenberger, head of Arrow Film Corporation; W. W. Hodkinson, of Hodkinson Corporation; Eddie Bonner, of Chester Productions; Rupert Julian, who is about to launch his own company and numerous others.

Benefits have been the hue and cry of the film men of the West Coast for the past two weeks. We had the Theatre Owners' March Grass Ball at the Hotel Ambassador February 2 to raise funds to fight the Blue Laws and the week of February 14 at the Philharmonic Auditorium a monster benefit staged by the Hollywood Educational League, for the starving children of Europe. Join Emmet McCormick, First National exploiter, representing the company, who has already started work on the Ireland Day benefit to provide for those of his clan now in the old country.

Production costs on "Foolish Wives" reached the $750,000 mark this week with every indication that the finished super-feature will clear the million dollar hurdle before Erich Von Stroheim has shot the last scene.

"Bill" Kees, the persistent press agent, is authority for the statement that there is not a pair of puttees in the entire Kern production organization. General Director George H. Kern and co-Director Murdock McQuarrie down past the assistant directors, property men, and assistant property men, down, down, down to the publicity man. Nary a puttee.

George Loane Tucker, producer of "The Miracle Man," has returned to Los Angeles from Honolulu. Mr. Tucker's trip was a voyage of recuperation following a major operation.

Selznick Feature to Be Issued March 10

Hedda Hopper Has Leading Role in "You Can't Kill Love"

"You Can't Kill Love," the latest Selznick feature, is announced for publication on March 10. Burton George directed the picture from a story written by Michael J. Phillips and picturized by Edward J. Montagne.

Hedda Hopper, who played the leading feminine role opposite William Faversham in "The Man Who Lost Himself," is seen in the leading role, and William B. Davidson, who has appeared in several Selznick productions, plays the leading male part.

Other well-known members of the cast include Betty Hiltborn, Maurice Costello, Charles Gerard, Warren Cook and others equally prominent in the screen world.

That love is indestructible and that its holy flame burns forever is the theme set forth in "You Can't Kill Love." The story, encompassing love, romance and adventure, is laid alternately in the beauty of the Canadian Rockies and the smart set of suburban life.

"Male and Female" Is

Big Success in India

Cable reports received by E. E. Shauer, in charge of the foreign department of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, tell of the success scored by Cecil B. DeMille's "Male and Female" on its premiere in India.

This Paramount picture was first shown in Calcutta at the Picture House, owned and operated by E. H. DuCasse, and it is said to have established a new box office record. The picture was based upon Sir James M. Barrie's "The Admirable Crichton."
Guarding the Health of the Picture Theatre Patron

Recent "Flu" Epidemic Emphasized Advantage of Taking All Sanitary Precautions

BY F. W. WILSON
Manager, Industrial News Service, Du Pont de Nemours & Co.

The "flu" epidemic of 1918 taught hundreds of motion picture theatre owners a valuable lesson, though an expensive one. Probably the epidemic imposed a greater monetary loss upon theatre owners than upon any other class of business men. Their houses were closed with a total loss of revenue for long periods with most of their expenses continuing.

Theatre owners had time for a great deal of hard thinking during their periods of enforced idleness. Why, asked many of them, did the health boards pick on the motion picture industry and what can be done to prevent similar unWelcome attention from the health authorities in the event that another similar epidemic visits the country in the future? How would it be possible to make theatres more sanitary?

Evidently the answer to the problem that most of the owners arrived at was that they must have roomier, better ventilated and cleaner picture houses.

Health Measures Taken

The new houses that have been constructed since the epidemic have been conspicuously free from all forms of disease germ incubators and distributors. Many of the older theatres have been completely reconstructed and renovated, providing more room, more ventilation, more vacuum cleaning plants, new paint on walls and ceilings and new and sanitary seat coverings. There have been improvements in progress all over the country.

Probably the change of greatest importance and the change that has been most generally made has been in the substitution of pyroxin coated fabrics for seat coverings in place of leather, velour and tapestry coverings.

The animal character and porous structure of leather when used to upholster the seats in picture houses condemns it. The conditions in such houses are such as to cause excessive perspiration. The heat and pressure of the body applied through long periods to the spongelike leather causes the perspiration to be absorbed by it and as there is no possible way of cleansing it, the cover becomes progressively more foul with continued use. It becomes impregnated with grease, dirt and other contaminating germs-breeding matter and to aggravate this condition, the perspiration absorbed sets up a chemical action which, in some cases, causes the actual decomposition of the leather and in other cases, causes mold.

Velour and Tapestry

Velour and tapestry have many of the disadvantages mentioned above as affecting leather.

The leather substitute which is being quite generally adopted by the motion picture theatre is pyroxin, in fact the coating is impervious to perspiration as well as all other fluids, greases, stains and other foreign matter likely to come in contact with it. The surface, in fact, is thoroughly non-porous and provides no refuge whatever for foreign matter.

Anything that happens to lodge on the surface of it can be removed with soap and water. In fact, the fabric covered with this material can be scrubbed clean just as often and in exactly the same way that the floors are scrubbed. The material is not at all injured by this treatment.

Theatre walls should always be painted. This makes it possible to clean the walls with soap and water.

Need for Sanitation

Theatres having no interior decorations or furnishings that are not thoroughly sanitary and practically cleanable are much less likely to be closed by boards of health in the event of future epidemics than were the theatres of 1918 which had been built and furnished before the necessity for extreme sanitary measures had been impressed upon the motion picture industry.

There is very little chance for disease germs to flourish in any theatre having wood, tile, cement, or linoleum covered floors, seats having metal frames and pyroxin coated upholstery and painted walls. Any germs that do find lodgment in a theatre thus outfitted can be exterminated with the utmost promptness and certainty by the utilization of some vigorous muscle and some ordinary soap and water. It is desired to use germicide sprays, none of these materials will be harmed by them.

This description constitutes the ideal motion picture theatre equipment.
Most Complete Organ Installed at Stanley
Built by W. W. Kimball Firm and Is Instrument Vast in Tonal Qualities HOUSED IN CONCRETE
Additional Spaces Below Chambers for Relays and Below Stage for Blowing Plant

The magnificent new organ in the Stanley theater, Philadelphia, which is the most complete in existence and the acme of perfection built by the W. W. Kimball Company of Chicago, will be heard for the first time this week. Owing to the fact that this instrument is of vast extent—vast in its artistic and tonal qualities—it was impossible for the builders to have it completed in time for the formal dedication of the Stanley. They have since worked night and day, only the most expert workmen being employed, with the result that all the wonderful volume of tonal qualities, its extraordinary variations of effects and other special features not contained in any other instrument of similar kind, will be heard in all their varying beauty beginning this week.

The instrument in the new Stanley theatre is a true orchestra of the型 first conceived in the mind of Robert W. Kimball and developed by him during his life time, and subsequently further developed and improved by some of his former associates, prominent organbuilders, and whom have been R. J. Elliott, former president, and J. C. Carruthers, former general superintendent. It is probable that this resourceful and expensive type of orchestral organ has reached its highest stage in this installation, which occupies a large concrete chamber at either side of the proscenium and additional spaces below the chambers for the relays, and below the stage for the electric blowing plant and generator.

Is a Unit Orchestra
The instrument is accurately described as a Unit Orchestra, since it contains the full instrumentation of a symphony orchestra, and is under the control of a single player, who, by means of the primary and double touch and numerous other aids, can bring into use, individually or collectively, each and every instrument represented, weaving solos, counter melodies and accompaniments into the elaborate patterns thought out by the composers, and all with the greatest ease.

Though this Unit Orchestra contains all of the percussion instruments in familiar use, such as harp, marimba, celesta, xylophone, glockenspiel, vibra-foils, chimes, tympani, drums, cymbals, tambourine, castanet, only the legitimate percussions are provided which are found in a full orchestra; all woodwind, strings, and none of the unmusical "effects" thought necessary by some organ builders for the "interpretation" of pictures have been provided.

The strings are represented by two double basses, three cello's and six violins. The pedal instruments and the manuals contain more than thirty string tones, from the powerful basso through the viola, first and second violins to the delicate muted violins.

PHIL. H. PIERCE

In charge of the new office of the Bartola Musical Instrument Company.

The wood wind is represented by the bassoon and double bassoon or contra bassoon, the oboe, flute, English horn, oboe, musette, kumara, saxophone, flutes and piccolos.

Wood Wind Represented
The brass family contains the powerful bombards, 32 feet in length and on very heavy wind pressure, the ophicleide, tubas, baritone, trombones, flugel horn, trumpets, French horn, muted horn, bal-lad horn, Wald horn, cornet, muted cornet and echo horn.

Then there is the magnificent family of foundation tones which lifts this instrument above the orchestra of human players, except in such instances as a great organ is used to support a symphony orchestra. These include the diaphones, the several kinds of diapasons of wood, metal and leathered metal, the Thia families, both open and stopped, some of the lower tonad flutes, the Bour-done, gembshorns, octaves and mutation stops. In addition to the percussions named is a grand piano with mar-dolin and harpsichord attachments, all, including the soft pedal and sustaining pedal and other means of expression under control of the organist.

Vox Humana Characters
There are in this instrument Vox Humana of different character and located in different chambers. One of these is a big solo Vox Humana of two ranks, available in all registers. Another is an echo Vox Humana of delicate character and under separate control. It is possible to reproduce the perfect vibrato of the human voice, an accomplishment for which the Kimball organ has been noted since the installation of the first example in the East in the Regent theatre, Philadelphia, where it became widely known as "The Organ With the Human Voice." Tremolo effect is available in connection even with the solo brass instruments, each tremolo being so adjusted as to produce the effect of a humbly played instrument.

OPEN OFFICE IN DALLAS
Bartola Musical Instrument Company Appoints Phil H. Pierce Head of New Branch.

Dan Barton, general manager of the Bartola Musical Instrument Company, has just returned from Dallas, Texas, where he superintended the opening of a new sales office, which will be in charge of Phil H. Pierce.

Mr. Pierce is well known in the South, having been connected with the musical end of the motion picture business for many years.

Mr. Barton states the many inquiries coming from the Southern territory necessitated the opening of the Southern agency, and it is the intention of the Musical Instrument Company to personally supervise and handle the service on all installations they make.

Mr. Pierce is not only a salesman, but an expert in pipe organ construction.

The Dallas office has a complete organization of instrument builders and it will also include the school for organists, which has been successfully conducted by the Bartola Musical Instrument Company in Chicago for the last seven years.

Mr. Pierce is well pleased with the reception given his firm and has been in contact with Mrs. Phillips of the Cypress Theatre, Fort Worth, Texas, and Mr. Delk of the palace Theatre, Fort Worth, Texas, during the first few days the new office was under way.

DORLEY HEADS NEW FIRM
Thomas W. Dooley has resigned as president, general manager and director of the Dooley exchange in Syracuse, N. Y., and has opened the Exhibitors Film Service there, which has distributed 19,000 pictures in the county, a recent innovation which has attained considerable popularity among exhibitors. He will also handle Powers projectors.

It is the belief of Mr. Dooley that the wants of exhibitors in his territory can be better handled by an exchange in Syracuse but if this proves insufficient, he says, steps will be taken at once for the opening of an office at Buffalo and at Albany.

"ROAMING" SONG
One of the latest songs which is spreading considerable popularity through its rendition by thousands of orchestras in motion picture theatres and elsewhere, is "Roaming," published by Charles H. Harris, who has distributed 15,000 orchestrations of this tuneful dance sensation.

Charlie Strong, whose snappy fox-trot, "I Love You Sunday," is rated among the three best sellers, and Roy Bary are the composers. Roaming is based on the results of music roll bulletins and, it is announced, is soon to be released on phonograph records.

To Begin Kewanee Theatre
KEWANE, ILL—Work on the new Peerless theatre to be built in Chestnut street, is expected to be started by March 1 and completed within six months. It will be built at an estimated cost of $125,000 and will have a seating capacity of 850.
WE have just received from the Coast the newest Hallroom Boys Comedy, called "HIGH AND DRY." It has been reviewed by many of the leading exhibitors in New York, and been pronounced by them the greatest two-reel comedy they have ever seen. We made Independent history with "A DOG-GONE MIXUP" when it played a record-breaking week at the Strand Theatre, New York. Three of the largest theatres in Boston, the Boston Theatre, Loew's Orpheum and the Star; the Olympic in Pittsburgh; the Victory in Providence, and many other large theatres gave this Hallroom Boys Comedy a week's run. Now watch and see what "HIGH AND DRY" will do. We guarantee that it will break all records. Go after it when you see it advertised. If you're not booking Hallroom Boys Comedies you're missing a good thing.

Doob Leaves Famous; Block Is Transferred

Former Chicago Manager Is Now in Charge of the Cleveland Office

Several changes in the Chicago staff of Paramount have just been announced. P. A. Block, former manager, has been transferred back to Cleveland as manager of that office. Oscar A. Doob, former exploitation man, has resigned to accept the direction of advertising and sales promotion of Lake and Export Coal Corporation. T. C. Greiver has resigned as sales manager. His successor is Milt Kusell.

Joseph Gilday, the new district manager, will have direct supervision over the Chicago office. T. A. Kilfoil, office manager, will assist Mr. Gilday.

In leaving Paramount Doob again associates with Harris P. Wolfeberg, former district manager. His headquarters at present will be at Huntington, W. Va. He departed for the South last Saturday.

“Gasoline Alley” Given

Valuable Exploitation

By Chicago’s Garages

“Gasoline Alley,” the series of animated cartoons to be issued soon by Russell Greiver and Russell, has been given valuable exploitation through the co-operation of Chicago garage owners.

Paul Gerard Smith, in charge of the campaign, sent one-sheets advertising the series to 400 garages in the city with a request that they be hung in a conspicuous position. He followed with return post cards asking if they had been hung. The response, he declares, is surprising.

Newspapers, which carry the cartoon “Gasoline Alley,” upon which the animated cartoon is based, are also co-operating. A line mentioning the fact that the characters in the cartoons are to make their screen debut is carried by practically all of the newspapers. Several have assisted in the distributing of one sheets on bill boards in their city.

Wabash Exchange Buys

Ben Turpin Re-Issues

Wabash Film Exchange, one of the newest of Chicago Film marts, which will open for business at the corner of Eighth street and Wabash avenue in March, has purchased from Warner Brothers twenty Ben Turpin comedies and will distribute them in this territory at the rate of one every week. The comedies are in one reel.

While the Turpin comedies are re-issues, they are new prints and all of the accessory advertising that has been prepared in connection with them is new.

Money Counts!

S. J. Goldman, Chicago manager for Associated Producers, booked Mack Sennett’s “A Small Town Idol” into the Park theatre at Champaign, Ill. This wire was received from the exhibitor:

“We personally think it is the best thing Sennett has done and our patrons are more than pleased with it.”

But Mr. Sennett wanted to know the absolute box office value, so “Eph” Asher wired the exhibitor asking if he had made money. This is the reply:

“Don’t know what you call good business. We had to call out the police.”

Second Odor Bomb Is

Thrown in M. P. House

The Shakespeare theatre, at 942 East Forty-third street, Chicago, was the innocent victim of another odor bomb outrage on Sunday night. Patrons of the theatre were driven to the street and it was an hour before the performance could continue. This is the second time within two months that the Shakespeare has suffered at the hands of miscreants.

Order Bill Drafted

To Regulate Prices

Theatre Licenses Boosted

from 25 to 50 Per Cent

Two actions directly affecting Chicago exhibitors have been taken by the city court.

Theatre license fees have been boosted from 25 to 50 per cent. Under provisions of the new ordinance a sliding scale of license fees will run from $200 to $3,500, according to the seating capacity. The judiciary committee of the council has been ordered by the ordinance prohibiting the raising of admission prices on Saturday, Sunday and holidays.

Under the new license ordinance a tax of $200 would be levied on theatres seating 350 or less and charging a maximum admission price of 25 cents. The maximum tax is $3,200 for theatres seating 2,500 persons and charging an admission price of $6.

A Lone Armed Bandit

Rob theatre Watchman

A burglar who had concealed himself in the smoking room of Barbee’s Loop theatre, 59 West Monroe street, for three hours Sunday night, surprised and robbed the watchman of $9. The robber bound and gagged the watchman, Martin Karsl, and escaped through a rear door, leaving behind ten cents car fare for the man.

Karsl managed to free himself shortly afterward and notified the central police station that safekeepers had visited the place. Several squads of detectives and police hurried to the theatre but found that the safe had not been tampered with.

The police believe the robber secreted himself during the last show, shortly after midnight. He then emerged as Karsl was making his rounds and bound him with a rope. The theatre is located on a busy down-town street but the watchman was the only employe around the place at the time.

Paramount Stars Here

Two Paramount stars, Betty Compson and Thomas Meighan, were in Chicago this last week. While in the Windy City Miss Compson visited both the new Tivoli and the Riviera, the Balaban & Katz theatres.

To Build Merrill Theatre

MERRILL, WIS.—A new theatre will be erected here by A. L. Robarge.

Ben Garretson Back

Benjamin F. Garretson, well known publicity and advertising man, who has been located in New York for some time, has taken over the advertising for Guyon Paradise dancing school.
SHOTS AND MISSES

By Mac

According to Ben Edelman, exhibitor Ed Alger, St. Paul, has taken over the Colonial theatre at Urbana, making a five-link chain to date.

Cliff Bastar of the Selected Films exchange is being kept jolly busy these days escorting a certain fair star of cinemaland. It is the diminutive Miss Virginia Lee Corbin, who was featured in the recent Fox features, "Jack in the Beanstalk," "Aladdin's Lamp" and a host of other well-known successes. Seems this young lady is about to emulate her older sister players and is arranging to appear personally before throngs of admirers in the various film theatres throughout America.

With the splendid success accorded "The Sacred Flame," featuring Emily Stevens, exploited throughout this territory by Gollos & Gollos Film Company, Harold and George Gollos tell us they expect to release another big one, "Every Man's Price," a Burton King production starring Grace Darling. With this high-class society drama this new independent exchange will unquestionably rival the former offering when it is considered both these young men have acquired considerable experience as exhibitors and should know just what real showmen desire.

Though a wee bit late, we record another good resolution for '21. Tom Greenwood of the local Hodgkinson sales department has forsaken the romping dominoes and will give his attention in the future during his leisure moments to the scaly Scot's game, cow pasture billiards. By the bye, Tom, old deah—have a care when bounding to your executive chambers on the mezzanine balcony. If that darn of 'film can should be out of place, we predict a dire calamity, and why scare poor little golden locks when you know how mousy she is.

Brentlinger & Mason, popular magnates of Indiana, announce the opening of executive offices in Indianapolis to further a more efficient handling of their rapidly growing string of theatres throughout the Hoosier state.

H. G. Redmon, owner of the Majestic theatre, East St. Louis, Ill., is contemplating a trip to Cuba. We wonder? Bon voyage, Brother Redmon, may you return with the glory of "freedom" written gaily o'er your smiling countenance.

During the intense excitement prevailing at the opening of the gorgeous Senate theatre on the eve of February 12 we overlooked an outstanding item of note. Didya lamp Enore Tranx all doiled up in the swallowtail creation? We admit our social error. At that, Eddie was acclaimed unanimously the Beau Brummel of the event.

Ben Beadell, manager of the local Stoll Films exchange, tells us his crack sales organization and self have established an enviable sales record. They have sewed up all "key cities" and every "zone" in the Chicago territory for their company's product. Fine work, Ben! Better start making arrangements to order a few more extra prints, eh?

Art Holah of the Pathe exchange is giving considerable attention to the eastern railroad time tables out of Boston these days and 'tis rumored the charming Mrs. Art Holah is shortly to forsake the staid old eastern metropolis and join friend husband to establish a permanent home along the north shore of America's capital.

Have you all seen "Osc," Florine of late? Looks like the dentists have been giving him heaps of attention. Yes, there's a couple of private offices left, although several exhibitors confirm "Osc" is doing splendidly selling the Pathe films a la "wig-wag." Apparently some of our late buck private operators are about to pose when they complete the job. O. F. will look like a regular gold mine, not even hinting at cost of damages.

Joe Lyon has "revamped" the body of his Detroit pest. Now he finds it difficult to explain to the income tax collectors. They want to schedule a panel for the price of a Rolls-Royce. Put them back of the wheel, Joe, and there'll be no argument.

Lillian Walker, who has been giving patrons of McVickers a treat for a week by making personal appearances and giving two-minute talks, found time between her four-a-day shows to take a taxiful of carications and a little present out to the American Hospital for a fellow therapist, Karl Gardner, who is ill at that institution.

When one looks at the inviting appearance of the Rose, Alcatraz and Boston theatres, under the Jones, Linick & Schaefer regime, one marvels at what a little cleaning, paint and elbow grease will do. The lurid posters are gone and the bright lobbies are but a sample of the cleanliness inside. This is the front left ever give an inviting appearance also. The firm spent over $10,000 toward fixing the three houses up.

Max Schwartz kicks in with this item just as we are galloping to press. He's covering the North Side of Chicago now for Doll Van. As a film salesman Max has few equals.

Specialty Photoplay Now
In the State Right Field

M. Shutzker, president of Specialty Photoplay, Inc., has announced the entry of his company into the state right field. To date he has been confining his activities to conducting a New York and New Jersey exchange, but he will commence national operations at once.

The concern has moved to more spacious offices at 1600 Broadway, where the independent business will he maintained. Specialty Photoplay, Inc., has purchased the world rights on several negatives. These are at present being cut and titled and made ready for marketing.

Cherokee Theatre Company
Files Bill in Bankruptcy

CHEROKEE, Ia.—Sick and James Enterprises, the corporation formed for the construction of the New American theatre, has filed a petition in bankruptcy. P. M. Paterson, first president, has been succeeded by Walter James. The building is expected to be sold and then completed.

Improve Wisconsin House

FOND DU LAC, Wis.—Improvements and renovation will be made at the Bijou theatre by Manager F. R. Smith. The building was closed on January 9 for the purpose.

EXHIBITORS HERALD'S Special Supplement Devoted to Description and Views of Chicago's New Theatre With Acknowledgments to Those Through Whose Efforts This Temple of the Cinema Has Been Created.
The Senate

Four views of the interior of the beautiful new Lubliner and Trinz theatre, Chicago.

New Senate Theatre, Chicago
Offers Many Ideas to Builders

Construction and Equipment of Seventeenth Unit of Lubliner & Trinz Chain Marks Great Stride Forward
And Assures Comfort and Satisfaction for Patrons

By WILLIAM R. WEAVER

The Senate theatre, seventeenth unit in the Lubliner & Trinz chain, was officially opened on Feb. 12, marking a triumph for the owners and an important step forward in theatre construction. The seating capacity, 3,300, was insufficient to accommodate the thousands who attended the opening.

The theatre is located at the intersection of Madison street and Kedzie avenue, one of the most thickly populated sections of Chicago's West Side. Transportation facilities are such as to extend the drawing territory of the theatre to include in the case of all exceptional attractions the entire city.

The building fronts on Madison street, the nitrogen-filled globes used in the gigantic sign, in the marquee and outlining the building proper, creating a blaze of light which illuminates the immediate neighborhood with almost daylight brilliance.

A grand foyer 125 ft. wide by 60 ft. deep welcomes the patron. Crystal lighting fixtures, luxurious furniture, deep carpets, with brass railing used in moderation to heighten the effect of the Adam period color scheme, are features of this part of the theatre. Entrance to the auditorium is had from the left of the foyer, while a marble staircase leads to the balcony level.

The Adam period color scheme is carried out in the interior, 2,500 seats on the main floor and 1,010 in the balcony being designed in keeping and so liberally spaced and advantageously arranged as to insure excellent view of the screen from every part of the house.

A Tiffany dome, 60 ft. in diameter, illuminated by indirect lighting and lined with silver leaf, dominates the interior. A massive crystal fixture hung in the center of this adds a strong note of richness to the whole.

The proscenium arch, shown in an accompanying illustration, is said to be the widest in Chicago, measuring 100 ft. in width. An orchestra of 40 pieces occupies a spacious pit, also shown in the illustration, and a $20,000 organ is a part of the equipment.

The stage equipment is on a par with that of the modern legitimate theatre, ample provision being made for the use of elaborate presentation or special stage features. African marble pillars are so placed as to constitute ample stage setting for normal presentation yet give way to the scenery requirements of special features. Especial attention was given to acoustical demands in construction, with the result that a patron in the last row of the balcony or main floor may hear lines spoken upon the stage almost as clearly as in the main body or front of the house.

The main proscenium drop is made of over 800 yards of material. The total yardage of the draperies used in decoration is greater than in any of the other Lubliner & Trinz theatres, including the Pantheon, formerly regarded as the greatest of the chain. They are mainly of peacock blue, in velours and brocades, and were made and dyed especially for the theatre.

The stairway which leads off the main foyer to the balcony level opens upon a second foyer almost as large as that upon the main floor. Here the same style of furnishings are used, and off of this are located the nursery, wash rooms, check rooms, etc. A gentle incline leads to the balcony proper which is upon a single level.

The projection department proper generously accommodates three projectors. A separate room contains the two double 100 transversers, another a small projector and screen for private screenings, and in another room are located lockers and shower bath equipment for the operators. Throughout the theatre ample accommodations are provided for the 110 employees comprising the house staff.

The entire decorative scheme is in the Adam style, with a suggestion of Empire. The walls and ceilings of the main foyer are painted and glazed in soft pastel colors, against a background of cinnamon green.

The proscenium drop is of blue-green, with green trimming. Chinese Chippendale and Italian Renaissance styles particularly well adapted to the Adam period color scheme, dominate the foyers, dressing rooms, etc., as regards furniture.

To the management and to the artisans whose work is represented in the Senate theatre much credit is due. The former have established a reputation throughout the country for consistent showmanship. Their seventeenth theatre is their greatest. The latter have contributed to a structure of which any community well may be proud.

Chicago theatricals were materially advanced with the opening on Lincoln's Birthday, 1921, of a theatre well qualified to attain and hold a high place among the entertainment institutions of the nation.
Importance of Electricity
In Greatness of the Senate

Its Influence Is Felt Throughout From Time
Patron Is First Attracted by Huge Exterior Sign

Electricity plays an important part in the greatness of the new Senate. A great many advances have been made here-tofores unknown in the American silent drama playhouse by the Hub Electric company in charge of the electrical installations.

A mammoth roof sign totalling approximately ten thousand square feet, manufactured by the Chicago Electric Sign company, can be seen for many miles with its many thousand miniature lamps revolving and rotating in a spectacular pretation of "Lubliner & Trinz Senate Theatre."

With this as an introduction, the patron is taken charge of electrically and its presence is manifested during the entire visit. In the grand lobby, on the mezzanine floor, by the aisle lights which illuminate the way to seats in the darkened auditorium and by the perfect projection, the importance of electricity to the theatre is constantly emphasized.

At the completion of the play, the patron is amazed at the soft glowing colors, emerging from concealed sources, and glowing from the magnificent Tiffany tinted dome which acts as the melting pot for colors, blending from red to scarlet, crimson, violet, blue and turquoise in rapid succession.

One of the features unheard of in the operation of electrical effects in the modern theatre, is that the operating electrician is located in orchestra pit, with the orchestra, under the direction of the orchestra leader, where lights and music can be harmonized, adding to the effectiveness; also permitting the operator a view of both stage and auditorium. This departure from the old established custom has many advantages permissing the removal from the stage of the switchboard, which altways takes up large valuable space; also permitting all electrically charged parts to be placed in basement away from any possible chance of accidental contact or a likely repetition of the awful theatre catastrophe that befell us over a decade ago.
This control is made possible through a duplex locking multiple remote controlled switchboard, manufactured and installed by the Hub Electric Company.

All reflectors and color screens are designed for the high efficient gas filled Nitrogen lamp. This work entailed considerable expense on account of the intense heat developed with this type lamp in connection with color screens, removing the possibility of breakage through heat expansion and fading of color screens.

The organ, which is concealed behind the grill, is electrically operated, each key is controlled by a magnetic switch that responds to the touch of the operator located in the orchestra.

The beautiful curtain which raises and lowers so gracefully, is operated by "Cesco" Electric Curtain Operator, which is controlled by switches located in the operating room, orchestra pit and on the stage.

Senate’s Balcony Largest of Reinforced Concrete Kind

The masonry, fire-proofing and reinforced concrete on the Senate was done by S. L. Cooper, a Chicago theatre construction expert who has, perhaps, done more large theatre work of this nature than anyone in the Middle West. To get an adequate idea of the great amount of the work of this kind that went into this building and the skillful and perfect method in which it was carried through, one must see for himself.

Included under Mr. Cooper’s scope of the work was the construction of the balcony. This balcony is one of the unique features, not only of the Senate, but of theatre construction in general, and can truly be considered as a remarkable engineering feat, it being the largest reinforced concrete balcony in the world. Running across it at regular intervals are immense cantilevers of enormous strength. An idea of their great strength may be gathered from the fact that in the test by the Chicago city engineers, one of these cantilevers sustained, by itself, the tremendous weight of two hundred thousand pounds, with no deflection. The concrete for this balcony had to be poured continuously, which required day and night shifts of skilled laborers, and in order to make absolutely certain that the work would continue without interruption, an extra complete concrete machinery outfit was installed for emergency purposes.

The Senate is the third theatre that Mr. Cooper has constructed for Lubliner & Trinz, he having previously done the Michigan and Covent Garden theatres, also of Chicago.

Excavation and Foundation Work Done by W. J. Newman Co.

When it came to the question of excavation and foundation work for the new Senate, one of Chicago’s foremost organizations in this line of endeavor was chosen, the W. J. Newman Company, 21 North Curtis street.

The company had back of it as credentials for this important task the record of many of the largest contracts of this nature in Chicago’s loop district. Work on the Marshall Field building, the City Hall, the County building, the Insurance Exchange building and one of the biggest jobs in Chicago’s building history, construction of the new Union Depot, all bears the Newman imprint.

In addition to this, practically all the work of Sears-Roebuck, the world’s largest mail-order business, is awarded to the Newman company.

W. J. Newman is president of the company and John T. Carroll is secretary and treasurer. Mr. Newman pronounced the basement of the theatre as a “modern and up-to-date arrangement.”

Typhoon Cooling System in Senate Greatly Developed

To Care for This Important Feature Several Units Typhoon Twin Sets Were Installed

Some idea of the wonderful development in the Typhoon Cooling System can be obtained by a study of the equipment provided for the Senate theatre by this company. To properly take care of this important feature of the theatre it was found necessary to install several units each composed of the twelve-foot Typhoon Twin Set. By means of this equipment the theatre is assured of the proper temperature both summer and winter.

Ernst Glantzberg, president of the Typhoon Fan Company, began his career in the ventilating field in making ventilating and heating apparatus for schools and churches. He realized then the coming necessity of properly cooling and ventilating the motion picture theatre and set about the building of a system that would not only properly ventilate and cool any theatre, but would at the same time be so efficient as to actually increase the attendance in theatres during the hot weather.

Typhoon outfits similar to those installed in the Senate, are being placed in theatres throughout the country, and from everywhere the most favorable accounts of their operation are being received.

Striking Crystal Fixture Evokes Public's Admiration

Was Designed and Installed by General Lighting Fixtures Company Which Furnished Lighting Scheme

One of the features of greatest charm in the new Senate and which evokes constant admiration is the striking crystal fixture hung in the center of the huge dome. This was designed and installed by the General Lighting Fixtures Company, which concern is also accountable for the elaborate lighting system which prevails throughout the theatre.

This company has been a favorable factor in this particular field from the earliest days of motion picture presenta-

Tons of Steel Guarantee Senate's Structural Worth

Though not visible to the eye, steel played an important part in the erection of the Senate theatre. The entire steel construction was fabricated and installed by the Duffin Iron Company, Chicago, one of the largest and best-known concerns in the Middle West.

The entire amount of structural steel used weighed in excess of 387 tons. The back stage girder, roof trusses, weighed 26 tons and in addition to this there were eight other roof trusses weighing 23 tons each with a clear span of 22 feet. The two balcony girders weigh 13 tons apiece.

Among the latest feats of construction of this company are the Webster Hotel, one of Chicago's newest, and also the Vista and Cosmopolitan theatres on the South Side.

Adam Style Decorating by Plamondon-Gabriel Company

The entire decorating scheme of the Senate was designed and carried out by Plamondon-Gabriel Company, painting and decorating, Chicago. It is in the Adam style, with little feeling of Empire.

To this company goes the credit of the effectiveness of the large dome in the center of the main auditorium which is all brought out in aluminum leaf, glazed, representing the sky with a clouded effect. This, when illuminated in the various colors, produces a beautiful effect.

The furniture in the main foyer is of the Italian Renaissance period that lends itself to the Adam, which are all richly carved and covered in copies of rich antique tapestries and mohairs. This same treatment is carried out on the mezzanine floor, where the walls are hung with rich velvet and trimmed with bands together with tassels and cords of gold.

Projection Booth Said to Be One of the Most Complete in Existence; Use
Two Double 100 Transverters

Equipment of the Senate theatre is another triumph added to the accomplishments of the Exhibitors Supply Company of Chicago. The complete booth and lobby equipment was furnished by this progressive company.

No detail in equipment has been overlooked. This fact is apparent by the following partial list of the installations. Three type "S" Simplex projectors; two double 100 transverters; three Peerless automatic arc control; three Snapolite lenses; two lightning change makers; two Simplex four-unit ticket sellers and a Minusa gold fibre screen.

The fact that Lubliner & Trinz have favored the Exhibitors Supply Company with the greater portion of their equipment business clearly indicates that this company is able to meet every need of this discriminating organization.

The projection room is said to be one of the most complete in existence and its excellent and practical facilities are directly due to the ingenuity of the men at the head of the Exhibitors Supply Company.

Roof of the Senate Theatre
Constructed by Johnson & Co.

In accord with the high quality of the work on the Senate theatre, J. Johnson & Company of 5608 Wentworth avenue, was selected for the roofing work.

The Johnson company is a pioneer in Chicago in this line of work and has built up an enviable reputation both in their home city and in surrounding points.

All angles are covered by the company, which makes a specialty of felt, composition and gravel roofing. "Roofs examined and estimates cheerfully furnished," is the slogan upon which the success of the company has been built.

The News, The Whole News—and Nothing But the News

EXHIBITORS HERALD believes that the time is opportune for the declaration of certain editorial principles and policies that have been in effect and will remain in effect in the production of this publication.

In explanation of the extraordinary readers' interest that is now generally attributed to this publication we point out that a fundamental principle of our editorial policy since the inception of the publication has been to print the news, the whole news and nothing but the news.

We have never been reconciled to the belief that the reams of futile, vain and meaningless publicity matter that has received publication elsewhere in this industry has ever served any good purpose; we believe those at whose instance this matter has been printed have been invariably more harmed than benefited by its publication.

* * *

We believe that the exhibitor, the man for whom the legitimate trade paper is produced, has been overwhelmingly nauseated by having had cast before his eyes weekly long, verbose articles extolling in superlative terms the merits of this man or that product. He has been surfeited with encomium, boast and promise until a very natural revolt ensued wherein these very ambiguously written press notices, instead of serving the purpose intended, merely serve to annoy and irritate the reader and as a result belittled and stultified the subject.

EXHIBITORS HERALD believes that in accepting an exhibitor's subscription it likewise accepts a trust; and in the proper discharge of this trust it does not believe it is privileged to include in its columns any matter that does not accurately tally with the highest standards of news value. This publication does not envision its function as a common carrier of press notices which no sane man, intelligently informed in film matters, can take seriously. On the contrary it believes that its function is to cause to be published only such matter as constitutes a legitimate chronicle of events in the film industry, written briefly on the assumption that the exhibitor is a busy man and has no time to waste in wading through extraneous matter that serves no purpose other than puffery.

* * *

The result of this policy has been that there has been carried home to the minds of the readers a conviction that every item printed is for the reader's information and for no other purpose. This has won the confidence and reliance of readers, making every item printed and instrument of influence and has gained the respect and good will of its clientele in a manner and in a degree that cannot be matched where any other policy obtains.

This policy, exemplified by EXHIBITORS HERALD alone in this industry, having received the approbation of the trade, will be carried on.

The columns of this publication will continue devoted exclusively to the news, the whole news and nothing but the news.

A Big Surprise to All New York!

Public and critics wildly enthusiastic over first big feature picture without a subtitle. Call it Charles Ray's Best. Read what they say:

AN ACHIEVEMENT
"An achievement that rid's the photoplay of its most cumbrous burden. No single step in the development of motion pictures is of more importance than that taken by Charles Ray in making a picture without a single subtitle. It is so well handled that none misses the titles."—New York World.

IT'S THE MILLENNIUM
"The picture is the millennium. A sheer delight, poetry of the screen, an idyll of youth. One of Charles Ray's best character studies, human and sincere."—New York Morning Telegraph.

UNIQUE AND ELOQUENT
"A unique picture, a sign post that points a way that sooner or later will be generally followed. Full of fun and all can enjoy it. It is something different, something new and important—rich, suggestive, full of genuine life, of humor, spontaneity, freshness and vigor. Never has Charles Ray's pantomine been more eloquent."—New York Times.

A MASTERPIECE

A DELIGHT
"Charles Ray is the youth of about every one of us. Delicious situations in which this most likable actor employs a skill as fine as anything he has ever done. It is a delight."—New York American.

HIS ULTIMATE BEST
"A joyous tale of youth. It is James Whitcomb Riley's poem with the camera weaving the rhymes. It brings a breath of beauty and spring from life that is real, something refreshing, clean, human. It is Ray at his ultimate best. An ideal motion picture of surpassing beauty and lure."—New York Mail.

EACH ONE'S OWN LIFE
"Charles Ray demonstrates the grace and shading of his acting. Everyone who laughs, is laughing into a mirror. It is their own life."—New York Post.

FULL-OF-HEART INTEREST
"You will find no end of delight in it. From the opening scene to the close the story is brimful of heart interest. A poetic photoplay."—New York Telegram.

A JOY FOREVER
"Charles Ray is a joy forever in his inimitable mimicry of boyhood. Delightful."—New York Globe.

ALMOST INCREDIBLE
"The perfect specimen of the rural species for which movie fans have been waiting. It is almost incredible that a picture could give such constant merriment without growing tiresome for a moment."—New York Sun.

PERFECT PANTOMINE
"One of Ray's very best, and that means it is remarkably good. A perfect pantomine. A delightful hour of unmarred humor; one of those pictures you will want to see again."—New York Daily News.

A First National Attraction
A Greater Picture Public
By MARTIN J. QUIGLEY

In a rather indefinite manner the opinion seems to be generally accepted in the industry that practically all of the potential motion picture patrons of the country are now numbered among those who visit the theatres. The impression seems to exist that the motion picture public of America is now full grown and that nothing remains to be done but to keep it satisfied.

Whether or not this is the opinion generally held the circumstances seem to warrant the conclusion that this is actually the opinion which exists in many quarters.

If this is not the opinion then the utter absence of any constructive program embraced by the industry generally to win new patrons to the motion picture is hardly understandable. And it is a fact that no such program has been undertaken or advanced.

It is our opinion that there are literally millions of potential patrons who are now outside the lines of the acknowledged motion picture public who remain there simply because the industry has made no efforts away from the beaten tracks of publicity to bring these people into the theatres.

* * *

Thus far the public has come to the motion picture; it has not been necessary to go after it. The building of the vast motion picture public which now exists has been practically spontaneous. In the earlier days the very novelty of the pictures in motion attracted and fascinated. Then as the art of the motion picture developed there came a gradual drift of popular attention toward the film theatres, induced almost entirely by the innate attractiveness of the motion picture rather than through the efforts of the industry to sell its product to the public.

 Everywhere in the commercial activities of the nation we have examples of industries of vast scope which are already retailing huge volumes of their product to the public yet they are tireless in their efforts to broaden the market for their product. There is the tobacco industry, for example: Obviously there exists a ready-made demand of huge proportions for tobacco products in every form. Notwithstanding this there are evidences on every side of energetic propaganda, both plain and subtle, aimed to increase the consumption of tobacco.

Then there are industries concerned with such prosaic products as brick and concrete which carry on vigorous campaigns to promote the uses of their goods. In foodstuffs there are innumerable examples of the natural, already existing demand being stimulated in such a manner as to augment substantially the requirements of the market.

* * *

As far as this theory applies to the motion picture there may be movements that appear to be of a more pressing nature affecting the industry yet there are none that hold out equal possibilities for the future.

According to the most generous estimates the motion picture public of America at this time is substantially under twenty million people. In the light of the accepted universal appeal of the motion picture it appears very plainly that there is a great deal of truth in the bromide to the effect that only the surface has been scratched.

It appears to us that in this subject lies a work of tremendous importance to be undertaken which must some day be embraced by the industry at large. Plans entirely away from routine publicity efforts must be put into operation. The newspapers of the country which presently devote a ridiculous minimum of attention to the motion picture must be shown the advantages to themselves as well as to this industry in assuming a consistent attitude toward the screen.

With proper effort and correct means the existing motion picture public of America can easily be doubled in numbers.

Re-Takes

J. R. M.

The melancholy days have come
The saddest ones of Lent
When I gotta pay the income tax
On the money I have spent.

The loud cheers for the author of the above little poem having subsided we will proceed to get down to business.

All Wrong Again

Revenue officers down in Kentucky threated the arrest of one of our crack directors the other day. They heard he had a couple of stills in his lobby.

After examining the stills, however (they were of a late Christie comedy), the officers declared them O. K. and passed in, on their badges.

Can't Be Done

Bill Keene, he of the Kern Film Company, Los Angeles, there isn't a pair of puttees on the lot of his company. Now how are they going to make pictures without 'em? * ask you, Bill?*

It is said the furniture factories of Grand Rapids, Mich., are just catching up with their orders for twin beds since the First National picture "Twin Beds" started an epidemic of windows displays advertising the feature.

Poor Inheritance

A man might inherit a thirst for strong drink but that's all: he'd still do it.

The prohibitionists will probably throw away all their Red Seal photograph records upon the news that Caruso was fed whisky during his recent illness.

And they probably won't go to see his pictures if he ever makes any more.

Here's a New One

Got to hand it to A. A. Milne, the English humorist, now making screen comedies, for this one. He says there are no less than 1,957,341 books in one of his latest comedies.

Competition

There's been quite a falling off in attendance at theatres in New York according to reports. People who formerly went to the theatre to see thrillers, sit at home and watch the tragedies happening on the streets.

Yes They Do

How high-brow some folks get all of a sudden. A newspaper that conducts a "What Do You Think?" column had a reporter ask five persons what kind of motion pictures they liked best, and they all said they liked educational pictures. This didn't happen in Boston, either: "Twas in New York.

Petie Smith, who used to rope and tie trade paper editors on Broadway, is on the war path. This time he's shooting Indians up in Minnesota. (Shooting five companies over the country with "Bob Hampton of Place" stickers pasted all over 'em.)

And a Lot More Remunerative

Clayton Hamilton, who is a member of the Goldwyn editing staff, says: "To be a great ball player is more impressive than to be a mediocre painter, a second rate statesman or an author."

National Association Makes Concerted Effort to Keep Films Clean and Wholesome Action Results from Years of Endeavor to Place Production on Uniform Basis in This Respect

LARGE COMPANIES PARTICIPATE IN MOVE

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEW YORK, March 8.—A concrete plan for eliminating the possibility of producing objectionable pictures has been agreed upon by members of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

Adoption of this remedial plan is the culmination of years of effort by producers and distributors to place production on a uniform basis in this respect.

The action taken by the N. A. M. P. I. members “will insure against the production of questionable films and will prevent also the exploitation of pictures in a manner offensive to good taste.”

Executive officials of all the larger companies attended the meeting at which this drastic step was taken.

In the resolutions adopted by them “any member wilfully refusing to carry into effect these resolutions shall be subject to expulsion as a member of the association and further subject to such other penalties as the association may fix.”

These companies represent approximately 90 per cent of the motion picture production in the United States.

Reaffirmation of “its emphatic protest against the production, distribution and exhibition of all motion pictures which are obscene, salacious, indecent and immoral” was expressed by the association in resolutions unanimously adopted by the members heretofore mentioned.

Although stating that “the motion picture should not be prostituted to use or as a means towards arousing bawdy emotions or panter a salacious curiosity, or in any other manner injurious to public welfare,” the resolutions declared that “the creators of the art must in no way be hampered or prohibited from depicting honestly and clearly life as it is.”

The association also declares its “intention to aid and assist the properly constituted authorities in the criminal prosecution of any producer, distributor or exhibitor of motion pictures who shall produce, distribute or exhibit any obscene, salacious or immoral motion picture in violation of the law to the end that the recognized public good be accomplished by the motion picture shall be preserved and advanced.”

The resolutions conclude with an appeal to exhibitors, producers and distributors not members of the association to cooperate in carrying “into full effect these resolutions” which have been adopted.

Remedial Plan of Association

RESOLVED: To the end that the motion picture be held in that high plane which it has already attained, that the producers of motion pictures refrain from producing such motion pictures.

(a) Which emphasize and exaggerate sex appeal or depict scenes therein exploiting interest in sex in an improper or suggestive form or manner.

(b) Based upon white slavery or commercialized vice or scenes showing the procurement of women or any of the activities attendant upon such traffic.

(c) Thematically making prominent an illicit love affair which tends to make virtue odious and vice attractive.

(d) With scenes which exhibit nakedness or persons scantily dressed, particularly suggestive bedroom and bathroom scenes and scenes of inviting dances.

(e) With scenes which unnecessarily prolong expressions or demonstrations of passionate love.

(f) Predominantly concerned with the underworld or vice and crime, and like scenes, unless the scenes are part of an essential conflict between good and evil.

(g) Of stories which make drunkenness and gambling attractive or with scenes which show the use of narcotics and other unnatural practices dangerous to social morality.

(h) Of stories and scenes which may instruct the morally feeble in methods of committing crime or by cumulative processes emphasize crime and the commission of crime.

(i) Of stories or scenes which ridicule or deprecate public officials, officers of the law, the United States Army, the United States Navy or other governmental authority, or which tend to weaken the authority of the law.

(j) Of stories or with scenes or incidents which offend the religious belief of any person, creed or sect or ridicule ministers, priests, rabbis, or recognized leaders of any religious sect, and also which are disrespectful to objects or symbols used in connection with any religion.

(k) Of stories or with scenes which unduly emphasize bloodshed and violence without justification in the structure of the story.

(l) Of stories or with scenes which are vulgar and portray improper gestures, posturings and attitudes.

(m) With salacious titles, and sub-titles in connection with their presentation or exhibition, and the use of salacious advertising matter, photographs and lithographs in connection therewith.
Organize to Combat Adverse Legislation
Every Person in Industry Is Asked to Join Affiliated Picture Interests

LOS ANGELES, March 8—Corporation, Affiliated Picture Interests organization which every person connected with any branch of the motion picture industry will be asked to join for the purpose of protecting their means of livelihood from adverse legislation.

Frank E. Woods of the Screen Writers' Guild is chairman of the organizing body of fourteen. Ted Taylor is secretary.

The committee is composed of William D. Taylor, Motion Picture Directors' Association; W. J. Reynolds, Motion Picture Producers' Association; Joseph Ashurst Jackson, Western Motion Picture Advertisers; Glenn Harmon, Los Angeles Theatre Owners' Association; Frederick Palmer, Palmer Photoplay Corporation; Ralph Lewis, Actors' Association of Los Angeles; Philip N. Rosen, American Society of Cinematographers; Charles H. Kyson, Art Directors' Association; Scott R. Beal, Assistant Directors' Association; Dr. John T. Thompson, Ethical Motion Picture Corporation; Edwin A. Keller, J. A. T. S. E. and Moving Picture Operators; J. H. Goldberg, Los Angeles Film Exchange Board of Trade, and Wycliffe A. Hill, Photoplaywrights' League of America.

Blackstone Company to Build $1,000,000 House

SOUTH BEND, IND., March 8—Directors of the new Blackstone theatre announce that within the next two years they will erect a theatre and hotel building in South Michigan street at a cost of approximately $1,000,000. Frank C. Toepf, treasurer of Blackstone Corporation, says the new hotel will be a 250 or 300-room structure.

Cromelin Protests Duty on Raw Film Asked by Brulatour

NEW YORK, March 8—Paul Cromelin, president of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, has made public a brief filed with Representative Wood, chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, considering tariff revision, in which he answers the plea of Julie Brulatour, made before the Committee, for a 30 per cent ad valorem duty on imported raw stock.

In his brief, Mr. Cromelin declares that "there is no duty on raw stock now and the best interests of the motion picture industry will be served by not altering the present rate. He attached a letter from the Gaventa Company of America, Inc., raw stock manufacturers, with letters abroad, stating that a duty would practically put it out of business here.

He charges that Brulatour spoke for the Eastman Kodak Company, which he says manufactures between 85 and 90 per cent of the raw film used in the United States.

Indiana Paper Directs Blue Law Referendum

HUNTINGTON, IND., March 8—A local newspaper is publishing ballots on which citizens are asked to vote their sentiment on the matter of a blue Sunday, a wide open Sunday or a Sunday partly blue such as existed before. Prosecutor Charles R. Haller began the strict enforcement of all Sunday laws. Voters are told that if they cannot vote for a blue Sunday and at the same time vote in favor of Sunday pictures.

Invest New York Capital

SUNBURY, PA., March 8—New York and local capital will be invested in a $250,000 theatre here.
6,000 Expected to Attend Convention at Minneapolis

Gathering of Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America June 7-9 to be Largest Exhibitor Meeting in History of Industry

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., March 8—Preparations for entertaining more than 6,000 visitors during the convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America June 7, 8, and 9 have already started.

Ninety days will not give the United Theatrical Protective League any too much time to take care of the thousand and one details of what it is determined to make the greatest gathering of theatre owners in the history of the world.

Civic Association Is Co-operating

William A. Steffes, president of the U. T. P. L., in addition to the united support of his organization, is being given complete co-operation by the Minneapolis Civic and Commerce Association. Perry S. Williams, convention and publicity manager of the association, is already at work on preliminary arrangements.

From all parts of the United States letters of inquiry are pouring in as to accommodations. Several hotels have received urgent requests for reservations from as far east as Boston and as far west as San Francisco.

National Officers Coming

Within a few weeks representatives of the national exhibitor organization and several state organizations are expected to arrive to confer over details and aid in the work.

Joseph Hopp, president of the Illinois Exhibitors’ Alliance, declares that the delegation from Illinois alone will number 500 and may be much larger.

Advises from the East indicate semi-annual meetings are to be held within the next few weeks to select delegates and arrange for big delegations. A number of the Eastern state organizations are planning on special trains to carry their members and families.

From the West reports are equally as enthusiastic. Minnesota, Wisconsin, North and South Dakota and Montana are striving for 100 per cent representation during the session.

First Real National Gathering

It is pointed out that the Minneapolis meeting will be the first real national gathering of theatre owners.

Since the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America was launched at Cleveland a year ago, every part of the United States has been thoroughly organized.

The membership of the M. P. T. O. A today far exceeds that of any of the former exhibitor organizations and reaches several territories where there was no previous organization of any kind.

To Open Goldwyn Offices in Berlin

(From Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, March 8—Arthur Ziehm, foreign sales manager for Goldwyn, will sail on Thursday for Germany to open headquarters for the European distribution of the Goldwyn product. He will meet Samuel Goldwyn, who sailed February 26, in Berlin, where offices will be established.

Metro to Transfer All Units to Coast

(From Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, March 8—Metro has decided definitely to concentrate its production activities on the Coast. Only one company is working here at present, the Bert Lytell unit under the direction of Maxwell Karger, and this will be moved west as soon as the present picture, “The Man Who,” is completed. The concluding scenes are being shot in Atlanta, Ga.

The Metro studios in 63rd street have been shared by George D. Baker, who is making George D. Baker Productions for Sawyer-Lubin as Metro productions. Sawyer-Lubin say they have not decided whether or not to follow the Metro lead.

Aschers Plan $750,000 Playhouse in Appleton

(From Exhibitors Herald)

APPLETON, WIS., March 8.—Ascher Brothers of Chicago are considering the erection of a theatre to seat 1,500 patrons and to cost $750,000.

Blank Buys in Sioux City

SIOUX CITY, Ia.—A $500,000 picture house will be erected this coming summer upon the recently purchased Pierce street property by A. H. Blank of Des Moines.
Passage of Substitute Bill Puts Censorship in Discard in the Indiana Legislature

Women of State Join Forces With Exhibitors in Seeking Indefinite Postponement of Coactive Measure

(From Staff Correspondent)

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., March 8.—Censorship has been defeated in Indiana.

Exhibitors and other film interests aided by the Women's Endorsers have obtained indefinite postponement of the one surviving censorship measure.

Substitute Is Adopted

Substituting this bill is a measure making it unlawful to exhibit pictures of an immoral or obscene nature or displaying prize fights, bull fights and murder or violence. This bill has passed the senate.

The one surviving censorship measure had been the storm center in both houses for several weeks. It was a composite bill substituted for three that previously had been introduced.

Not a Censorship Bill

The new bill, adopted in the senate, is not a censorship measure. It would make it unlawful for any person, firm or corporation engaged in the business of conducting a moving picture show or of exhibiting motion pictures or any other public exhibition of any nature whatsoever to exhibit, display or permit to be exhibited or displayed any picture, performance or any other representation which is of an immoral, obscene, inhuman or indecent character, or which presents, exhibits or displays any bull fight, prize fights, act of murder, 'criminal violence or any other exhibition or representation of such character as to a corrupt the morals or incite to crime.'

Violators of any of the provisions of the act would be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction would be fined in any sum not less than $25 and not more than $250.

Woman Exhibitor Foils Attempt to Rob House

(From Staff Correspondent)

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., March 8.—An armed highwayman tried to hold up Mrs. Charles Cook, owner of a picture theatre in West Washington street while she was in the cashier's booth. Mrs. Cook's screams frightened the man away and he made his escape with three confederates in a taxicab.

Thirty-eighth Theatre Bought by Butterfield

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

PORT HURON, MICH., March 8.—The Butterfield interests have purchased the Majestic theatre her. This is the thirty-eighth house in Michigan to come under the control of Butterfield.

Censorship Victory in S. D. Senate Surprise

(Public to Exhibitors Herald)

PIERRE, S. D., March 8.—Passage of the censorship measure here by the senate occasioned the same surprise as did the victory for the reformers in the lower house. At the time of the bill's passage by the house it was rumored that the action merely was an effort to shove the measure into the senate, where it was predicted confidently that defeat awaited it. If approved now by the house the law becomes effective on August 1.

Hostettler Circuit Has Thirty-six Houses

(Public to Exhibitors Herald)

LINCOLN, NEB., March 8.—Recent acquisitions by J. E. and J. O. Hostettler increase their circuit of theatres in the Middle West to thirty-six houses. Two theatres at Fairbury and two at Norfolk have just been purchased by the Hostettlers.

Bars Sunday Shows For Charity Unless Permit Is Granted

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

JERSEY CITY, N. J., March 8.—Benefit performances, excepting those for which a permit is granted, are prohibited in Jersey City under an order issued last Wednesday by Police Chief Richard T. Battersby. The order was issued following the complaint of the committee of ministers who charged that exhibitors were giving charitable performances on Sunday and receiving most of the receipts. The order reads:

'Theatre and motion picture houses will not be permitted to open for business Sundays. Should any performance be permitted the captain of the precinct will be notified by letter from the chief. The law in reference to children attending must be enforced.

Charitable performances, which in the chief's opinion are justifiable, will be allowed under permit.

Council Gives License In Face of Protests

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

ST. PAUL, MINN., March 8.—Despite a petition signed by residents of the neighborhood at Grand avenue and Oxford street protesting against the operation of a theatre, the city council with but one dissenting vote granted a license to G. W. Granstrom. The aldermen took little cognizance of the threats of residents that they would seek retaliation at the next election.

Grants Court Appeal From Board Decision

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

PROVIDENCE, R. I., March 8.—The censorship bill introduced in the house by Representative Kiernan makes it illegal to exhibit such pictures as are "cruel, obscene, sacrilegious, indecent or immoral. Three persons, one a woman, would constitute the board. Exhibitors dissatisfied with the board's decision could appeal to the superior court.

Fox Buys Site for $1,000,000 House

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEW BRITAIN, Conn., March 8.—William Fox has bought the site of the Landers home here and will erect upon it a $1,000,000 theatre. Work will be started in the Spring.

The fact that the Fox theatre corporation held an option on the site was announced in the last issue of Exhibitors Herald.

Wert Takes Possession

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

MILTON, N. D., March 8.—E. D. Wert has taken over the management of the Star theatre.

The NEW BEDFORD (Mass.) STANDARD Says

Under cover of stamping out the salacious in screen plays it is proposed to clothe a public official with authority to say what sort of ideas, religious, social, political, shall reach the people through this medium. Better the evil that there is in pictures than this throttling of the constitutional rights of freedom of speech—for that is what picture censorship amounts to.
Utah Legislature Proposes to Muzzle Screen With Drastic Censorship and Sunday Laws

Issues Program to Spread Propaganda Against Censorship

Every time A. L. Hepp of the Ijoy Hour theatre, Greeley, Neb., issues a house program he takes advantage of its circulation to disseminate anti-censorship propaganda.

The March issue is printed on heavy red stock, 11 by 14 inches in size. Centered on the one-sheet is the calendar for the month and the productions booked. On the margin are printed arguments against censorship, many of these being excerpts from speeches of prominent men and from newspaper editorials.

In every other division of the calendar denoting the days is printed an advertisement, thus making the program not only one of information but also a paying proposition.

The glaring red stock assures a reading.

Charged With Robbery

ELKHART, IND., March 8—Harry Sterling is in the Elkhart jail charged with the theft of $600 from the sale of the Orpheum theatre last October.

Buys Miles City Theatre

MILES CITY, MONT., March 8—Donald Stewart of Cheyenne, Wyo., has purchased the Strand theatre from Tom Smith and F. E. Head.

What Exhibitors Are Saying About EXHIBITORS HERALD

"EXHIBITORS HERALD is SOME PAPER. Don't know just how bad we would miss it if we couldn't get it."—R. O. Rhoades, manager, Orpheum theatre, Converse, Ind.

"Having sold the Liberty theatre, will you please change the address on my EXHIBITORS HERALD at once, so I will be sure to get it? I don't want to miss a single copy as I expect to locate in the theatre business again soon."—Fred L. Ryder, Liberty theatre, Sharon, Wis.

"Am renewing my subscription for two years. I find EXHIBITORS HERALD my greatest help. I don't understand how you can put out a magazine as complete and elaborate as the HERALD for the price you get."—Sam Campbell, manager, Endeavor theatre, Endeavor, Wis.
Sioux City Man Claims Invention Of Fireproof Film

Manufacturer Declares It Will Take Photographic Emulsion As Well As Celluloid and Can Be Made Cheaper, Lighter and Stronger

A FİLM that is noncombustible! This is the claim of Henry A. Meyer, a manufacturer of Sioux City, La.

Besides being fireproof Mr. Meyer declares the film can be made cheaper, and is lighter and stronger than the celluloid used in production.

Meyers is of the opinion that his invention will revolutionize the industry. He says:

"One of the biggest problems of motion picture theatres is to guard against fire. The films now in use not only are highly inflammable, but will explode if subjected to unusual heat."

"To guard against the fire danger operators' booths have to be constructed of steel or other fireproof material. This necessitates great expense and practically bars motion pictures from rural communities because fire regulations prohibit them in halls and schools where fireproof protection rooms have not been built.

"My film will take photographic emulsion just as well as celluloid and does away entirely with the danger of fire. It also can be made cheaper, and is lighter and stronger."

Meyer claims also that his process can be used in the manufacture of unbreakable glass, a covering for airplane wings which is inflammable and sanitary surgical dressings which do not irritate a wound.

For six years Meyer has worked on his invention. In that time he claims to have spent $50,000 in experimentation. He has been granted patents and is now installing machinery in his plant in West Sioux City for production. Associated with him are B. H. Kingsbury and F. L. Eaton, both of Sioux City.

This process, according to Meyer, was first discovered by a young woman who was experimenting with an emulsion which would give a skin like finish to dolls. Mr. Meyer obtained the rights to the formula for $25,000. Before it was perfected the woman died and for the last six years chemists have been working on it.

During the war the government used the covering for airplane wings.

Tom Terriss to Make International Pictures

NEW YORK, March 8.—Tom Terriss, for the last three years producing Tom Terriss Productions for Vitagraph, has signed a contract to do special features for International Film Company. The features will be based on Heart Magazine stories. His first story has not been selected.

Mr. Terriss produced "Dead Men Tell No Tales," "Trumpet Island" and others for Vitagraph.

Industry Turns Over $650,000 to Hoover Drive Is Still in Progress By Houses in Various Parts of U. S.

NEW YORK, March 7—Thus far the motion picture industry has collected $650,000 for the Herbert Hoover relief fund for the starving children of Europe.

This sum, $160,000 representing the collections made by the theatres of Greater New York and the $500,000 representing the national committee's collections from over the country, is but the first payment. Many theatres continue to send in returns.

Hold Meeting at Capitol

Delivery of the money was made at a meeting at the Capitol theatre last week.

S. L. Rothafel, chairman of Greater New York, and H. A. Pettijohn, chairman of the national committee, acted on behalf of the industry. James J. Rick, comptroller of the relief fund, received the money.

The following Greater New York theatres were notably successful, among them:

The Times, of New York, received an estimated $2,100; the Roxy, $1,100; Capitol, $1,200; Times, $1,300; the Paramount, $1,400; and the Rialto, $1,500.

Active Campaign Closes

The meeting marked the close of the active drive for the Relief Fund and the various committees were discharged. Mrs. Forester will remain as Mr. Rothafel's assistant until all funds have been turned over to the relief council and accounts settled.

Among those present were: Mrs. Julia Forester, S. L. Rothafel, Charles Pettijohn, James J. Rick, J. E. Chadwick, New York Film Club; Harry H. Buxbaum, Famous Players; H. G. Einstein, Hoover Relief Council; C. L. Yeardsley, First National; Mr. Behrens, Behrens Supply Co.; Julian Solomon; Jerome A. Myers; Joseph Seider, and many committee workers.

Kentucky Theatres Collect $6,012.20

L. J. Dittmar, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Kentucky and chairman of the Hoover drive in that state, has forwarded to the European Relief Council checks for $6,012.20 raised by Kentucky theatres.

Mr. Dittmar reports that $3,615.90 was collected in Louisville in the following theatres:

Other theatres in the state raised $2,396.30.

Orange, N. J., distinguished itself in the Hoover drive. Mr. Thrace Company, operating the Palace, Colonial and Lyceum theatres in Orange, N. J., has forwarded a check for $1,510.93 to the council.

Oakley to Have Theatre

OAKLEY, O.—A motion picture theatre to cost $40,000 will be built on the square opposite the Oakley bank.
NEW YORK, March 8.—The Associated Exhibitors today announced that contracts have been signed for the publication of four features starring Mac Murray directed by Robert Z. Leonard. This is the first important announcement by the company since the reorganization at which Arthur S. Kane was named chairman of the executive committee.

A combination of western capitalists acting in association with Leiford Gates, publisher in the west and middle west, will produce the pictures. Work on the first picture begins immediately at the Amsterdam studios, New York. All pictures will be made here. Four stories are now under consideration.

Dinner of Advertising Men Is Biggest and Best Ever

 Many Big Figures in Industry Attend “The Naked Truth” Event Held by the A. M. P. A. at Biltmore Hotel, N. Y.

NEW YORK, March 8.—Bigger and better than ever was “The Naked Truth” dinner given by the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at the Biltmore Hotel last Friday night. The event marked the annual fun fest of the advertising and publicity writers of the industry, who make up the membership of the A. M. P. A. The copy men, relaxing from the serious tasks of commerce, turned their talents into the channels of comedy and, drawing upon their available stream of originality and humor, presented a program that scintillated with clever novelties and keen wit.

Many Prominent Men in Attendance

Everything that happened was generated by the spirit of good natured fun, and though the industry and its people were held up to the mirror, one saw these subjects as figures before the concave and convex-shaped reflectors. “The Naked Truth” was told for purposes of mirth only.

The affair was the first formal undertaking of the A. M. P. A. and was attended by the head of the most important figures in the industry. About 200 guests were present.

Assemble in Foyer

The first evidence of the spirit of the evening was found in the ballroom foyer where the guests assembled. The A. M. P. A. had placarded the foyer with witty references to the laws and their effect upon the industry.

Upon a signal from President Paul Lazarus, the masses in table groups according to seating arrangements and, following a leader who carried a banner bearing a humorous designation for the group, marched into the ball room.

Entertainers on Program

An announcer dressed as a Swiss yodeler announced the arrival of each course and delivered witticisms on topics of current interest in the industry. Professional entertainers provided several numbers while the dinner was being served.

With the tables cleared, the stunts were begun in earnest. Paul Lazarus, assisted by five A. M. P. A. members dressed as pall bearers, furnished the opening act. Reading from a huge ledger, the A. M. P. A. president urged the erection of suitable memorials to those pictures that had meant so much to the industry. The metaphorical closet was thus opened upon the rattling skeletons as one by one the pall bearers reversed the “Naked Truth” signs hanging above the ball room exits to display crepe draped one sheets of pictures that had had sad lives.

Reichenbach Takes Floor

When the uproar subsided, Harry Reichenbach took the floor and paved the way for a scene between the editor and the business manager of a film daily over the question of getting out an extra for the event. Profitable advertising, jocosely offered by paper's own staff, having settled the question after a lively argument, the already prepared extra was brought in by that same newboy fashion.

Mr. Reichenbach next introduced the guests of the evening. He called upon Adolph Zukor, but instead of Mr. Zukor, Jerome B. Zerbe, manager of advertising and publicity for Famous Players-Lasky, arose. As Mr. Zerbe, Mr. Beatty mentioned the influence his company as often as possible, told of its position and would up with the climactic announcement that he wanted everybody to know that he had the greatest advertising man in the business—Jerome Beatty.

Parsons Is “Brutus”

The address of C. J. Sayers as J. D. Williams, general manager of First National; P. A. Parsons as Paul Brunet of Pathe; Paul Gulick as R. H. Cochran of Universal; C. C. Pettjohn as Lewis J. Selznick; Howard Dietz as E. J. Godsol of Goldwyn; Vivian Moses as E. A. Bots, and Paul Lazarus as Hiram Abrams of United Artists—all were in the same light tone.

A novel nursery rime stunt with George Landy as the mother and an inquisitive “kid” for an assistant, dwelt upon the foibles of the industry and kept the fun going. Two appropriate songs, “Tell the Boss, Mr. Advertising Man,” by Paul M. Sarazan of First National, and “Avalonian Blues,” by A. M. Bots, were pleasantly rendered by Mr. Sarazan, following a psychic skit, played by two members of the Green Ballroom Club, in which the medium was played with from the past and relayed his information to the guests.

Amusing Sketch Given

An entertaining amusing sketch, called “The Newer Idea,” by Victor Shapiro of Pathe, was presented by Mr. Shapiro, Nat Rothstein and J. J. Greene. The former played a film salesman selling “The Newer Idea,” an advanced exploitation idea with pictures. The exhibitor-boughte already collected thirteen bales of press books since cleaning out his stock room of a supply that brought $439, and having had enough of exploitation stuff, he gladly signed a contract with a deaf and dumb salesman who came in with what was, according to the copy, “The Newer Idea.” But the newest idea wasn't new at all, and the exhibitor collapsed when, after the signing of the contract, the salesman came to life and announced that the next day an exploitation man would call.

FRENCH PROMOTER ARRESTED AT PIER

NEW YORK, March 8.—Under date line of Paris, March 7, The New York Herald Tribune carries a story that Andrew Hemmel, who said he was the founder of the Franco-American Cinematograph Corporation, was arrested at Havre as he was about to sail for New York on the liner “Havoe” and was brought back to that city to face a charge, the nature of which was not revealed.

ASSOCIATED PRODUCERS IS TO DISTRIBUTE FOUR FROTHINGHAM PICTURES

NEW YORK, March 8.—A contract has been signed by Associated Producers and J. L. Frothingham Productions whereby A. P. will distribute the latter's pictures for a year.

Four pictures will be delivered by the producing company, the first to be a picturization of Peter B. Kyne's story, "The Ten Dollar Raise." April 24 has been set as the tentative publication date. The Ten Dollar Raise" will be played by all-star cast headed by Marguerite de la Motte and Pat O'Malley. Edward Sloman is the director. The Frothingham productions will be made at the Bruniton studios in Hollywood.

SELECT AUDIENCE ATTENDS

NEW YORK, March 8.—Metro's "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" opened to a select audience at the Lyric theatre. Among the guests were Mrs. U. S. Reisenfeld, managing director of the Rialto, Rivoli and Criterion theaters, arranged the presentation. The run of the picture is for an indefinite period.

Let's Have More Like It

M. J. Q.

The record of the "Naked Truth" dinner remains as a striking tribute to enterprise and mental alertness of the membership of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc.

* The unanimous verdict of the guests was that the dinner was the most amusing and diverting event yet held within the industry.

* The ghosts of yesterday's failures comprised one of the big laughs of the evening and the skit was keenly enjoyed even by the executives whose product was given posthumous reference.

* The Hon. H. Reichenbach, the silver-haired explorer, as toastmaster for the evening swung a subtle gavel and contributed much mirth to the occasion. Harry's satirical touches went over with a bang.

America's greatest daily, devoted exclusively to the motion picture industry, sprung a trick extra which got a lot of laughs despite the fact that it didn't carry a specimen of Danny's jerky jots.

The program was an all star event, a long list of the members of the association participating and each contributing in an important way to the success of the evening.

* Unanimous verdict: Knockout.

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)
CHARLESTON, W. VA., March 8.—A state convention of exhibitors is to be held here on March 13 for the purpose of forming a permanent unit of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. Exchanges present at the New York convention have been made and a large attendance is promised. Samuel J. Berman will represent the national league. It is a definite step to combat censorship will be taken.

Exhibitors to Confer With Distributors
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)
ROCHESTER, N. Y., March 8.—One important business session at the convention of the Exhibitors Association of the state of New York will be the conference between theatre men and members of the F. L. M. Club of New York. Grievances of exhibitors will be discussed and adjustment will be sought. The convention will be held on April 5, 6 and 7 at the Hotel Seneca here.

Propose Ordinance to Bar Woman Ushers in Theatres in Chicago
An ordinance which would prohibit the employment of woman ushers in Chicago theatres is pending before the council buildings committee.

According to 85 per cent of the replies to queries sent out by the committee, city fire marshals in various parts of the country declare that women ushers are not conducive to public safety.

A sub-committee of the building committee on March 8 began an inspection of theatres as a result of charges by Chief of Police Fitziomos that the fire ordinances are not properly enforced.

The Kid Is Playing Five Keith Theatres
(From Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, March 8.—Charlie Chaplin in "The Kid" is the extra feature this week at B. F. Keith's Riverside, Colonial, Alhambra, Eighty-First Street and Hamilton theatres, all big time vaudeville houses. The picture was the added feature last week at B. F. Keith's Palace, the most important house in the Keith chain.

Giving Readers Real Service

EXHIBITORS HERALD directs special attention to the first report in "What the Picture Did for Me" on "Way Down East." It appears in bold type on page 84 of this issue.

The report comes from O. R. Nation of the Strand theatre, Davis, Cal., a regular contributor to the "What the Picture Did for Me" department.

It gives the exhibitors of United States the first real information as to what D. W. Griffith's latest special production will do at the box office of a motion picture theatre.

It is just another example of why EXHIBITORS HERALD leads the field in circulation and prestige.

News Reel Enterprise Gives Early Views of Inauguration

Pathe, Selznick, Kinograms and Fox Have Prints of Harding Ceremony in Theatres for Showing Friday Evening
(From Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, March 8.—The news reel producers ran a race last Friday for the honor of being the first to show news pictures of the President Harding inaugural ceremonies at Washington. Yesterday statements were made by the different companies as to what each had accomplished.

Pathe claims the honor of being the first to show its special in New York. According to the Pathe statement the first print was received for by the Strand theatre at 7:35 p.m. Within less than fifteen minutes a print of the reel had been delivered.

Prints Reach Newark Friday Evening

The Brooklyn Strand was supplied at 8:18. By 10 o'clock prints of the Pathe special had covered theatres from Fox's Academy of Music in 14th street to the Majestic at 185th street and St. Nicholas avenue. In addition Pathe supplied the Academy of Music at Jersey City at 7:45; the Newark theatre, Goodwin's and the Brentford, all in Newark, at 8:40, 8:50 and 8:57, respectively.

At 2:00 o'clock Saturday morning 100 prints, each of 400 feet, left by aeroplane for Cleveland and Chicago. Cleveland, Cincinnati and Chicago theatres put on the reels later Saturday afternoon.

Carry by Airplane

The Western supply was shipped on the Western Limited out of Chicago Saturday for Denver, where the prints were picked up by aeroplane for Salt Lake City, San Francisco, and Los Angeles. Pathe expected yesterday that with no hitch occurring prints would be shown on the Coast Monday night or Tuesday morning, less than seventy-two hours after the reel left.

The Selznick news reel, according to the Selznick offices, was on Broadway at 9:10 Friday night. At intervals of ten minutes twenty-five additional prints were distributed. Among the houses showing the Selznick special was B. F. Keith's Palace theatre, and others in the Keith chain. The Selznick reel arrived in good time, but laboratory trouble delayed the distribution.

Kordex concentrated its efforts upon getting its pictures of the ceremonies to Philadelphia and points West and South. A laboratory was especially engaged in Washington, and the prints rushed directly from there, the purpose being to beat the competitors at points other than New York.

The Fox News department distributed its reel by special messengers and by Saturday noon had reached the important cities of New England after having taken care of local and nearby theatres.

Miller Reiterates His Stand for Censorship

Clayton Bill in New York Is Amended to Exempt All New Reels
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)
ALBANY, N. Y., March 8.—Governor Miller last week went on record as favoring the passage of a law for strict censorship of motion pictures.

Against Advertisements

Following a conference with Mrs. Clarence Waterman of Brooklyn, head of the Better Motion Picture Alliance, who showed him advertisements of motion picture shows, he declared that he was in favor of anything that would put a stop to such advertisements.

The Clayton bill, calling for the establishment of a state board of censors, is now in the hands of the ways and means committee. Assemblyman Clayton of Kings, the father of the bill, conferred with the governor and afterwards expressed himself as sure that the governor would sign the bill if it were passed.

Amendments Are Made

Amendments are to be made to the measure. Under these the word "regulation" will be substituted for "censorship." News reels will be exempt from censoring, as will be pictures made prior to July 1. The amendments also provide that the censor board, if established, must give specific reasons for rejecting any picture.

There is a possibility that action will be taken on the bill this week.
Receipts from Samuels New House Will Be “Velvet”

Rental from Offices in Theatre Will Pay for Investment

ATLANTA, Ga., March 8.—When Sig Samuels' new Metropolitan theatre opens its doors an interesting chapter will be recorded in the South's contribution to the progress of the world's fifth industry. Not because of its mammoth proportions, not because of an expenditure of money, not because of the lavish nature of the program the new house will offer, but because of the character of the investment.

For the Metropolitan is more than a theatre. It is a big business proposition involving a $500,000 investment. It is a combination theatre and office building, and it would be a paying proposition if the theatre proper never opened its doors.

The office space and stores will bring a revenue during the twenty-five years of the ground lease period that will assure a handsome profit on the amount invested.

Primarily speaking, the Metropolitan theatre will cost nothing. Any amount that the theatre proper makes through its operation will be “velvet” to use the vernacular.

When Mr. Samuels reached the determination to erect another theatre in Atlanta, a theatre that would prove a fitting companion to the Criterion that has attained national recognition under the management of Willard C. Patterson, he brought to bear a remarkable degree of business acumen. He studied the possibilities of the location which he desired, and then decided to fortify the proposed investment so securely that when large events might take in the exhibiting department of the industry the Metropolitan would still be a successful investment.

So he planned a combination theatre and office building. The site is on corner property running the full length of a block in the very heart of the city, facing the city's main thoroughfare at the intersection of the two principal business streets, directly opposite Atlanta's leading hotel.

And on this site he is erecting a six-story building of concrete and steel-modern architecture, absolutely, peerless and beautiful. The suites of offices are already leased; in fact, every foot of available space has been leased.

The total revenue from sub-rentals during the life of the lease (twenty-five years) will be $3,000,000—on an investment of one-half million dollars. That is the revenue from store and office space without any consideration of the theatre proper. The financial end is so arranged that the rentals will increase 20 per cent at the end of each five-year period, so that the total rentals beginning at $800 a year during the first five years, will amount to $200,000 a year by the fifth five-year period.

In executing the plans of this carefully conceived and developed, Mr. Samuels has gathered a group of the soundest business men in the city. He is president of the Atlanta National Bank, one of the largest stockholders, and one of the most conservative business men in Atlanta, is one of the largest stockholders.

The accompanying photograph showing the theatre in the process of construction was made three weeks ago. Since that time the brick work has been practically completed and the roof will go on within the next few days. Contracts have been let for plastering. The electrical work is well on the way.

Mr. Samuels is now making a tour of the East studying interior decorating schemes preliminary to closing the contract for the decoration of the Metropolitan.

It is the practical side of the proposition that invites consideration and admiration because it proves the adaptability of the modern motion picture house. For instance, as the plans for the Metropolitan developed the decoration of a fly-galley arose. Obviously a picture house would not require a fly-galley and that it is a section of the Metropolitan, Mr. Samuels conferred with his architect and together they worked out an arrangement for a small office, the rentals from which will amount to $20,000 a year. Another time when a small unused space developed in the plans for the basement it was converted into a room for the consultant. Gulf Refining Company signed for the basement room at $1,000 a year.

The Metropolitan theatre will seat approximately 2,000. Its policy will be the same as that adopted by Mr. Samuels' Criterion theatre—indeed the motion picture productions of the holder of the First National franchise, Mr. Samuels will be able to command the output of that big organization. In addition to this the Criterion and Metropolitan have contracts for other groups of independent products.

Willard Patterson will have charge of the management. The house will open in June.

COBLESKILL, N. Y.—Cobleskill Amusement Company, with a capital stock of $75,000, has been organized to build and equip a theatre.

January Collections Show Big Decrease

Total Falls a Million Dollars Below That of the Preceding Month

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 8.—The Christmas holidays appear to have affected the theatrical business unfavorably, judging from the admission taxes collected during January by the Internal Revenue Bureau. The figures show that collections during that month were more than $1,000,000 below those of the preceding month, although $400,000 greater than those of January of last year.

The bureau's report, just issued, gives the total January collections as $7,129,905, as compared with $7,607,768 during the same month of 1920, and $8,363,708 in December.

Collections from the tax on films amounted to $593,137, as compared with $412,979 in January, 1920, while $31,668 was collected from the seating tax, as compared with $27,000 in January, 1920.

Admission taxes collected during the first seven months of the current fiscal year, it is stated, amounted to $52,128,811, as compared with $41,474,532 during the same period last year.

Rothafel to Present Foreign Feature at Capitol This Spring

NEW YORK, March 8.—Samuel L. Rothafel announces that he has obtained for presentation at the Capitol theatre in April a foreign-made film, “The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari.” This picture, according to Mr. Rothafel, is remarkable in many respects and introduces an absolutely new innovation in motion picture production.

It is a radical departure from anything that has ever been done on the screen, he says, and has created a furor on its introduction in Europe.

The picture is being adapted and made suitable for American audiences. A private showing was given before the film goes into the Capitol.

Mocsary New Manager Of Milwaukee Theatre

MILWAUKEE, Wis., March 8.—Edwin Mocsary, the former manager of the Wisconsin, has been appointed manager of the Butterfield theatre by John R. Freuler, owner. Mr. Mocsary formerly operated the National, with film circles in New York, having been connected with the Rialto, Rivoli and Capitol theatres.

Mr. Mocsary considers the hobby is clean entertainment. New decorations throughout with a view toward installing the latest lighting effects are planned for the Butterfield.

Falling Plaster Delays Opening of Pantheon

VINCENNES, Ind., March 8.—Completion of the new Pantheon theatre at Fifth and Main streets has been delayed several weeks as a result of the plastering on the ceiling of the lower floor giving away. The loss was $500. No one was injured.
Eschmann Given Higher Post

A BILITY and faithfulness again has A won recognition in the ranks of the sales force of Pathe Exchange, Inc., in the promotion of Edward A. Eschmann, from feature sales manager to assistant Director of Exchanges Elmer Pearson. This reward comes to Mr. Eschmann at the beginning of his third year with Pathe, with whom he became affiliated in 1918 as branch manager of Chicago. Just one year after that appointment he was brought into the home office as feature sales manager, and another year later he received his newest elevation in rank.

High Grade Films Arouse Better Inter-American Spirit

U. S. Pictures Boost Sales of U. S. Merchandise in Southern Republics

Says DR. ENRIQUE GIL

HIGH grade motion pictures produced in the United States contribute to better relationship between North and South America, in the opinion of Dr. Enrique Gil, lecturer on international law at Columbia University in New York and a member of the bar of New York and of Buenos Aires.

Dr. Gil's opinion was expressed in an address at a banquet given by the Pan-American Advertising Association at the Hotel Astor in honor of Bambrough Colby, the retiring secretary of state.

Dr. Gil's remarks on the subject of motion pictures as the promoter of better relationship between the American republics were greeted with applause by the 300 representatives of the leading New York export houses, who attended the banquet.

In the Latin-American countries, trade now follows the film, according to Dr. Gil. The progressive merchants of the South American republics have been keen enough to appreciate the fact that the demand for United States goods is always best after North American films have been shown, and they are always interested in ascertaining the exhibition dates of films made by the leading producers of the United States.

In the course of his splendid address on American relations Dr. Gil said: "I am optimistic of the future of the commercial inter-American relations, because due merely to your unselﬁsh and idealistic attitude during the war you have in your favor a bias and psychological interest on the part of the people of the South.

"The growth of the American moving picture business has also contributed largely to this result. It has given to these people a new idea, a better one about America, Americans and American home life."

"In Argentina, for instance, we no longer think of this country in terms of dollars and ﬁnance exclusively, but even though the word may amuse you, we have today a romantic idea about you and we have come to you as worshippers of beauty and charming and lovable things and above all endowed with an inexhaustible spirit of the joy of living. "I remember being told by the manager of the largest moving picture distributing company in Buenos Aires of receiving continuous inquiries from the managers of different shops as to when the films from the United States were to be released. He investigated and learned that the cunningness of the Buenos Aires merchants had discovered that every time American ﬁlms were shown, the sale of American goods increased. They wished to know the dates when American ﬁlms would be released so as to display large signs on the counters proclaiming their goods to be American made or American fashion."

"Buried Treasure" Has Four Week Run in N. Y.

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEW YORK, March 7.—"Buried Treasure," the Cosmopolitan-Paramount production starring Marion Davies, yesterday began its fourth week at the Criterion theatre. Because of the demand for the picture Managing Director Hugo Riesenthal postponed the opening of "The Faith Healer."

Mary and Doug Are Going to Mexico for Wedding Anniversary

As soon as Mary Pickford completes her screen chores for "Through the Back Door," her fourth United Artists production, she and her husband, Douglas Fairbanks, will go to Mexico City, where they will celebrate their first wedding anniversary and also enjoy a short vacation. All plans are now complete for "Honeymoon Number Two," as Miss Pickford calls it, and it is expected that they will be away from the public until the call of the director and the glare of lights for a month.

"Connecticut Yankee" Opening on Broadway

Vivian Moses Will Handle the Premiere of This Fox Film at Selwyn

(Vivian Moses Will Handle the Premiere of This Fox Film at Selwyn)

NEW YORK, March 8.—William Fox's production of "The Connecticut Yankee" is the latest picture on hand for a Broadway presentation before its general publication. The Selwyn theatre has been obtained and it will open on March 14 for an indeﬁnite run.

Offer Two Shows Daily

The picture will be presented as a two-show-a-day attraction with a corresponding scale of opening, which is being handled by Vivian Moses, will be a formal first night affair. Harry Reichenbach will exploit the attraction.

Negotiations for a theatre to house another big William Fox picture, "The Queen of Sheba" are now on. If the negotiations go through, as expected, this latter picture will open in one of the Broadway legitimate theatres around Easter.

Makes Three on Broadway

With the opening of these two pictures, William Fox will have three attractions playing Broadway legitimate theatres, the third being "Over the Hill" now at the Broadhurst. None of these pictures will be issued to exhibitors this season.

Exploit Abramson Film In Dramatic Theatres

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEW YORK, March 8.—Graphic Film Corporation announces it will present Ivan Abramson's production of "Mother Eternal" as a regular theatrical attraction. Negotiations are on for a Broadway theatre, it is said, with opening date about April 15. The picture will be shown in the same manner in other cities, before being issued to exhibtors. Vivian Martin stars as a member of a big cast which includes Thurston Hall, Earl Metcalfe, Jack Sherrill, Vivian Osborne, Pearl Shepard, Ruth Sullivan and J. W. Johnston.

Walsh New Head of Prizma Organization
Retiring Official to Devote His Time to Benoist And Company
(From Staff Correspondent)
NEW YORK, March 8.—The board of directors of Prizma, Inc., at a meeting last Wednesday, elected the following officers for the ensuing year: C. K. D. Walsh, president and treasurer; Carroll H. Dunning, vice-president; Howard G. Stokes, vice-president; George Kelley, secretary; Wm. V. D. Kelley, technical advisor and assistant treasurer.

Mr. Walsh, who has been vice-president and treasurer for the last two years, succeeds Lee Benoist, who has retired from the presidency to devote his time to Lee Benoist & Co. Mr. Dunning and Mr. Stokes, re-elected vice-presidents, have been identified with Prizma for three and two years respectively as executives. William V. D. Kelley, re-elected technical advisor and assistant treasurer, is the inventor of the Prizma processes.

The announcement of the election states that the company will continue to issue its new bi-weekly series, distributed through independent exchange, as making colored inserts, and art color productions such as were made for “Kismet,” “Passion,” “The Gilded Lady,” “The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse” and others.

Authors Ask Hearst to State Policy in Purchasing Stories
(From Staff Correspondent)
NEW YORK, March 8.—The Authors’ League of America has asked William Randolph Hearst to state more fully his policy in the purchase of material for his magazines published by International Magazine Company. The resolutions adopted ask: “Is the International Magazine Company willing to agree that it will not, in the future, make the purchase of any fiction rights contingent upon the granting by the author of the rights given to the sale of the motion picture rights to said work?” Authors are asked not to enter into an agreement with the said fiction rights that involve the motion picture rights.

Legislative Report Arouses Interest in Kansas Meeting
Convention Will Be Held at Hotel Lassen, Wichita, on March 21 and 22—Election of Officers Is Scheduled on Program
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)
KANSAS CITY, MO., March 8.—Interest of Kansas exhibitors is directed to the report on legislative matters to be read at the semi-annual convention scheduled for March 21 and 22 at the Hotel Lassen, Wichita. While the theatre men of Kansas are greatly concerned with legislative issues, they also are giving great attention to the question of electing executives to guide the activities of the Kansas State Exhibitors’ Association for the next year.

Convention To Be Biggest in History
A statement has emanated from headquarters of the association in the Film Exchange building, Seventeenth and Main streets, here, to the effect that the convention will be the biggest and most active in the history of the organization.

The Kansas state association has the honor of being one of the oldest and most enterprising organizations among the states. The exhibitors of the Sunflower state also have been fortunate in having progressive leaders, men whose activities have made them national figures in the exhibition field.

Van Praag Active Nationally
Particularly prominent in the Kansas organization is M. Van Praag, secretary. He became active in national affairs at the Patterson convention in Chicago when he was appointed to the Committee of Seven to concern him in No. 2 work with producers on the proposition of producer-controlled theatres. At the Cleveland convention he was honored with the post of financial secretary of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. R. G. Liggett, president, as well as other officials of the association, also have figured in national activities.

Seek Advance Deposit Law
Just what the legislative program involves has not been fully announced. The state is one of four that have legal censorship, and whether or not effort will be made to repeal this law is not known. The organization hopes to obtain passage of a law to correct the supposed evils of the advance deposit practice.

In legislative matters the association has the cooperation of the attorney general of the state and other state officials.

$65,000 Theatre Will Be Built in Liberty
LIBERTY, N. Y.—William F. Miller and Blake Washington of Monticello will erect a $65,000 theatre and business block on the site of the former Monticello House. Work has started. The structure is expected to be completed by June 1st.

The theatre has been leased for twenty-one years at an annual rental of $65,000 by Louis Rosenthal of New York, and will be under the management of his brother, Abraham Rosenthal of Monticello.

Acquires Site in Portland
PORTLAND, ORE.—Gus A. Metzger of the Rivoli theatre interests recently purchased a $15,000 tract of property at East Thirty-ninth street and Hawthorne avenue and will build there a $75,000 playhouse. It will seat 1,500 patrons.

Hampton Flays Bowly for His Attack on Jews

Says Reformer's Denunciation is "Monstrously Unfair"

CONTROVERSION of the attack on the Jewish element in the motion picture industry by almost poetical Rev. Harry L. Bowly, general secretary of the Lord's Day Alliance, is made in a letter by Benjamin Hampton which has just been published.

The producer declares that Bowly's action in drawing into the blue Sunday movement any group of men because of their racial or religious connections is "monstrously unfair."

"Specifically, in so far as the motion picture industry is concerned," says Mr. Hampton, "Mr. Bowly's assault upon the Jews is based upon allegations that are not founded in fact.

"Within the last few weeks a tremendous agitation against salacious sex pictures has been operating in the motion picture industry. Within three weeks after the agitation started a meeting of practically all the motion picture producers and distributors was held in New York City. At this meeting resolutions were adopted to the effect that (a) these producers agreed to make no salacious pictures, and (b) they agreed that any theatre showing salacious pictures should be barred from showing the pictures made by these producers.

"I believe this to be the greatest, most courageous, most noble reform ever brought about by men inside an industry. These men moved promptly and fearlessly to do the thing they believed to be the right thing.

"Note, please, that the leader of this meeting is a Jew. Many of the men making the most earnest addresses in favor of the reform are Jews. The reform is being supported by Jewish and Gentile producers, distributors and exhibitors. It is almost poignantly notable that the only producer who has risen to the defense of sex pictures is a Gentile.

"A statement that the motion picture industry is largely controlled by a group of Jews is not borne out by the facts. The financial interests of the largest corporations in the industry are located in Wall Street banking houses in which neither Jew nor Gentile enters into consideration. Wall Street is Wall Street-banks are banks-financial institutions operate without consideration of religious connections or racial derivations.

"On the artistic or professional side of picture making the Jews are perhaps in the minority. Many of, likely a majority of the writers, directors, technical men and players are Gentiles of Irish, English and Latin birth or descent."

Discussing the blue Sunday movement Mr. Hampton declares:

"Jew and Gentile alike, all men and women who have the interests of America at heart, are opposed to a retrogressive movement such as the blue Sunday fanatics are advocating. If there are errors in the Sabbath situation they cannot be corrected by legislation restricting the freedom of the people. Men cannot be legislated into being good. That system was tried for centuries and abandoned in favor of an effective method, that of education of the public into right habits of thought and action.

"Censorship would destroy the art. Blue Sunday Laws would destroy the industry. There is no question as to the position of the great public: It wants motion pictures and it will not permit destruction of the finest, most interesting, most easily available form of entertainment ever known to history."

John F. MacMeekin, Realart's special representative, is the proud father of a baby girl. The following telegram recently was received from Kansas City, where MacMeekin is making his home: "Joan MacMeekin, new Realart star, just arrived. Blonde, blue eyes, weight eight pounds."

Eleven Reel Swedish Film to be Shown in Scandinavian Centers

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEW YORK, March 8—Palladium Film Company, which has established offices in the Times building, will show "Sweden in Summer and Winter," an eleven-reel subject depicting life in Sweden, at special performances in all Scandinavian centers throughout the country. A special performance was given at the Town Hall last Thursday. W. J. Adams, who brought the films to this country, is managing the Scandinavian showings.

Within three weeks the company also will put out another program called "Smilt Norway, Nature's Wonderland," which will be booked in Scandinavian centers.

Censorship Is Up to New Commissioners
Wilson Appointees Retire As Republican President Takes Office
WASHINGTON, D. C., March 8.— Decision as to whether or not Washingon is to have film censorship will be made by a Republican board of commissioners, the two members of the board appointed by President Wilson having gone out of office on March 6. It is understood, also, that the third commissioner, Colonel Kutz, also will be relieved in the near future, he already having served much longer than is usual.

The board consists of three commissioners, two appointed by the president and the third by the Secretary of the Department of Commerce. The old board, before which the censorship hearing was held on February 28, consisted of Colonel Kutz, J. F. H. Hendrick and Miss Mabel Boardman, the first woman ever to have a place on the board.

Because of their fact their tenure of office was to end within a week, the board felt that the question of censorship was one which should be left to the decision of the new board, upon whom would devolve the responsibility of enforcing any regulation then adopted.

The events transpiring at the hearing were taken by a shorthand reporter, and letters and briefs have since been received by the board from many sources.
The new board, therefore, will have available in print all the testimony offered, both for and against censorship.

Insincere Reformers Only Handicap Us, Says Crandall
Washington Exhibitor’s Appeal to Citizens Aids in Virtual Defeat of Censorship in the District of Columbia

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 8.—Insincere reformers who “would burden us and you with a censorship that is apt to bring in political graft or individual criticism from a fanatic” will only handicap the fifth largest industry in the world.

This was Harry M. Crandall’s appeal to the citizens of Washington which resulted in the virtual defeat of legal regulation in the District of Columbia.

Letter Circulated Throughout the City

As president of the District of Columbia Exhibitors’ Association Mr.
Crandall circulated a letter throughout this city. Presented in this message were sound arguments against censorship. His appeal won the support of citizens and civic organizations, with the result that at the recent censorship hearing public sentiment displayed itself so strongly that ultimate defeat of Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts and his coactive legislation was predicted.

In his letter Mr. Crandall says:

"There is always some argument about pictures for children. In this connection I want to call your attention to the

Seventeen Societies Oppose Censorship

The following organizations in Washington have registered opposition to legal regulation of motion pictures: American Legion—twenty-eight posts representing 2,000 men; Rhode Island Avenue Citizens Association; Central Citizens Association; Conduit Road Citizens Association; Takoma Park Citizens Association; American Federation of Labor; Central Labor Union—representing 24,000 working men; District of Columbia Chamber of Commerce; Merchants and Manufacturers Association; Washington Board of Trade; Quentin Roosevelt Post, American Leg-fact that the motion picture industry was not created for a "child’s amusement." In fact, the children today comprise less than 2 per cent of our audiences. Therefore it would be impossible to make all ‘Little Red Riding Hoods’ to please two out of every 100 patrons. Despite this fact, however, practically every nursery rhyme and fairy story has been produced in pictures and all were financially failures.

Cites Parallel Cases

“As to the dangers that are apt to re-result from the picture industry, that is an old story. When the railroad engine was first created, it was looked upon as an instrument of the devil,” as was the bicycle and more recently the automoble. That is, they were considered "instruments of the devil" by some of our reformers, who then, as now, were very much in the minority in their narrow-minded views.

our best educators that the motion pic-

Paramount Studios Evidence Greatest Production Activity
Plants on West Coast and in the East Are Now in Full Operation, Says Lasky

LOS ANGELES, March 8—Tremendous activity is noted at both the East and West studios of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

On his arrival here Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of the company, announced that the Long Island studio was in full operation with all the extensive improvements completed.

After a survey of production here he said that he found the studio busier than at any time in its previous history, adding that this activity undoubtedly would be indefinite.

Mr. Lasky declared he was greatly elated over the signing of Betty Compson as a Paramount star for five years.

"I may state," he said, "that our plans for her productions are most elaborate and we expect to present some exceptional photoplays in which this charming actress will be the star."

At the Long Island plant six companies will be at work shortly, he stated, including George Fitzmaurice with his elaborate production of George V. Hobart's famous stage success, "Experience;" Elsie Ferguson in Rita Weiman's well-known story, "Footlights," and Thomas Meighan in "The Conquest of Canaan," by Booth Tarkington, under the direction of R. William Neill.

Mr. Meighan departed for the East immediately after the arrival of Mr. Lasky. Tom Forman will follow him to New York as soon as he has completed his work of collaborating with Peter B. Kyne, the noted author, upon "Cappy Ricks," which will later be produced in the Eastern studios with Mr. Forman directing and Mr. Meighan as star.

While discussing Mr. Meighan's plans, Mr. Lasky waxed enthusiastic over "The City of Silent Men," from a story by John Morosco, which Tom Forman directed, and in which Mr. Meighan starred.

Concerning production Mr. Lasky said:

"We are facing a season of virtually unprecedented activity. We are immediately planning a number of necessary improvements in the plant, including more glass stages, and added electrical equipment to provide for the numerous extra units that are now working there."

"I was here to see the start of Cecil B. DeMille's all-star production, 'The Affairs of Anatol,' and I find that it has now been completed with the exception of cutting and titling. From the portions of the picture that I have been able to view, I feel confident in saying that this film will prove one of the most startling examples of photoplay artistry that has ever been made anywhere."

"I have already mentioned Mr. Meighan's picture, 'The City of Silent Men,' and I cannot refrain from a few words regarding the picture which he has just completed, 'White and Unmarried,' also directed by Tom Forman, and which I am sure will prove a worthy successor."

"Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle in 'Crazy to Marry,' Frank Condor's story directed by James Cruze. I am satisfied will be a wonderful laugh provoker, and I think will prove about the best comedy in which this star has been seen to date."

"A most gratifying thing to me is the splendid start that has been made by Sam Wood, directing Miss Gloria Swanson in her first Paramount star picture, Elmer Glyn's 'The Great Moment.'"

"William DeMille is making fine progress with Edward Knoblock's original story for 'Parasol Romance,' scenarized by Olga Printzlau. I note that George Melford is away on location work with his company, producing Sir Gilbert Parker's "The Monkey Master," in which James Kirkwood is featured. "Ethel Clayton has just begun work on her second picture for "Paramount," which, in my opinion, is a most grimly serious drama, which is a most grimly serious drama."

"I am satisfied will be a wonderful laugh provoker, and I think will prove about the best comedy"

41 "Miracle Men" Follow in Wake of Tucker Production

George Loane Tucker, producer of the photoplay, "The Miracle Man," whose projected profit is to be well above $2,000,000, is being deluged with clippings from newspaper and other correspondents relating the miraculous "cures" which have been effected by faith healers, most of whom are known to the followers as "The Miracle Men."

Mr. Tucker has a scrap book in which he pastes clippings of these " Miracle Men." The stories of some of these "healers" make interesting reading. Several of the "Miracle Men" have gone into vaudeville.

Lon Chaney to Be Lead In "The Ace of Hearts"

Leatrice Joy, who played opposite Chaney in "The Night Rose," will act the leading feminine role.

Martha Mansfield Working On First Star Production

Martha Mansfield, recently created Selznick star, is busy getting ready for the first of her star series production, "The Fourth Sin."

According to the present schedule, the first scenes for the picture will be shot at Keystone later this week, and production will continue in March. In the meanwhile Director Alan Crosland and his assistants are busy with the details of the production. "The Fourth Sin" is a story by John Lynch, pictured by the R. Cecil Smiths.

The next time daughter says she wants to become an actress show her this. With the temperature below freezing Mae Busch enact a scene in an evening gown for "Foolish Wives," under Erich Von Stroheim's direction for Universal.
Advertising vs. Censorship

THE EXHIBITOR-ADVERTISER'S OPPORTUNITY to enter the fight against censorship is at hand. Publication of two articles, "The Movies—What Are We Going To Do About 'Em?" and "The Movies—Real Facts and Real Facts," in the February 12 and March 5 issues of The Woman Citizen opens the way.

Read the articles. They present facts that prove conclusively the fallacy of the whole theory of censorship. Then advertise them. They are worth it. And in advertising them, add that you stand, as it is stated in the conclusion of the second article, that every exhibitor does and of necessity must stand, ready to give the public exactly what it wants, without censorship.

Censorship advocates will read your advertisement. Then they will read the articles, if they have not read them already. They will seek you out. Treat with them fairly, but publicly. Advertise them and their arguments.

Public sentiment is against censorship. In "tying up" with the published articles, possibly the best for the purpose ever printed, lies the exhibitor-advertiser's opportunity to free his screen and aid in freeing the screens of the nation.

REPORT FROM THE DETROIT office of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., to the effect that more than fifty theatres in Michigan cities have conducted "Short Subject Nights" during the past month, using "The Race of the Age," "The Art of Diving," with a scenic and a comedy for the purpose. It is further stated that many of these theatres have determined to give one night each week to such a program. The advertising, if a very useful word may be coined thus unceremoniously, of such a program is not the least of its good points. Add novelty, and appeal to the general taste for variety, and the merit of the proposition is obvious.

ADVERTISABILITY, NOVELTY and appeal to the general taste for variety likewise recommend adoption of a weekly or monthly "Bargain Night." A reduction of two or three cents in the price of theatre admission should, if properly advertised, prove as attractive to entertainment shoppers as does a similar reduction in cost prices to the buyer of household or personal necessities. A test of the stunt is inexpensive. If it proves successful in anything approaching the degree common in other retail businesses it is decidedly worth knowing about.

A SCHER BROTHERS, CHICAGO, have donated use of their theatres when mutually agreeable for the exhibition to school children of "The Picture Story of Chicago's Public Schools." The second installment was shown recently at the Crown theatre, one of the chain, the management exhibiting also, free of charge, the feature production in engagement. The Chicago Evening American devoted a three-line head and two-thirds of a column to the story. The arrangement is decidedly more than a "publicity stunt," though it has the merits of the best of these. It is whole-hearted and proper participation in a worthy civic work. There is food for prolonged thought in the incident.

HAROLD F. WENDT, PUBLICITY director of the Rivoli theatre, Toledo, O., has permanently reserved the center loge of that house for the press. A brass plate designates it as exclusively for press occupancy and newspaper men are accommodated regardless of waiting lines or capacity crowds. A number of American theatres whose publicity men are less appreciative of conditions as they exist might benefit by the example. Newspaper men may or may not accept his favor as "courtesy with a purpose." But they will accept it as courtesy. Nothing so inexpensive yields greater results.

SKOURAS BROTHERS, OPERATING the Grand Central and West End Lyric theatres, St. Louis, Mo., advertised for Charles Chaplin imitators and "kids" prior to the opening of "The Kid," the comedian's First National production. They employed six imitators and six boys who "doubled" for Jackie Coogan, sending them out upon the streets of St. Louis in pairs. It is reported that 15,000 persons attended the opening presentation of the picture. It is obvious that interest was aroused with the insertion of the advertisements and increased steadily until the opening. Incidentally, the procedure followed was suggested in this department prior to publication of the attraction, the idea being based upon an early still from the play.

AN ANONYMOUS CONTRIBUTOR has submitted a portion of a page from the classified advertising section of the Chicago Tribune. A blue pencil mark is drawn around a key advertisement extolling the merits of and offering for sale an "excel. poul. farm." Over the top, in the largest size type used upon the page, a more important line is printed "Seen Doug MacLean in 'Chickens'". The newspaper is said to have considerably more than a million readers.
Showmanship Suggestions in the Stills

"BLACK BEAUTY," the Vitagraph production, gives promise thus early in circulation of becoming an exploitation picture. Other pages of this department are devoted to the first exploitation and presentation accorded the attraction. The above still suggests a newspaper publicity stunt of Reichenbachian character. A theatre employe takes the horse used in presentation out upon a popular drive to exercise him. Another horseman, or horsewoman if possible, on pleasure bent, is rescued by the theatre man on "Black Beauty" after a thrilling chase. That ought to make the front page of practically any newspaper if capably engineered.

"THE HEART OF MARYLAND," produced by Tom Terris for Vitagraph, brings another stage favorite to the screen. Exhibitors will accord it exploitation in keeping with its popularity. The opportunity for co-operative advertising is evident. The American Legion, the G. A. R. and all similar organizations should be found willing to participate in whatever method of procedure is decided upon. Great newspaper publicity should be one of the important results of such endeavor.

"A TALE OF TWO WORLDS," forthcoming Goldwyn picturization of Gouverneur Morris' story, includes the above setting and character. D. W. Griffith's "Broken Blossoms" was presented with Chinese prologue in so many instances and to such good purpose as to demonstrate convincingly the effectiveness of this type of stage feature. A similar prologue, the still indicates, may be used with "A Tale of Two Worlds."

"SHACKLED," is the working title of the forthcoming Salient production starring Muriel Ostriche. That information, in connection with the above still from the play, is doubtless sufficient for the formation of preliminary exploitation plans. The convict idea has been used in numerous recent advertising campaigns, various types of street work being done, but in none of these has the work been carried through in presentation. A prison set is not difficult to construct. One player, presented as in the above still, might effectively introduce the production through delivery of a soliloquy based upon the plot of the story.
Practical Jazz Campaign for "Earthbound"
Best Work of Goldwyn Exploitation Man

Newspaper philosophers are presently engaged in a series of daily attacks upon "jazz," a post-war institution of wide popularity and varied interpretation. Its early demise is prophesied and a joyous requiem sung. Jazz exploitation, be it said, is "something else again." To date it has not been attacked. In view of its genuine merit as attested in numerous noteworthy campaigns, it should be cultivated rather than discarded.

Hal Oliver, Goldwyn exploitation man, of whom much has been heard in exploitation news of the past year, recently conducted a jazz campaign for the engagement of "Earthbound" at the Isis theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich., which will be generally acknowledged his greatest work to date.

THREE brilliant novelties are outstanding features of Mr. Oliver's work in behalf of the Isis engagement. They are pictorially described upon this page.

The "demented astrologer" stunt is perhaps the most unique. The man appeared upon various street corners, set up his apparatus and gave evidence of such great interest in the "daylight stars" which he viewed as to draw the attention of all. In observing the gentleman's fantastic demonstrations, observation of the "Earthbound" banner was inevitable.

The second photograph shows Mr. Oliver, in person, as they say of another variety of stars, in the act of unfurling "Earthbound" banners from the top of a four-story building. Prior to the unfurling Mr. Oliver climbed the front of the building, giving an entirely satisfactory imitation of the "human fly" type of entertainer reported now and again from various sections of the country.

The third novelty is less spectacular, but no doubt an effective one. It consisted of "upside down" poster displays in various windows throughout the city. Unless the pressman makes the understandable mistake and reverses the cut after this page has gone to press, the third illustration shows one of these locations as it stood during the run.

So much for the "jazz" angle of the exploitation. The exploitation star did not confine himself to novelty methods.

A review-of-the-picture contest conducted by the Grand Rapids Herald doubtless spread "Earthbound" doctrine in quarters uninvaded by the stunt enumerated, or comment regarding them. Front page space was given the event.

Adaptable Novelties Prominent Forces in Isis Drive
Marquee Stage Gives Depth In Silhouette Poster Plan

The lobby stage is growing in popularity. Unknown until a few months ago, it has been utilized during recent weeks in practically every section of the country. As characteristic of popular ideas, it is steadily improved upon.

The Regent theatre, Wichita, Kans., is most recently reported as using the stunt. The manner of treatment accorded it is, as was to be expected, original.

Photographic illustration presented herewith shows the front appearance of the theatre with the marquee stage in place.

A diagram also presented shows the mechanical construction in sufficient detail for practical use in reproduction by other exhibitor advertisers of the Regent product.

The silhouette effect gained is obviously valuable. Against the lighted interior of the setting the cutout figures stand out in sharp relief. A second and third glance is necessary for the pedestrian to determine whether or not the figures are flesh and blood actors. That second and third glance assures an exhaustive investigation in the course of which the important facts of the advertisement are thoroughly grasped.

The Regent stunt was executed in behalf of "The Woman in His House," a First National attraction which by reason of its title is exceptionally well suited to the purpose. The "house" idea is dominant in title and method of display. The connection is inescapable.

Infinite elaboration of the stunt is possible.

A spotlight may be placed across the street from the theatre, to play upon the marquee stage.

Similar, or perhaps it would be better were they dissimilar, stages may be placed at prominent locations throughout the city.

Genuine actors may be used instead of cutouts. The latter has been done with gratifying results.

Exhibitor genius will suggest a dozen other amplifications. All will contribute to the success of the stunt. None will detract from the credit due the Regent management for a worthy work well done.

Civic Agitation Capitalized for Talmadge Picture

Citizens of Knoxville, Tenn., were about evenly divided upon the subject of traffic lookout turrets recently installed. Much had been written for and against the proposition. Its supporters won, but carried wounds from the battle.

Supporters and opponents were unanimous in their disapproval, therefore, when a recent morning dawned to disclose brilliant banners for "Dangerous Business." Constance Talmadge's first National attraction, displayed on the objects of the controversy.

W. E. Drumbar, manager of the Riviera theatre, was responsible. It is reported that arrest followed discovery, with the usual satisfactory newspaper publicity and the essential release.

One good stunt for the management. Others less spectacular but probably more productive were used.

An advertisement in the newspaper for "1,000 men wanted for dangerous business," to which was attached the address of the theatre, similarly dealt "personals" in the same newspapers, and a general warning based upon the danger of misrepresentation in relation to domestic alliances were also used.

Adaptable stunts, all of them, and worthy of adaptation.

William Farnum won by a margin of 3,546 votes over his nearest competitor in a popularity contest conducted by the "Terre Haute (Ind.) Tribune" in conjunction with the Liberty theatre.
Children Draw “Black Beauty”

School children of New Haven, Conn., submitted over 1,000 drawings for prizes aggregating $100 offered by O. C. Edwards, manager of the Palace theatre.

Other exhibitors showing the Vitagraph production will use the idea. It is excellent prestige advertising and effective exploitation.
Advertises Acquisation of First National Franchise

Chet B. Miller, manager of the Orpheum theatre, Red Cloud, Neb., recently became a First National sub-franchise holder. He made the event the basis of a novelty advertising stunt which may be used by other exhibitors for a similar or dissimilar purpose.

Distribution of circulars listing the titles of attractions which would be shown at the Orpheum was the first step of the endeavor. A reproduction of one of these circulars is presented herewith.

Lots of Fun

Can You Write a Story With Movie Titles?\nAll Right! Here’s Your Chance!

To show your ability and win one of the prizes given by The ORPHEUM Theatre be so doing. In the list that follows you will find titles of pictures being released by the FIRST NATIONAL EXHIBITORS CIRCUIT of which THE ORPHEUM is a franchise holder:

- "In Search of A Sinner"
- "The Fighting Shepherdess"
- "The Master Mind"
- "Odd-Referees"
- "Toonerville Trolley"
- "Passion"
- "Folly of the North Country"
- "Twin Beds"
- "Claw of the North"
- "Old Dad"
- "Busty"
- "A Splendid Hazard"
- "Married Life"
- "The Perfect Woman"
- "Yes or No"
- "Go and Get It"
- "The Notorious Miss Lula"
- "The Jack Knife Man"
- "What Women Want"
- "Toonerville Trolley"
- "The Woman in His House"
- "Dangersome Business"
- "The Great Adventure"
- "Curiosity"
- "Beating the Wind"
- "The Devil’s Garden"
- "The Southerner"
- "The Sinner"
- "The Woman"
- "The Man"
- "The Great Looper"
- "The Truth About Husbands"
- "Unseen Forces"
- "Love, Honor and Bachelor"
- "The Kick in High Life"

There are 36 titles and the idea is to use all the titles together, or as many as you wish, with no words as possible between them. Example: "Busty led 40 Minutes from Broadway on the Toonerville Trolley line. He took a Splendid Hazard a Married Life which was Dangersome Business."

Prizes were offered for the best narratives contributed by citizens who came into possession of the circulare, the narratives to be written in such manner as to include the titles indicated.

That idea is worth remembering. It may be applied by any exhibitor to the list of attractions which he has booked. It may be handled in the manner or indicated, or in the house organ, where it would serve as an exceptionally interesting "puzzle column" through the newspapers, upon the billboards, in any of the established advertising mediums.

The results obtained are interesting. Incidentally, they impress the titles forcibly upon the memory of those who participate, as well as those who read the winning contribution when published. The latter still of legion.

The prize-winning contribution in the Red Cloud competition follows:

UNSEEN FORCES from Nomads of the North send THE LOVE EXPERT to THE PERFECT WOMAN saying DON’T EVER MARRY whether from curiosity of 25 A SPLENDID HAZARD. Being HARRY AND THE PIPER IS DANGEROUS BUSINESS but, whether YES OR NO IT IS WHAT WOMEN LOVE. Even in the heart of a fool is knowledge that THE WOMAN GIVES BE SHE THE BRANDED WOMAN OF ONE WITH GOOD REFERENCES, I’d rather be THE NOTIOUS MISS LEE on PASSION’S PLAY GROUND or even THE YELLOW TYPHOON in THE DEVIL’S GARDEN attracting THE MASTER MIND of OLD DAD than risk MARRIED LIFE with THE WOPER. Being only THE WOMAN IN HIS HOUSE defending THE FAMILY HONOR, living in PEACEFUL VALLEY 45 MINUTES FROM BROADWAY on THE TOONERVILLE TROLLEY line and knowing THE TRUTH ABOUT HUSBANDS develops a HARRIET FOR THE GREAT ADVENTURE. In PASSION THE JACK-KNIFE MAN MARRIES POLLY OF THE STORM COUNTRY. Soon THE FIGHTING SHEPHERDESS comes demanding TWIN BEES. LOVE, HONOR AND BEHAVE IS MAMA’S AFFAIR being for THE INTERIOR SEX. THE WIFE IN HIGH LIFE and SOWING THE WIND belongs to DINTY who, in SEARCH OF A SINNER will GO AND GET IT.

Hazel Bye, the "tamoshanter girl" who created a sensation in the Chicago exploitation campaign for "Outside the Law."

Tamoshanter Girl

Popular Figure in Loop Exploitation

Hazel Bye, whose photograph is reproduced above, was a popular figure in Chicago's loop district during the first week of the exploitation at Barbee's Loop theatre of "Outside the Law," Universal production, which is said to have broken attendance records at that house during the period. The Chicago Herald and Examiner co-operated in the work. Big space was given to announcement of the fact that the girl would be seen at various designated locations at specified hours of the day. Readers were informed that anyone who approached the young lady with a copy of the newspaper in hand and inquired in exactly the proper phraseology if she were the girl "Outside the Law" would be given a ticket entitling them to a tamoshanter similar to that worn by Miss Bye. These tickets were redeemed at the office of the newspaper and report is to the effect that 1,200 were disposed of in this way during the week.

The idea is based upon the fact that Priscilla Dean wears this type of headgear with particularly pleasing effect. The theatre and engagement connection was definitely established at every step of the procedure.

The box office results experienced seem to justify the stunt as executed. No doubt a great many American newspapers will follow the lead of the Chicago publication in lending hearty co-operation.
Roscoe Arbuckle Imitator Scatters Money To Advertise “Brewster’s Millions” Run

A “Patty” Arbuckle impersonator employed for the exploitation of “Brewster’s Millions” at Boulder, Colo.

“Brewster’s Millions” was a popular book.

“Brewster’s Millions” was likewise a popular stage play. As a motion picture it gives promise of eclipsing both records in point of publicity gained. Paramount exploitation men have determined to capitalize the title to the fullest extent of their demonstratedly extensive ability.

Boulder, Colo., has been reported as having received the attention of a Paramount exploitation representative, Fred V. Greene, Jr., of the Denver exchange, engineering the advertising campaign for the Curran theatre run.

An Arbuckle imitator went about the streets of Boulder scattering real money. That’s the outstanding novelty of the campaign. The money distributed was entirely in pennies and amounted to a total of ten dollars, but a thousand pennies strewn about with carefully calculated ostentation will cover considerable territory.

The Arbuckle imitator was selected for his size. The report received describes him as “elephantine.” That’s a strong word, but the fact that he was dressed in baby clothes doubtless made it a fitting one.

His journeys about the city were made in an automobile from which floated brilliant streamers emblazoning a single line, “1,000 laughs.”

The report further states that of the $10 distributed in this manner it is estimated that $9.98 was received through the Curran box office windows. Probably included as a facetious touch, the statement doubtless underestimates the merit of the stunt. Considering the territory covered, the comment publicity created and the general advertising of the enterprise involved, it is certain that considerably more than $10 worth of admission tickets were sold as a result of the imitator’s activity.

Numerous window displays were also used in connection with the engagement. One of these is photographically represented herewith, a book store window wherein the novel upon which the play is based was advertised.

A doll store also made use of stills from the play and announcement cards, giving the dates of the engagement.

Another illustration upon this page shows the type of announcement frame that was placed at various prominent locations throughout the city. Permanent advertising, this, and of a type to be encouraged.

Mr. Greene’s contribution to the general fund of “Brewster’s Millions” exploitation data is a notable one.

Photograph display cases, glass enclosed, were attached to buildings throughout the city during the Orpheum run.

One of the book store window displays used to stimulate sales of the book from which the play was made.

“1921 Ince Find” Contest Under Way

“Who will be the Thomas H. Ince find for 1921?”

That line is made the basis of a beauty contest which gives promise of eclipsing anything of similar nature in exploitation history, a contest which will be national in scope but local in box office influence as concerns the fifty-two cities which have been selected for its operation.

Atlanta, Ga., and Cleveland, O., are the cities selected for the opening of the contest. The Criterion theatre and the Atlanta Constitution conducted the drive in the former city, the Strand theatre and the Cleveland News in the latter. In each case the publicity gained was measurable in pages rather than in columns or agate lines, and in each place the engagement of “Lying Lips” Thomas H. Ince’s Associated Producers production, prospered accordingly.

The rules of the contest stipulate that any girl between 18 and 30 years of age may enter. Entrants must take their photographs to the theatres designated and submit them to a committee of judges. The judges select five girls for the finals, and a camera man provided by Mr. Ince makes camera tests of these. The final selection is to be made by Mr. Ince from the footage obtained in this manner from all parts of the country.

The contest is started two weeks prior to the opening of the “Lying Lips” engagement. This allows ample time for the selection of the five local winners, the making of the camera tests, and the advertising climax is reached when it is announced, during the week of the engagement, that the motion pictures of the winners will be shown at a stipulated performance or performances.
Photographs reproduced above and below show exterior advertising and the stage presentation for "Kismet," the Robertson-Cole production, at the Rialto theatre, Omaha, Neb.

The production has evoked strikingly similar showmanship efforts in every section of the country, giving rise to a steady influx of practically identical exploitation reports.

That signifies standardization of treatment to a degree recorded in the history of no other motion picture. It proves that theatre thought is taking on unity of purpose and that theatre methods are attaining standardization.

The theatre house organ is important or unimportant as an advertising instrument in proportion to the care or lack of care with which it is prepared. Ideas for improvement are of great value, each innovation which increases the reader's interest in the theatre publication adding indirectly but surely to the box office sales report. The features of various programs here listed are especially worth while. They may be combined in a single program.

THE GRAND THEATRE, BESSEMER, Ala., issues weekly a card-board backed pad, 2½ by 9½ inches. Each leaf of pad illustrates advertisement of day's program, better than many newspaper advertisements. Inside back cover bears offer of two free tickets for return of programs for four consecutive weeks. Cost, $8.00 per M. John B. Snider, assistant manager comments, "It is an idea that has done us a great deal of good in keeping our business up during these dull times and I thought that perhaps you might want to pass it along to some other exhibitors. We receive great benefit from the ideas of other exhibitors which we learn of through your valued paper and I desire to help the other fellows with a good idea if I can. They (the programs) have paid for themselves each week"

"THE KINEMA-FRANKLIN NEWS, is small newspaper size, runs four pages, divides space between the Kinema and Franklin theatres, Oakland, Cal. Carries no advertising. Stories handled like news. Heads "alive" and balance perfectly. A carefully edited and altogether interesting publication. No doubt widely read and productive of box office returns.

THE HOWARD THEATRE, CHICAGO, a neighborhood house, uses four-page folder made to order by National Poster and Printing Co., which specializes in the work. Whole is in brown on white, gloss stock. Descriptive text regarding each picture illustrated with cut of star or still from play. Serviceable, convenient, readable.

THE RIALTO, NEWARK, N. J., house organ, good business publication. Sixteen pages with cover, 8½ pages advertising. Two colors on pages 1, 8 and 9; remainder in black on white stock. A great deal of information in not a great deal of space, but readable and interestingly written. Back page given over to portrait cut of star. Catchline, "Temple of Motion Picture Art," subject of half-page editorial by Frank L. Smith, managing director, and Albert Barber, house manager, in current issue. Effective introduction to following pages.

THE MISSION, LOS ANGELES, uses a rich brown cover with a four-page insert. Class in every aspect of its make-up. No advertising. Distinctive in its field. Theatre slogan on front cover is "Nothing like it in the world."

No week has passed since the publication of "Passion," the First National attraction, without report of its elaborate presentation by one or more American exhibitors.

The stage of the Adams theatre, Detroit, Mich., is shown below. Expert fencers, whose "duel" was of exceptional interest aside from its prologue, purpose, were employed, and Adams theatre prices were raised for the first time, it is reported.

Exhibitors have demonstrated by their treatment of the production that it has exerted a genuine stimulating influence upon presentation activity. If for no other reason, and box office reports indicate that there are other reasons, the production is one of distinct value to the theatre.
"Give the public what it wants" has become an unwritten law of the theatre.
"Give the merchant what he wants" might well be adopted by the man who attempts to enlist co-operation in his advertising. It is as well founded in popular disposition.

Nelson B. Bell, general press representative of the Crandall theatres, Washington, D. C., has adopted that law. He finds it effective.

The Metropolitan theatre engagement of "Isobel," George Davis' picturization of James Oliver Curwood's novel, necessitated resort to the method of procedure mentioned above. It was followed out to complete success.

The suitability of the Saks Fur Company's windows for a North country display was obvious. But the management of that company was not disposed to lend the windows to the cause. Mr. Bell proceeded accordingly.

He sought out J. S. Warmbath, a citizen of Washington who had been a member of Peary's arctic expedition, and arranged to rent his collection of furs and other souvenirs for a cash consideration. He then planned the effective displays shown in illustrations presented on this page and approached the store management with a genuine argument.

The popular interest which would attach to the display he planned proved the clinching argument. Permission was finally obtained for the construction of the window settings.

The Warmbath relics were immediately installed in the Saks window to represent an Arctic scene of fur bartering which was placarded to indicate the character of much of the subject matter of "Isobel," as well as to indicate the source of the Saks Company's superior stock.

Goldman Campaign Showman's Triumph

The advertising and presentation done in behalf of "Brewster's Millions," Roscoe Arbuckle's Paramount production, by William Goldman, managing director of the Missouri theatre, St. Louis, Mo., qualifies as a "showman's triumph." Novelty, practicality and adaptability, the test qualifications, are outstanding attributes of the drive.

Work was started well in advance of the opening with the distribution to school children of novelty cards, post card size, each carrying in a slot a penny and bearing the statement, "You have been named as one of the heirs to Brewster's Millions." For full particulars see Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle, Missouri theatre." The dates of the engagement followed.

A Washington's Birthday program was used in presentation of the feature. American flags were used to decorate the theatre and "Dixie," "Columbia," "The Gem of the Ocean," etc., were included in the musical accompaniment.

The stage was provided with two settings, one of which showed Washington in the act of chopping down the cherry tree, the other showing him at the head of the Colonial army.
E. J. WEISFELDT, managing director of the Strand theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., staged a shadowland prologue for “The Old Swimmin’ Hole,” Charles Ray’s picturization of James Whitcomb Riley’s poem for First National distribution. The materials required for this type of prologue are easily obtainable and inexpensive, the general effect excellent, important reasons for its adaptation.

Weisfeldt’s Shadowgraphic Presentation Economical, Picturesque and Adaptable

“Expensive” and “meritorious” are commonly confused terms. Because it is customary to increase the cost price of that which is commonly regarded as of merit, it is easy to fall into the natural error of regarding the term “cheap” as indicative of lack of merit.

The fallacy has no foundation in fact. The clear-sighted business man, the man who does not ocnyfuse the terms, is the man who prospers.

The wise showman does not disregard a good idea because its adoption does not involve great expenditure.

E. J. WEISFELDT, managing director of the Strand theater, Milwaukee, Wis., used presentation methods that warrant general adoption during the showing of “The Old Swimmin’ Hole,” Charles Ray’s First National attraction. An accompanying illustration suggests graphically the stage appearance during the prologue.

Any exhibitor can foot up for himself the probable cost of the prologue. A single scrim drop is not expensive. In view of the fact that it may be added to the stock scenery of the house and used repeatedly, its first cost should not be charged to the single occasion.

The tree, fence, mill wheel and ground work may be produced by use of old lithographs or banners on hand. The work involved in cutting them out and affixing them to the drop by means of paste or sewing is the only expense attendant thereupon.

The lighting of the drop from the rear may be done with equipment already in stock.

The setting is then complete. And against this setting one or more players may be used in a prologue of whatever nature is decided upon.

Against the darkness of an unlighted auditorium the prologue is exceptionally effective. It is, as stated above, economical and picturesque. It is also, and this is important, adaptable. It can be used in connection with any production upon the market.

Another illustration shows one of the lobby displays used at the Strand. It needs no detailed description. It is its own testimonial.

Mr. Weisfeldt, an able workman, contributes another important example of modern showmanship for the trade to follow. General adoption of the shadowgraphic presentation is altogether advisable.

Distributes “Extra” Announcing Opening

When Henry C. Tuttle, proprietor, announced to the citizens of Cuba, Mo., the opening of his Just-A-Mere theatre recently, the newsboys of the city spread the information with hoarse “Extras” and distributed a newspaper which is innovative in composition.

It is not exclusively a theatre newspaper.

Genuine news occupies a full 50 per cent of its space. Furthermore, the theatre announcement, though given front page position, is carried strictly as an advertisement.

The publication is more than a herald, dodger or throwaway. It is exactly what it is represented as being, a newspaper. It is an excellent example of what compositions of the sort should be—and seldom are.

Showing the Trend of Advertising Activity

A SIGN painting company, the Sharp music store and the Famous Players-Lasky exchange co-operated in constructing this window display in a prominent Denver, Colo., location during a drive for funds to aid the starving children of Europe.

THE opening of Saxe's Rialto theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., with "The Kid," Chaplin's First National production, was advertised on the stands used by the same company's Strand theatre.

DANCING clocks were featured in "The Clock Shop," a special stage feature recently produced at the Strand, Milwaukee, by E. J. Weisfeldt, managing director.

THE RIGHT TO LOVE," the title of Mae Murray's Paramount vehicle, is being applied to window displays in every section of the country. The above photograph shows a display obtained by Harry Swift, Albany representative.
SID GRAUMAN, proprietor of Grauman’s Million Dollar theatre, Los Angeles, used the above setting for “The Idle Hour,” a special stage feature contrasting the theatre of today and yesterday. Pictures five years old were projected, the manager of the stage theatre ballyhoosing out in front as the audience entered and “spieling” for the pictures. Excellent entertainment, the Grauman feature was also doubtless effective in driving home to patrons the justice of the general advance in theatre admission prices, a worthy purpose at all times.

S. R. SCOTT, manager of the Orpheum theatre, Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan, Can., recently abandoned vaudeville and legitimate attractions for motion pictures, applying stage advertising methods to screen attractions with great success. “The Love Light,” Mary Pickford’s United Artists production, was in engagement when this photograph was taken.

THE “Peaceful Valley” 24-sheet and a specially constructed picket fence, with farm implements easily obtainable, may be used in lobby display for Charles Ray’s First National production. The photograph shows how it was done at the Strand theatre, Williston, N. D. Entrance to the lobby was gained through gates in the fence, an arrangement which subjected patrons directly to the “a-mospheric” influence.

E. METZGER, manager of the Strand theatre, Creston, I., arranged for a furniture store window display of twin beds during the run of Mr. and Mrs. Carter DeHaven’s First National attraction. No simpler or more direct cooperative advertising opportunity has been offered the exhibitor recently.

A STAGE SETTING as elaborate as generally used in the best stage plays was constructed at the Strand theatre, Washington, D. C, for presentation of “The Stealers,” W. C. Cabanne’s production for Robertson-Cole.
Phonographic music was represented as "a millionaire's entertainment within the reach of all" in the Isis theatre tie-up for "Brewster's Millions."

Satisfied Merchant Asks Opportunity to Cooperate

The merchant who expresses his satisfaction with results obtained in co-operative advertising and volunteers in the same breath his assistance in future is a newcomer. Not many exhibitors have met him.

Such a man, proprietor of the E. L. Lennox Piano Co., Indianapolis, Ind., recently spoke in that manner to Oscar A. Kantner, Paramount exploitation representative. It came about in this manner.

Recently a co-operative display was arranged in the window of the shoe store during the local showing of "Humoresque." The display was of the type widely used in exploiting that production and a reproduction of the window display was published in this department.

It was due to his satisfaction with the benefits obtained from that display that the merchant volunteered his aid. And it was due to the fact that "Brewster's Millions" was about to open a local engagement that Mr. Kantner promptly gave him the opportunity he sought.

The line, "Brewster's Millions"—You may not have a million dollars but you can enjoy a millionaire's entertainment if you own a Columbia Grafonola—was made the basis of the display. Illustrations show the window display and the front of the Isis theatre during the engagement.

The satisfaction expressed by the Lennox manager should be typical instead of predecelnt.

Program by Ballot Palace Innovation

A balloting system whereby patrons shape their own programs is a recent innovation of the Palace theatre, Hamilton, O., which Fred S. Meyer, managing director, has made famous throughout the trade as a house of innovations. His most recent contribution to the book of showmanship is by no means his least important one.

By the distribution of specially printed blanks upon which the titles of twelve feature productions, together with the names of the stars, etc., are printed, the preference of the majority of Palace patrons is determined. Space is also provided for suggestions as to overtures and musical settings desired.

The result of the first balloting, in response to which 1,500 blanks were received, was the selection of "Madame X," a Goldwyn production, for the feature position on the program. "Zampa Overture," "Oberon Overture," and Tchaikowsky's "Symphony in A Minor" were suggested as musical settings.

Mr. Meyer's plan has many good points, the stimulation of personal interest in the Palace theatre, a closer study of the motion picture market, increased satisfaction in the programs offered being among the results which may be expected to follow consistent use of the ballot.

Five hundred Duluth, Minn., newsboys attended a special showing of "Dinty," Marshall Neilan's production for First National, at the New Lyric theatre and participated in a selling contest which lasted throughout the run.

CUTOUTS of almost scenario-like continuity were used by F. W. Teuel, manager of the People's theatre, Portland, Ore., in advertising the showing of "Habit," the First National attraction featuring Mildred Harris. Each was displayed deeply in-set between artistic panels in which brass poster frames were placed. The two views shown above and below give a definite impression of the effect created and suggest the possibility of a cutout sequence practically constituting a pictorial synopsis.
Advance Prologue Precedes "The First Born" Showing

An advance prologue of exceptional merit was staged at the Regent theatre, New York, during the week prior to the showing of "The First Born," Sessue Hayakawa's Robertson-Cole production. The above reproduction of a photograph showing the stage setting used gives only a fair idea of the magnitude of the advance advertising campaign.

Following the program of Keith vaudeville, slides were shown upon a white drop announcing the coming engagement. Then the drop was raised to disclose the setting. Cutouts from paper issued with the production formed the basis of this, to which were added Japanese lanterns so strung as to light up the stage effectively, but not too brilliantly.

A Japanese maiden then entered to the strains of "The Japanese Sand Man," played by the house orchestra. She approached an incense bowl, lighted the burner, and the fumes of burning incense powder spread through the auditorium.

When she had left the stage a coolie of the lower caste entered and prostrated himself before the idol in an attitude of worship. The descending curtain ended the prologue.

The same players participated in exterior exploitation in advance of the opening.

A jinrickshaw was obtained, parked in the lobby when not in use, and drawn through the streets at other times by the coolie, the girl occupying the driver's seat.

The methods adopted at the Regent are such as should be put in general use. The many theatres that list two stage features upon the weekly program, one a prologue for the picture in engagement and the other an added attraction, might well alter policy to the extent of making the second feature an advance prologue for the coming attraction.

In practice the plan should work out admirably. During the week preceding the showing the feature might be so elaborate as to serve perfectly the purpose of an independent feature. During the week of the engagement it could be condensed and modified to serve presentation purposes.

The same line of reasoning applies to advance exterior exploitation.

The Regent precedent is a genuine one.

It should be widely adapted.

STUNTS

Heralds prepared by the Famous Players-Lasky exploitation staff for the exploitation of "Brewster's Millions" are reported responsible for the arrest of two Mexicans in Riverside, Cal., recently. The heralds are so composed as to resemble currency and the newspaper story printed in Riverside was to the effect that one of the Mexicans had purchased innocently bills which he afterward attempted to pass as legal tender.

L. E. Ledou, Isobel, Kans., exhibitor, printed and distributed small green cards bearing a puzzle which required the placing of numbers in nine squares in such order as to total a single number when added in any fashion. "Have you 'The Luck of the Irish?'" was the catchline, the stunt being used for that Realart production.

Peggy O'Neil, who appears in "The Devil's Angel," the Clark-Cornelius production, appeared in the prologue for that attraction staged at the Strand theatre, Newark, N. J. The studio set with which the picture opens was approximated upon the Strand stage and Miss O'Neil gave a series of poses in fleshlings.

Eddie Zorn, manager of the Temple theatre, Toledo, O., invited press and clergy to a special screening of "The Inside of the Cup," a Paramount production. As the showing began, with fifty ministers and representatives from all the newspapers present, an accident at the electric power plant cut off the supply of current and the showing had to be postponed, those present being given admission tickets good for any performance during the engagement. Two sermons from the pulpit and special newspaper stories in each publication were results obtained despite the accident.

Clune's Broadway theatre, Los Angeles, recently published as a herald for "The Law of the Yukon" an adaptation of an X-Ray card device by use of which, due to an optical illusion, one may "see" the lead in a pencil, the bones of the hand, etc., when held to the light. The device has been in general use for some time as a novelty advertisement, and the theatre or picture adaptation is effected by merely printing the engagement announcement upon one side of the card.
Anetha Getwell, “the American Legion Girl,” who will be starred in six pictures by the Pantheon Pictures Corporation. Miss Getwell was the winner of a beauty contest conducted by three screen magazines in which 50,000 American girls participated.

Anetha Getwell to Star in Series Of Six Pictures by Pantheon Corp.

Anetha Getwell, the “American Legion Girl” and winner of the beauty contest held last year by some of the leading motion picture magazines, in which there were more than 50,000 entries, has been signed on a long term contract by Pantheon Pictures Corporation, according to an announcement made at the offices of that company in the Singer Building.

She will be starred in a forthcoming production to be made at the studios which the company recently took over at Fort Henry, N. Y.

Charles Miller, who directed “The Flame of the Yukon” with Dorothy Dalton, which was produced at Fort Henry, has been selected by President Paul Schoppell of Pantheon to direct Miss Getwell.

While no statement regarding the selection of the vehicle in which Miss Getwell will be starred forthcoming, it was said that it would be based on a story from the pen of one of America’s best known writers, who has specialized in dramatic tales of the far north.

George Dubois Procter, the well known scenarioist, is at work preparing the continuity, so that production may be begun without delay.

Miss Getwell, who won the name of the “American Legion Girl” through playing the stellar part in the pageant photoplay, made last Armistice Day by the American Legion to show the public just what that patriotic organization stands for and which was designed principally for exhibition in posts of the Legion throughout the country, has had a brief but considerably promising screen career.

She has played parts in several productions and was featured in “Love’s Redemption,” directed by Eugene V. Brewer, which will be published shortly in the independent field.

Her engagement by Pantheon Pictures Corporation is said to be for a series of at least six pictures.

1,500,000 Feet of Film
Sent Abroad by Famous To Meet Foreign Trade

A new record for film shipments was established by the foreign department of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation during the week of February 14, according to an announcement made by E. E. Shauer, assistant treasurer and in charge of the foreign department.

In that week approximately 1,500,000 feet of film were placed on board ship in New York harbor for all corners of the world. Shipments to England, Denmark, France, Germany, Sweden, Brazil, Japan, Australia, Cuba, Argentina, Chile, Mexico and other countries were included in this big lot of film. This is enough film to provide what two-hour shows, which if run the average 240 times, would equal 44,800 distinct performances.

Placed end to end these 1,500 rolls of film would measure approximately 300 miles. The insertion of foreign titles and the inspection of these Paramount films before shipment required approximately 375 hours of the combined labors on the part of a large force of inspectors and laboratory employees. An average large sized shipment for one week to all foreign offices and distributing agencies of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation would be 500,000 feet.

“Hearts of the Range” Again Breaks Records In Independent Sales

J. J. Sameth’s latest production, “Hearts of the Range,” again holds the record for sales in the independent field, according to its distributors, Forward Film Distributors, Inc.

Five territories were sold in as many days. A. S. Steinberg of Pittsburgh purchased the film for Pennsylvania and West Virginia; Trenton Film Company of Kansas City purchased it for Western Missouri and Kansas. W. I. Film Service of Indianapolis took the production for Indiana at what is said to be a record price. One of the largest figures ever offered a state rights future of Western type.

A year ago, Mr. Sameth, who has Wheeler Oakman, who has under contract, has given the Oliver Morosco Productions of Los Angeles permission to use and exploit Wheeler in a series of feature productions.

The first film in which Oakman will appear is a screen version of the stage success, “The Hat Breed.”

“Miracle of Manhattan” Stars Miss Hammerstein

“THe Miracle of Manhattan” has been decided upon as the title of the forthcoming Selznick picture starring Elaine Hammerstein, according to an announcement by Myron Selznick.

This is the production which was originally announced under the working title of “The Gilded Butterfly.”

Distributor Claims That This Will Enable Industry to Present Solid Opposition to All Detrimental Legislation and Will Prevent a Waste of Millions of Dollars in Production

An address hearing upon the fundamental elements of the motion picture industry was delivered by W. W. Hodkinson before the Motion Picture Directors Association at Los Angeles. The distributor has touched upon many of the vital phases of the industry. It is printed herewith that others in the trade may familiarize themselves with Mr. Hodkinson's views.

By W. W. Hodkinson

Your president, Mr. William D. Taylor, wrote a letter to me inviting me to come here tonight to speak to you on the subject that is nearest to my heart, and I think we are going to get on common ground very quickly, because I think the thing that is nearest to my heart is nearest to your heart; it is the possibilities and future of this great industry.

It is a very great industry—greater with all of its possibilities than any of us can realize who are close up against our work eight or ten days in the week—and sometimes nights.

It is an industry, gentlemen, that some day will govern the greatest brains in the world.

It is more than an industry. It is the most potent force that has ever been let loose on this earth for the helping onward or the rearding of the human race.

 This industry will command the best brains of the world for this reason. It offers the two rewards that brains have always demanded for themselves—a medium for the expression of an idea and the financial return for the idea.

The wonderful part of the motion picture is that you don't have to speculate about making money. You know that there are volumes in the library, but we don't know how many people are reading them. Nor do you know how many people understand your language. But here we have a common language.

We have something where the very financial returns will let you check upon and find to what extent your idea "got across."

We must either go along with the progress of the business or we must get out of the way of the brains who will come in and go along with the progress of the business, which will help its progress. I believe that the industry is at this minute facing two conditions—both of which will make it necessary for those who wish to progress to take stock. I think that the business needs co-ordination. I think it if better co-ordinated most of the problems of the business can be handled.

You know all of the discussion that is going on at the present time relative to sex, to be referred to many places, to the day, censorship, etc. There is nothing new about this agitation. Any student of conditions could see it coming for some time and the industry must meet this condition more intelligently than it has shown any disposition to do at the time I left New York, to keep feeling engulfed.

I am not going into details in this matter except to say that you gentlemen are in the heart of the position in this situation. It is a real danger and a real menace.

There must be some co-ordinated effort on the part of those responsible for the putting of these things before the public in addition to your effort. I will just briefly tell you something that I noticed as I came across the country which will show you why we are going to be hurt by this condition, and then I say, when you want to go into this particular subject further by questioning me, I would be glad to answer your questions.

The problem is that we are getting so many kinds of censorship prepared for us in different communities that unless we stop opposition to us that is making this condition possible, there will be so many police powers exercised, so many drastic censorship, that it won't pay to make any type of picture because you are not sure it will go into this state or that state.

Today it is possible to have pictures on the screen that will not go to Kansas that will not go to Pennsylvania and to Ohio. Going through Oregon the other day I ran into a bill of three bills that were before the legislature that day that would effectively close motion picture business in an industry so far as that state is concerned.

One required only special performances for children, boys up to 16 and girls up to 17. Another was that no picture showing any act of crime or violence of any sort would be permitted. Now we know that it is the work of fanatics in that instance. But, gentlemen, if you were to see as I did the method with which the local exhibitors and motion picture powers were endeavoring to combat this you would be disgusted.

Passing on from this moral crisis which present announcements and present plans of the producers may or may not effect, you can't see much progress made because last night I had a bulletin sent me from New York that is being put out by the reformers in which they give a great length what Mr. Brady, representing all the motion picture producers said to Mr. Cohen, representing all the local exhibitors. Each of them admits everything that everybody has charged against the industry, but blames the other for it. Hence the necessity of co-ordination in curing this fundamental wrong, otherwise we will have a state of civil war between the producers and one of the exhibitors of the other.

There is also an economic side concerning this industry. I could give you a lot of figures as to the volume of business taken from the public and in turn paid for films and the expense of distributing these films. But unless you co-ordinate them get the significance out of them—out of broad experience in that line—probably they would not be of any value to you, so I would not get you to figure any more than I have.

As some of you may know, I am frequently on record as opposed to producers' control of this industry. I don't know whether you know what I mean by that. I don't know whether you think that I mean anything by it, but I assume that you do. I will endeavor to make clear just what I do mean by it and just what the great fundamental fault in this business is, and unless it is cured it will make out any person who wants to go along on the basis of individual merit incapable of utilizing his strength to get out of a situation which, unchecked, may some day destroy us.

I believe the theory of the producer of a motion picture having the power to control the marketing of that picture is wrong. I do not say this because I want to diminish the producer, but I get in between a producer of a picture and gets a commission or a percentage that belongs to the producer, because I help pass them to the exhibitor. That isn't primarily the thing I am after. It is necessary to do that to get money to support the organization machines necessary to properly coordinate these two functions of production and exhibition; and if you put this distribution channel into the hands of the producer, you don't know how to see, an abnormally and impossible condition.

This let me illustrate more clearly what I mean by that. You know we have today some fifteen national distributing organizations. Almost without exception the distributing companies are adjuncts of producing companies.

We hear about the great waste in the studios—and I presume there is great waste in the studios—but I want to tell... you some waste that probably you do not know about.

Through being improperly co-ordinated, or not co-ordinated, this business is only taking one-half of the revenue from the public every year that it could take if it was co-ordinated. Through not being properly co-ordinated the producers are producing twice as many pictures today as is necessary to fill all of the theatres in the United States.

I can tell you how many millions are wasted there. Worse than that—or because of the first condition or a lack of patronage from the public—an excess production of mediocre quality, inferior quality, are put out and only partially digested. And they are put out arbitrarily because they have to have a certain amount of product to run the machines of distribution which they happen to have.

Half of the money being spent in the production of motion pictures today is wasted, because half of the number of pictures would get the same revenue from the public, and in a reasonable time double that revenue.

Gentlemen, I am not stopping to consider, in talking to you, whether the conditions that I see and the changes that should come about affect you or me individually. Whether you personally are affected by production going up or production going down isn't the thing I am interested in. I am not interested from the narrow angle of trying to please you. I am interested from the angle that it is my duty as a student of conditions in this industry to state facts to you which you will interpret in your own way in accordance with your own background viewpoint, and standpoint of intelligence.

Some of us here tonight will undoubtedly go on with this business to greater ideals than we have realized or can realize under the present conditions. Some of us will drop out. I only want to go on or I am willing to drop out, depending on whether this viewpoint I am expressing tonight is sound. If it is sound, I am going on. If it is not, I will drop out—and I will be grateful that I have been able to go on this far.

Did you ever stop to think what it means to have fifteen organizations of salesmen running around the country each trying to undo the work of the other fourteen all of the time? That is what is happening in this business.

Did you ever stop to think how far this business can progress when we have to create tremendous machines with all of the politics that goes with them because we have to meet release dates and it takes a certain number of pictures to keep one of these machines going? That is, it takes a certain amount of product out of a production machine to keep a distributing machine going. There is room for lots of thought on this matter. I have given it a great deal of thought.

If what I say is true, then we are beating ourselves out of half of the revenue that this business might have from the public if we knew what we were doing. If that is true it is quite a startling fact. If it is true that the industry has been producing twice as many pictures as it need to get the present revenue to support the theatres, on the present basis of revenue, and to keep the same revenue, at least immediately, coming from the exhibitor and from the public, is another startling fact.

If we are spending twenty million dollars a year to support these distributing machines when you could do the job much better with ten or less—that, too, is startling if true.

If the total sum spent in production and running these machines is greater than is taken out of the exhibitor—that is still another thing that is startling if true, and I believe it is true.

If these uneconomic conditions exist they exist for one reason: the desire of each person in the business to play his own game, regardless of what happens to the business as a whole. This is a business, gentlemen, where people have been taking out, taking out, and nobody has been putting in; and we have got to the same stage we would get to if we did the same thing with grain. When we exhaust it we have to plant before we get another crop.

I believe we are at the stage where we have to do some planting—more intelligent planting. You can’t think of all of these things, gentlemen, while you are busy producing the picture. It has got to begin at the top, and there must be some architects and planners who will formulate some plan for curing these conditions—and then cure them.

Producer-control, I think, is a vicious thing. It puts the producer in an impossible position. If I thought it could be done I would be a producer with a production organization and a distributing organization as well. I don’t think it can be done. I don’t think I can do it. I know all these other executives that are trying to do it; I know them quite well. I don’t see any of them that I think can do it. For the simple reason that when we get the balance of power by which we can force a thing which we happen to make into a market, whether it is hit or not, how are we going to be graded as to whether we are progressing or whether we are slipping?

Why do not these producers who are requested to put out so many pictures that they have to make them poorly in many instances to meet release dates, and who have to have their men traveling on the same train with some other man to sell products, or going into unsell the product the other fellow has sold—why don’t they cut down their product and why don’t they consolidate their distribution? It is because they don’t trust the others. It is because no producer would want to put his product through another producer’s machine. He would rather carry along some organization which he calls assets when they are liabilities, and the longer he carries them and the greater they grow the less anxious he is to go to the banker and tell him that is the condition.

So much for the production part of it with the producer-control.

We have the exhibitor on the other side who feels that under this producer-control he is charged all the producer can get out of him regardless of whether it is right or not. Without saying whether the exhibitor pays too much or too little, the undignified conditions, gentlemen, on which motion pictures are sold is a disgrace to the business. The way they start out and ask $5,000, and take $250,000—it doesn’t build any confidence; it doesn’t inspire any respect in the mind of the exhibitor or the men who work selling the pictures.

We have got to have more scientific and better ways of determining values. It is possible to determine the value of pictures. Some years ago all pictures were ten cents a foot, and I went into New York and submitted a proposition to change them. I knew when I was trying to buy a producer’s picture as cheaply as I could that when he sold them to me he was trying to make them as cheaply as he could to get the margin of profit out.

All Christie Product Goes to Educational Producer to Give Personal Attention to One and Two Reelers

As the result of the visit of E. W. Harriman, president of Educational Film Corporation and its distributing subsidiary, Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., to Los Angeles, it is announced that Al Christie, head of Christie Film Company, will devote his entire attention for the next six months and the entire resources of his organization to the creation of one and two-reel comedies for publication through Educational.

Gives Personal Attention

In addition to his supervision of the entire product, Al Christie will pay personal attention to the direction of two reelers. He recently has completed two of these pictures, "Man Vs. Woman" featuring Dorothy Devore and Neal Burns and the largest cast that has appeared in a Christie comedy, and "The Return of Earl" with Dorothy Devore and Earl Rodney and what is said to be the most elaborate cabaret setting that motion pictures have seen. The latter is on the schedule for the latter part of March.

Word comes from the Coast that he now is handling the merchandise on "Sneakers," in which the settings are said to be sumptuous and in which more than 200 players take part. In addition to the adult players remarkable baby and dog actors are promised.

Comedies are Completed

"Red Hot Love," featuring Neal Burns and Vera Steadman, is another two-reeler which is nearing completion at the Hollywood plant, this one under the direction of Scott Sidney. William Beaudine is at work on "Lily and Snappy" featuring Bobby Vernon and Eddie Barry, the first time two male featured players have appeared in the same Christie picture.

This is in addition to the Vanity and Gayety comedies, from four to six companies being engaged on these.

Publication of Serial

Marks Kleine's Return to Active Film Work

The publication of "The Hope Diamond Mystery," the fifteen-episode serial being distributed on the states rights market by Howells Sales Company, marks the re-entrance of George Kleine into active participation in the affairs of the motion picture industry.

Kleine was one of the earliest successful producers of the business. Since his retirement as president of General Film Company, little has been heard of his activities. Years ago he brought from Italy the spectacular "The Last Days of Pompeii" and "The Fall of Rome." Up to this time these were the biggest pictures yet produced or shown and George Kleine made a fortune by the manner in which he exploited them in this country.

While particular as to the pictures mentioned, "The Hope Diamond Mystery" is said to have exploitation possibilities that the three most successful serials of the class and is another example of the great and successful showmanship knowledge of George Kleine.

"Let's Go," Urges Pearson As He Launches Pathe's Brunet Month

Despite February Returns First Week of Drive in Honor of President Brings Record for Sales and Collections

The entire organization of Pathe Exchange, Inc., has been roused to a keen pitch over the prospects of breaking all records during "Brunet Month" which opened March 1.

Spurred on by an inaugural message by Director of Exchanges Elmer Pearson, the Pathe sales forces in each of the four contesting divisions started on the opening day to make "Brunet Month" a fitting tribute to the Pathe president, who this month begins his fourth year at the head of the organization.

Marks Period of Prosperity

In his message to the thirty-two branches, Mr. Pearson said:

Paul Brunet

President of Pathe Exchange in whose honor salesmen throughout the country are conducting a "Brunet Month" sales campaign.

"March marks the beginning of President Brunet's fourth year as guardian of the destinies of Pathe Exchange. In the past, and the conclusion of three years of prosperity and business success, the like of which the industry provides no parallel. His fidelity to organization, his profit sharing commission and bonus plans, has prospered and developed the business ability of each and all of us to an unmeasurable extent.

"Despite chaotic financial and production conditions our fiscal year gave us our producers really remarkable returns and gave us a fair profit and we thank you for the remarkable response you have given every day in cooperation.

Business Again Normal

"Through President Brunet's constructive ability we start a new year with all chaos of cost and production wilderness eliminated. Every item of our present output is at the crest of popularity. We have added new items that critics have resoundingly praised. January increased over December and February over January. What more propitious time could have been selected for every man and woman of our respected organization to throw themselves into a tremendous business drive for a Brunet Month that will put new temerity into every part of our efforts for a successful and another year off with an inspiring impetus.

Make of every branch under the improved possibilities a splendid profit and bonus unit. Pay a most deserved tribute to a chief who watches and takes pride in the development and success of every member of the organization in which he has such rightful proprietary love.

Will Award Prizes

"We shall award prizes to one winning branch in each of our four divisions similar to those of November. Contracts to count in contest must carry full dates and advance payments and will be figured against a fixed quota absolutely fair to all. In determining winning branches 70 per cent consideration will be given to contracts and 30 per cent to collections.

Men, you have never exerted yourself to a more laudable cause, either altruistically or selfishly and while I know it is unnecessary to urge you further it pleases me to record myself as having every ounce of my own energy in this wonderful business revival and will expect nothing less from every co-worker. Let's go."

The response to this message is significant of what is to be expected at the termination of the month. In spite of the very flattering record made during the last week of February, the sales records mounted high during the first week in March.

Dennan Lamson Now Production Manager

Announcement has been made by C. C. Burr, president of Master Films, Inc., producers of the Torchy comedies issued through Educational, of the permanent appointment of Dennan Lamson as production manager.

Lamson was similarly occupied with several other producers before joining Master Films.

Arbuckle Completes New Film, "Crazy to Marry"

Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle has completed "Crazy to Marry," the Paramount picture which was adapted by Walter Woods from Frank Condon's story, "Three Miles Out." The comedian will reprise the same role in which Arbuckle played the part of a famous surgeon in the story, and in this character he is said to be a veritable riot of absurdities. Lila Lee, leading in "Bull" Montana and Edwin Stevens have important comedy roles. Arbuckle's next picture will be "Gasoline Gus," adapted by Walter Woods from a story by George Pattullo.
Unofficial Body Regulates Pictures

J. W. Shepard Says Exhibitors and Public Are Content to Rely on the Judgment of This Committee of Which One Is a Mother, One a Teacher and One a Professor

OKLAHOMA is one state where there is no official censorship and no serious desire for any, according to Prof. James W. Shepard of the University of Oklahoma.

Exhibitors and the public, he declares, are content to rely upon the judgment of an unofficial body comprised of a mother, a woman teacher and Prof. Shepard.

And with its freedom from bureaucratic restrictions, the state has taken a place among the leaders in the use of films for educational work, he says. * * *

Prof. Shepard was in New York recently and told a reporter something of the operations of the Oklahoma system. He had attended the meeting of the National Educational Association in Atlantic City and stopped in New York, partly, he said, to see "The Old Swimmin' Hole," in which Arthur S. Kane presents Charles Ray through First National.

"Our board of censors," said Prof. Shepard, "which isn't officially denominated as such but performs the function unofficially, is composed of a woman teacher, past middle age; a mother, and myself. I am associate professor of education and the head of the visual instruction department of the state university, for so highly do we hold motion pictures as an educational force that we have established such a department.

"The Oklahoma Visual Education Association, formed to advance visual instruction, is composed of all classes of schools, ranging from district schools to colleges and universities. It is self-supporting. This is a compound of units which, at their own expense, have installed projectors. I happen to be chairman of the executive committee of this organization. The unofficial censors act as liaison officers between the association and the distributing agencies having branch headquarters in Oklahoma City. We have pre-views of new films and send recommendations to the subscribing schools forming the organization's membership. Then, when a school wants a given film it notifies me, I telephone from Norman, where the state university is located, and the distributors make the delivery. * * *

"There are two phases of the association's work. First, is the service of educational films, including pictures on classical and scientific subjects. Then there are pictures for recreational purposes only, for many of the schools give regular entertainments, some of them as frequently as once a week. A school individually pays the expenses when a film is used. Thirty schools received this service last year and seventy have joined the association for the coming term. We are on the best of terms with exhibitors throughout the state and the recommendations of the unofficial censors have weight with them as well as the school directors. We have a reputation for being broad-minded. We do not tolerate immoral pictures, but we want them to be clever and 'alive' as well as clean.

"Charles Ray is one of the favorites with reviewers, educators, exhibitors and public generally and we have made several selections from his pictures, always with gratifying success.

"Already the state university is preserving a library of films which we expect will prove valuable historical documents. We have recently added to our collection films showing the state legislature in session."

Ballin Producing Two More for Hodkinson

Mabel Ballin to be Starred In Charlotte Bronte's "Jane Eyre"

Instead of a single production to follow "East Lynne" Hugo Ballin announces two.

The first, "Ave Maria," is a story written directly for the screen. Following this will come a picturization of Charlotte Bronte's novel, "Jane Eyre," both of which, like "East Lynne," will be distributed by Hodkinson.

Hugo Ballin will play the principal feminine role in the new picture and will create for the first time on the screen the complex and fascinating character of "Jane Eyre."

Certain preliminary scenes in the latter have been photographed and the production will be completed when the first picture shows, immediately following "Ave Maria."

Hugo Ballin considers "Ave Maria" by far the most vital and moving narrative he has ever read solely for screen purposes. The character of the story, the identity of the author, the circumstantial background of which it was written and the manner in which it came into Ballin's possession invest it with uncommon interest. For it is the work of a man now deceased, Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, who long ago created the character of "Ave Maria." Ballin will play the part of the author.

Instead of a "religious" story as might be expected, the author narrates a powerful drama of the secular world.

Production and State Right Firm Organized

Aaron A. Corn, B. H. Bernstein and M. Lewis have organized Aycie Pictures Corporation to state right and produce motion pictures. Offices have been established at 117 West 46th street, New York.

Jerome Lewis heads the sales staff. He reports many sales on the company's initial projection, the "Spur Series" of fourteen two-reel Western dramas: "Under Western Skies" is the first five part picture.

"Child Thou Gavest Me"

Will Be Stahl Feature

Louis B. Mayer announces that "The Child Thou Gavest Me" will be the permanent title of the initial John M. Stahl production which is in the making under the working title of "Muffled Drums."

The story is an original by Perry N. Yekroff. Directed by Stahl, the picture has an all-star cast headed by Lewis Stone, Barbara Castleton, William Desmond and Baby Richard Headrick. "The Child Thou Gavest Me" will be presented by Mayer through First National.

NORMA Talmadge Trailer
To Aid Near East Relief

The Near East Relief, formerly The American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief, with New York state headquarters at 261 Madison Avenue, is starting a world-wide campaign to raise money to ship at once a large quantity of flour to relieve the desperate situation in the Bible lands.

To facilitate the speedy collection of large quantities of flour and to make possible small contributions in every community, a special coin box with receptacles for receiving cash contributions from 5 cents to $1 have been devised. Norma Talmadge was the first to drop her $1 into the poster, which is now placed in thousands of stores, banks, churches and other establishments. Miss Talmadge has been photographed with this poster and 60,000 of these photographs are being distributed around the country. Furthermore, she has just finished a trailer which will be shown in thousands of theatres in the United States, Canada and all the biggest cities in Europe. This trailer is entitled “Herself.”

Four French Features to Be Published by C. B. C.

American distribution rights for a series of four French dramatic pictures, have been obtained by C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation.

The first of this series, “The Nightingale of Paris,” will be issued shortly. It is announced. These pictures will be offered by C. B. C. to state right distributors as a result of a belief on the part of Joe Brandt and Jack Cohn of that company that the barriers against foreign-made pictures have been swept away, and their value for the American market demonstrated beyond any doubt. What final doubt may have remained on this subject was, they declare, absolutely cleared by the records made here by “Passion,” the foreign-made picture which is proving one of the greatest money-getters in film offerings. It is their opinion that the success of this picture has been the means of bringing about a revolution of feeling in the film world.

Next Eugene O’Brien Film Will Be Issued March 20

Eugene O’Brien’s latest Selznick production, “Gilded Lies,” which presents the star in the role of a young explorer who is given up for dead by his fiancee, is announced for publication on March 20.

John Lynch is the author of “Gilded Lies.” The R. Cecil Smiths pictured the story and William P. S. Earle directed the production. Martha Mansfield plays the leading feminine role and other members of the cast include Frank Whitson and George Stewart.

Bebe Daniels Lays Cornerstone of New Dallas Theatre by Telegraph

Press Association and Newspapers Aid Southern Enterprises in Making Arrangements

For Palace Ceremony

Novelty was added to the ceremony attendant upon the laying of the cornerstone of the new Palace theatre, Dallas, Tex., a Southern Enterprises house.

Bebe Daniels, Realart star and a former resident of Dallas, was asked to officiate at the ceremony. Because of work commitments it was impossible to arrange for the unique ceremony.

Complete arrangements were made by Southern Enterprises in cooperation with the Dallas Journal, Los Angeles Record and the United Press.

The problem was presented to the Dallas Journal, arranged with the United Press and the Los Angeles Record to provide facilities by which Miss Daniels could remain in the California city and yet actually supply the physical energy necessary to put the cornerstone in place at the chosen moment.

So, early on the morning of the opening, Miss Daniels drove down to the office of the Record where the United Press bureau is located. At 8:25 a. m., Pacific Coast time, the telegraph operator on duty relinquished his instrument, Miss Daniels taking the key. Promptly at 8:30 she pressed the key which broke a contact in Dallas which in turn caused the theatre cornerstone to slide into position, and at the same time rang a bell at the theatre site. This notified everyone within hearing that the feat of actually laying a cornerstone by telegraph had been accomplished for what is believed to be the first time.

Immediately after sending the flash Miss Daniels sent a message to the Journal, commenting on her feelings on officiating at a cornerstone-laying ceremony in her native city.

The arrangements for the mechanical part of the ceremony were handled by the Southwestern Telephone Company, which arranged for the wire that carried the flash from the United Press bureau in the Journal office, to the theatre site. An expert with an electrical company constructed the device enabling the Realart star in Los Angeles to lay the cornerstone in Dallas.

Mayor Frank Wozencraft was invited to handle the towel and seal the cornerstone. He was unable to be present but was represented by Judge Felix D. Robertson. The Reverend Graham Frank of the Central Christian church pronounced the benediction.

Representing Southern Enterprises at the ceremony were Herschel Stuart, director of theatres; L. F. Stuart, who will manage the new playhouse; W. R. Lynch, manager of construction department, and William H. Branch, press representative.

The cornerstone was set in the Elm street front of the building. Three things were placed in the box in the stone—a copy of the Dallas Journal of March 1, a photograph of Miss Daniels and a letter from the Realart star, containing her wish for the success and prosperity of the theatre which will always be linked with her name.

When completed the theatre will be Dallas’ largest playhouse hoisting of a seating capacity of 3,000 and erected at a cost of $1,000,000. It will be located at Elm and St. Paul streets.
190 Northwest Theatres Observe
First National Anniversary Week

One hundred and ninety theatres in Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana celebrated “First National Week” in commemoration of the first anniversary of Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

The celebration was a complete success from every standpoint. Washington led the procession with eighty theatres presenting First National attractions during the week. Oregon was a close second with seventy-six. Montana produced twenty-nine and Idaho, five.

Oregon Cities Lead

For individual cities showing the greatest number of First National attractions, during the week, however, the palm was awarded to Oregon. Portland enrolled twenty-six theatres under the Strand banner. Seattle, Wash., was next with twenty-one. Tacoma had ten theatres in line.

The Coliseum, the big Jensen & Von Herberg house in Seattle, presented Louis B. Mayer’s “The Woman in His House,” with Mildred Harris, while “The Kid,” Charlie Chaplin’s production, kept the Liberty packed to the doors for seven days. The Strand, by way of contrast, offered “The Truth About Husbands,” and at the Rex, “Nomads of the North” held forth. Big space in the newspapers heralded the presentation of these attractions to Seattle’s theatregoers.

Big Advertising Used

In Tacoma, the leading offerings during First National Week were “The Truth About Husbands” at the Rialto, Katherine MacDonald in “My Lady’s Latchkey” at the Colonial; “Not Guilty,” the Sidney Franklin production at the Strand, and “The Scoffer,” at the Victory. The Coliseum in Seattle and the Rialto in Tacoma each announced their attractions with five-column advertisements, running the full depth of the front page of the motion picture section.

the Rialto embellishing its announcement with colors.

In the Seattle newspapers, a full page announcement gave to the public the details of the big celebration, with the name of every theatre in every town in the Northwest where the anniversary of Associated First National Pictures was to take place.

Texas Guinan Series Is Reported Well Under Way

The Texas Guinan series of eight five-reel Western dramas being produced by Victor Kremer are reported well under way.

The first one, “I Am the Woman,” is ready for issue, while the second, “The Girl Sheriff,” will be ready very soon. In connection with the recent announcement of Lew Fields, the comedian producer, that he will shortly put on a musical comedy under the title of “Mad Love,” Kremer desires it known that the prospective comedy is in no way connected with his picture of the same title.

The Kremer picture, in which the operatic diva, Lina Cavalieri is starred, is strictly a drama and has nothing in common, as to the theme, with the Fields comedy.

$40,000 Will Be Expended on New Building at Culver City

With the expenditure of $40,000 on new administration buildings, stage and work shops, the plant of Pacific Film Company at Culver City, Calif., will cover seventeen city lots, making it one of the most commodious and complete studios in Southern California.

Rush Construction Work

Work is being rushed on a new stage, 100 by 130 feet. The executive offices will be in the modern Spanish style of architecture, with a patio occupying the space in the center to afford light and ventilation for every room. This open space will be converted into a garden, being planted in rare semi-tropical trees, shrubs and flowers.

New dressing rooms will be included, while ample provision will be made for the accommodation of laboratories, carpenter and paint shops, property rooms, etc.

Produce One-Reel Comedy

The present production program of Manager John J. Hayes includes a single-reel George Oney comedy each week. These are filmed under the White Cap banner, with Arby Arly playing opposite the well-known comedian. With the completion of the new buildings at the studio, five-reel features will be added to the output. The administration building will front on Venice boulevard.

Fox Believes “Queen of Sheba” Is Greatest Spectacle Ever Produced

3,500 Persons Were Needed in Adapting Story to The Screen—Print Has Arrived in East From West Coast Studio

From Fox New York headquarters comes word that the film that carries Fox’s greatest production, “Queen of Sheba,” has arrived from the West Coast studios. After a private showing of the big subject, Fox officials are of the opinion that they have the greatest screen spectacle ever produced.

It took the labor of 3,500 people to adapt the great story to the screen. In addition to these, there were concerned in its production fifteen principals and a ballet of 100 dancers. The horses used number 300 and camels fifty, while fifty-one chariots and 150 tents figured largely in the making of the great picture.

Story by Virginia Tracy

The story, which is described as the world’s greatest love story, was written by Virginia Tracy, the well-known short story writer.

Unlike most spectacular productions, “Queen of Sheba” has a story in which love is paramount and the conflict of human emotions kept to the front at all times. Some idea of the massiveness and grandeur of the settings may be gleaned from the fact that one set, that of the Tower of David, there appear 700 actors, 265 horses and fifty-one chariots.

In another set, the Throne Room of King Solomon, which is a reproduction of the celebrated painting by Sir Edwin J. Poynter, there is revealed a vast hall with a triple row of gigantic pillars, ranging about the sides of the hall and in smaller form before Solomon’s throne. The larger pillars, of which there are forty-two, are said to weigh 2,100 pounds each.

Five Acre Lot Used

Five acres of the Fox Hollywood lot were utilized daily in making the outdoor scenes of the picture, upon which the streets and squares of Jerusalem were erected for the camera.

The costuming which alone, it is said, represents a small fortune, was under the supervision of Mrs. Margaret Whistler, who, with a large army of dressmakers worked on it for several months.

Another busy army consisted of bootmakers, feather ornament workers, jewel manufacturers, etc. Betty Blythe, who enacts the part of the Queen, has twenty-eight changes of costumes.

The direction of the spectacle was entrusted to J. Gordon Edwards, who directed “Cleopatra” and “Salome” for Fox. More than 100 volumes concerning the period treated were consulted before the direction started, and experts were sent to the Orient for technical information relating to costumes and properties. The directorial staff was arranged as follows: Mr. Edwards was in charge, with two chief lieutenants under him, who in turn were in charge of ten assistant directors. Fourteen cameras caught the story. The actual filming required seven months, after five months of preparatory work.

Makes Speed Record With Sale of Talmadge Feature

Through a letter from a telegram company reporting the speed of its service, Franklyn E. Backer of Horizon Pictures, Inc., learned that he had closed with Savini Films, Inc., of Atlanta, Ga., for Norma Talmadge in the five-reel picture, “A Daughter’s Strange Inheritance,” for the entire South in exactly twelve minutes.

Backer’s wire was in answer to an offer by Robert Savini for the states of North and South Carolina, Tennessee, Georgia, Alabama and Florida, and closed the deal in what is probably record time for negotiations by telegraph for the dance. Joseph Skirboll of Pittsburgh has bought the Norma Talmadge feature for Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

Paramount Booklet Gives Exhbitors Outline of Future Production Plans
Details of Forthcoming Pictures Furnish Ample Material for Use by Theatre Men in Advance Exploitation

To enable Paramount exhibitors to show their patrons what attractions they can expect for the next year, the advertising department of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has issued an illustrated booklet of sixteen pages outlining the company's production plans for the next eighteen months.

Embracing the names of some of the world's most famous authors, as well as the names of the stars and directors who dominate Paramount Pictures, the booklet furnishes exhibitors material which will enable them to talk about attractions which they will book for several months to come.

Describes Future Films

The booklet not only details the pictures to be published by Paramount up to September 1, but also gives an extensive description of most of the big specials to be included on the Paramount schedule for next season. Thus, exhibitors by using this material in their newspaper advertising, lobby displays, cards, direct by mail advertising and posters, can call the attention of patrons to the fact that it is at their theatres where they can find Paramount entertainment during the months to come.

Copies of the booklet are being sent to every exhibitor in the country. The cover design, printed in green and silver, represents a crystal gazer holding up an enormous crystal ball in the center of which is the caption: "Look in here and see your future."

Notable among the productions listed for the year commencing in September is "The End of the World," a mammoth six-reeler, many of the scenes of which are laid in Shanghai. This picture will mark the initial appearance of Betty Compson as a star under the Paramount banner.

List Pictures Promised

Among the other stupendous productions promised are: "The Affairs of Anatol," which Cecil B. DeMille has just completed; "Peter Pan," Sir J. M. Barrie's notable play; "Montmartre," a spectacular drama of the French capital; "La Perle" and "The Road to Rome," which will be produced as another Cecil B. DeMille special; "The Great Impersonation," starring Phillips Oppenheim, which Director George Melford will contribute to the Paramount program.

"Experience," the film version of the famous stage play directed by George Fitzmaurice in which Richard Barthelmess will play the leading role; "The Wanderers," the same of the same name; "Ladies Must Live," the second Paramount picture directed by George Levey, starring Bert Lytell; "Peter Rabbit," immortalized on the stage by the artistry of the two Barrymores; "Is Marriage a Failure," David Belasco's greatest play, will be given adequate treatment for the screen, and "Bella Donna," adapted from Robert Hichens' gripping tale.

Specials Are Scheduled

The list of specials on the Paramount schedule is revealed by the foregoing compilation, is supplemented by further productions which are to be published, in part for the coming year. These include such offerings as "Black Pat," from Fannie Hurst's story, "The Shouting," a Knolrock's drama; "Everything for Sale," an original story by Hector Turnbull; "Uncanny Virtue," in which Gloria Swanson will be starred.

"Gasolene Gus," a comedy in which Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle will star; "The Trouble with Women," an adaptation of the humorous Lucien Cary story; "Vendetta," Marie Corelli's great novel, the cast of which will be revealed; "You Can't Fool Your Wife," an original script by Hector Turnbull for a George Melford production; "Good for the Soul," Margaret Deland's story to be produced by Cecil B. DeMille; "The Sixty-first Second," Owen Johnson's fact-producing novel, a splendid production; "Traveling On," which will star William S. Hart in a two-fisted role, and "Super Man," another story by Fannie Hurst.

Stars Are Announced

The stars listed in the Paramount constellation for these productions include: Elsie Farnum, Thelma Scott, Gloria Swanson, Ethel Clayton, Dorothy Dalton, Agnes Ayres, Thomas Meighan, Wallace Reid, William S. Hart, Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle, Richard Barthelmess, Elliott Dexter and Jack Holt. The screen artists who will support these stars in Paramount productions next year include such popular favorites as Lois Wilson, Conrad Nagel, Kathryn Williams, Morgan Bay, Margaret Loomis, Walter Hiser, Julia Fay, Donoviel, Lilac Lee, Theodore Roberts, Ann Forest, Theodore Kosloff, Alma Tell and Charles Ogle.

The directors are Cecil B. and William DeMille, William D. Taylor, Joseph Henabery, Hugh Ford, James Cruze, George Fitzmaurice, Roy Rowland, Tom Forman, Isabel Swift, Donald Crisp, Robert Z. Leonard and Pearl Hunt Stanlaw.

This list enumerated above will be supplemented by special productions, prepared by well known directors for Paramount, including among others Charles Maigne, John Ford, Raoul Walsh, Thomas Heffron, Tom Forman, Frank Urson, Lambert Hillyer, Frank Borzage, Robert Vignola, George D. Baker and Albert Capellani.

Metro Issues Four Dramas This Month

May Allison, Viola Dana and Bert Lytell Featured in Three

The four playphotographs are the work originally of authors of national or international prominence.

Published on March 7

May Allison's picture was published on March 7. It is adapted from "More Stately Mansions" by Ben Ames Williams. The second issue, "The Little Fool," is the screen version of Jack London's novel of a woman's indecision, "The Little Lady of the Big House." The play, "A Message from Mars," by Richard Ganthony, is one of the classics of the generation, Viola Dana's story, "Puppets of Fate," written for her especially by Donn Byrne.

"Extravagance" was scenario'd by Mark Hanna, "Bride of the Loneliness" by Romaine Harris.

The supporting cast includes Robert Edeson, Theodore von Eltz, William Courtwright, Lawrence Grant and Marie Stone.

"The Little Fool" will be issued on March 14. It is a Jack London picture, adapted from his sensational novel. It is a C. E. Shurtleff all-star production.

The all-star cast follows: Milton Sills, Ora Carew, Noel Barrie, Byron Munson, Aline MacMahon, Margaret Murdock, Carl Norden, and Charles Vidor. The supporting cast includes Raye Dean, Maud Milton, Alphonzo Ethier, Gordon Ash, Leonard Mudie, Mary Beaton, Frank Currier and George Spink.

The fourth issue, "Puppets of Fate," starring Viola Dana, is scheduled for March 28. For her supporting cast Viola Dana has Francis McDonald, Jackie Saunders, Fred Kelsey, Thomas Quick and Edward Kennedy. The screen adaptation is by Ruth Ann Baldwin and Molly Parro: direction by Dallas M. Fitzgerald.

And David Smith Will Handle Megaphone
On "Flower of the North"

The Vitagraph studio at Hollywood is a center of activity these days. Albert E. Smith, president of that company, arrived there some few weeks ago with the year's production plans, and has now had the satisfaction of seeing two special productions started.

George Randolph Chester has commenced casting the principal characters for "The Son of Wallingford," which he recently completed in fiction form, and which he personally will direct for the screen.

David Smith to Direct

Within the next few days preparation will be under way for "Flower of the North," a James Oliver Curwood novel, which will be made into a seven-reel production by David Smith.

Earle Williams, who recently finished "It Can Be Done," is well under way in the filming of Wyndham Martyn's "The Secret of the Silver Car." This will be a more pretentious Williams production than usual.

Antonio Moreno will start another feature production shortly under the direction of Chester Bennett.

Finish Camera Work

William Duncan and Edith Johnson, co-stars in "Fighting Fate," their chapter-play, are finishing actual camera work. This is said to have had the costliest production schedule ever attempted with this type of picture at Vitagraph. Footage cost on "Fighting Fate" has run higher than the average feature. The company made many visits to the exact locations named in the script, these ranging from Northwestern United States down into the heart of old Mexico.

These co-stars soon will start another picture of their own. They may make a few personal appearances at the larger Coast theatres where the earlier episodes of their chapter play are showing.

Semon on New Film

Joe Ryan and his Western unit, filming "The Purple Riders," have returned from two weeks at Catalina Island, where the twelfth episode was taken.

Larry Semon is on "The Rent Collector." This will follow "The Hick." The Jim Aubrey unit, under the direction of Jess Robbins, is preparing to start a new comedy.

Many studio improvements, such as added buildings and permanent sets, have been prepared by W. S. Smith, general manager, and construction will be in constant course throughout the spring months.

Press Book Is Ready for "Mistress of Shenstone"

Robertson-Cole has published for the exploitation of "The Mistress of Shenstone," the second Pauline Frederick special production. It is ready for issue as an unusually attractive press and campaign book in shades of blue and red, with a Ben Day block in a reddish color throughout. The latter sort of tint block, it is said, has never been used before in connection with a motion picture press book.

Robertson-Cole is expecting great results from "The Mistress of Shenstone," and expressed its opinion that it is an even better picture than "A Slave of Vanity," in which Miss Frederick has been scoring heavily during the last few weeks. By the use of this press book the distributing corporation believes any exhibitor who books Miss Frederick in this picture, and follows out the press book's suggestions, cannot help but reap an ample return.

Hopper Re-Signs to Direct for Goldwyn

The directorial contract which E. Mason Hopper holds with Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has been renewed for one year and Hopper will continue directing for that organization the type of comedy with which his name is most closely linked.

He directed for Goldwyn the series of two-reel comedies of boy life by Booth Tarkington, "The Adventures and Emotions of Edgar Pomeroy."

"Tarzan" Statement Is Denied by Burroughs

Supplementing the denial of H. G. Kosch, secretary of Numa Pictures Corporation, Edgar Rice Burroughs, the author, has issued a statement declaring that "E. P. Craft's statement to the effect that he has an arrangement with me which gives him the rights to other of my stories in addition to whatever rights he owns in 'The Return of Tarzan' is untrue. Mr. Kosch's denial declared that Craft 'has no other or further interest in 'The Return of Tarzan.'"

Paramount Magazine is Cut to 500 Feet Length
Shows Only Cartoon

The Paramount office announces that, commencing with the issue of March 6, a radical change will be made in the Paramount Magazine. Instead of the 1,000 feet, which now consists of three or more tabloid subjects, the Paramount Magazine in the future will be 500 feet in length, the footage to be taken up entirely with a cartoon comedy.

These comedies will introduce real characters who will carry along the comedy action with the cartoon figures. They will be written and executed by the members of the Paramount Magazine cartoon staff, Earl Hurd, Pat Sullivan, Frank Moser and Henry D. Bailey.

Stoll Publishes Its Tenth Film in U. S.
"Bars of Iron" Is Adaptation Of Story Written By Ethel Dell

"Bars of Iron," tenth in the series of Stoll Film Corporation productions published in this country since January 1, was issued on March 6. This picture is an adaptation, made by F. Martin Thornton, who also directed the production of a novel by Ethel M. Dell.

The setting of the story is in Australia and in England, and these countries form the background for an unusual romance.

Many new types, corresponding in a general way to those of our West, are found in "Bars of Iron," the bully and bad man the same, but all new, and the "remanance."

Roland Myles plays the part of the young traveler who runs into more adventure than he has bargained for, in the Australian sheep town.

Madge White, famous on the Continent as the "Pajama Girl," takes the leading feminine role. Besides Mr. Myles in the supporting company are Major Eric Lankester, Gordon Webster, Lewis S. Kansome, Gertrude Sterrell, J. Edwards-Barber, J. R. Tozer, William Lenzers, Olga Conway, H. Hubert, R. Townsend, and Iris Lunan.
Next Pickford Film Offers A Dual Role

Mary Pickford's next film offering, says Bennie Zeidman, her new production manager, will be "Little Lord Fauntleroy," the famous story by Frances Hodgson Burnett.

"We believe," said Zeidman, "that 'Little Lord Fauntleroy' will be Miss Pickford's best picture. Certainly greater opportunity for the screen, and perhaps the best means of selling the pictures that we have.

But when I devised a percentage system which would have owned his own product and had a live interest in it, progress began from that time because the producer had a stake, he had an incentive.

The exhibitor today has no confidence in the people who supply him with films. He organizes, buys all the theatres in the town and tells you what he will give you. It is civil war. It is, as I say now, a condition where Mr. Cohen is telling you that Mr. Brady, the representative of the National Association, who, because he is a fine speech maker, is telling the exhibitor in his town they are alright whereas they are alright or not. They are all right, I presume, so far as Mr. Brady knows. He is telling them they are all right and the exhibitor is retorting by saying, 'We dealt with your National Association and you went back on your agreements, you broke your promises.'

Gentlemen, do you think that a great, big, dignified industry like this, which gives us such a wonderful talent and brains, is going along standing all of this mistreatment? It is not.

It is either going to cave in and close up or you are going to return to conditions that will run it properly, I'll bet you.

I walked away from the biggest thing in this business and set up my own company, three years ago, that this condition would whip itself—and it is doing it very properly and very promptly at present.

Here's my big job today: I am trying to help some worthy elements on either side of this proposition to co-ordinate and find a basis of the rest to see the same thing and guide them and shape them—fine.

The biggest problem on anything that I think. I am telling you what I found in a book brought out in 1917 when I said, 'What shall we do with the motion picture industry?'

We're up against that problem now—between Mr. Brady and Mr. Cohen. I was predicting that it must lead inevitably to that. It is very hard to do things for an industry for a lot of people in that industry and to be misunderstood. If you gentlemen here are producers I am not interested in getting in between you and your market after a fashion. I am interested in getting you that 100 percent increase and not missing the rest now, and getting mine out of that. I don't want any of your commissions.

Gentlemen, I am not interested in the exhibitor in conferences with him, individually and collectively, across this country, these facts: It is a fine theory that these things are all wrong, but what are you going to do to better them? I have a mechanism that can be used with the exhibitor on one side, and it is not a mechanism that is a relationship with a producer where I have to be dishonest with the exhibitor—and furthermore I don't want to deal with the exhibitors where I can be honest and fair with the producer who deal with me.

If that doesn't solve the thing as far as we are concerned, if that isn't the type of adjustment that must come into the industry, then I will say that I have wasted thirteen years in which I have studied this thing as carefully as any student ever studied it in an effort to get rid of these wasted those years and will take off my coat and go to work for the fellow who has the plan that will straighten this thing out.

I think that right now the producer-controlled organizations are beginning to disintegrate. I think that within a very short time, instead of the factory system of production, we will have individual units running their own sinking or swimming on their own merits, not carrying anything and not being carried.

All I want is an opportunity to keep on trying to be the best, and I think there is a lot of surplus, excess weight—whether it is wasteful, duplicating system, or whether it is excess capitalization, or any of those things, I think they are wasting in the hands of the people who have confidence enough to go along on the basis of their individual merit.

I haven't any rough and ready rule as to what makes an efficient production unit. I don't know whether it is something to me, 'It is the director.' Somebody else says, 'It is the producer,' and somebody else says, 'Why, I am the author; I wrote it,' and somebody else says something else.

I think, as a matter of fact, that we are going to get some new concerns under various schemes and carrying systems...

I think there are going to be men who are competent to do the production work straight through and I think there are others who are going to need to be supplemented. I think there are others that have elements of various kinds. I haven't anything to offer as to how to get good products. The method on which I am working today is to endeavor to use such judgment as we can in the elements that go into the products, to give such financial help as we can, and then to leave the rest, the profit, the loss, of this venture, on the person with whom we deal, whether he is a producer-director, whether he is a director making his pictures, or any other combination. I haven't any question of their sincerity and their ability when they are on their own.

Looking into details too much in telling what I am doing, what my mechanism is. I don't want to do that. I want to stay on this broad field that I am trying to cover with you here, describing the relationship of the producer to the exhibitor, pointing out the danger of either the exhibitor or the producer controlling the channels through which each dominates the other fellow. If the producer controls the exhibitor, it is the long end of the stick and it is out. If the exhibitor controls the situation, he has learned to look up the market, he has learned to do business as he pleases, and shows no consideration for him. Every time I see a theatre advertising "double features changed daily," I speculate on the terms those exchanges are bringing the producers on their investment.

DIGEST of PICTURES of the WEEK

GEORGE BEBAN in his travels around the country in connection with the showing of “One Man in a Million,” his production, being distributed by Robertson-Cole, is doing a great deal toward combating agitation, not only in his little talk before audiences but in the picture itself.

Mr. Beban’s plea is for cleaner pictures and in support of that plea he has set a high standard in “One Man in a Million.” If applause is any criterion of his success he should be well pleased with his trip thus far. At the Riviera theatre, Chicago, where Mr. Beban appeared in person last week, he was besieged at the stage door by enthusiastic picture fans who wanted to congratulate him after every performance. Mr. Beban’s picture and his short talk are two of the most potent arguments against muzzling the screen yet brought forth.

“ONE MAN IN A MILLION” (Robertson-Cole) is one of the finest pictures of the year. It is worthy of a showing in every theatre in the country and will appeal to every one. George Beban and Helen Jerome Eddy are the stars. The theme is a plea for unselfishness and kindness of heart. George Beban, Jr., a dog pound, with a great number of dogs, together with a pet parrot lends high spots of fun. The whole is exceptional in every way.

“The Supreme Passion” (Film Market, Inc.) is a well produced and well mounted production telling in simple dramatic terms a story of the love of a young girl for a youth. It was suggested by Moore’s famous poem.

“The Witching Hour” (Paramount) is a satisfactory and interesting picture made from Augustus Thomas’ dramatic success, dealing with thought transmission and power of the mind over body. William D. Taylor’s production is the second time this story has been done upon the screen.

“What Every Woman Knows” (Paramount) is a thoroughly delightful picturization of Sir James M. Barrie’s play. William DeMille’s production is a genuine treat. The characters are keenly drawn and every member of the cast gives a splendid performance.

“All Dolled Up” (Universal) is a shop girl romance with Gladys Walton in the stellar role. It makes a pleasing vehicle for the star and is a first-rate program feature.

“Society SNOBS” (Selznick) is the latest Conway Tearle vehicle with that favorite star taking the role of a waster who woes and wins a snobbish, society girl as a foreign nobleman. A good picture in every way and one that should be universally liked.

“Poor Dear Margaret Kirby” (Selznick) presents Elaine Hammerstein in the role of a young matron, the wife of a financially ruined and invalided husband, who seeks to meet expenses by keeping a boarding house. An absorbing and thoroughly entertaining picture.

“It Isn’t Being Done This Season” (Vitagraph) is a lavishly staged production starring Corinne Griffith. An Oriental atmosphere in some scenes suggests exploitation. The story of a woman’s marriage for money rather than love, and its attending tragedy. A most attractive picture and one well presented.

“Her Lord and Master” (Vitagraph) is a distinctly excellent Alice Joyce offering and one that presents the star at her best. It has a strong theme in its story of the transplanting of a spoiled and pampered American girl into the conventional household of an English husband, with a clash of wills its climax.

“What Women Will Do” (Pathe) is a feature of only ordinary worth, played by a special cast that includes Anna Q. Nilsson. The old crook-regeneration trend; but with one of the best horse races that the screen has yet reproduced. Several other high lights and a picture with exploitation possibilities.

“Beau Revel” (Paramount) offers Florence Vidor sharing honors with Lewis Stone is a high grade society drama of love trend. The story of a love waster and his retribution with slight tinge of melodrama. A very good feature.

“Dynamite Allen” (Fox) presents George Walsh in a highly melodramatic story of a son’s(16,57),(996,969) revenge for his father’s suffering for a crime committed by others. Too steadily high geared with thrills to run smoothly or artistically. Typically Walsh screen drama.

ONE MAN IN A MILLION

(ROBERTSON-COLE)

A refreshing, heart-gripping little story, with Beban in his famous character role of an Italian. Presents a strong argument for cleaner and better pictures. Directed and written by the star.

The Robertson-Cole feature, "One Man in a Million," can be recommended without qualification to every exhibiting everywhere. It should score a success that will make it the talk of the country, for it is a superb production. Stripped of any spectacular padding, relying upon heart throbs rather than thrills to grip and hold, compelled to get over by sheer artistic essentials, it is an enviable tribute to the work of any producer to have achieved so wonderful a result. The pattern viewing it unstirred to the better things of life will winfully close his heart and mind to its sweetness and inspiration.

Mr. Beban, who wrote and directed it, appears as an Italian prince among comedians—the one man in a million—subordinating self in the service of others. Opportunity comes for him to aid a penniless hobo in the Koppel restaurant wherein he is first met on the screen. He loses his job as a result, but, through the influence of the befriended man (who happens to be a crme investigator gathering evidence against Koppel who conducts a school of training for juvenile pickpockets) he is made city pound master, or "papa to all the doggies," as he expresses it. He refuses to allow any stray dogs to be gassed. He acquires a protege in a small boy who was waif and a big dog who manages to escape from Koppel, and his life becomes an orbit of service and love for others turning on his consuming love for the child.

The sudden appearance of a Belgian woman war refugee, searching for her little son, separated from her in the war, leads her to the pound master's quarters. Eventually she falls in love with the investigator, but pledges herself to marry the Italian because of his great kindness to the boy. Accidentally he hears her confession of the situation to the investigator and "jilts" her.

A raid on the Koppel quarters proves the boy's mistaken identity, and the investigator searches out the real son of the Belgian mother and wins her promise to marry him. The Italian discovers his real love for a younger woman, who has long loved him, and they find happiness with the little waif for their own.

Everything about the picture is refreshing. Beban has used a fertile brain to evoke the novelties of situation and play. He has lost no single opportunity for effective use, and impresses several strokes of directorial genius when he inflicts into the most pathetic climaxes some humorous jesture or title. The titles are in themselves a treasure house of wit. Scenes in which Beban with his Regulation melodrama which loses in effectiveness through theatrical direction and obvious overacting. Has picturesque exteriors and some spectacular riding. Of a type to satisfy audiences wanting melodrama.

F. Martin Thornton, who is credited with adapting and directing this picture, hasn't made the most of the material at his command. True, the material, with its regulation melodramatic plot written by Ethel M. Dell, offered no wide possibilities. It is a conventional piece of mechanical writing. But the adaptor-director, instead of working for a softening effect, emphasized the melodramatics of the plot, with the result that his characters, all of whom are more or less overdramatic and situations become forceful and ineffective. There is an effort to choke the characters with human mannerisms, but these efforts are not entirely successful because the delineations do not ring true.

The story is of Piers Evesham, an Englishman, who, to escape the prison, leaves Australia following a fight with Samson, a giant bully, in which Samson is killed. Returning to England he falls in love with a governess, Alice Denys. His father objects to the match, but relics when he is dying of injuries sustained in a fall from a horse. After Piers and Alice are married a man named Dixon appears on the scene and exposes Piers as Samson's murderer. Samson was Alice's husband. A separation is averted when a doctor forces Dixon to confess that he poisoned Samson for revenge.

The story is brightened with some excellent riding pictures, which include a real thrill obtained from the fall of Col. Evesham from his horse. There are also some picture-perfect pastoral backgrounds.

The cast overacts more or less, Roland Myles and Madge White, in the leading roles, being the most flagrant offenders. "Bars of Iron" is out-and-out mechanical melodrama.

ELAINE HAMMERSTEIN IN POOR DEAR
MARGARET KIRBY
(Selznick)
The screen interpretation of a Kathleen Norris story, very well done. Star has a more mature role than usual, and is very pretty. A wholesome drama of love and misunderstanding. Directed by William P. S. Earle.

Elaine Hammerstein brings to this latest of her features a more mature characterization than she has previously given and at the same time distinguishes with her grace and prettiness. It is with reluctance that her clientele will give her over to the role of ingenueto that of matron—she is matron, however, so young—for she is so universally admired in the parts of the character of the young girl wife in "The Pleasure Seekers." She is good in the new role, however, and meets its demands altogether satisfactorily.

In the story she is a society woman. Her husband (William B. Davidson) is ruined financially and attempts to take his own life, believing her also against him. With his recovery from the illness resulting, he is kept in ignorance of the fact that she has converted their home into a gambling house to support them and pay his bills. A former sweet heart of his, Lucille Yardsley (Ellen Custot), feeds her racket with the suggestion that the wife is in love with a mutual friend, Gordon Pell, who has given her advice and aid in her troubles. The husband and wife are separated, but the situation is readjusted in time to prevent this and all ends agreeably.

Scenes of the life in the boarding house lend the relieving touches of humor to the seriousness of the domestic situation. There are scenes of society events lavishly staged and attractive. The feature should be well received everywhere.

SPECIAL CAST IN WHAT WOMEN WILL DO
(Pathe)
Quick-moving drama of the underworld and society. The story of a woman's regeneration, with Anna Q. Nilsson in the leading role. One of the best horse races that has come to the screen is a feature. Edward Jose was in charge of direction.

Here is clean-cut and quickly-moving drama, lightened occasionally with humor and offering several high spots of action.

Important among them is the derby episode. It brings to the screen so excellent a horse race that the observer wants to cheer at its finish. It should be given prominence in advertising and in exploiting the picture. The title, also, offers a field for exploitation and carries a boxoffice punch.

For the foregoing, but one that should be handled delicately if stressed in advertising, is the episode of the spiritualistic seance. It is made to discredit the faith in the cult and admits the不得不 taken to avoid publicity that might offend. Additional thrills come when Anna Q. Nilsson, who plays the leading part, that of Lily Gibbs, jumps into New York harbor, eluding officers pursuing her gang of opium smugglers. Again, with two other young women, a blackmailer, plan to mullet her of a million dollars. Unwittingly the shop girl is brought to the place where the shake-down is to occur. There is a rough and tumble fight and the timely rescue by the hero, who, as the girl knows, is only the wealthy woman's chauffeur. The girl confesses herself to be a shop girl. But the end doesn't come until the wealthy woman bestows upon the romantic pair the million they had saved her.

The romantic qualities, which are stressed, hold the interest through the five reels, even if the trend of the story and its outcome are readily anticipated.

Gladys Walton is as likeable as ever and is given good support by Ed Hearn as the chauffeur, and as the wealthy woman and Fred Malatesta as the tenor. Rollin Sturgon has directed capably.

CORINNE GRIFFITH IN IT ISN'T BEING DONE THIS SEASON
(Vitagraph)
A lavishly staged society feature with a galaxy of gowns worn by the star that should attract and please the feminine audience. A story of romance and adventure with slight melodramatic trend. A wholly interesting and entertaining feature. George L. Sargent directed.

Pleasantly proportioned romance and adventure and well moderated melodrama combine in this picture to give entertainment and interest that should meet the general favor.

Corinne Griffith is an attractive star. In this feature she wears a number of fashionable gowns that should impress the feminine patronage, and their presence is a good point to stress in advertising. She exhibits skill in her portraiture and the whole picture is engagingly presented.

It has to do with Marcia Ventor (Miss Griffith) in her attempts to be guided in the choice of a husband by her mother's warning against marrying for love when there are moneyed suitors. She refuses the youth she loves and marries a wealthy importer of rugs. With him she goes to Turkey and at his command she attempts to swindle her husband's business. As a result, her husband attempts, in a fury of jealousy, to stab her. She dissuades him with the cool reminder that "it isn't being done this season." Later he dies. As the wife of the man she first loved, she goes back to him and meets the Bey. The situation in part repeats itself, but it proves her husband's real love for her.

Charles Wellesley and Webster Campbell play the roles of the two husbands. John Charles appears as the Bey.

JIMMY AUBREY IN THE BLIZZARD
(Vitagraph)
A two-reel comedy only moderately entertaining. It has a novelty in the use of settings piled high with snow and opportunities for its use. Carries a slight theme that is a burlesque of the melodramatic favorite of the distressed mother and the babe, with excitement lent with the appearance of the child's real father when Aubrey is attempting to give the woman aid.

EXHIBITORS HERALD

ALICE JOYCE IN HER LORD AND MASTER
(VITAGRAPH)
The screen interpretation of a successful stage play, charmingly effected. Alice Joyce at her prettiest and most vivacious. Strong in theme and plot development. Clever in humor. Excellent in every way and a picture that should prove a popular Joyce feature. Directed by Edward Jose.

Alice Joyce strikes a length ahead in screen superiority in this feature. She is altogether the finished artist, the lovely woman and the engaging and vivacious screen person. A spirit and a vivacity have been put into the poised peculiarities of her acting and it is a distinct addition to her skill.

While "Cousin Kate" created a stir among her followers that gave her popularity considerable impetus, "Her Lord and Master" will be liked even more generally than was that success.

It is strongly recommended for one thing, and it has a relieving tinge of humor, for another. Its scenes are set in the American West and in the homes and hostilities of fashion and finance. Its problem is a vitally human one and the production is wholesome, free from sex element, gun-play and melodramatic absurdities.

Indiana Stillwater, the girl impersonated by Miss Joyce, the indulged child of American parents, marries a Britisher with his promise that he will not yield to her unreasonable demands. In the ancestral home in England she learns the vastly different conventions that repress her American liveliness. The climax comes when she defies her husband's dictations and incurs his disappointment in so doing. Her happiness is threatened, but her common sense and repentance tides her over the danger places and the crisis is happily passed.

Louise Beaudet as the breezy "young grandmother of Indiana, lends some of the freshest of the relieving touches of humor. Holms E. Herbert plays artistically as the husband, and Marie Shotwell, Ida Wether- man, Walter McEwen and Frank Sheridan are others of the cast giving strong support.

SPECIAL CAST IN THE SUPREME PASSION
(ROBERT W. PRIEST)
Pleasing picture, dealing in simple dramatic terms with the question of love for body and soul as suggested by Moore's poem. A well mounted production.

Following considerable discussion over its trade paper advertising "The Supreme Passion" proves to be an innocuous thing. It is as clean as a Chautauqua lecture.

The title is apt enough, for the story, written by Robert McLaughlin and Charles T. D gor is based on Moore's famous poem of love's enduring young charms. In bringing this thought to the screen the authors have made their chief figure a winsome Irish lass who is loved for her spiritual beauty by a young Irishman named Burke and is coveted by a political boss for her physical attractiveness. The girl loves Burke, but the political boss's machinations, involving the ruin of the girl's father, changes the complexion of the situation and to save her father the girl signifies her willingness to sacrifice herself. But just prior to the wedding ceremony there is an accident and the attending doctor declares that the girl is badly burned and disfigured for life. The political boss declares the wedding off. Back in Ireland again, Burke comes for the girl, eager to marry her. Then he shows him that she hasn't been disfigured after all.

The story is told in terms of charming simplicity. The mood is poetically romantic and though the story moves along quietly toward an outcome that is always obvious, the interest is pleasantly maintained.

The cast, headed by Florence Dixon, plays adequately. The production is attractive. "The Supreme Passion" is a pleasing picture.

THE WITCHING HOUR
(PARAMOUNT)
Satisfactory and generally interesting picture made from Augustus Thomas' highly dramatic stage success, dealing with thought transference and power of mind.

A Wm. D. Taylor production.

In making the second picturization of Augustus Thomas', "The Witching Hour," William D. Taylor has achieved satisfactory, though not extraordinary, results. His picturization is interesting, but it has not all the gripping qualities that made the stage play one of the most intense and compelling of its day.

As unfolded on the screen, the story at times becomes complex and confusing. Rather indefinite planting of the numerous characters and an uneven continuity seem to be responsible. But though not as clearly told as it might be, the story has so much impressive dramatic incident that the interest is fairly well sustained throughout.

The story deals with the psychic and demonstrates what can be done with mental power. Expression of this thought is found in a series of complications arising from a murder committed by a neurotic youth.

Elliot Dexter heads the cast, which includes Winter Hall, Ruth Renick, Robert Cain, Edward Sutherland and Mary Alden.

FLORENCE VIDOR IN BEAU REVEL
(PARAMOUNT)
The story of a man who played a losing game in gambling with love. Lewis Stone and Florence Vidor in the leading roles, both playing excellently. A society drama with effective settings and strong dramatic high spots. Slight tinge of melodrama. A Thomas H. Ince production directed by John Griffith Wray.

While the beauty and skilful artistry of Florence Vidor are compelling adjuncts to this Ince special production, opportunities for the heaviest emotional work that is so excellently put across by the entire cast, go to and are impressively met by Lewis Stone. As Beau Revel he gives a vivid performance, meeting with psychological finesse the demands of the highly interesting climax.

This comes when, as the father of a lad in love with the girl that he has been seeking to prove unworthy he realizes that he himself is madly in love with her and has betrayed both the young people. It is a gripping scene when he fights both the accusations of the two and those of his own conscience, and one that is forceful and brilliantly played.

The story is a departure from the usual. It has to do with the amours of "Beau" Revel, a society waster whose hobby has been playing at love with various women. Believing Nellie Stelle, the hostess of a smart dancing club, unworthy of his son Richard's love, he persuades the lad that he can, in two weeks' time, prove that. At the close of the fortnight he finds himself in love with Nellie and tortured by his accusing conscience. Nellie, seeking him to ask financial aid for a brother, completes Revel's scheme and comes to his apartment at midnight, innocently fulfilling a promise that the father has made to have her there at that time to prove her unworthiness. Dick follows her there and the climax comes when the three meet. The tragic death of the father clears the young people’s path to true love.

This is a picture possessed of a plot with a punch strong enough to make it entertaining and interesting to the general patronage, but one demanding the education of the discriminating taste to appreciate the real value in the skill of the players. It has elegant backgrounds and Miss Vidor is charmingly won and beautiful.

Lloyd Hughes plays gracefully the part of the son Richard. Kathleen Kirkham is attractive as Mrs. Lathom, one of “Beau’s” playthings, and Lydia Titus, Richard Ryan, Harlan Tucker, William Conklin and William Musgrave are others of the capable cast.

GEORGE WALSH IN

DYNAMITE ALLEN

(FOX)

Highly melodramatic and typically Walsh. Fights and hazards color its action vividly. Will please Walsh fans but holds little interest for the discriminating patron. Dell Henderson was the director. "Dynamite Allen" is so filled with melodramatic situations that it grows tiresome with its added scenes and climaxes designed to thrill.

That patronage which enjoys this sort of wild screen drama will doubtless meet it with interest and derive entertainment from it. It is colored to intense degree with sordid sequences in the life of a family named Allen. The father, Sid Allen, is sent to jail to do reparation for the crime of another man. The son, "Dynamite," played by George Walsh, seeks to avenge the wrong against his father and bring about his vindication. He accomplishes this at the risk of stirring broils and interruptions. They include a cafe light from which he rescues the girl whose return to the community has important bearing upon the crime secret; an episode wherein he drives an engine over a divided trestle; and his struggle of his family from the haunt of criminals.

There are no spots of relieving humor at any time, and the whole is somewhat too stiff a dose of melodrama.

There are scenes in and about a coal mine which have interesting educational value. A little blind child put into the cast is as definite a point of appeal as the picture possesses.

Byron Douglas, J. Thornton Baston, William Frederic, Edna Murphy, Carole Parsons, Dorothy Allen, William Gilbert and others are members of the cast.

CONWAY TEARLE IN

SOCIETY SNOBS

(SELZNICK)

The third of the Tearle starring vehicles and a thoroughly entertaining picture. Has a strong plot and is logical in development. Directed by Hobart Henley.

Conway Tearle is here presented in a role so vastly different that his followers will "sit up and take notice" and admire the more.

The director is to be complimented upon coaxing several real smiles to the perpetually stern lips of the star, an innovation that might be repeated with no serious results.

Tearle has the part of a waiter—a head waiter—and he is induced to woo a society girl whom he wins for his wife. She marries him, not knowing his real identity, but she is told on their wedding night. She leaves him and their marriage is annulled, but ultimately she begs him to re-marry her.

Tearle has a charm of quiet and easy playing that combines strength with the grace that is admirable in a man. He has Martha Mansfield for the feminine lead, an attractive and skillful co-star. Scenes of the wedding party will catch the feminine favor. There is noticeably good posing for the love-making scenes in and about a country club and before a fireplace in the home of the bride. The play teaches the disgust of snobbery, for it is the snobbish nature of the mother of the girl that inspires the friend of the clean and simple waiter to take the name of a visiting lord and woo the girl whom he really loves.

Valentine of "Society Sobs" is played by Hunley Gordon. Ida Darling plays the part of the mother. George Stewart is the snobbish young brother.

W. M. DE MILLE’S PRODUCTION

WHAT EVERY WOMAN KNOWS

(PARAMOUNT)

William DeMille’s productionization of Sir James M. Barrie’s play is a true delight and an artistic treat.

A star ought to be placed opposite the name of William DeMille. At least some form of distinction should be given him. Recently Mr. DeMille came along with his delightful production of "Conrad in Quest of His Youth." And now he is presenting to us another with "What Every Woman Knows," a picturization of the stage success by Sir James M. Barrie.

"Conrad," Mr. DeMille’s "What Every Woman Knows," is a genuine treat. The picture serves to confirm the opinion that Mr. DeMille is one of the greatest directors of his time, for his direction of "What Every Woman Knows," can penetrate beyond the confines of purely mechanical functioning.

With commendable facility he has brought out the depth of Barrie humor and whimsicality in telling the story of what every woman knows—that the man of position achieves high things alone by his own efforts, as he egotistically believes, but by the help and inspiration of the gentle, plain woman who is his wife.

The characterizations are keenly drawn and sympathetically handled. Every member of the cast gives an unusually fine performance. Lois Wilson and Conrad Nagel have the leading roles, and with them appear Charles Ogle, Fred Huntley, Guy Oliver, Ted Tebbel, Allan Tucker and Claire MacDowell. The continuity writer, Olga Printzblau, has also contributed an excellent piece of work.

LARRY SEMON IN

THE HICK

No wonder Larry Semon spent some weeks in bed from injuries suffered in the making of "The Hick."

It is the thought evermost while viewing this two-reel comedy. It is a knockout, pure and simple. The hair-raising thrills follow one upon another and it is all good, clean, wholesome comedy, the high grade of slapstick, but withal in a class by itself.

Scenes are taken on a farm. There is a cow that is milked by the pump handle tail method. Eggs and cream have their part to play and a silo offers opportunity for much clever and astonishing play. Scenes shift to a city cafe towards the close, and they are as ridiculously and genuinely amusing in their way as are the farm scenes. The whole is one of the exceptional comedies among current issues and even excels "The Sitter," its predecessor, in the Semon series.

Highway House for Dixon

DIXON, ILL.—Dixon Theatre Company has plans completed and stock subscribed for a new $200,000 theatre to be erected on the Lincoln Highway on the site of one destroyed last year by fire. The building will seat 1,500 people.

"The Kid" Booking Day and Date Into Competing Theatres

"The Kid," Charlie Chaplin's six reels of joy, distributed through Associated First National Pictures, Inc., is not only breaking box office and attending records in every part of the country, but according to reports from exhibitors and exchanges it is violating practically every booking tradition ever established in the trade, going in day and date into competing houses, and holding up just as strong in all of them as it could have if booked exclusively into one.

Eighteen first-run houses in Boston and the environs ran the comedy for the solid week beginning February 14, and every house reported biggest receipts and the largest attendance in its history. Five theatres in Providence, R. I., put it in the following week and it repeated its record of being the biggest box office attraction and the greatest popular patron puller ever booked by the theatres. Milwaukee, Wis., reports the peculiar situation of the overflow from "The Kid" causing record-breaking business at another theatre, where the current attraction was pulling close to capacity houses on its own appeal.

The picture makes the same appeal in the smaller cities. The Empress theatre, Laramie, Wyo., James P. Lynch, manager, reports on a three-day run: "Opened the picture on Thursday to extra large house; but it was not till Saturday that the big smash came on the box office. Could have sold twice the number of tickets we did if the buyers would have consented to have somebody stand on their shoulders." Elmer Ramsey, manager of the Central theatre, Fairbury, Ill., after smashing all existing house records on a two-day showing of "The Kid," reported: "It's a riot. Best picture from the box office standpoint we have ever run."

Pantheon Company Takes Studios at Port Henry

Announcement has been made of the formation of Pantheon Pictures Corporation with offices in the Singer building, 149 Broadway, New York.

The new company has taken over the Port Henry studios at Port Henry, N. Y., and will begin production soon. While the establishment of only a single production company at Port Henry, that is at present contemplated, other units will be formed to produce both in New York and on the Pacific Coast. Eventually it is expected that from four to six producing companies will be in operation. It is planned by the corporation to produce a minimum of twenty-six attractions annually. The president of the new corporation is Paul Schoppell, formerly head of Paul Schoppell & Co., investment brokers of Chicago. As vice-president, Charles Miller, well-known director, will supervise the company's production activities, and the other officers include Dr. Thomas O'Mara, second vice-president, and Leo J. Gillroy, treasurer.

A-Muse-U Theatre Co. is Formed in Clinton, Iowa

CLINTON, Ia.—Articles of incorporation of A-Muse-U Theatre Company, with capital stock of $25,000, have been filed with the county recorder. A. H. Blank, president, and D. Allen, secretary, are president; S. C. Greenbaum, secretary. The company will buy, sell, lease, own and operate picture shows, theatres and vaudeville houses.

A FILM STAR AND HIS WEEKLY PAY

T. Roy Barnes in a scene from "See My Lawyer," an Al Christie production, to be distributed by Robertson-Cole.

Strong Cast Plays in Christie's New Robertson-Cole Production

Each day the consideration given the selection of casts becomes one of the main issues in picture production. In "See My Lawyer," the new special starring T. Roy Barnes to be published by Robertson-Cole, Al Christie, the producer, has selected a cast of unusual excellence. Each artist in it has gained a reputation for cleverness and versatility.

T. Roy Barnes has been recognized as one of the leading comedians of the legitimate stage. Theatregoers remember his keen humor in "Kathinka." "See You Later," "Yours Truly," "Over the Top," "At the Ball" and "The Passing Show." Mr. Barnes was also one of the quartet of joy dispensers in "So Long Letty," the first R-C picture directed by Al Christie.

Plays Opposite Barnes

Grace Darmond, who plays opposite Mr. Barnes, for several years appeared on the screen in dramatic roles with great success. She was starred in Robertson-Cole's "What Every Woman Wants." Her first venture into the realms of comedy was in "So Long Letty" and her excellent work helped make the picture the wonderful success that it is.

Lloyd Whitlock was graduated from the University of Missouri a full fledged civil engineer. While working in the open he became acquainted with the picture game. His first job two years ago was as an extra. Today we see him in an interesting dramatic role in "One Man in a Million," the Robertson-Cole picture starring George Beban and in a delightful comedy role in "See My Lawyer."

Jean Acker has not appeared before the camera for any great length of time. She played with Sessue Hayakawa in "An Arabian Knight" and later appeared in other productions.

In Veteran Actor

J. P. Lockney is a veteran of the stage and screen. He has been before the camera for six years.

For more than thirty years Bert Woodruff has been trooping all over the world. He began his theatrical career playing juvenile leads for David Belasco.

Ogden Crane has been before the camera for six years and for fifteen years was a matinee idol on the legitimate stage having been leading man with Mrs. Pat Campbell and other feminine stars.

Scenarist to Go Abroad

News comes from the Lasky studio at Hollywood that Jeannie MacPherson, who has written nearly all of the scenarios for Cecil B. DeMille's special productions for Paramount, will soon leave California for an extended vacation in Europe. She will visit England, France and Germany, and will see the latest European stage plays and assemble material for future DeMille productions.
Anita Stewart Feature
"Playthings of Destiny"
To Be Issued By Mayer

"Playthings of Destiny" has been chosen by Louis B. Mayer as the publishing title for the Anita Stewart picture which was completed some time ago under the working title of "The Torpedo."

The story is an original by Jane Murfin, and Larry Trimble and Anthony Paul Kelly, the celebrated playwright and screen author, journeyed from New York to California especially to prepare the scenario on the scene of production. Edwin Carewe directed the picture, which will be issued as a Louis B. Mayer First National attraction.

The theme of "Playthings of Destiny" treats on the predicament of a girl who unwittingly commits bigamy in an effort to secure the future of her unborn child. Some years later she finds herself acting as mistress to her first husband in her second husband's home. Anita Stewart is supported by a cast including Walter McGrail, Herbert Rawlinson, William V. Mong, Richard Hearick and Grace Morse. The photography is by Robert B. Kurke.

Bud Duncan on Tour in Interest of His Series

Bud Duncan, the diminutive star of the once famous Ham and Bud team of Kalem days, is touring the principal cities of the United States making personal appearances in connection with the showing of his single-reel Bud and His Buddies comedies being issued by Reelcraft Pictures Corporation. Denver is the first city on his tour, and Bud will appear in person at the Rivoli theatre there for two weeks. He has completed sufficient features for the Reelcraft program to enable him to take a six weeks' tour of the principal cities and at the end of that time he will continue the remaining issues of the screen.

Louis Adler to Build
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEWARK, N. J. March 8.—Louis Adler will build a $100,000 theatre at Perry and Jackson streets.

Schenck Official Cast in Talmadge Feature

M. S. Epstein, business manager for Joseph M. Schenck, has been cast for a role in the next John Emerson-Anita Loos production, "Woman's Place," in which Constance Talmadge will star. A story about a man with a glass eye, recently told to Mr. Emerson by Mr. Epstein, suggested a bit of action.

Now the business manager finds himself cast as the man with the glass optic.

Propaganda Film Made By Rothacker for the Y. M. C. A. in Chicago

The Rothacker company has produced for the Chicago Y. M. C. A. Hotel a two-reel feature depicting the experiences of the average young man who comes to the "big town" to carve out his career. How the "Y" hotel can be of service to the young men strangers is pictured in a dramatic way.

This film will be given wide circulation in Chicago to acquaint the Windy City business men with results the hotel is achieving.

It is expected that the film will be borrowed by "Y" associations in other cities which contemplate a fund drive for the erection of a "Y" hotel.

Gates Amusement Co. Is Organized in Brooklyn

BROOKLYN, N. Y.—Gates Amusement Company has been formed to engage in the motion picture business. It is capitalized at $10,000 and its directors are David Bloom, Hyman Kottler and Bernard Solomon.

Poppy Wyndham Said to Score in "Tidal Wave"
A Late Stoll Feature

"The Tidal Wave," the Stoll Film production of the novel of Ethel M. Dell, was issued in this country on February 27. This is the company's ninth publication since the first of the year in its one-week program of productions by well-known writers.

"The Tidal Wave" was taken on the Cornish coast, where the periodic rising of the sea, accompanied by storms and gales, provided the background and atmosphere essential to the working out of the romance.

One of the surprises of the production was the acting of Poppy Wyndham, daughter of Lord Inchepe. She defied her family, married a young officer she met in a London war hospital, and then made a modest debut in motion pictures as a member of a mob. It was not long before she was singled out, given a small part, then a big one. Miss Wyndham plays the part of Carmen Hale in "The Tidal Wave." Among the members of the supporting cast are Judd Green, Sydney Seaward, Annie Esmond and Parodie Woodman. Sinclair Hill adapted, directed and produced "The Tidal Wave."

Blue and Mary Thurman
Play Leads in "Cucabob"

Allan Dwan is said to have selected an unusually well-balanced cast for his third Associated Producers' production. The story originally appeared in the Saturday Evening Post and is tentatively called "Johnny Cucabod."

Mary Thurman and Monte Blue will play the leading roles. Mary Thurman has appeared in a number of Allan Dwan productions, among them "In the Heart of a Fool." Monte Blue played the lead in the last Dwan production, "A Perfect Crime." Little Mary Jane Irving has an important role in "Johnny Cucabod." Other players who have prominent roles are Lizette Thorne, Les Bates, Arthur Millette and Martha Mattox.

Ivy Duke, popular English star, has the principal role in this latest Stoll production.
New York Notes About Film Folk

By J. B.

Pete Smith left for St. Paul, Minn., on Saturday, March 5, at which point he will meet representatives of Great Northern railroad, who will tour over a band of Indians to him which will be used in exploiting one of Marshall Neilan’s pictures. Pete speaks Choctaw and Old Crow fluidly and will no doubt get along well with chief “Kick-a-hole-in-the-Sky” while on the war-path.

Charlie Petijohn more than held his own at the Biltmore Bantering Banquet. When it comes to oratorical pyrotechnics Charlie is there.

The M. P. D. A. third annual dinner-dance will be held at the Astor hotel on April 2. Make your reservations early and avoid the rush.

Bert Ennis was the only guard pub- lisher who didn’t show up at the A. M. P. A. camp meeting at the Biltmore last Friday. Missed the tune of your young life, Bert.

Sorry to note that Arthur S. Kane shows signs of flat tire trouble. Some might think Arthur had a touch of gout, but it’s not. Strained tendon in the off shoe.

Esther Linder has a hard job looking after the Hall-Room Boys. But suppose she had a tribe of African cannibals to keep track of for R. and C. Company?

Kendell Gillette has a tremendous appetite for little French cakes. The way the pastry disappeared off the center dish at table No. 3 at the A. M. P. A. banquet was astonishing.

Ralph O. Proctor has been acting as host to several English visitors for the past week. Ralph is a born diplomat, how- ever, and meets all comers with a smile, which is as irresistible as it is sincere.

George Landy makes up well, and as a reader of 1921 nursery rhymes, he’s a beau.

When it comes to a master of cere- monies, Harry Reichenbach has them all backed off the boards. His wit is sparkling and quick and his style is inimitable. Harry added as much pep to the A. M. P. A. affair as would the late and much lamented cocktail.

Schenck Is Defendant

In Copyright Litigation

The question of copyright protection of English translations covering picture rights is involved in a motion before the supreme court in Brooklyn brought by John G. Underhill, who claims the sole rights for English translations of the works of Jacinto Benavente, the Spanish novelist and playwright.

He seeks to have producers of a pic- ture version of “The Passion Flower,” in which Norma Talmadge is starred, show cause why they should not be re- strained on the ground of infringement. “The Passion Flower” is slated for early issuance through Associated First National. The defendants, Joseph M. Schenck and Richard G. Herndon, deny infringement, claiming that the picture rights were bought in Paris. Justice Kasper has re- served decision.

Leonce Perret in France

To Adapt “Koenigsmark”

Leonce Perret, the French director, who produced “The Empire of the Diamond,” recently issued by Pathé, and whose newest picture, “A Race for Millions,” will come later, has sailed for Paris, where he will arrange for the production of his international picture, “Koenigsmark.”

The story is by Pierre Benoit, noted French author. It was published in this country by Dodd, Mead & Co. as “The Secret Spring.” When arrangements for its production are completed M. Perret will go to England to confer with the officials of an English producing company who have asked him to make a series of elaborate productions for them in America. He expects to return here early in April.

Anita Stewart’s Next Is

“Playthings of Destiny”

Louis B. Mayer announces that “Play- things of Destiny” will be Anita Stew- art’s next vehicle to be published through First National.

This is from the original story by Jane Murfin under the working title of “The Tornado.” Miss Stewart is supported by Herbert Rawlinson, Walter McGrail, William V. Mong, Grace Morse and Richard Headrick, who will be remem- bered for his performance in “The Woman in His House,” Edward Carewe, assisted by Wallace Fox, directed “Play- things of Destiny,” which was adapted to the screen by Anthony Paul Kelly and photographed by Robert Kurrle.

Fay Tincher Appearing

At Missouri Theatres

Fay Tincher, featured player in two- reel Christie comedies issued through Educational exchanges, has been making personal appearances at the new million dollar Missouri theatre. St. Louis, in connection with the showing of her com- dies. After ending this engagement she appeared in a number of other Famous Players houses in Missouri.

Miss Tincher is on a two months’ leave of absence from the studios in or- der to make this personal tour, and al- though it is a separate enterprise, the agreement calls for one of the Christie comedies published by Educational to be shown during the same performance.

Stills

That tell a good deal of the stories they are taken from, with some of Buster Keaton's own comedy tucked away down in the corner.

One of the odd scenes from "Man, Woman—Marriage," directed by Allen Holubar, which Albert A. Kaufman presents through First National. Dorothy Phillips is the star and the scene shows her refusing to marry the old voluptuary.

Togo Yamamoto, as "One Eye" in "A Tale of Two Worlds," Frank Lloyd's production, distributed through Goldwyn.

Big scene from "The Mad Marriage," in which Carmel Myers is starred. It is a Universal feature of current issue.

This is how Buster Keaton keeps in such excellent trim. He says he uses his heavy acquaintance's suspenders for this exercise and then he uses him as a dumbbell, because "he's a natural one." Buster also recommends this for pains in the back, emaciation of the bank-roll or anaemia of the wallet.
First National

Dity, a Marshall Neilan production.—This picture will please them all. Book it. Boost it. Advance your prices and have one satisfactory night in 1921. There would be a franchise everywhere if they were all like Dity.—Charles Dahler, Abingdon theatre, Abingdon, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Married Life, a Mack Sennett production.—A great business getter and will please all but the crabs. We broke our record for this year on this one. If you're in business for the money, grab it.—Pfeiffer Bros., Opera House, Kenton, O.—General patronage.

Nomads of the North, with a special cast.—The best of the Curwood pictures. Good forest, good lots of animal stuff.—W. H. Hart, Strand theatre, Grinnell, la.

TWIN BEDS, with Mr. and Mrs. Carter Deitert.—This is a good comedy-drama. I had the furniture man put twin beds in his window and it helped to draw a good crowd. Don't publish a good catchy title.—W. W. Wolter, Star theatre, Lake City, la.

The Woman Gives, with Norma Talmadge.—Very satisfactory offering in as much as Norma Talmadge has the leading role.—New Cozy theatre, Winchester, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

Her Kingdom of Dreams, with Anita Stewart.—Exceptionally good story, photography and characters.—W. W. Wales, Yeomen theatre, Seneca, S. D.—Neighborhood patronage.

Mary Regan, with Anita Stewart.—As good as any Anita Stewart picture I have ever run. This is a seven reeler and a crackerjack. If you don't book it you are the lesser.—W. F. Baker, Boise Way theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ky.—General patronage.

The Love Expert, with Constance Talmadge.—Please three days. Not so good as former pictures.—Ben L. Morris, Olympic theatre, Bellevue, O.—Small town patronage.

The Woman Gives, with Norma Talmadge.—Fair picture. Cut out the posting and it would be better. People get tired of looking at anyone.—A. G. Hauge, Happy Hour theatre, Walnut, la.—Local patronage.

Fox

No. 17, with George Walsh.—Good Walsh subject. Chinese settings good.—H. Pace, Princess theatre, Traer, Iowa.

The Land of Jazz, with Eileen Percy.—Absolutely nothing to it. Some disgusted, walked out.—E. A. Baradel, Palace theatre, McGhee, Ark.—Small town patronage.

Flames of Youth, with Shirley Mason.—Just a fair program picture. Just gets by and that's all. Business fair.—Pfeiffer Bros., Opera House, Kenton, O.—General patronage.

Her Elephant Man, with Shirley Mason.—Here is a good clean, wholesome play that pleased 100% Shirley Mason is well liked here.—Giacosa Bros., Crystal theatre, Topsham, Ark.—General patronage.

Desert Love, with Tom Mix.—If you want plenty of action and your people like Westerns you sure want this one.—F. D. Hall, Wonderland theatre, Madelia, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

The White Lie, with Gladys Brockwell.—Why don't you make a picture like this and spoil your patronage? No chance to make star of her.—A Fukuda, Universal theatre, Stamford, Cal.—Neighborhood patronage.

Her Honor the Mayor, with Eileen Percy.—A very good ordinary program picture.—Auditorium theatre, Carleton, Neb.—Small town patronage.

Tiger's Cub, with Pearl White.—A little rough for some people but drew good business and pleased the majority.—Pfeiffer Bros., Opera House, Kenton, O.—General patronage.

Her Honor the Mayor, with Eileen Percy.—Who wants a woman mayor? Nothing to this story.—A. G. Hauge, Happy Hour theatre, Walnut, la.—Local patronage.

The Little Wanderer, with Shirley Mason.—This one was very good as Miss Mason's pictures are all good. Give us more.—G. Hubler, Grand theatre, Sikeston, Ark.—Neighborhood patronage.

A Sister to Salome, with Gladys Brockwell.—My audience liked it fine. Personally it was very fascinating. A picture you don't forget. Brockwell very beautiful in this.—W. H. Hefter, Itasca theatre, Alice, Tex.—Small town patronage.

The Mountain Woman, with Pearl White.—A fairly good picture. Some what overdrawn and improbable. Star not well enough known to have many followers here.—W. W. Woltz, Star theatre, Lake City, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Texan, with Tom Mix.—Story not much, but his stunts always pull. Think majority of small town movie fans are for action, not for thinking.—A. Fukuda, Universal theatre, Hanford, Cal.—Neighborhood patronage.

Flames of Youth, with Shirley Mason.—Good. Star does not marry. This may disappoint some. A change is good. Seen.—Charles Dabiler, Abingdon theatre, Abingdon, Ill. Neighborhood patronage.

The White Moll, with Pearl White.—Patrons did not care for this one. Our patrons don't care for crook pictures.—G. Hubler, Grand theatre, Marked Tree, Ark.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Orphan, with William Farnum.—This with A Fresh Start, Educational comedy, went over bigger first night than any bill ran for a month. 99% of audience males. Women here don't go to the Farnum.—O. R. Naton, Strand theatre, Davis, Cal.—Small town patronage.

Tiger's Cub, with Pearl White.—Pretty. An average star does good acting. Little rough in places. Six reels.—Harry Pace, Princess theatre, Traer, la.

Goldwyn

Out of the Storm, with Barbara Castleton.—Played this one two weeks after The Branding Iron to almost as big a house as the latter brought. Thanks to Miss Barbara Castleton and Goldwyn. Your patrons will like her. 100% box office value.—H. F. Sharp, Tumble In theatre, Sinton, Tex.—Rural patronage.

ScratCh My Back, with a special cast.—A good clean pleasuring comedy drama that pleased all.—A. S. Widamman, Centennial theatre, Warsaw, Ind.

The Truth, with Madge Kennedy.—Rather silly plot. No complaint about acting.—W. C. Cleaton, Gem theatre, Higbee, Mo.

ScratCh My Back, with a special cast.—A comedy success. Delighted those who were looking for something different. Old timers thought it best ever. Business on it good.—Ben L. Morris, Olympic theatre, Bellaire, O.—Small town patronage.

The Great Accident, with Tom Moore.—It was not a good program picture. If this concern has any good attractions I have never had them.—Charles Dabiler, Abingdon theatre, Abingdon, Ill. Neighborhood patronage.

The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come, with Jack Pickford.—Not a knockout, but a very pleasing picture. Easy to advertise.—Alvin S. Frank, Jewel theatre, Lafayette, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Water, Water, Everywhere, with Will Rogers.—A good picture. My first one of the star, but my patrons said he was fine.—W. W. Woltz, Star theatre, Lake City, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

Jubilo, with Will Rogers.—Rogers is my best drawing male star. Well liked by all. Never had a poor picture of him. Jubilo is just fun.—Jno. I. Saunders, Cheney theatre, Cheney, Kans.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Highest Bidder, with Madge Kennedy.—Well liked by the Kennedy fans. Bette Davis and Foster Braden.—Starr Opera House, Kenton, O.—General patronage.

The Blooming Angel, with Madge Kennedy.—Here is the best picture the star ever made. I have seen a lot with her, but this is the cream. Book it.—R. K. Stonehock, Wisner theatre, Eldora, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

Jinx, with Mabel Normand.—No good. For this plot is too silly for most people. They call it a comedy, but nothing to it.—Jno. I. Saunders, Cheney theatre, Cheney, Kans.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Slim Princess, with Mabel Normand.—They liked this. Something to it and better than ordinary.—Ben L. Morris, Olympic theatre, Bellaire, O.—Small town patronage.

Daughter Mine, with Madge Kennedy.—Nothing to it. Star good, but poor trail story.—New Cozy theatre, Winchester, Ind.

The Revenge of Tarzan, with Gene Pollar.—Story is not consistent but it is a whale of a money getter. House record here.—D. B. Baker, Circle theatre, Ottumwa, la.

Two scenes from "The Outside Woman," the real art picture in which Wanda Hawley is starred. It was adapted from Philip Bartholomae's comedy, "All Night Long."

Hodkinson

Desert Gold, with E. K. Lincoln.—This picture was a fine Western. Got a full house and pleased all.—Eldora Opera, Pastime theatre, Seelyville, Ind.—Small town patronage.

The Sagebrusher, with a special cast.—Don't play this as a special. You will regret it. 70% liked it. It is a fairly pleasing homely, sad, non-exiting drama. Acting and story very good, but it fails to register as a big production. It might stand very slight raise due to its length.—Philip Rand, Rex theatre, Salmon, Idaho.—Small town patronage.

The Silent Barrier, with a special cast.—Good picture. Wonderful scenery.—C. S. Ford, Princess theatre, Reinbeck, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

Metro

The Saphead, with Buster Keaton.—Very good.—Raymond Piper, Piper's Opera House, Virginia City, Nev.

The Off-Shore Pirate, with Viola Dana.—A peach. Ran a Lloyd with it and had some comedy bill. Drew well.—W. H. Smith, Strand theatre, Grinnell, la.

The Hope, with a special cast.—Good regular program picture. Top price 25c.—Giacomo Bros., Crystal theatre, Tombstone, Ariz.—General patronage.

The Cheater, with May Allison.—Good picture, but too short.—Ernest W. Hatcher, Star theatre, Harlem, Ga.—Neighborhood patronage.

Madame Peacock, with Nazimova.—My patrons did not enjoy this picture. Some stopped at the box office and said that this was Nazimova's poorest picture.—Edwin Lake, Lake theatre, Baker, Mont.

The Misfit Wife, with Alice Lake.—Alice made good in Shore Acres and was received by a large crowd in The Misfit Wife. Not a one disappointed. Strictly a 100% picture.—W. Lloyd Beebe, Opera House, Manito, Ill.—Small town patronage.

The Cheater, with May Allison.—No kicks on this. Good picture.—E. A. Baradel, Palace theatre, McGhee, Ark.—Small town patronage.

Love, Honor and Obey, with a special cast.—A good picture to fair business for a stormy night.—W. W. Woltz, Star theatre, Lake City, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

Clothes, with a special cast.—This will please the ladies immensely.—Raymond Piper, Piper’s Opera House, Virginia City, Nev.

Lombardi, Ltd., with Bert Lytell.—Absolutely nothing to it.—W. C. Cleeton, Grand theatre, Highib, Mo.

Parlor, Bedroom and Bath, with a special cast.—Fair and Warmer and this are very much alike. They both are drawing cards. Both good.—Ernest W. Hatcher, Star theatre, Harlem, Ga.—Neighborhood patronage.

Peggy Does her Darndest, with May Allison.—I would play this for my own amusement even if no one else came. Mae Allison is mighty pretty and appealing in this clever tom-girl comedy. When she threw her dignified father over her head by a jiu-jit-su trick it brought down the house. It’s old, but a peach. Philip Rand, Rex theatre, Salmon, Idaho.—Small town patronage.

The Right of Way, with Bert Lytell.—A really big picture and in spite of some happy ending pleased them all.—R. Ross Riley, Wigwam theatre, Oberlin, Kans.—Small town patronage.

The Willow Tree, with Viola Dana.—Long live Viola Dana and Shirley Mason. This is a good clean picture. A change from the ordinary. Very pleasing. Book it and boost it.—W. Lloyd Beebe, Opera House, Manito, Ill.—Small town patronage.

Please Get Married, with Viola Dana.—Good picture but too close to the line in spots. This kind don’t help the fight against censorship.—E. A. Baradell, Palace theatre, McGhee, Ark.—Small town patronage.

Blackmail, with Viola Dana.—Good. Dana and clever. Good settings. Rich homes and gardens. Censor need not cut this.—H. Pace, Princess theatre, Trsaer, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

Alias Jimmie Valentine, with Bert Lytell.—This picture went good. You can boost it and not regret it.—Ernest W. Hatcher, Star theatre, Harlem, Ga.—Neighborhood patronage.

Held in Trust, with May Allison.—Had good moments on this.—Raymond Piper, Piper’s Opera House, Virginia City, Nev.

The Cheater, with May Allison.—Not as good as her previous one. Too druggy and too much cigarette stuff.—W. W. Woltz, Star theatre, Lake City, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

Nothing But Lies, with Taylor Holmes.—Metro ought to be ashamed to foist such rot on the exhibitor. If they only knew, it’s a lemon.—O. E. Pierce, Theatreum, Portland, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

Hearts Are Trumps, with a special cast.—A good picture.—Raymond Piper, Piper’s Opera House, Virginia City, Nev.

Paramount

The Right to Love, with Mae Murray.—Fine picture. Ran it four days. Business dropped every day.—Ben L. Morris, Olympic theatre, Belling, O.—Small town patronage.

The Restless Sex, with Marion Davies.—Owing to censorship agitation, couldn’t play this up. Very fair picture. Business fair.—D. B. Baker, Circle theatre, Ottumwa, Ia.

Jack Straw, with Robert Warwick.—This is a picture that my patrons enjoyed very highly. All came out with a smile.—Edwin Lake, Lake theatre, Baker, Mont.

What Every Woman Learns, with Enid Bennett.—Good picture. This is one that will guff them in. Pleased a large Tuesday night crowd. Book it. The name puts it over.—W. F. Baker, Boone Way theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ky.—General patronage.

The Tree of Knowledge, with Robert Warwick.—Our patrons liked it, as they seem to like all Paramount pictures.—Carl Sather, Grand theatre, Annadale, Minn.—Small town patronage.

Riddle Gawne, with William S. Hart.—Pleased Hart’s admirers. Top price 5¢ war tax included.—Gaicom Bros., Crystal theatre, Tombstone, Ariz.—General patronage.

My Lady’s Garter, with special cast.—Just an ordinary program picture. Title rather deceiving. Kept some out for fear of seeing something shocking.—W. W. Woltz, Star theatre, Lake City, Ia.—Small town patronage.

Held by the Enemy, with a special cast.—Another good picture that the public does not fail for. Seemed to be afraid it was a war picture and those who like war pictures were disappointed.—Ben L. Morris, Olympic theatre, Belling, O.—Small town patronage.

The Sea Wolf, with a special cast.—Pleased those who read the book, but to many it was displeasing. Too much fighting. Picture followed book to the letter.—W. Lloyd Beebe, Opera House, Manito, Ill.—Small town patronage.

Let’s Elope, with Marguerite Clark.—Good with a fine mixing of comedy.—J. B. Endert, Endert theatre, Crescent City, Cal.—General patronage.

Why Smith Left Home, with Bryant Washburn.—Very good. Some women laughed so much I thought they were hysterical. Satisified a crowd that smiled on the way out.—Alvin S. Frank, Jewel theatre, Lafayette, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Copperhead, with Lionel Barrymore.—Very fine picture but would be better if cut to five reels.—L. M. Kuhns, Gibson theatre, Gibson, N. M.—Mining camp patronage.

Behold My Wife, with a special cast.—When I saw this on my booking sheet I said “Oh boy, here’s where I make some real money.” But my bank book is still in the red and not one compliment was handed me. Something to think about.—Charles Dahler, Abingdon theatre, Abingdon, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Grim Game, with Houdini.—Didn’t know how exceptionally good this was until I had a good Monday crowd to see it. Drama good and Houdin’s acting is splendid.—W. H. Hefter, lasca theatre, Allice, Tex.—Small town patronage.

Crooked Straight, with Charles Ray.—They did not like it as well as other Ray pictures. Personally I don’t consider it up to the usual Ray class.—Alvin S. Frank, Jewel theatre, Lafayette, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Witness for the Defense, with Elsie Ferguson.—Just an ordinary program picture—Auditorium theatre, Carleton, Nebr.—Small town patronage.

Little Miss Rebellion, with Dorothy Gish.—Too light for adults. Disappointed a generous audience with me. Usually stars grow up eventually who play such childish parts, but she uses the same bag of tricks she began with several years ago.—Jean Lightner, Regent theatre, Alameda, Cal.—Neighborhood patronage.

Girls, with Marguerite Clark.—A dandy picture. Marguerite Clark always pleases. Everyone enjoyed this picture. However, some did not like the ending. Business: good.— 15 and 20c.—W. F. Baker, Boone Way theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ky.—General patronage.

Always Audacious, with Wallace Reid.—Just a good program picture. Nothing else.—Charles Dahler, Abingdon theatre, Abingdon, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Civilian Clothes, with Thomas Meighan.—Just an average pleasing program picture. Not a special. Drew average at advanced admission.—W. H. Mart, Strand theatre, Grinnell, la.

Sadie Love, with Billie Burke.—The salesman told me this was a lemon. However, I say Paramount has no lemons. Had many compliments, and found this a real good program picture.—W. F. Baker, Boone Way theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ky.—General patronage.

Too Much Johnson, with Bryant Washburn.—Comedy-drama full of action. Had many good comments on it.—H. J. McBeth, Gem theatre, Ord, Nehr.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Cradle of Courage, with William S. Hart.—A fine show, but not the money getters that the true Western type are.—D. B. Baker, Circle theatre, Ottumwa, la.

The Home Town Girl, with Vivian Martin.—This star is always at her best. Her pictures always please. Ran this with "Fatty" and broke house record.—L. M. Rothweiler, Palace theatre, Bismarck, N. D.—Small town patronage.

The Money Corral, with William S. Hart.—An old one, but is a much better picture than The Toll Gate, Sand or some of his new ones. Money Corral got capacity and pleased.—Ben L. Morris, Olyphant theatre, Bellaire, O.—Small town patronage.

Pathé

That Girl Montana, with Blanche Sweet.—This is a good one and will please pretty nearly all. It will stand boosting big. Most all Pathés are good.—G. L. Deady, Palace theatre, No. Rose, N. Y.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Money Changers, with a special cast.—Comments on it very good. Good story and nice comedy along with it.—Alvin S. Frank, Jewel theatre, Lafayette, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Lahoma, an Edgar Lewis production.

—My patrons enjoyed this picture.—Edwin Lake, Lake theatre, Baker, Mont.

When We Were Twenty-One, with H. B. Warner.—Good picture. Patrons well pleased with this one. Star draws well.—B. F. Sharp, Tumble In theatre, Sinton, Tex.—Rural patronage.

Man and His Woman, with Herbert Rawlinson.—Fair.—D. B. Baker, Circle theatre, Ottumwa, la.

My Husband's Other Wife, with Sylvia Bremer.—Good enough for anybody. Admission 10 and 20c.—Ernest W. Hatcher, Star theatre, Harlem, Ga.—Neighborhood patronage.

The A. B. C. of Love, with a special cast.—Good. All Pathés give entire satisfaction.—S. C. Hagan, Palm theatre, Mount City, Ill.

My Husband's Other Wife, with Sylvia Bremer.—The crowd came to see her. They saw her, liked her and went home pleased. One of the best we ever ran. Grade them up like this and the public will demand their theatre men get Pathé pictures.—G. L. Deady, Palace theatre, No. Rose, N. Y.—Neighborhood patronage.

THE SAGE HEN, Edgar Lewis production.—This picture ought to be sought by every theatre man. We never ran a better one. Not equalled once in a hundred times. A picture that will get under vest. Just wonderful.—G. L. Deady, Palace theatre, North Rose, N. Y.

The Devil to Pay, with a special cast.—Their program picture. Not a good puller.—D. B. Baker, Circle theatre, Ottumwa, la.

Lahoma, an Edgar Lewis production.—A first class picture. Patrons liked it.—Ernest W. Hatcher, Star theatre, Harlem, Ga.—Neighborhood patronage.

My Husband's Other Wife, with Sylvia Bremer.—Better than a good many specials. Boost it and you'll not regret it.—F. Heitmanek, Opera House, Clarkson, Neb.—Small town patronage.

Sherry, an Edgar Lewis production.—"Another 100% picture," is patrons' expression.—G. L. Deady, Palace theatre, No. Rose, N. Y.—Neighborhood patronage.

The House of the Tolling Bell, a J. Stuart Blackton production.—Good. A little spooky.—V. Lloyd Beebe, Opera House, Manist, Ill.—Small town patronage.

The 13th Chair, with Creighton Hale.—Average crowd and seemed to please about 85%.—O. R. Nation, Strand theatre, Davis, Calif.—Small town patronage.

Respectable by Proxy, with a special cast.—A Blackton production. Have seen a Sherry on the same program, The Blood Barrier, another Blackton production, is just as good. You won't go wrong on either of these.—Ernest W. Hatcher, Star theatre, Harlem, Ga.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Blood Barrier, with Sylvia Bremer.—Good picture. It keeps them on edge of their seats.—F. Heitmanek, Opera House, Clarkson, Neb.—Small town patronage.

The Little Cafe, with Max Linder.—No good. Let it alone.—Ernest W.

Realart

The Plaything of Broadway, with Justice Johnstone.—Fine. Perfect satisfaction.—S. C. Hagan, Palm theatre, Mound City, Ill.

Her Beloved Villain, with Wanda Hawley.—Great. Praised by everyone. If this star keeps up this gait she will be on top soon. Business good.—Pfeiffer Bros., Opera House, Kenton, O.—General patronage.

The Stolen Kiss, with Constance Binney.—This proved a winner to average business. A 100% comedy-drama.—B. F. Sharp, Tumble In theatre, Sinton, Tex.—Rural patronage.

The Furnace, with a special cast.—A fine attraction. Did not make a record and everyone was not satisfied with its portrayal, but run it. Class A.—D. B. Baker, Circle theatre, Ottumwa, la.

The Eyes of the Heart, with Mary Miles Minter.—A mighty well selected cast and picture carefully made which counts for much when so many pictures are turned out without any care or brains.—New Cozy theatre, Winchester, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Soul of Youth, with a special cast.—A Realart special. Worthy of exploitation and advanced prices. Ask the censorship advocates to see this one.—C. T. Metcalfe, Opera House, Greenfield, Ill.—Small town patronage.

Sweet Lavender, with Mary Miles Minter.—Not as good as other Minter pictures. However, this was a good one. I haven't found any Realart pictures that were not good.—H. J. McBeth, Gem theatre, Ord, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Deep Purple, with a special cast.—Here is a well told story that is full of good suspense. Very good cast and carefully made.—Alvin S. Frank, Jewel theatre, Lafayette, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

She Couldn’t Help It, with Bebe Daniels.—Bebe is sure coming. Watch her step. This, as her previous two Realarts, will show anywhere and please.—C. T. Metcalfe, Opera House, Greenfield, Ill.—Small town patronage.

Soldiers of Fortune, with a special cast.—Drew slightly better than average for same night and pleased them.—O. R. Nation, Strand theatre, Davis, Calif.—Small town patronage.

The Mystery of the Yellow Room, with a special cast.—Very good picture, but would not class it as a special.—J. J. Kuchacek, Swan theatre, Swanton, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Luck of the Irish, with a special cast.—Not too well liked. The audience could not figure out where the Luck of the Irish came in.—Alvin S. Frank, Jewel theatre, Lafayette, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Girl of the Sea, with Betty Hillburn.—Was afraid of this but had three days’ good crowd. Very fine photography. The fight with octopus under-sea scenes very clear.—Harry Pace, Princess theatre, Traer, la.

Stoll

Mr. Wu, with a special cast.—Picture drew good. Patrons well pleased. Stoll pictures are a good bet for small exhibitor as well as big houses.—H. D. McDonald, Lyric theatre, Torrington, Wyo.

The Tavern Knight, with a special cast.—Picture drew well in spite of the fact it was costume. Acting fine, settings wonderful, story gripping and holds interest. I am having fine success with the Stoll pictures and recommend them highly.—Brakeman & Brakeman, Rex theatre, Cheyenne Wells, Colo.

United Artists

The Mark of Zorro, with Douglas Fairbanks.—Book this one, men, and go it strong. It is the fastest, biggest thing Doug has made to date, and we have shown them all. Clever swordsmanship, good riding and some fighting. A real entertainment.—R. Ross Riley, Wigwam theatre, Oberlin, Kans.—Small town patronage.

Down on the Farm, a Mack Sennett production.—Run this two days with a chautauqua in town to which the kids had free admission. Kids left it and came to my theatre and paid to see Down on the Farm. Animal acting excellent.—W. H. Heller, Tusca theatre, Alice, Tex.—Small town patronage.

The Mark of Zorro, with Douglas Fairbanks.—Fairbanks does not draw as well as formerly, but this is his best picture and should be exploited big.—D. B. Baker, Circle theatre, Ottumwa, la.

Pollyanna, with Mary Pickford.—Big business. Pleased immensely. Top prices 90¢ including war tax. These kinds of plays pack our house.—Giacomo Bros., Crystal theatre, Tombstone, Ariz.—General patronage.

Down on the Farm, a Mack Sennett production.—Big comedy as extra feature and it pleased immensely. It seemed to be the kind of stuff they wanted and we tried another one, Love, Honor and Behave, First National, for three days. I thought it a better picture, but the public did not come for it. I fizzled.—

Romance, with Doris Keane.—This picture did me more damage than any picture ever shown at this theatre. My patrons informed me that it was an insult to pay admission to this class of entertainment. Why does this stuff get by censors?—F. Hanifan, Lyric theatre, Swed City, la.

Suds, with Mary Pickford.—Fell flat on this one. Acting and scenes true to life, but they don’t want to see Mary ugly.—A. S. Widaman, Centennial theatre, Warsaw, Ind.

The Mark of Zorro, with Douglas Fairbanks.—This is a good picture. Pleased about 70%. Some said he looked old, some didn’t know him, some said it’s not the kind of picture they expected or wanted to see him in. Make some more like Down to Earth.—W. W. Wolitz, Star theatre, Lake City, la.—Small town patronage.

Universal

Risky Business, with Gladys Walton.—A dandy program picture. Seemed to please. Drew well. Gladys is a nice little kid.—T. N. Magruder, Elite theatre, Iola, Kans.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Golden Trail, with Jane Novak.—One of the best pictures we have played this year. Stood up for two days. I may bring this picture back for an extra day.—Lawrence Watkins, Strand theatre, Petersburg, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Secret Gift, with a special cast.—A real good program picture. Star seems to take well with my people.—John Aden, Rialto theatre, Terril, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Devil's Passkey, an Eric von Stromheim production.—Personally I liked it very much. My audience did not care for it. It is a big town picture. Settings are magnificent. Acting is perfection. Shows careful and artistic direction, but story not the popular kind.—Alvin S. Frank, Jewel theatre, Lafayette, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Bullet Proof, with Harry Carey.—

CAROLINA THEATRE
Feb. 13th, 1921

Vitagraph Branch Office, Washington, D. C.

Gentlemen:

I cannot refrain from congratulating you on the splendid production you have made of the famous old story of "Black Beauty."

I have run nearly all of the big productions of all the producers that are really worthy of the name of "big," but I have yet to run one that met with such universal approval and commendation as did "Black Beauty," Vitagraph certainly has done this beautifully.

If exhibitors are wide awake for pictures that will add prestige to their theatres as well as dollars to their pockets, they will certainly fill themselves of this great opportunity, for "Black Beauty" will not only draw the better class of people to the theatres, but it will satisfy them thoroughly after they come.

It is one of a few special productions on which an exhibitor can raise his admission price with the absolute assurance that his patrons will consider it well worth the added price. "Black Beauty" is a credit to the industry.

Here is a little personal story that may interest you. Among our guests here is a well known banker who seldom goes to the "movies" when he is at home because so few of them he considers worth the time spent in seeing them. He came to see "Black Beauty." At the matinee the next day he was back with four others whom he brought. Over at Southern Pines, the second night, he was there with an automobile load of friends, and he told me he enjoyed it more the third time than the first.

That's some recommendation for "Black Beauty."

Very truly yours,

(Signed) CHAS. W. PICQUET.

King of the Circus (Universal), with Eddie Polo.—We are on the sixth episode and going fine. This is a gem of a serial. Everybody is wild over Eddie. His stunts and the circus scenes draw splendidly.—Mrs. Lloyd Junkin, Queen theatre, Aspermont, Tex.—Small town patronage.

THE VANISHING DAGGER (Universal) with Eddie Polo.—On 13th episode and amid a stream of stunt shenanigans and special church services the interest is amazing. Kids have organized bands in school to play "The Vanishing Dagger." Draws like a mustard platter.—W. H. Hefler, Itasca theatre, Alice, Texas.

Ruth of the Rockies (Pathé) with Ruth Roland.—That's the best on the market. Playing 12th episode and they still keep coming. Take a tip and book it.—Ellen Shader, Alvin theatre, Cleveland, O.—Transit patronage.

The Veiled Mystery (Vitagraph), with Antonio Moreno.—Good serial.—S. C. Hagan, Palm theatre, Mound City, Ill.

Bride 13 (Fox), with a special cast—Exciting and interesting but situations nearly all very unpleasant. Drew well, but the reviews have been slim.—W. F. Baker, Boone Way theatre, Mt Vernon, Ky.—General patronage.

WAY DOWN EAST, a D. W. Griffith special.—Slightly better than average number of patrons. Price $1.50 and $1.60. Regular shows night before and following better than usual. Think WAY DOWN EAST helped my business. My net profit on day doubled average Sunday.—O. R. Nation, St. Davids, Cal.

The Forbidden Woman (Equity), with Clara Kimball Young.—Played The Forbidden Woman to a loss of sixteen dollars and no more Young pictures for me. Too slow and druggy. Nothing to it.—Carl Sather, Grand theatre, Annapolis, Minn.—Small town patronage.

The Soul of Raphael (Equity), with Clara Kimball Young.—No good for this section.—Raymond Piper, Piper's Opera House, Virginia City, Nev.

The County Fair (G. Croswell Smith), a Maurice Tourneur production.—A false alarm. I expected a good deal of this picture and was very much disappointed. —I. M. Kuhns, Gibson theatre, Gibson, N. M.—Mining camp patronage.

The Man from Nowhere (Arrow), with Jack Hoxie.—Very good five reel Western. Good heart interest.—O. K. McKisset, Byron theatre, Racine, Wis.—Transit patronage.

Mid-Channel (Equity), with Clara Kimball Young.—This picture went over good, although it failed to draw. Clara a dead one here.—Pfeiffer Bros., Opera House, Kenton, O.—General patronage.

Galloping Devils (Canyon), with Franklyn Farnum.—A good clean Western type of picture. Star fine picture.—O. K. McKisset, Byron theatre, Racine, Wis.—Transit patronage.

The County Fair (G. Croswell Smith), a Maurice Tourneur production.—We class this as a 100% five reeler. It gives 100% satisfaction at a small raise in price.—Raymond Piper, Piper Opera House, Virginia City, Nev.

Mid-Channel (Equity), with Clara Kimball Young.—This is a good Young picture.—Raymond Piper, Piper's Opera House, Virginia City, Nev.

Equipment Progress

All exhibitors have at one time or another sat in a darkened projection room, attached to some exchange, watched a picture run off cold. No orchestration accompanied it, just the monotonous clicking of the projection machine.

Decorative effect was of the minimum, usually no attempt whatever made in this direction. The picture was viewed through to the finish with little or no comment. Probably a little discussion followed and the showing was finished.

Contrast this with the environment under which the average theatre patron views a picture. He is ushered into the theatre through an attractive lobby. He is directed to his seat through aisles richly carpeted.

Tinted walls, profusion of lights, costly drapes, all in harmony, put his mind in a receptive mood for what is to follow. His appetite for good music is appeased by the strains from a full-toned pipe organ, a symphony orchestra, in many cases both.

Many exhibitors have commented on the fact that when they saw a picture in their theatres, they found it hard to believe it was the same one they had viewed in the projection room showing.

If you have made this comparison, if you have felt this contrast, then you know the meaning of equipment to the theatre. That is why we repeat—thought put upon equipment is not wasted time.

History and Development of Organs

Organ Building Profession Has Adjusted Itself to the Popular Demand Upon It

BY DAVID MARR
President, The Marr & Colton Company

THE desire for music has been experienced by man since the earliest days and we find that down through the ages music has played an important part in man’s life. This is shown first in the primitive pipes of Pan and in the Chinese ceng, instruments which date back to a time that is lost in the mists of antiquity, these instruments being blown by the breath. Possibly the Chinese ceng may be taken as the first instance of the organ.

The earliest authentic record of the organ is probably found in the fourth chapter of Genesis, where it is recorded that “Jubal is the father of all such as handles the harp and the organ.” The organ of the ancients was a simple contrivance consisting in order of evolutions of three essential parts, first, sequence of pipes graduated in length and made of reed, wood or bronze; second, a contrivance for compressing the wind and for supplying it to the pipes in order to make them speak. The ends of such pipes as were required to be silent being stopped by the fingers, and third, a system of enabling the performer to store the wind and to control the distribution of the supply separately to the pipes at will.

The primitive form was probably the Syrinx or the pipes of Pan. These were later combined with the bellows and the bag pipes. The third part of the organ was composed of contrivances made by artisans, boxes or chests with sliding lids running in grooves and controlled by levers. The pneumatic and hydraulic organs of the ancients were practically the same instrument differing only in the method of the wind supply. In the earliest organs there is no doubt that the pipes consisted of flute and reed pipes of different lengths, as this is clearly indicated by the early Egyptian, Greek and Roman carvings and pottery. The hydraulic organs probably date back 200 years B.C. and were probably the invention of some of those early scientists of that city of learning, Alexandria.

It is interesting to note that the organ was probably used largely in its earliest day in connection with entertainments. The hydraulic organs were played in the theatre and in the Arena and on account of its association with the theatre, gladiatorial combats and pagan amusements of corrupt Rome it was placed under a ban by the early Christian church. Later the recognition of the value of the organ in Christian worship proved an incentive which led to the rapid development of the instrument.

We find that the greatest advance in organ building has happened in this twentieth century when the organ has come into general use for public amusement, large organs being installed in public auditoriums and concert halls. About this time the first instrument was installed in the motion picture theatre and the ingenuity of the organ builders has been called upon to meet this rapid advance and how well he is doing it is shown in the instruments manufactured today. We find tones resembling remarkably the tones of the orchestra, such as saxophones, clarinets, cello and other numerous representations of the orchestra assembled under the control of a competent player. The motion picture theatre today is considered incomplete without its organ for use alone or for use with the orchestra.

In the organ of today we find that the lower principal qualities of tone are as follows: True organ or foundation tone given by metal pipes of liberal scale.

THEATRE EQUIPMENT
Typhoons Installed in Senate

Beautiful Chicago Theatre Has Complete System That Will Thoroughly Cool and Ventilate

Chicago has constructed and is now constructing some of the handsomest theatres in the United States. Among the best of these is the Senate theatre, owned and operated by Lubliner and Trinz.

One of the most important items to be considered in the equipment of the Senate was the cooling, heating and ventilation, and after careful consideration of the various systems on the market, it was decided to install the Typhoon System, manufactured by the Typhoon Fan Co. of New York.

The Typhoon engineering department laid out a complete system that will thoroughly cool and ventilate the entire house during the warm weather, while at the same time the system provides for the heating and ventilation during the winter months.

Common Sense Principle

The Typhoon System is based on a common sense principle. Instead of small high-powered fans operating at high speed, as is used by other systems, the Typhoon System uses fans of large diameter, running at comparatively low speed. All the duct work is entirely done away with, thus securing a considerable saving not only in the cost of installation, but also in the cost of operation. The primary idea underlying the duct system has always been to secure a smooth, even distribution of air.

It required, in addition to a heavy outlay for the ducts themselves, a high pressure fan with a motor powerful enough to counteract the resistance which the ducts offered to the passage of the air. Not a little of the electric current consumed by the duct system has been due directly to this resistance. The Typhoon installation in the Senate theatre consists of two No. 112 Typhoon Single Sets, one No. 212 Typhoon Twin Set, four No. 19 Typhoon Single Sets, and one No. 28 Typhoon Twin Set.

Special Air Chambers

For heating purposes during the winter months, the two No. 112 Typhoon Single Sets, which are located in special chambers in the attic space, draw the air through 5,244 square feet of vento heaters and discharges this air in the theatre through grilles located on each side of the stage. This equipment will blow seventeen and a half millions of cubic feet of fresh heated air per hour into the theatre. To heat the theatre before opening up, the air can be recirculated through the auditorium by the No. 28 Typhoon Twin Set, located in a specially constructed chamber on the roof of the theatre at the back of the balcony. This No. 28 Typhoon Twin Set takes the air from the grilles located on the roof of the balcony, and the grilles located in the ceiling in the lounging room, and returns the air to the No. 112 Heating Typhoons, located in the attic space on each side of the stage. Thus, by this recirculating, a considerable saving in consumption of fuel is obtained.

By a simple damper arrangement, this same No. 28 Typhoon Twin Set is made to exhaust the air when necessary. For the cooling and ventilation of the theatre during the summer months, the cooling equipment consists also of the two No. 112 Typhoon Single Sets (in summer the heating stacks being cut down and by-passed), and in addition there is also used the No. 212 Typhoon Twin Set, located in the specially constructed chamber over the stage. This equipment takes fresh air from high above the street and blows it into the theatre through grilles located at the proscenium arch, and on each side of the stage.

Blow Air Directly

Above the balcony there is also located in addition to the equipment in a specially constructed chamber in the attic space, the four No. 19 Typhoon Single Sets. These are arranged in the roof and also blow large volumes of fresh air directly into the theatre through circular grilles located throughout the Theatre.

The air is blown out of the theatre through the entrance doors and through the grilles located in the ceiling in the lobby, and also through the No. 28 Typhoon Twin Set which, during the summer, is used for exhausting purposes.

Through the use of the entire Typhoon Cooling System there is blown into the Senate every hour fifty-six million cubic feet of fresh air, creating a steady refreshing breeze throughout the entire theatre without a draft.

BUILD LOBBY FRAME MODEL

The new lobby frame department of the Exhibitors Supply company is now under way and two of the models have been finished, which will be exhibited to the trade within a short time.

Primarily the new department is designed to build frames to order in this manner assuring the exhibitor that they will harmonize absolutely with the general decorative scheme of his lobby.

Recent announcement of its plan in this connection by the company, it is said, has aroused considerable interest, and already, despite the fact that the article has not been placed on the market, inquiries for details have been received.

STANLEY CO. BUYS THEATRE

The Washington theatre, Chester, Pa., has been taken over by the Stanley company and it is announced, an entry on new policy will be inaugurated in the play house.

Located in Market street near the City Hall, the Washington Theatre is in the heart of the business district. It is modern in every detail, having been built approximately six months ago. In the time of its sale to the Stanley company it has been under the management of Ed Margolis. The amount involved in the property transfer, including lot and building, is estimated at $500,000.
Can You Qualify for Screen Authorship?

A national educational institution to train photoplaywrights by correspondence during spare time at home has been established in Los Angeles to meet the needs of the motion picture industry.

This institution is directed by experienced writers sponsored by Cecil B. DeMille, Thos. H. Ince and other prominent producers.

The field for photoplaywrights is lucrative and applicants drawn from every walk of life respond to the call.

Only persons naturally endowed with the gift of creative imagination and dramatic insight, however, can hope for success in this profession, and applicants must be selected accordingly.

All applicants, therefore, are requested to apply by mail to Frederick Palmer, Director of Education, for the Palmer Home-Test Questionnaire to determine their fitness to undertake this course of vocational training.

This questionnaire, scientifically compiled by Professor Malcolm Chase MacLean, A.M., formerly a Northwestern University instructor of English composition, in collaboration with H. V. Van Loan, noted photoplay-author-producer, is the first test of its kind ever adopted by an educational institution.

The purpose of this questionnaire is to help applicants determine the degree of creative imagination possessed by them and consequently their eligibility to enroll in this curriculum.

If successful in making this home test, the Palmer Plan of Instruction in Photoplay Writing is available to you.

Flute tone produced from stopped wooden pipes and other flue pipes without stoppers modeled after the orchestral instrument. String tone from pipes of small scale and usually made from pure tin. Reed tone, which as the name implies, is produced from reed pipes of various shapes and materials. The tone produced from a vibrating reed is similar to the reeds of an orchestra. It is interesting to note that from the earliest records the organ and the orchestra have been closely allied and present indications point to that alliance becoming even closer in the future.

A set or row of pipes is generally termed a stop and groups of stops of various tonal families are placed together. We find in the modern theatre instrument such groups of pipes as under the name of Accompaniment, Orchestral, Solo Organ, etc. The number, power and quality of these stops vary greatly and each stop is usually controlled by its manual. The manuals are the keyboards which are played by the hands, while the keyboard for the feet is known as the pedal. All these keyboards are connected to the black and white keys throughout their compass and are presided over by the organist. To the organist, whom we might term the exhibitor’s musical ambassador, belongs the responsibility of the musical portrayal of the picture as shown on the screen or at all events his share in encouraging in every effort he puts forth in presenting the musical interpretation which is so essential for the accompaniment of the picture. He plays an important part in the success of the theatre.

It is interesting for the pioneer exhibitor to glance back through the days and review the progress of music in the motion picture theatre. In the first days you would recall we had a piano alone, possibly augmented with a singer singing the words to the illustrated song. Then there was a desire for a more pretentious musical program and the automatic instrument was introduced. Yet the role of the organist, who was associated with the projector and who was responsible for the music of the theatre, was not discredited.

Then came the organ into the theatre, the first organs being practically models of church organs, deadly monotonous in tone and not having that quality which was necessary to produce the music which the public demanded, but within a short time the organ building profession adjusted itself to the demands and we find that the instruments were a close counterpart of the orchestra until we now have the organ, which is tending to become the most successful of all attempts on the part of the motion picture exhibitor to overcome the faults of the orchestra and the organ. Of course, where the expense does not allow this ideal combination the exhibitor must turn to either the orchestra or the organ.

We find in the medium and smaller sized theatres the exhibitor is turning to the organ alone more and more as the ideal music for his theatre, the patrons of which demand a high class musical accompaniment to the high quality of pictures being shown throughout the country.

Shirley Mason Star Of “Lamplighter”

A film story said to be unique as a regulation feature photoplay narrative, is the subject of a production known as "The Lamplighter." that William Fox is to issue shortly with Shirley Mason as its star.

While "The Lamplighter" is one of the principal actors in this moving drama, he is not the lead, but is the beautifully drawn character of a kindly old man, who, while pursuing his humble occupation, is drawn into one of the most absorbing tangles ever wrecked the happiness of several hapless souls, chief among those being Gertie, a little girl who is condemned for years to drag out a joyless existence under control of a gin-soaked bag. Finally she is restored to her mother and father and finds her happiness complete with the lover of her early childhood. The film was made from a story by Maria Susanna Cummins and has been directed by Howard M. Mitchell.

Nazimova's “Camille” Is Modern Interpretation [Of Famous Dumas Tale

It will be an ultra-modern Camille, according to Metro, who will be seen in Nazimova's forthcoming special Metro production of Alexander Dumas immortal love story.

All of the picturesque settings for the action of the production, especially designed by Natasha Rambova, are said to reveal the last word in present day elegance. Gowns worn by Nazimova and members of her company are the product of the combined ingenuity of star and artist. Many of the hangings and draperies used were imported from Paris by Nazimova and some have adorned her own home.

The cast for "Camille" includes, besides Nazimova, Rudolph Valentino, who will enact the part of Armand, the romantic lover; Rex Cherryman, Arthur Hoyt, Zeffie Tillbury, Ruth Miller and Consuelo Floverson. Ray Smallwood will direct.

Schoenstadt and Sons
Purchase Shakespeare Lease for $150,000
H. Schoenstadt and sons have purchased the ninety-nine-year leasehold on the building at Forty-third street and Ellis avenue which contains the Shake- speare theatre, apartments and offices.
It is understood that the price was approximately $150,000 subject to a first mortgage of $80,000 and a second of $55,000. The present lease on the theatre does not expire until May, 1922. This will give the Schoenstadt chain eight houses.

Police Chief Fitzmorris Declares Vigilance
Has Been Relaxed
Chief of Police Charles C. Fitzmorris, in a letter to the fire department, de- clares that many Chicago theatre owners have failed to comply with the terms of the fire prevention laws during the past week and warns that the danger of an- other theatre disaster is present.

Blames Haste of Employes
The cause of the condition is carelessness on the part of theatre employes and their haste to leave the theatre after the final performance, he says.
Fire Marshal Thomas O'Connor after receiving the letter stated that immediate steps would be taken to see that the ordinances and state laws are strictly enforced.
"It seems to be an almost universal practice of ushers and guards to hurry about closing and locking doors while the house is still half filled," declared the police chief. "At a certain theatre I found only one of the four main en- trances unlocked, although there were 500 people inside. At another theatre all but two exits were barred when the audience started to leave.

SHOTS AND MISSES

By Mac

JIMMY MELHAUSER, publicity scribe par excellence for Mack Sennett, who has been marking time here for the past few weeks in behalf of the latest Associated Producers picture, "A Small Town Idol," in company with E. M. Ashler, Mr. Sennett's personal representative, hopped the 20th Century for Manhattan March 7 to start things stirring around little ol' New Yawk.

Let it be recorded and in great big bold face on a twenty-four sheet, that GEORGE DE BAN, Industrial's best known character artiste and producer, more than held his own with the prominent "cit." George H. Cushing, from Washington, D. C., during the luncheon given by the Chicago Association of Commerce, at the Hotel LaSalle, March 2, giving the subject 'better Pictures' a delightfully intelligent discussion which was appreciated immensely by the large gathering in attendance.

WATTERTON R. ROTHACKER, president of Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, left for Los Angeles, March 1, for an extended California visit to oversee the final touches now being added to the big Rothacker studio which is nearing completion.

Understand that the $10 and costs that friend judge handed CLARENCE PHILLIPS, manager of the Gollos Enterprises, Inc., was for storing lights in the Clagpool Hotel. Wonder what "his judgship" would have squawked if it had been a couple of cases of "good stories," eh-what?

SIR GEORGE gave the Illinois railroad earnings a wee boost last week, taking a flying trip to Peoria, Ill., for a several hour stop-over. To be sure he came romping back with a contract and cash with.

H. A. R. DUTTON, president of the Exhibitors Supply Company, returned March 7 after spending several days in New York. We couldn't raise a murmur from the chief. Might mean eastern branches for this live and up-and-at'em company, mebbe?

SAM RIEGER, now covering the northside for the Interstate Films Exchange, tells us they are claming for the Mary Pickford features his exchange is offering. Apropos, with EDMIE HERZ extending his trip an additional week on the road looks like the country exhibitors are clamoring for these subjects.

* * *

MILT SIMON of the Selected Films Exchange, who recently arrived from his eastern trip, slipped us the Sphinx stuff, but we understand he picked up a few feature subjects for his territory which will be announced at a later date. Can't understand his silence. Might be tonsils?

Several northside exhibitors tell us that LEV VAN RONSEL of the Favorite Players Exchange, besides offering some of the best films obtainable, is fast establishing the reputation of having the handsomest sales squad in the Mid-West. At the present time we are informed FRANK GRAHAM, a newcomer in local film circles, is covering the northside territory.

With Physical Director BACHRACH doing a swim dive at one end and FRANK J. FLAHERTY, manager of Unity, attempting a jack-knife flop at the other end of the Illinois Athletic Club swimming tank, the other day, the tidal wave caused might have flooded Eulal Mich if the attendants hadn't closed the doors in time.

"Welcome Children" is Announced for Early National Distribution

The work of cutting and-minute "Welcome Children," the first five-reel feature to be made by Drasanca Productions of Los Angeles, has been completed.

Invocation date will be announced shortly by National Exchanges, Inc., which holds a contract with Drasanca for the exclusive distribution of that organization's pictures in the United States and Canada.

"Welcome Children" was written and directed by H. C. Mathews. The cast includes Elisie Albert, Sidney Franklin, Orpha Alla, George Sherwood, Kathrine Griffitt, John W. Early, Pearl M. Laight and several other infant starlets. National has arranged for its second issue to be made one month following that of "Welcome Children."

"The Lost Romance" First Knoblock Play for Screen

"The Lost Romance," which William DeMille is producing for Paramount, is based on the original story that Edward Knoblock, British playwright, has written for Paramount.

The principal roles are enacted by Jack Holt, Conrad Nagel, Lois Wilson and Fontaine La Rue, the first three being stars which scored in "Midsummer Madness." Olga Printzlau adapted the story and Guy Gilroy is the cameraman.

Selznicks and Corsland Return From Vacation

Myron and David Selznick, vice-president and secretary respectively of Selznick Pictures Corporation, have returned from their vacation trip to Havana and Palm Beach.

Alan Corsland, Selznick director, who accompanied the brothers as their guest, also returned and expects to start work on a new production within the near future.

"A. P." power for exhibitors is the power of the individual strong production made by its members coupled with the combined power of the Associated Producers whose centralized organization is creating one of the strongest names this industry has ever known.

The men who are Associated Producers, Inc., know that they must make bigger pictures than ever before in the past—and they are doing it. And a powerful distributing organization is giving them their deserved rewards.

"THE SMART SEX"

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL ATTRACTION starring

EVA NOVAK

A ray of dramatic sunshine that will warm every woman's heart. The picture of a poor little nobody from the chorus who puts a flock of high-flyers right where they belong and makes her millionaire papa-in-law realize that there's a new force in the family. Played by dainty EVA NOVAK with a snap and a relish as clever as its very clever direction at the hands of Fred. Granville.

Its one of those '52 Good Pictures a Year -- and No Worry'.

He plays daily to millions yet he never seems to be acting

HARRY CAREY

Chuckle, grin and thrill—that's a HARRY CAREY picture—and here's one human as to make you say: "He doesn't seem to be acting at all." Which is just exactly why HARRY CAREY has come to be one of the biggest picture attractions in the country. Show "THE FREEZE OUT" and see why they line up down to the corner when HARRY CAREY plays.

"Now or Never"

Reel for reel no greater comedy has ever been made!

And that goes without exception!

"Now or Never" is the tenth Harold Lloyd multiple reel comedy; it is his first three reel picture. Out of the ten there has not been one that was not strictly first class. Ten great pictures without a "flop." Has that record been equaled or even approached?

In "Now or Never" Lloyd reaches even greater heights as a comedian and Roach as a director. They have created a comedy masterpiece that will shine by any comparison.

It is our firm belief that in this first Associated Exhibitors Harold Lloyd Comedy, exhibitors are offered a production that they may confidently offer as second to none that has ever been made, and immeasurably superior to all except one or two that popular acclaim has placed among the immortals.

The Associated Exhibitors, Inc., is proud to offer "Now or Never" to exhibitors.

"The brightest, funniest motion picture comedy seen in a New York film house this season. From the opening lines throughout an hour and a half of genuinely humorous situations this United Artists production bears the stamp of originality and superiority. Mr. Fairbanks has not done so many really laughable things since he began his motion picture work."

_N. Y. World._

"Douglas Fairbanks crowded the Strand yesterday and kept the folks laughing after he had them there."

_N. Y. Tribune._

"'The Nut' is good and will achieve wide popularity."

_N. Y. American._

"Doug is as good as ever."

_N. Y. Daily News._

"Douglas Fairbanks, better than ever, is the rapidly moving hero in the new screen play, 'The Nut,' and is responsible for its sweep, its amazing diversity, its hair-breadth escapes and its bubbling comedy. It must be seen to be appreciated."

_N. Y. Evening Telegram._

"The Strand was crowded because every true motion picture fan knows that Mr. Fairbanks always gives a good show."

_N. Y. Morning Telegraph._

"Extremely enjoyable . . . the picture is the kind of rare dream that makes you wake up chuckling."

_N. Y. Herald._

CARL CLAUSEN

Personally directed by Mr. DWAN

In a recent canvass conducted by one of the largest producer-distributor organizations, 1700 exhibitors declared their patrons showed the strongest liking for swift-moving comedy-dramas. All the motion picture trade journals are unanimous in their approval of "A Perfect Crime."

MOTION PICTURE NEWS: "'A Perfect Crime' has romance, humor, pathos, and Allan Dwan keeps his story moving swiftly."

MOVING PICTURE WORLD: "Allan Dwan's newest picture 'A Perfect Crime,' is a sincere and fine production of one of the most ingenious stories of the year."

EXHIBITORS HERALD: "If entertainment was uppermost in Allan Dwan's mind in making 'A Perfect Crime' for release through 'A. P.,' he has been successful. The picture is mighty good entertainment."

WID'S: "'A Perfect Crime' is another good Dwan production and it has a highly interesting philosophy in its story."

"Leading a Dog's Life"
(Sport Pictorial, Produced by Town and Country Films)

"LEADING A DOG'S LIFE" is a very interesting series of scenes showing various dogs in various environments with a semi-humorous angle brought to the fore in some places.

Some of the shots secured of hunting dogs in action will bring a thrill to any one who has ever hunted wild game, especially birds. Other scenes show various breeds of canines being trained. Among these are police dogs.

Some cute puppies are shown crawling out of a clay vase during dinner, etc. Received better applause at the Capitol theatre than the feature being shown. Some slow motion photography is used to illustrate how the police dogs climb over a fence seven and a half feet high—J. S. DICKERSON.

"Get It Quick and Give 'Em a Treat"

Read What They Say

"Charles Ray, at his best, and even better than that, he's great. A real picture. Everyone will want to see it. If any one doesn't like it, they never can be pleased. Tell your patrons if they have been a lad, they'll live it over again. Don't miss it. Get it quick and give your patrons a treat."—Wid's.

WILL CLEAN UP

"Charles Ray certainly offers a big surprise package in this picture. A total absence of subtitles and a wealth of incident. Ray and Chaplin do not need titles to express their art. Both are superb pantomimists, so that every gesture, every expression is caught and understood. A classic. If this picture don't clean up for the exhibitor, then nothing will."—Motion Picture News.

A REAL NOVELTY

"Exhibitors have a real novelty to offer in this picture. It is a screen classic and it marks an important epoch in picture making."—Exhibitors Herald.

REMARKABLE PICTURE

"Charles Ray's work is admirable throughout. It is another proof of his pronounced gifts. A remarkably vivid visualization of rural life, with remarkable atmosphere."—Moving Picture World.

BIG DRAWING CARD

"Good box-office drawing power. Good laughs and touches of pathos. Some of the funniest pieces of business we have seen in a long time. The spirit of Riley's poem has been transferred to the screen with a masterly hand."—Exhibitors Trade Review.

A Report From Indianapolis, Ind.
Man-Woman-Marriage played a week's advance run at the Circle theatre, Indianapolis, one of the biggest theatres of the country. It began by breaking all attendance and box-office records on the first day. Crowds jammed the theatre and lined up in the street outside. Throngs struggled to gain admission all day. At closing time there were so many clamoring to get into the theatre, that an extra midnight performance was held to accommodate them.

The Required Remedy

By MARTIN J. QUIGLEY

For an industry that since its inception has been characterized by optimism, initiative and aggressiveness this business today, in its production and distribution branches, presents a sad spectacle. In the face of an era of great prosperity which is unquestionably established at the one point where the success or failure of this industry is decided—the theatre box office—producers and distributors have lent ears to fanciful stories of depression and ruin.

Utterly without respect to the concrete manifestations of good business that are at hand, misdirected tales of menacing disaster have been permitted to go about until we have now reached the stage where further persistence in such practice may result in talking an actual depression into existence.

To satisfy those who constantly depend upon the business of motion pictures to supply almost daily new topics for their conversational indulgences it appears that the industry must be kept in an unceasing state of upheaval. If there is no valid news for their round-table dissection, then something is picked out of the thin air and decked out as a new peril about to swoop down upon the business. The truth is something foreign and apart from these discussions unless it happens to appear dressed in the garb of sensation and disaster.

Hardly a hand has been raised in protest. The sane and logical steps to effect a higher order of economic administration that have generally been taken during recent months have been permitted to be construed as signs of approaching disaster. Efforts to bring the cost of production down to reasonable levels instead of being defended as correct business procedure, have been acknowledged as results of pressing financial considerations. The white feather has become the emblem of many.

How much longer this ridiculous and indefensible attitude is to be persisted in now becomes a matter of grave concern. Fortunately the sickly pessimism that has invaded certain quarters in the producer and distributor branches has found no asylum among the exhibitors of the country. Although distributors of pictures in many instances have retreated in confusion from the firing line, the exhibitor is still courageously battling to sell his product to the public.

An army without good morale is beaten before the first gun is fired, and morale in business is no less significant. If the current year in the film business is to be one of prosperity those groups which have slinked back into "positions previously prepared" must return to the firing line or they will be supplanted with recruits who have the heart to carry on.

Pessimism is contagious. Thus far the exhibitor has remained uninfluenced by the murmurings of woe that have been going about. Although in the past it has always been the exhibitor who is the first to be enjoined against flying in panic into reduced admission prices and cheaper pictures. In this instance the exhibitor with perfect knowledge of the essential prosperity of the business has remained the stabilizing influence.

Whether the exhibitor shall continue in this position doubtlessly hinges upon the producer and distributor throwing off the shroud of pessimism and dong their part in keeping the business a live one.

The only depression that exists is a depression of spirits.

The only remedy needed is action that is born out of the confidence that a true understanding of the facts inspires.
After many months of intensive efforts the producer members of the National Association have evolved a workable plan to render non-extent the motion picture which is objectionable in whole or in part. There need be no misgivings either the practicability nor the earnestness of the undertaking. The plan is not the product of brief consideration; in fact, it is the result of long deliberation and argument. Its enactment is the source of no little gratification to this publication as we have urged for many years such a plan in the belief that with its uncompromising fulfillment the agitation for censorship would soon be at an end.

Mr. Eugene V. Breuswer, publisher of several magazines of general circulation, is entitled to a word of congratulation upon several front cover designs of his magazines which have appeared as advertising inserts in this publication. These designs have been of a new and distinctive tone and have been done in a highly artistic manner and, deservedly, have attracted wide attention.

The Federal Trades Commission is performing an excellent service on behalf of the thoroughly legitimate concerns of the industry in scrutinizing with great care the advertising matter issued in connection with reissued pictures. Although the practice of dusting off antiques and placing them in competition with new subjects of the same or similar theme is within the law it certainly is devoid of any common ethical justification.

In nearly every instance this practice is wholly centered on the idea of trading on the advertising and attention given to the new production, meanwhile trapping occasionally an unwary exhibitor. While the practice may not have the same legal status as stealing another man's overcoat it has about the same aspect in the light of modern business procedure.

Fans Want Reversal Of Decision Refusing Permit for Theatre (Special to Exhibitors Herald)

MONTCLAIR, N. J., March 15.—When fans attending a performance at the Montclair theatre were informed by H. H. Wellendrind, manager, that the city commissioners had refused to grant him a permit for the erection of a $1,000,000 theatre near Bloomfield street, they immediately organized committees and circulated petitions asking for a reversal of the decision. By 11 o'clock that night more than 1,000 signatures had been received.

Governor Against Bill Making Elimination of Some Scenes Arbitrary (Special to Exhibitors Herald)

LANSING, MICH., March 15.—Any motion picture bill that would arbitrarily bar from the screen certain scenes is opposed by Governor Goresbeek. Such a list of wholly arbitrary prohibitions would in effect eliminate motion pictures in Michigan, he declared.

The governor was quoted recently as saying that he was opposed to censorship. When approached on the question he explained his objections more clearly.

STAR TO RECEIVE SALARY OF $600,000

LOS ANGELES, March 15.—Katherine MacDonald will remain under the management of B. P. Schulberg for a period of two years after the expiration of her present contract according to an announcement from Mr. Schulberg’s office. The star, who but two years ago was practically an unknown player, will receive $600,000 as salary for the period. The rise in popularity with the public on the part of Miss MacDonald through the productions starring her as distributed by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., was the deciding factor in the conclusion as to the salary she was to receive. She will make six pictures a year.

Sweden Boasts Many Camera Expeditions to Foreign Lands

Biograph Company Has a Series of Films Taken in the Wilds of East Africa Which Depicts Animal Life There.

SWEDEN boasts of an unusually large number of film expeditions to foreign countries. Scandinavian producers declare that with the possible exception of the United States no country has fitted out so many such expeditions.

Attention is called to the recent work of the Swedish Biograph Company. Pictures taken by one of the company’s expeditions into British East Africa will be available soon for foreign distribution.

The films present an unique series of pictures taken in the wilds of East Africa. The expedition was headed by Oscar Olsson, who had as his associates a conservator and hunters, the party numbering between ninety and 100 members.

It was nearly a year and a half ago that the party left Sweden. The territory chosen for the work is the South Nassai Reserve in the Lumbwa and South Kavirolo district. Here many scenes of the wild animal life were photographed by the daring members of the party.

Mr. Olsson will not be able to continue any longer in his present work. He is now going on a long expedition with Prince William, a son of King Gustav. The expedition will start from Nairobi in the heart of Africa, thence via the Victoria Nyanza Lake to the Belgian Congo, and then on the Nile, which will be the means of conveying them to Cairo.

There is a great deal waiting for the camera of Mr. Olsson. Big game in large quantities—lions, buffalos, gorillas, rhinoceri, are waiting to be caught by the eye of his camera. He will obtain many interesting glimpses of the daily lives of the blacks in the very depths of darkest Africa and the Kirunga volcano, 15,000 feet high, is also destined to be filmed.

Swedish film cameras will also partake in two purely scientific exploring parties, namely to Kamtschatka and China. The former is lead by Dr. Bergman and Dr. Malaise, of whom the latter is a clever operator, having been trained in Swedish Biograph Company’s Laboratory.

Another filming expedition made by photographers belonging to Swedish Biograph Company has of a purely journalistic nature. It started this year in a Norwegian trawler with the Arctic Ocean as the scene of operations, and lasted five months. It was no pleasure trip. The photographer had to sign on as one of the crew, and as such take part in the daily work on board. The adventures that came his way were many and varied. More than once his life was in peril.

Another journalistic film expedition has started quite recently. Axel Essén is making a trip around the world, this also is for the account of Swedish Biograph Company. Mr. Essén is a trained journalist and his camera is such an instrument should be an instrument of expressing and painting everything he meets with on his journey, all the striking scenes and the wonderful pictures just as vividly as with his pen.

In connection with this survey of camera organs beyond the seas the expedition to Iceland and Spitsbergen in 1919 for the account of Swedish Biograph Company should not be forgotten.

Actor Drowned During Filming of Paramount Production on Coast

(Los Angeles, March 15.—Morris Cohn, an extra appearing in the filming of George Melford’s Paramount production, “The Money Master,” was drowned in an undertow off Redondo Beach, Calif. Director Melford and James Kirkwood, leading man, tried in vain to save his life.

Several members of the company were in a motorboat about 200 feet from shore when a large breaker hit the craft and overturned it. Three of the members swam to shore, but Melford, Briggs Wilson and Pat Higgins were picked up by a guard who brought the unconscious men to shore, where Wilson and Higgins were revived.

Owner and Manager of Cozy to Build 2,500 Seat Theatre
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)
TOPEKA, KAN., March 15.—Miss Ruth Wright, owner of the Cozy theatre, is planning to build a $500,000 playhouse here. Financial arrangements for building the house have been made. Miss Wright plans a modern theatre to seat 2,500 persons. The building will be three stories high and have space for offices.

To Have Larger Orchestra
The latest appointments in the way of seats, lighting, rear room and smoking rooms are planned. Accommodations will be made for a larger orchestra than now plays at the Cozy.

Miss Wright has been owner and manager of the Cozy for the past three years. Her aggressiveness has made the house one of the most popular here.

To Install Stage Fixtures
While it is planned to build the new theatre primarily as a motion picture house, stage equipment will be installed. It will be possible for the largest road attractions to play in the theatre.

Censor's Instructions Based on N. Y. Reports
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)
BIRMINGHAM, ALA., March 15.—An ordinance demanding that exhibitors file on the Thursday of each week a list of pictures to be exhibited on the following day is being enforced. Exemptions can be given for the elimination of "objectionable" scenes planned by Mrs. J. H. Wallace, theatre inspector.

Mrs. Wallace says she will base her elimination instruction on reports from New York.

Illinois Exhibitors Postpone State Meeting Indefinitely
President Hopp and Burford Are Called to New York to Attend Important Session of National Executive Body

The state convention of the Illinois Exhibitors' Alliance has been postponed indefinitely owing to the urgent call of President Joseph Hopp and W. D. Burford to New York to attend an important meeting of the executive committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America on Saturday, March 19.

The convention had been scheduled for March 22, at the Hotel Sherman in Chicago. Another call will be issued immediately on the return of Hopp and Burford.

Joseph Hopp, president, announces that a bill regulating advance deposits will be presented to the legislature. This and other matters will be incorporated in the report to be made by the legislative committee.

Had Urged Big Attendance
Every exhibitor in the state, whether a member of the association or not, was asked to come to the meeting. There now is a censorship measure pending in the legislature and every theatre man is urged to co-operate in combating this bill.

West Virginia Will Affiliate Nationally
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)
NEW YORK, March 15.—Word is expected before night at headquarters here of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America of the organization in West Virginia of a unit of the national league. An organization was scheduled for today at Charleston, with Samuel I. Berman representing Sydney S. Cohen of the M. P. T. O. A.

Convening of exhibitors in several states is expected shortly because of the necessity of appointing delegates and alternates to the national convention which will be held in Minneapolis in June.

The New York association meets at Rochester on April 5, 6 and 7. It is likely that opportunity will be taken at that time to make plans for sending a large number of representatives to the Minneapolis conclave.

Hippie Issues Call For S. D. Convention
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)
Pierre, S. D., March 15.—J. E. Hippy, manager of the Bijou theatre here, has issued a call for a state convention of exhibitors at Huron on March 22. In his call Mr. Hippy points that "there are many dangers confronting our industry, and we must be organized to meet them successfully."

Referring to a suggestion that the president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America be invited, Mr. Hippy declared:

"It is not my intention to assume what the exhibitors of the state should or must do, but personally, I am opposed to inviting any of the warring factions to attend this meeting other than ourselves."

Mr. Hippy directed the recent fight which resulted in the defeat of censorship. His fight involved the expenditure of a large sum of money and in his message to the theatre men he has asked that they remit their share of the expenses.

Loew Leases Two Houses in South
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

George B. Van Clevé, former president of a well-known New York advertising agency, has been appointed general manager of Cosmopolitan Productions. He comes to Cosmopolitan well equipped to supervise the activities at the International Film Studios at 127th street and Second avenue.

Leo A. Pollock has been appointed manager of publicity for Cosmopolitan Productions, having recently resigned as director of publicity for William Fox's West Coast studios. Mr. Pollock was formerly on the Evening World and the New York American. Associated with him as assistant is Morris R. Werner, formerly of the New York Tribune.

Taking the Joy Out of Kissing
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)
Baltimore, Md., March 15.—Hypercritics are more than busy these days in endeavoring to have their freak ideas of morality incorporated in some form of censorship law.

The latest expression of intolerance comes from the newly organized Citizens' League for Better Motion Pictures. In an audience with Governor Ritchie members of the society declared a three-foot kiss was the longest that motion picture patrons should see.

Samuel Clarke, who declared that he formerly was a censor in Canada, told the chief executive that a three-foot kiss lasts about two seconds, and that it should be near enough to the soul variety to satisfy any fan.
Kansas Agitators Ask Higher Salary “to Make Censorship Of Pictures More Effective”

Seek Age Limit for Children Who Attend Theatres When Not Accompanied by Their Parents or Guardians

TOPEKA, KAN., March 15—Kansas censors want more money!

Reformers of the Sunflower-state claim that increased salaries for members of the censurate would improve the present situation and give the public better pictures.

The amendments to the censorship bill are meeting with little favor in the legislature. This attitude on the part of some of the legislators has aroused the ire of the agitators who declare that the legislature should not speak at welfare bills, but “should do something constructive for the children of Kansas.”

Amendment Is Proposed

Proposal was made that an amendment be adopted prohibiting children under 12 years of age from attending the theatre unless accompanied by parents or authorized guardians. Arguments brought out many humorous retorts.

“I think the age for protection should be raised to 40,” declared Representative Murray of Cowley.

“From some of the pictures I’ve seen and heard about the limit ought to be 70,” suggested Dr. Hawley of Jewell.

These declarations brought Assistant Attorney General Bourbon to his feet.

Fault Is With Parents

“The trouble isn’t with our censor boards,” he stated. “We don’t need laws to protect the children. That isn’t our trouble. Our trouble is with our fathers and mothers. They are not paying enough attention to their children.”

It was suggested by one of the reformers that the censor board he brought back to the “purer atmosphere of Topeka.”

Los Angeles, March 15.—Beatrice Dominguez, noted as one of the most beautiful Spanish-type actresses on the American screen, died in the Clara Barton Hospital, Los Angeles, recently, following an operation for appendicitis. The young woman was engaged in the production of “The White Horseman,” a new universal serial. She also played in “The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse.”

Buffalo Reformers Want Chicago Plan Censorship Adopted

BUFFALO, N. Y., March 15—Buffalo reformers have started a movement to try to force the adoption locally of the so-called “Chicago plan of censorship,” as modeled by T. D. Hurley of Chicago. J. M. Mosher, president of the Buffalo Theatremen’s Association, is leading the opposition to the movement and is planning on a campaign of education, through the newspapers and upon the screens of the city.

Partington & Roth Building New House

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., March 15—Partington & Roth are building what is declared to be one of the finest theatres in the country. It will be called the Granada. The exploitation department of the company describes the new theatre in this way:

“It may not be the largest. Its exterior may remind one of a van and storage plant from the rear. But the inside—oh, boy!”

Business Men Pleased With Studio Progress

JACKSONVILLE, FLA., March 15—Governors of the Jacksonville Chamber of Commerce, following a meeting with Murray Garsson, president of Fine Arts Pictures, Inc., and promoter of Fine Arts City, expressed themselves as pleased with the progress toward bringing a substantial portion of the motion picture industry to Jacksonville. Members assured Mr. Garsson of cooperation in making Fine Arts City a production center.

Zoning Ordinance Would Effect Theatre Building

NEW ORLEANS, LA., March 15—Acting City Attorney Rene Viosca is drafting an ordinance that will prohibit the erection of motion picture theatres and other businesses coming under police powers in any residential section without the consent of two-thirds of the property owners. As planned the ordinance would not affect businesses already established in residential sections.

Project Not Abandoned

KENOSHA, WIS., March 15—Joseph G. Rhode announces that plans for the erection of the new Hippodrome theatre have not been abandoned. All specifications for the building are ready and as soon as economic conditions revert to a more normal state bids will be let.

Withhold Building Permit

PORTLAND, ORE., March 15—The city council after listening to the protestations of residents of the district in Sandy boulevard, near East Fifthieth street, refused to grant a permit for the erection of a theatre there. W. A. Fitchett was back of the theatre project.

Governor Signs Advance Deposit Bill Adopted by Kansas Legislature

TOPEKA, KAN., March 15.—The measure sponsored by the exhibitors of the state to correct the supposed evils of the advance deposit practice has been adopted by the Kansas legislature and signed by the governor.

Since the enactment of such a law in the state of New York exhibitor organizations in other states have taken steps to have such a law placed upon the statute books. A measure providing for a trust fund where advance deposits are given is pending in the Missouri legislature.

Theatre men of the state herald the passage of this bill as one of their greatest victories. At their convention last fall the exhibitors instructed their legislative committee to have such a bill drafted.

Who Will Censor the Censors?

This question has been asked by Lucien Hubbard, well known scenario editor. "What colossal intelligents will be recruited from the small towns to sit in solemn judgment on the morals of the world?" he asks. "The idea is sublimely ridiculous. I suggest that the national censorship plan now being agitated should first be given a trial in Russia, where I understand, they like to have the soviets do all the thinking."

Kansas Changes Convention Date

(Portland, Ore., March 15.—The convention of the Kansas State Exhibitors' Association has been deferred one week, the dates decided upon finally being March 29 and 29. The convention will be held at the Lassen Hotel, Wichita, Kan.)

City Council Opposes Prohibition of S. R. O.

(Portland, Ore., March 15.—An ordinance prohibiting the standing of persons in lobbies or lobbies of theatres and the placing of obstructions in these sections of the houses has been defeated by the city council. Attorney Dan Malarky represented the exhibitors before the council.)

Solons Decide Issue at Stormy Session—Passage Said to Be Signal Victory for Theatre Men of State.

PIERRE, S. D., March 15.—Every city, town and hamlet in the state of South Dakota is to have the right to decide whether it will have motion picture performances on Sunday. The musty blue laws under which exhibitors have been prosecuted spasmodically are dead in so far as they apply to theatres.

Wins at Stormy Session

Under the terms of a bill passed by both houses of the state legislature, the entire question of whether motion picture theatres are to be permitted to open Sunday is to be decided by popular vote at special municipal elections.

The session in which this bill was passed was one of the stormiest in the history of the South Dakota house. After passing the bill, the senate requested the house to return it for reconsideration. This was refused as the house members felt that the senate was seeking to trade votes on this bill in an effort to force the house to concur in the senate's amendments to a censorship bill.

Is Victory for Exhibitors

The successful passage of the bill is regarded as a signal victory for the exhibitors of South Dakota. They were aided in their fight by exhibitor leaders from other states and by representatives of the Minneapolis Film Board of Trade.

He is also devoting time to studying the production angle. He has been with his father since the organization of Selznick Pictures Corporation.
Curt Kremer, son of Victor Kremer, is general sales director Victor Kremer Film Features, Inc., a position he has occupied since the formation of the corporation two years ago. Previously engaged as manager, advance agent and press agent of traveling theatrical companies.

Arthur M. Loew, son of Marcus Loew, assistant to David Bernstein, treasurer Loew, Inc., therefore assistant to the treasurer. Has been with his father since leaving navy two years ago. He has made a close study of the financial end of the business.

Norman E. Kohn, son of Morris Kohn, president Realart. Is purchasing agent of Realart. Was with Loew's Booking office in 1915; then with the Film Exchange, Denver, 1916, as shipping clerk; next with Paramount, as booker and assistant to manager; then did road work out of Denver. In the army in 1918. Returned in May, 1919, and in August, 1919, became assistant purchasing agent of Realart. In November, 1919, was made purchasing agent.

John J. Jones, son of Aaron J. Jones, of the firm of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, theatre magnates of Chicago, has charge of all bookings, both vaudeville and pictures, for the nine Loop theatres of the J. L. & S. circuit. He is but 19 years of age and is perhaps one of the youngest executives in the country. He started in at the bottom, three years ago, as an usher. He then went on the road selling films for the Central Film Company, handling "The Unpardonable Sin." Eight months ago Johnny was made head of the booking office.

David L. Loew, son of Marcus Loew. Is in charge of Marcus Loew Realty Co., the real estate end of the Loew business. Has been with his father since 1918, when he left New York University. Is but little beyond majority in years. Twin brother of Arthur.

Hobart Hutchinson, son of Samuel S. Hutchinson, is sales manager of American Projecting Company, having been associated with the concern since his return from the war two years ago. He has virtually "grown up" in the industry, having been 7 years old at the time his father became interested in the business. He is now 24.
Mayor Proclaims Riley Day to View Ray Picture

Birthplace of Poet Abandons All Business and School in Honor of “Beloved Hoosier”

GREENFIELD, Ind., birthplace of James Whitcomb Riley, abandoned business and school on March 7 and 8 to attend the exhibition at the Why Not theatre of “The Old Swimmerin’ Hole,” Charles Ray’s first National attraction based upon Riley’s poems of the same title. The story of the event is interesting primarily as marking a new tribute to the power and scope of the screen, secondarily as pregnant with exploitation possibilities.

First announcement of the coming attraction was made in the form of a proclamation by Mayor Ora Myers. The proclamation follows:

**  **

WHEREAS, Charles Ray is to present to the city of Greenfield and Hancock County the premier presentation of “The Old Swimmerin’ Hole,” the most famous poem of the beloved Hoosier poet, James Whitcomb Riley, which is to be shown on the screen Monday and Tuesday, March 7 and 8 at the Why Not theatre, and that the citizens of Greenfield and this county will receive great benefit from this picture which has been made at a tremendous cost and will give widespread publicity and notoriety to the city and county which could not otherwise be attained. That the minimum of 25,000,000 people see an ordinary play which is shown throughout the world, and that to give impetus for this picture which will help in the publicity of Greenfield, and display her beauties and advantages which will be derived from the advertisement of this kind and acquaint the people of our great nation with the birthplace and home of the greatest poet of the civilized world.

THEREFORE, I, Mayor of the City of Greenfield hereby proclaim and designate March 7 and 8 as Riley Movie Days, and ask that every citizen who can attend the presentation of this picture and the again his boyhood days, and to see this great play I invite the school children of the City of Greenfield to be my guests at the afternoon performance on Monday, March 7th, at 3 p.m. and the children outside of the City of Greenfield on Tuesday, March 8th at 3 p.m. Meet me at the Riley Monument and receive your ticket for the play.

Given under my hand and official seal this the 3rd day of March, 1921.

(Signed) ORA MYERS,
Mayor of the City of Greenfield.

**  **

Two classes of tickets were distributed by the mayor. Red ones good for admission on the first day of the showing were given to children of Greenfield. Green ones for the second day were given to children from elsewhere in Hancock County.

The theatre is located a short distance from the old Riley homestead and many of the characters represented in his poems are residents of the community. The woman who in her youth inspired “Little Orphant Annie” was among those present at the theatre on the first day. The widow of the poet’s brother also attended.

American flags and portraits of the Hoosier poet were used in decoration of the theatre interior. Motion picture camera men from Indianapolis photographed Brandywine Creek, the original “old swimming hole,” and scenes of like interest.

Manager White of the Why Not theatre added to the ceremonies by distributing copies of a song written by himself entitled “The Old Swimmerin’ Hole,” submitted and approved by Mr. Riley before his death.

Sudekum Has Option On Several Sites at Lebanon, Tennessee

LEBANON, TENN., March 13—The thriving city of Lebanon, Tenn., is to have, if plans go through, another up-to-date motion picture theatre, according to statements given out by Tony Sudekum, president of Crescent Amusement Company of Nashville, who was in Lebanon, on March 7, taking options on several of the most favorable locations in Lebanon for this purpose.

This move has been looked to for several months since the absorption of the Star theatre by the Lyric about a year ago.

The Crescent company owns and controls a chain of the largest and best motion picture and vaudeville theatres south of the Mason and Dixon line.

Exhibitors Will Test Validity of Blue Laws

BICKNELL, Ind., March 13—Sunday motion picture shows are forbidden here by an ordinance passed by the city council. A similar ordinance was passed several years ago but was repealed. An immediate test case with a jury trial is expected. A local newspaper is conducting a voting contest on the question which looms as an important factor in the approaching May primary and November election.

Catholic Welfare Council States Position on Films

Offer Cooperation to Industry in An Effort to Raise Standards—Does Not Advocate Legal Censorship or Sunday Closing

Clearing many points of misunderstanding and directly contradicting claims made by advocates of legal censorship, the National Catholic Welfare Council with headquarters in Washington, D.C., has made public the nine points in its program for “A Campaign for Better Motion Pictures.”

It stands “uncompromisingly for decency on the screen.” It urges cooperation with exhibitors to bring about the exhibition of clean films. It announces that it “will cooperate with the industry in all sincere efforts for its improvement.”

Regards Censorship Measure as Last Resort

“Will advocate legalized censorship only in the event that the producers, distributors and exhibitors fail to make good in their announced housecleaning campaign,” is the wording of the ninth point.

On the question of Sunday opening, the council is emphatic. It states that it has no sympathy for blue law advocates and that it does not advocate the abolition of Sunday picture shows.

“The Catholic position does not necessarily call for state or federal censorship laws, at least not until the efforts of the better class of motion picture producers and exhibitors, to effect their own reforms, have been given an honest trial and have proven to be inadequate,” the council says in an open letter to newspaper and magazine editors. “We, however, confidently hope and expect that these efforts, with which we are in full sympathy, will succeed.”

The nine points in its campaign are listed as follows:

1. Stands uncompromisingly for decency on the screen and on the stage.
2. Insists that motion pictures shall be decent not only on Sunday, but on the six other days of the week as well.
3. Urges cooperation with local exhibitors and local police authorities in bringing about the exhibition of clean films.
4. Will scrutinize the motion picture exhibitions in Catholic parishes throughout the United States.
5. Will maintain its own bureau of review, criticism and information for the purpose of effecting concerted action for motion picture betterment on the part of Catholic organizations.
6. Has no sympathy with “Blue Law” agitators.
7. Does not advocate the abolition of Sunday “movies.”
8. Will work constructively for the further advancement of the screen and will cooperate with the industry in all sincere efforts for its improvement.
9. Will advocate legalized censorship only in the event that the producers, distributors and exhibitors fail to make good in their announced housecleaning campaign.

The national headquarters of the council is at 1312 Massachusetts avenue, Washington, D.C.

Fails in Effort to Limit Performances At Utah Playhouse

PANGUITCH, UTAH, March 15.—The attorney general of the state has ruled that the city council here has not the right to limit the number of performances at the local motion picture theatre to every other night. The council had expressed a desire to place such a restriction on the theatre and the opinion was sought from the state official.

The attorney general held that as the council has a right to license the theatre, it cannot so restrict it.

Political League Raps Blue Laws

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

AURORA, ILL., March 15.—The John Ericsson Republican League of Illinois, one of the most influential political bodies in the state, adopted a resolution at its recent convention here condemning the enactment of blue laws as a peril to wholesome laws now on the statute books.

The league, whose members are Americans of Swedish extraction, declared that it feared the present condition would be most imperiled by blue law legislation.

French Put Two Million Francs in Himmel Firm

(Special to Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, March 15.—Word has reached here that according to an inquiry conducted by police in connection with the case of Andre Himmel, said to be general manager of Franco-American Cinematographers, it is learned that Frenchmen have deposited 1,500,000 francs in the American bank in Paris to the account of Himmel. According to police only 73,000 francs remain on deposit.

Universal Sends West News Reel Library of Several Million Feet

(From Staff Representative)

NEW YORK, March 15.—About $5,000,000 feet of exposed negative which records pictorially all the important news events that occurred since its weekly was started are to be shipped by Universal this week to Universal City for storage. The records are from Universal’s Animated Weekly, which was started thirteen years ago in Chicago, and from Universal’s subsequent news publications. These records comprise Universal believes, the most complete film library of historical events and intimate glimpses of personalities in existence today.

The shipment, which will be in charge of Morris Pivar, of the Universal offices, will go forward in a special car and is heavily protected by insurance.

Educational Officials To Visit All Branches President Hammons Will Tour Exchanges in Eastern Part of U. S.

With the view of acquainting all of the branches with the results attained since the opening of its exchange system, E. W. Hammons, president of Educational Films Corporation of America and its distributing subsidiary, Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., and Henry Ginsberg, manager of domestic sales, this month will start on a series of trips which will take one or the other of them to every office in this country with the exception of the Pacific Coast.

Creates Closer Relations

Since the establishment of the exchange system Mr. Hammons has followed the policy of keeping in close touch with the branches and advising them in advance of all his plans and often asking the counsel of the various local managers. The visits of the two officials is expected to put them in closer touch with the various offices and to result in so intimate an understanding of every territory that better results may be obtained in the future.

These trips follow the receipt of full reports from each office and also a compilation by the home office of the results achieved and the improvements desired.

Mr. Hammons personally will visit the Washington, Pittsburgh, Louisville, Cincinnati, Cleveland and Detroit offices, leaving New York on March 28.

Ginsberg Goes to Boston

In preliminary trips Mr. Ginsberg will go to the Boston, New Haven, Buffalo, Albany and Toronto, Canada, offices and then start from this city on April 4 for a "swing around the circle," visiting Atlanta, New Orleans, Dallas, St. Louis, Kansas City, Denver, Omaha, Des Moines, Minneapolis, Milwaukee, Chicago and Indianapolis.

Mr. Ginsberg, who recently returned from Los Angeles, where he conferred with all of the producing units making pictures for Educational and a number of others who are anxious for Educational to handle their product.

$500,000 Firm Is Formed by Houdini

ALBANY, N. Y., March 15.—Among the newly formed motion picture enterprises is the announcement of the Houdini Pictures Corporation, New York City, to engage in the business of manufacturing, distributing and exhibiting of motion pictures. The company is capitalized at $500,000, and the stockholders of the company are Bernard M. L. Ernst, M. H. Crane and David J. Fox.

The Brown brothers have also filed incorporation papers beginning business with a capital of $60,000. They will make and exhibit motion pictures.

The Aztec Pictures Corporation, New York City, has been formed to manufacture motion pictures and distribute, exchange and exhibit them. Its capital is $600,000. Triart Productions, New York City, will engage in general motion picture business. It has a capital of $110,000.

Other concerns interested in the $1,000,000 field are: Valkyrie Pictures Corporation, New York, capital $100,000; Macfie Pictures, New York, capital, $352,000, and the Patchogue Amusement Corporation, Patchogue, N. Y., capital $200,000.

Kalamazoo Situation Is Settled Amicably

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

KALAMAZOO, MICH., March 15.—A conference has been held here between A. J. Moeller, representing the Michigan Motion Picture Exhibitors Association, Manager Freeman, Chief of Police, Ben F. Taffee, President E. O. Moeller, representing the producers, relative to the enforcement of a law regulating the display of posters and exhibition of motion pictures. Exhibitors here feared that strict enforcement of the measure would result in the closing of several of the theaters.

Following the conference, Mr. Moeller announced that a settlement satisfactory to all had been reached. Chief Taffee announced that the law would be enforced only if the complainants were to charge the exhibitor with the misdemeanor, strictly stating all details of the case. A complaint then must be signed and a warrant for arrest sworn out.

Pathe's Brunet Month Now Half Way Passed, Said to Break Record

Loyal tributes paid in the past to Paul Brunet of Pathe will not compare with the results that are being rolled up by the Pathe sales force during "Brunet Optimism Month" which has just turned the half way mark, is the announcement from that organization.

It was predicted at the beginning of the contest, in which thirty-two branches are vying to make March the biggest month in the company's history, that all records would be surpassed. Every indication at this stage of the contest is said to lead to the belief that many points will be consumed and that there will be a great increase shown in new business and collections over the best month's record ever established by the company.

New business is said to have been remarkably stimulated by the contest. This is partly due to the conditions of the competition, in which contracts hearing either a play date or advance deposit, or both, received a seventy per cent credit against thirty per cent for collections.

Will Open "Big Four" Exchange in Havana Ehrenreich to Establish First of Series of Branches In Latin Countries

M A X E H R N E R I E C H, who has been identified with the New York exchange of United Artists Corporation since its organization, sailed for Cuba on Saturday, March 13, to open the first branch office of the "Big Four" in that part of the western world.

Plans for foreign distribution recently announced by Mr. Ehrenreich are set for the immediate activities of the company for the inauguration of the distribution of the "Big Four" product both in Europe and Latin and South America.

The office in Havana that will be opened by Mr. Ehrenreich will be the first of a series of offices or sub-branches that will eventually distribute the "Big Four" product in Cuba, Porto Rico, the French West Indies, the Windward and Leeward Islands, etc.

Abrams Sends Staff of Men to Europe

The first delegation to be sent to Europe by Hiram Abrams to look after the distribution of the "Big Four" product in England and on the Continent sailed on Saturday, March 12, for London. As previously announced, changes will be effected immediately in London, Birmingham, Leeds, Glasgow and Cardiff and an exchange will be opened in Paris. Others will follow as quickly thereafter as is possible.

A. C. Berman, who has been sales manager of the New York exchange, heads the party. The other members of the party are E. B. Shanks, who goes abroad to assume the post as treasurer.

Mr. Abrams has under way negotiations for the engagement of one of the foremost British film men and it is expected that the deal will be consummated on the arrival of Mr. Berman in London. It is Mr. Abrams' intention to have him take charge of the exchanges.

Hold Federal Regulation To Be Most Practicable

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

ANN ARBOR, MICH., March 15.—It was the consensus of opinion of those attending recently held meetings of the First Baptist church that federal censorship is the only practicable method of regulation.

Pennsylvania Forms Unit of National Exhibitors' League
John S. Evans of Philadelphia Is Elected President of Organization—Plans Made at Meeting to Fight Unfriendly Legislation
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)
HARRISBURG, PA., March 15.—Another state organization of exhibitors came into being on last Tuesday when 200 exhibitors of Pennsylvania, representing 500 theatres, met at the Penn Harris hotel here and formed the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Pennsylvania.

Through the formation of the state organization exhibitor forces in Pennsylvania are brought under one head for the first time, insuring closer cooperation in solving the problems that confront the theatre men of the Keystone state.

John S. Evans Is Elected President

As their first president the Pennsylvania exhibitors elected John S. Evans of Philadelphia. Other executive officers chosen are:

First Vice-President—H. E. Wilkinson, Pittsburgh.
Second Vice-President—Peter Magaro, Harrisburg.
Third Vice-President—Fred J. Herrington, Pittsburgh.
Fourth Vice-President—Marlin Matthews, New Castle.
Secretary—J. O. Tooie, Scranton.
Assistant Secretary—R. S. Kossen, Lewisburg.
Treasurer—Jacob Silverman, Altoona.

Plans were laid at the meeting to fight hostile legislation and resolutions of protest against censorship and other restrictive measures were adopted.

As a means of combating censorship exhibitors were advised to carry the message of the censorship menace direct to their patrons through the medium of the screen; and also to provide petition blanks to be filled cut by patrons and mailed to legislators.

Affiliate With M. P. T. O. A.

Other resolutions were: A pledge of affiliation with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America; commendation to D. W. Griffith for his part in aiding Mrs. Pauline K. D. Dodge's congratulations to Herbert Hoover on the success of the Hoover Drive for the starving children of Central Europe; for the establishment of equitable contracts; and a resolution condemning William A. Brady's trip.

The meeting was opened by C. Floyd Herrington and M. J. O'Toole, Vincent theatre enterprises in Harrisburg, who introduced Mayor George Hoover, who in turn welcomed the delegates. M. J. O'Toole of Scranton, responded to the mayor's greetings.

Sydney Cohen Talks

Sydney S. Cohen was introduced by S. I. Berman of New York. Mr. Cohen explained the need of exhibitor organization to fight pending legislation.

Other speakers were W. Stephen Bush of New York, who attacked censorship; George Spang, mayor of Lebanon and an exhibitor; M. J. O'Toole of Scranton; George Rapport of Philadelphia; Fred J. Herrington, of Pittsburgh, and Peter Magaro of Harrisburg.

Committees Are Appointed

Committees were appointed at the opening session as follows:

Legislation: George Arons, Philadelphia, chairman; M. J. O'Toole, Scranton; Peter Magaro, Harrisburg; Henry Poke, Pittsburgh; C. Floyd Herrington, Harrisburg; Eugene McAtee, Mahanoy City; George Spang, Lebanon; Frank J. Harison, Pittsburgh.

Organization: Fred Herrington, Pittsburg, chairman; H. P. Dawson, Beaver Falls; C. O. Bairs, Fortgate; O. A. Potter, Erie; Wm. Ray, Newcastle; Harry Davies, Milton; Hugh Campbell, Hazleton; J. R. Rogers, Middletown; Nicholas Power, Doylestown.

Other subjects discussed were: W. Robert Barist, Philadelphia, chairman; Fred Herrington, Pittsburgh; A. P. Way, Dubois; J. R. Cadoret, Scranton; L. J. Chamberlain, Shamokin; Wm. Hunt, Philadelphia.

Osterstock Is Chairman

BUSINESS RELATIONS: Fred Osterstock, Easton, chairman; Sam Fineman, Philadelphia, Harold Helberger, Bethlehem; C. A. Kline, York; George Spang, Lebanon; J. E. Smith, Pittsburgh; H. Wilkinson, Pittsburgh; Dr. Mischler, Altoona; J. O. Tooie, Scranton.

A banquet was held in the Penn-Harris ball room on the first day of the convention. Arrangements were made by a committee composed of Peter Magaro, chairman; C. Floyd Hopkins, Isaac Marcus and H. B. Sellers. Among those who spoke were Assemblyman M. G. Reed, Craig, of Erie; Dean Hoffman editor of two Harrisburg papers, the Patriot and Evening News; Felix Mendelsohn, Goldwyn exchange manager, at Philadelphia; Assemblyman Marcus, of Pittsburgh; W. Stephen Bush, of New York; Fred J. Herrington, of Pittsburgh; Mike Stiefel, of Philadelphia; and Sydney S. Cohen. Peter Magaro acted as toastmaster.

Many Attend Meeting

Present at the convention were:

G. T. Spang, Lebanon; O. A. Potter, Erie; J. R. Rogers, Middletown; W. R. Stambaugh, Turtle Creek; C. L. Koller, Altoona; J. F. Osterstock, Easton; W. W. Hassinger, Bryon Maw; W. G. Mous, Irwin; H. Goldberg, Beaver Falls; A. R. Wray, Dubois; C. J. Brown, Evansburg; J. O. Tooie, Wilkes-Barre; F. S. Silverman, Altoona; W. R. Stambaugh, Mahanoy City; R. E. Davis, Milton; J. M. Chicago to Get New $2,000,000 Theatre
Playhouse to Be Erected in Same Neighborhood Where Tivoli Is Located

Chicago's South Side is to have another $2,000,000 theatre.

In the neighborhood where the new Tivoli, the Balaban & Katz house, has just opened is to be erected a 4,000-seat theatre at a cost of $2,500,000. The Tivoli is at Sixty-third and Cottage Grove while the new playhouse will be erected at Sixty-third between Blackstone and Harper.

J. M. Browarsky will build the theatre. Secrecy has been maintained as to the owners of the building. Several of Chicago's prominent exhibitors have been mentioned but all have denied any interest in the project.

On the ground floor of the new building will be space for fourteen stores. Overlooking Jackson park will be 300 apartments.

Construction on the new theatre will begin on May 1.

Great Ovation Given Stars in Personal Appearances

Pittsburgh Theatregoers Honor Thomas Meighan—Clara Kimball Young Accorded Warm Reception in South—Reception Held for Lilian Walker

STARS who have made personal appearances in theaters throughout the country of recent date have been warmly received and feted by the thousands of theaters.

In many instances the keys to the cities have been virtually turned over to the honored guests. Every courtesy has been shown by city officials, civic societies and fans.

Thomas Meighan, George Beban, Clara Kimball Young and Lilian Walker are among those who have been receiving the plaudits of the fans within the last few weeks.

The greatest ovation was given Mr. Meighan, the Paramount star, at Pittsburgh, Pa., his former home. Pittsburgh still claims the star and every time that he visits the city "the natives" outdo themselves to honor him.

On March 3 he made a personal appearance at the Liberty theatre, Youngstown, Ohio, for which he was paid $1,000. This he gave in charity, half to the Kenwood Orphan Asylum and half to the Actors’ Fund of America. The mayor of the city gave him the keys to the city and a big ball was held that evening in his honor.

The following day he stopped over in Pittsburgh to visit his relatives and friends. A private screening of his new picture, "The Easy Road," was given for him and a party of old friends and newspapermen. This was followed by an elaborate dinner at the William Penn hotel where in addition to the leading theatrical, film and newspapermen of the city, he was honored by the presence of John S. Herron, president of Pittsburgh’s famous "Council of Nine."

The Paramount star then appeared at the Liberty and the Regent theatres, Rowland and Clark’s big East Liberty theatres.

Press and public joined in enthusiastic receptions for Clara Kimball Young, the Equity star, on her visit to Nashville, Louisville, Tulsa and Oklahoma City. Newspapers declared that Miss Young broke all records for publicity and popularity in their respective cities. A week prior to her arrival the press heralded her coming from front-page headlines. Mayor-elect Holcomb of Houston, Texas, presented her with a "ship channel" emblem.

Mayors, governors, military and civic officials, the shining lights of society—every person of position and prominence hastened to extend their courtesies to their beautiful guest, Miss Young voiced the sentiments of her press-agent, Milton Crandall, when she declared that "even Mrs. Harding, mistress of the White House, couldn’t have been more widely welcomed."

F. P.-L. Employed Held On Charge of Larceny

NEW YORK, March 13.—Louis C. Bruce, an employee of the Famous Players-Lasky foreign department, was arrested last Thursday by Detective McCarty of the bomb squad, on a charge of grand larceny. According to the complaint Bruce, who has been with Famous Players for six years, had falsified his accounts to the extent of $1,500. Before Magistrate Douras in the Yorkville court he pleaded guilty and in default of bail was sent to the Tombs to await the action of the grand jury.

N. A. M. P. I. Movement to End All Chance of Criticism

(from Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, March 14.—Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts publicly announced today that he did not care especially for censorship, a clean screen being his one desire. It is the thing and not the method that interests him.

The president of the International Reform Bureau made these statements at an informal meeting this afternoon at headquarters of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. At Hamilton the president, producers, distributors and representatives of the Y. M. C. A., W. C. A., the Society for the Prevention of Crime, the Association for Better Motion Pictures and other kindred organizations.

Cooperative Spirit Is Apparent

The purpose of the meeting was to discuss with Dr. Crafts the question of censorship. The meeting was one of cooperative spirit, with Dr. Crafts expressing himself as willing to cooperate with the producers and distributors in a concrete plan for keeping the screen clean and wholesome.

There was a general discussion relative to licensing all pictures with a contract embodying the thirteen points recently adopted by the producers and distributors. A plan of licensing theatres to show wholesome films also was considered. In case of abrogation the license would be revoked.

The whole discussion centered on the making of pictures along the lines outlined in the thirteen points and the strict adherence to these standards.

Hess Asks Time for Industry

Gabriel Hess suggested that Dr. Crafts and others advocating censorship and other film reforms grant the producer-time to carry through their plans. Dr. Crafts, who said that he never had started a single state or local agitation for censorship, answered that while he did not control the reform forces he felt that this suggestion was fair.

O. R. Miller, secretary of the New York Civic League, raised the question of the producers having the power to enforce the thirteen points. Hess answered that the National Association represented at least 90 per cent of the producing units.

Discuss Attitude of Catholicks

William A. Brady, president of the X. A. M. P. I., took exception to the statement of Dr. Crafts that the Catholicks wanted censorship. Dr. Crafts then declared that it was not the method but the thing, namely, a clean screen.

In this Dr. Ellsworth and vice-president of the Y. W. C. A., agreed, saying that the whole idea was cooperation in the production of pictures that would preserve the morals of the women of the country. It was with this understanding that the meeting adjourned. Former Judge Peter A. Hendrick presided.

Mr. Brady and Mr. Hess spoke for the National Association. Besides those already mentioned, H. C. Barber, superintendent of the Society for the Prevention of Crime, spoke, saying that he thought the clean screen must start with the producers.

Famous Players-Lasky Earnings In Increase

(from Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, March 15.—Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's consolidated statement, including the earnings of the subsidiary companies, reports for the year ending December 26 net operating profit of $5,397,154. After deducting all charges, reserves and federal income and excess profits taxes this company, with $3,133,955.22 earned in 1919, had a net gain of $2,254,198.83 for the year. The earnings for 1920 exceeded those of 1919 by $434,355.22.

In the first quarter of 1921 the company had a profit of $59.675, with an increase of $13,355.22 over the first quarter of 1920. The earnings of the subsidiary companies were $2,941,685.22 for the first quarter of 1921, as compared with $2,755,530.34 for the corresponding period of the preceding year.

Total net profit of the company for the three months ending March 26, 1921, was $3,236.185.82, as compared with $2,193.445.76 for the same period in 1920.

Hammons Signs White and Hamilton to Make Series of Two Reelers

Vidors Leave for West

NEW YORK, March 15.—Adolph Zukor sails next Tuesday on the Aquatania to visit France and possibly Germany in connection with Famous Players-Lasky export business. On the other side he will meet his son, Eugene Zukor, who sailed several weeks ago. He expects to return in about six weeks.

NEW YORK, March 15.—W. F. Shallenberger, president of Arrow Film Corporation, returned Saturday after spending seven weeks on a Coast trip. He has announced the signing of contracts for twenty-six features, most of them in series of four each. A box-office star will be featured in each.

The first feature announced is "Heedin' North," starring Pete Morrison. Four big specials are included in the twenty-six. Mr. Shallenberger also contracted for two series of two-reel comedies, the first starring Eddie Barry, Harry Gibbon and Helen Darling. Stars of the others have not been announced. A fifteen-episode Northwestern serial with Ann Little in the lead was also obtained for Arrow. It was directed by Ben Wilson.

NEW YORK, March 15.—King and Florence Vidor left today for the Coast, where Vidor will do four pictures for Associated Producers. The first will be "The Cottage of Delight." Florence Vidor will play in one picture for Thomas Ince.
Aitkens to Establish System Of Exchanges Over Country

(From Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, March 15.—Harry E. Aitken and Roy E. Aitken are the guiding spirits in American Business Corporation, which plans to develop a system of twenty-five exchanges throughout the country to distribute motion pictures. American Business Corporation was incorporated under the laws of Dela.

ware on November 1 of last year. The officers are Augustus C. Hone, president; Charles H. Peddrick, Jr., vice-president and assistant treasurer; Roy E. Aitken, treasurer; Jos. W. Seemes, secretary; and J. M. Carling, assistant treasurer. Harry E. Aitken and Roy E. Aitken are members of the board of directors.

The corporation now is doing some distribution through Magnet Film Exchange at 729 Seventh avenue. At the offices of the corporation it was said that ambitious plans are being laid out but that it was too early to talk about them.

World Film Enters State Right Market

Company Has Large Supply of Pictures on Hand for Publication

(From Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, March 15.—World Film Corporation is entering upon a campaign of extensive activity in the state rights market, according to a statement made to the trade press last week by Milton C. Work, president. This is the first official announcement to be made of the company's purposes, although plans were laid for the step immediately after the corporation had sold its distributing organization.

Has Supply of Films

The corporation has an unusual supply of pictures, Mr. Work says. During the last year distributors looked at over 500 subjects and from this number selected the array it now controls. The selection covers a variety of subjects, including detective dramas, comedy-dramas, society drama and westerns.

"The Wakefield Case," a detective drama produced by Lawrence Weber and starring Herbert Rawlinson, supported by Florence Billings; and "Whispering Shadows," produced by Mayflower under the direction of Emile Chautard with Lucy Cotton as the star, are two of the early offerings.

Will Re-edit Pictures

Reissues of World Film publications will be offered. All of the reissues are to be re-edited by World Editorial Corporation, headed by Harry Chandeet and William B. Laub. New advertising material is being prepared.

In addition to its state right activities, the corporation will sell directly the foreign rights of the pictures owned.

Brady Will Continue Trip to Visit South N. A. M. P. I. Thanks Leader for Effort to Promote Unity in Industry

NEW YORK, March 15.—William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, who has just completed a six-weeks' trip through the West, is to resume his tour within a few days.

He will visit twelve more states, principally in the South.

Given Vote of Thanks

Mr. Brady gave a preliminary report of his trip to the producers and distributors divisions and the membership of the executive committee of the N. A. M. P. I., at a meeting held in the Hotel Claridge March 11.

After his report, a resolution was proposed by Adolph Zukor extending a vote of thanks to Mr. Brady "for the splendid work he has accomplished." The resolution was unanimously adopted.

On motion of F. L. Waters, Mr. Brady was instructed to appoint a committee to meet with the National Board of Review for the purpose of discussing a practical application of the set of standards which has been adopted by the national association.

Those Attending Meeting

Those at the meeting and the companies represented were: Adolph Zukor and Lee Counselman of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; Earl J. Hudson and E. B. Johnson of Associated First National Pictures, Inc.; Gabriel L. Hess of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation; R. A. Rowland and W. E. Atkinson of Metro Pictures Corporation; J. S. Woody of Realart Pictures Corporation; C. C. Pettitjohn of the Selznick Corporation; P. L. Waters of Triangle Distributing Corporation; H. Goldstein of Universal Film Manufacturing Company; Saul E. South African Player Says America Leads World in Production
(From Staff Representative)
NEW YORK, March 15.—Owen Mac-Donald, the 17-year-old South African film player, recently arrived in New York City. Miss MacDonald, accompanied by her mother, traveled the 7,000 miles to learn at first hand the manner of American production of motion pictures. Before starting on a tour of the various studios throughout the United States, Mrs. MacDonald and her daughter were in accord in declaring that up to the present moment, European pictures are far behind American productions.
"I have traveled in many sections of both the old and the new world," said Miss MacDonald, "and I must admit that the American cinema product by far out-classes foreign competition. As a further proof of this assertion it is only necessary for me to say that the exhibitors of Africa and the leading exhibitors of Europe demand American made films and are willing to pay for it. Whenever an American film is shown in South Africa, the S. E. O. sign is bound to make its appearance."

A. M. P. A. Will Represent Industry in Patriotic Work
Meeting at Madison Square Garden on March 18 Is Sponsored by American Legion and Civic Organizations
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)
NEW YORK, March 15.—The motion picture industry is to participate in another phase of Americanization work.
The Associated Motion Picture Advertisers has been designated to represent the industry at the Re-consecration meeting scheduled for March 18 at Madison Square Garden.

Patriotic Organizations Sponsoring Meeting
The purpose of the meeting is the upholding of Americanism and American ideals. Patriotic societies, both local and national, are sponsoring the affair. Among the leaders are Col. Galbraith of the American Legion and Miss Ann Morgan.

At the recent weekly meeting of the
A. M. P. A. acceptance of the appointment was voted. In concurring in the purpose of the meeting the following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That the A. M. P. A. declares itself and hereby is in wholehearted accord with the high purposes of the Re-consecration meeting to be held March 18; and that we solicit the cooperation of other elements of the industry to make this meeting reflect the convictions of those in the motion picture profession.

Resolved further, That the committee appointed cooperate with Mr. Hawks in getting out slides and trailer for the furtherance of the publicity and advertising work of the Re-consecration meeting.

For the A. M. P. A., President Paul
Lazarus appointed the following committee to cooperate with the organizers of the meeting in the preparation of slides and trailers for advertising purposes:
Victor Shapiro, chairman; Tom Wile-and E. P. McNamee. Wells Hawks will act as liaison officer between the A. M.
P. A. and the committee for the Re-consecration meeting.

Five Troupes of Indians Will Exploit New Neilan Feature

Pete Smith States That Squaws, Papooses and Bucks Are to Be Used In Prologues

INDIANS—five troupes of em—coming from the Blackfeet reservation at Glacier National Park are preparing to don their head dress and war paint for exploitation of Marshall Neilan’s forthcoming First National picture, “Bob Hampton of Placer.”

Pete Smith, publicity director for Neilan, who has been buzzing around Minneapolis, has just announced that arrangements have been completed with the Great Northern railway for the nation-wide tour of more than fifty Blackfeet bucks, squaws and papooses who will appear next month in connection with the publication of “Bob Hampton of Placer.” This stunt will feature a detailed exploitation of the picture.

Everyone of the Indians who will tour the country appeared in the picture which was staged last fall in Glacier National Park. More than 1,000 of the Red Men were used in the climax of the picture which is “Custer’s last fight.”

Tentative plans are to use the Indians for prologues in the higher class theatres throughout the country where the picture will be shown. They also may be used for ballyhoo purposes. Each troupe will consist of an interpreter, five bucks, and as many squaws and papooses as may be desired. The picture will be published on April 1 through First National exchanges.

This is declared to be the first time in history that Indians will be used in numbers to exploit a picture. Permission from the government to allow the Indians to leave the reservation and the cooperation of the Great Northern railroad had to be obtained before plans were completed.

Other features of the campaign announced by Smith follow:

Elaborate Indian lobby photos and stills.

Mailing of 15,000 letters to persons who visited Glacier National Park during the last few years. These heralds will tell of the production and the coming of the Indians.

Mailing of 1,000,000 two-color postcards by the railroad telling of the park and picture.

Detailed press book for exhibitors and suggestions for prologue, lobby stunts, etc.

After completing plans here Smith left for Browning, Mont., where he will meet the Indians who will make the trip and will obtain material for advertising and newspaper copy. From there he will return to California.

Commenting on the exploitation stunt Carleton Miles, writing in the Minneapolis Journal said: “Motion pictures are the Indians’ missionaries. It is a case of repentence.”

“The movies took away the Indians’ jobs by putting the Wild West shows out of business. The braves had to go back home instead of swaggering all over the lot in war paint. It was a cruel blow to the Indian, but he bided his time. His opportunity came today when he and fifty of his brothers, squaws and papooses were engaged to start exhibiting themselves all over the United States.”

S.-L. Metro Picture Will Play at Capitol

Court Order Closing Theatres on Sunday Is Made Permanent

PRINCETON, IND., March 15.—Efforts of United Theatres and Amusement Company to open its motion picture shows on Sunday came to an end when the state’s case against the amusement company was dismissed by agreement. A temporary restraining order prohibiting the company from giving motion picture shows on Sunday was made permanent by Judge R. C. Baltzell of the circuit court.

The court’s order prohibits the amusement company from operating its shows on Sunday until the statute governing the case is repealed by the state general assembly. The costs of the action were paid by the defendant.

The case aroused much interest here. It was chiefly a fight between the recently organized Law and Order League and the amusement company. At the time of the issuance of the restraining order counsel for the amusement company announced an appeal would be taken to the supreme court of Indiana in event of a permanent injunction. This plan has now been abandoned.

L. B. Seymour of Iowa Leading Fight on Tax

GLENWOOD, Ia., March 15.—L. B. Seymour, manager of the Rex theatre in this city, is leading the fight in this section of the state on the Whitmore-Weaver bill, which would fasten a state tax of one cent on each 50 cents or fraction thereof paid for admission to any amusement. At his own expense, he has printed an analysis of the bill pointing out to motion theatre owners that the law would compel them to pay into the state treasury practically 4 per cent of gross receipts and urging them to explain the situation to representatives and senators from their district. His step is bringing results.
Exit "And a Comedy"

REPORT FROM EDUCATIONAL FILM EXCHANGES, Inc., states that the demand for posters advertising short subjects distributed by that organization has tripled in the past six months. That is good news for theatre men, as well as for short subject manufacturers and distributors and the general public.

The report indicates that the exhibitors of the nation are intent upon eliminating the condition discussed upon this page slightly less than six months ago under title of "And A Comedy." General observation of newspaper and other theatre advertising is substantial of the statement.

As a result of this effort exhibitors will find their theatres more prosperous because better advertised; short subject producers and distributors will respond to the encouragement given and progress toward better production and distribution the more rapidly because with confidence; and the general public will find theatre attendance a more pleasant because more dependable pastime.

PHOTOGRAPHS SHOWING extraordinary advertising accomplishments of Seattle, Wash., theatre men during the recently celebrated First National Week are reproduced upon another page of this department. Paramount, Metro, Hodkinson, Universal and other companies have conducted special weeks of similar character with like results as concerns advertising. The stimulating effect of such an enterprise upon theatre advertising is by no means its least important recommendation.

PHOTOGRAPHS REPRODUCED upon another succeeding page show graphically the results of sensational exploitation in Boston, Mass., where Robertson-Cole's "Kismet" was introduced following a campaign of exceptionally vigorous nature. An advertising man awed as one might pardonably have been by that city's reputation for intellectuality and reserve would not have employed spectacular methods. The men in charge of the premiere realized, as too few do, that human beings are human, whatever their veneer, and proceeded accordingly. The photographs submitted are ample proof of success—likewise proof of another victory for exploitation.

STILL ANOTHER VICTORY is recorded with receipt of the exceptionally interesting photograph showing the manner in which cutouts are displayed by motion picture exhibitors in Prague, Bohemia, Czechoslovakia. Nothing exactly like it has been done in this country, doubtless because city ordinances in the majority of American municipalities prevent. Yet the idea is typically American, bizarre, innovative, spectacular. The fact that American exploitation thus dominates Old World theatres is interesting and convincing proof of its soundness as an institution.

PERSONAL APPEARANCES of stars in connection with pictures in which they appear are reported with steadily increasing frequency. Such reports differ almost solely in name of player, theatre, city, picture, etc. The public welcomes them heartily, attending the theatre in great numbers. That indicates undiminished interest in motion pictures. Exhibitors contemplating interpolation of vaudeville and similar foreign elements to "strengthen" their programs need to know that public interest in motion pictures was never at higher pitch. Equipped with such knowledge the real showman proceeds naturally to better advertising and its invariable result—better business.

POSSIBLY THOUGH NOT probably as an indirect result of box office reports due at least in part to the presence of motion picture players, impersonators of stars are being used in exploitation and presentation with considerable success. Douglas Fairbanks, Charles Chaplin, Roscoe Arbuckle and William S. Hart are among the stars whose pictures have been advantageously advertised by employment of imitators. In cases where stars do not personally object to the impersonation and no attempt is made at misrepresentation the stunt may be used with gratifying results.

GEORGE BEBAN, STAR OF "One Man in a Million," and presently engaged in a personal appearance tour in connection with the production, recently made a statement to an EXHIBITORS HERALD reporter that is especially interesting in this connection. Mr. Beban stated that since publication in this department of a suggestion to the effect that exhibitors to whom his services were not available should engage an impersonator to enact his vaudeville success, "The Sign of the Rose," in presentation of the picture the home office of Robert-on-Cole had received exhibitor requests for impersonators and actor requests for employment in such numbers that he had engaged legal counsel to prevent use of his act in this manner, said act being protected by copyright. The suggestion was made as a result of the excellent reception accorded vaudeville impersonations witnessed and without knowledge of the fact that the act was copyrighted. Apologies to readers who may have been inconvenienced thereby and to Mr. Beban are made herewith.
Showmanship Suggestions in the Stills

"HEY RUBE," a new Educational comedy, offers another opportunity for use of the 1907 model "horseless carriage" which may be found after a search in practically any city. The stunt has been utilized numerous times in past exploitation, always with marked success. The incongruity of the vehicle's appearance alongside the modern automobiles upon any street is its strong point. The exceptionally low cost of the enterprise is another argument in behalf of its adaptation. Members of the house staff may be sent out in the conveyance, or amateurs may procured with little difficulty.

"BEAU REVEL," Thomas H. Ince-Paramount production, deals mainly with society life and contains, among others, the elaborate setting reproduced above. It may be approximated by exhibitors who emphasize stage presentation to good effect. A single professional dancer of ability may be employed, the minor characters being entrusted to amateurs.

"THE HICK," Larry Semon's most recently published Vitagraph comedy, contains the above scene. It is customary to give considerable footage to action taking place against such backgrounds. Where censors do not shorten the sequence a stage feature of similar nature may be used to advantage. Where there is censorship it should prove even more effective. This type of presentation has been used so frequently as to have established ample precedent for the guidance of the exhibitor who applies it in the present instance.

"SCRAP IRON" is the title of the forthcoming Charles Ray-First National production from which the above still is taken. Considerable newspaper and word-of-mouth publicity should be obtainable by use of amateur or professional boxing contests staged in accordance with existing statutes. The old familiar "Meets All Comers. Prize of (suitable amount) to Anyone Who Stays Three Rounds" may be re-vamped for the occasion. Variations in plenty will occur to the exploitation exhibitor.
Ruth Roland Wins Atlanta

Atlanta newsboys welcomed her with a demonstration which stopped traffic for half an hour, presenting her with the bouquet seen above. Another photograph shows the effect of her presence upon Alpha theatre attendance.

Live Exploitation
In Czechoslovakia

WERE the accompanying illustration presented as showing "unique use of cutouts" by an American exhibitor, it would be interesting. "Novel," "effective" and other veteran terms in common use describe it accurately.

When it is stated that the photograph was received from Charles E. Moyer, director of advertising and publicity for United Artists Corp., from Sedley Peck, of the American Legation at Prague, Bohemia, Czechoslovakia, added interest attaches thereto from the American exhibitor-advertiser's point of view.

Mr. Peck's comment regarding the photograph included the statement that Mary Pickford is as well known there as in the United States, though she is known as Mary Pickfordova, as all women in that country have an "ova" at the end of their names.

Sandusky Ape Man Combines Realism And Comic Appeal

George Schade, proprietor of Schade's theatre, Sandusky, O., recently employed the remarkable character shown in the accompanying illustration in an exploitation campaign waged for "Go And Get It," Marshall Neilan's First National attraction. The picture, certainly a novelty, is interesting for many reasons.

The attraction advertised has been exploited with exceptional industry throughout the country. The stunts used in its behalf constitute an array of novelties such as are induced by few productions. One might have stated with reasonable confidence that its possibilities had been exhausted some weeks ago, that nothing essentially new would be used in its behalf.

The Schade stunt, by a wide margin the most spectacular in point of realism combined with humorous appeal, proves that such a statement would have been mistaken.

The news of the innovation further substantiates several important conclusions drawn in connection with previous accomplishments. It proves, for instance:

That there is always something new under the sun in exploitation;

That any picture which is not too old to exhibit is not too old to advertise with every means available;

That stunt exploitation is its own guarantee of publicity, and

That a thing worth doing is worth doing well.

The ape man stunt had been used before. It had never been used so effectively.

Indian Parades
First National Films Doctrine

The Indian whose likeness is shown herewith carried the doctrine of First National pictures in the Washington's Birthday parade at Laredo, Texas. The figure was unique and undoubtedly imposing even in a section where Indians are not infrequently seen, drew attention to the harnessed statement.

It is not necessary to dwell upon the probable results of the enterprise. The benefit to Laredo exhibitors using the First National product is apparent.

Space may be devoted more profitably to a general summing up of the advantages of the class of advertising represented. It is a class of which too little is reported in the news of the average week.

Any exhibitor is in a position to bear the expense of such an enterprise. It is indicative of lamentable apathy that many exhibitors do not seize upon similar and dissimilar opportunities for the public display of their theatre name. "Me like Strand pictures" obviously will serve as well the individual exhibitor. Further departure from the original plan of action may be made at will.

It is generally known that prestige advertising is in many respects more valuable than individual attraction advertising. It has permanency of yield and singleness of purpose on its side, not to mention several obvious points of merit.

The Laredo enterprise reflects a clear understanding of showmanship values and an altogether commendable industry. More work of the type is to be expected as the general science of exploitation develops.
Boston Bows To "Kismet"

Traditionally staid Boston, Mass., regarded by many as impregnable to exploitation assault, surrendered en masse to the campaign waged for the premiere of the Robertson-Cole production at the Majestic theatre.

Exploitation Arabs knelt in mock Mohammedan worship at Boston's busiest intersection, attracting vast crowds. Arising, they unfurled scrolls giving date and place of showing.

Illustrations on the right show window displays obtained in music, sporting goods, millinery and record stores previously considered unapproachable.

The campaign constitutes a genuine exploitation triumph.
Auditorium view of the American theatre, Butte, Mont., illustrating H. A. Albright's "ain't" story, a showmanship document.

Albright's "Ain't" Story Describes "813" Campaign

H. A. Albright, manager of the American theatre, Butte, Mont., is author of the following showmanship story. Read it. His handling of "813," the Robertson-Cole production, is typical of the man. Others who use the picture will profit by his example. All will enjoy the story.

BY H. A. ALBRIGHT

First let me explain that the photo is a bit misleading in that our house isn't a store show as it would suggest. The decided "wedge" that takes place toward the front of the house is responsible for this appearance.

Further excuses are required to account for the few and scattered music stands. The organ is "the thing" in the Northwest, the orchestra being used to play the fillers. I notice, too, that our director's stand hides a good share of the organ console.

But what I was going to write about was "what looks like but ain't."

The marble bannister enclosing the orchestra pit "ain't" marble. It's compo board, cut out and painted to represent onyx, and darned if it doesn't. Neither are the Grecian lamps Grecian. They're Woolworth, but painted and fixed up in a manner that would deceive the keenest Greek that ever shined a shoe.

The potted trees and expensive vases also "ain't." These latter I change at will, as often as I find time to cut out and camouflage new ones. Occasionally I use an upright panel with a nifty little scene painted thereon, with vines entwined, etc. We have lots of fun with our stage, even though it is only twelve inches deep back of the plush.

I am rather proud of the lighting effect I have worked out on the plush. I have built reflectors around the proscenium, between it and the plush, throwing a green light on the green plush; also green thrown up from the footlights. At the ends of the stage a blue light is thrown upon the vases.

The A. T. above and in the center is red and lighted with red which works on the same dimmers as the rest and gives a pleasant contrast.

This monogram also is changed occasionally. During Christmas week I used a big red star.

I read this week of Hyman impressing the Strand's trade-mark in the form of a prologue. I once had our trade-mark up there at the top in the shape of a shadow box, which dimmed on and off with the rest of the stuff.

Now about the "813." Most of us saw the lust curtains. This is but one of the 75 conspicuous places that I put this title, within the theatre. However, in the other 74 places I added "Wednesday," which was the day the picture began.

The slide series used on the screen was due explanation, and afforded room for sales talk.

The effect was really great, the "813" on the plush. We used this drop to close in after different subjects and during intermission so it was on view a good share of the time.

The letters were cut from white sign cloth, had a red outline, and gave a pretty effect on the green velour.

Throughout my campaign I tried to impress the mystery angle. Insisted on patrons attending at the scheduled hours, which accompanied all advertising. Used the old bung about not seating any one while opening reels were in progress, etc. Drummed on the cast and also Maurice Leblanc's Arsene Lupin stories.

The picture went over in great shape.

Aid in Advertising

Grosset and Dunlap, book publishers, are arranging with W. W. Hodkinson Corporation for cooperative exploitation of "East Lynne." The original novel by Mrs. Henry Wood is being republished in an edition five times the usual amount. The following announcement appears on the jacket and title page of the book:

"The cover of the book has been printed in four colors and numerous scenes from the picture have been used as the illustrations. In addition to 100,000 of these jackets on "East Lynne," which will be used as advertising circulars, the publishers are printing a great quantity of half sheet cards reproducing the cover, with a selling line on the merit of this classic and a space for the name of the local theatre in each town where the picture will be shown. These placards will be displayed in the stores having the book on sale and in the theatre lobbies during the showing of "East Lynne."
"The Bait" Proves Tempting to Merchants As Basis of Cooperative Window Displays

THE BAIT," Maurice Tourneur's Paramount production, was given the benefit of window exploitation, the story of which has many points of interest during the showing of that attraction at the Rex theatre, Denver, Colo., a neighborhood theatre seating 325 persons at a performance. The four window displays obtained are presented herewith.

Fred V. Greene, Jr., Paramount exploitation representative at the Denver exchange, was responsible for the scope of the advertising campaign, probably the most extensive used in the history of the theatre.

He laid the foundation for the campaign by utilizing the method recently inaugurated for such purposes, obtaining options on the four windows considered most desirable for the work in hand. The windows are in four stores which face upon the busiest intersection in the neighborhood of the playhouse.

The title of the picture was used as the catchline which induced the merchants to lend their space for the period of display. It worked out in this manner:

In the window which displayed sweaters, mufflers, etc., the sign read, "This is 'The Bait' which lands good health."

Men's clothing were offered in another window, the banner reading, "'The Bait' to catch men."

The wording was but slightly altered to suit the purpose of the merchants who offered for inspection ladies' wear and infants' apparel.

The four windows constituted a blanket barrage of propaganda for the picture. The person who traversed the intersection in any direction could scarcely miss one of the windows. The majority of pedestrians were compelled to view two or more.

The repeated registering of the title upon the consciousness can not have been without a definite effect upon the decision of one who contemplated an evening at the theatre.

Mass attack by window advertising is one of the tried and demonstrated effective methods of exploitation. Where it has been used it has almost invariably produced big results. It is safe to assume that the 325 seats of the Rex theatre were well filled during the exhibition of "The Bait."
"Lying Lips" Exploitation Evokes Original Enterprise

"Lying Lips," Thomas H. Ince's Associated Producers, Inc., production, has evoked in the brief period elapsed since publication exploitation and presentation enterprise of striking originality. The engagement photographically described above and below, that of the New Grand Central theatre, St. Louis, Mo., is no exception.

The big stage of the theatre was darkened for the presentation feature, a miniature stage erected at the back and in screen position being illuminated by footlights and borders in effective manner.

Originality of treatment has been characteristic of every important exhibition of the Ince production to date.

An especially well-lighted window display used for "The Right to Love" in the Amsterdam, N. Y., campaign.

Advertising Men Broaden Field By Title Advertising

Great credit is due the exploitation representatives of the Famous Players-Lasky organization for their brilliant and consistent work in at least one important line of endeavor. By use of motion picture titles of peculiar fitness they have materially broadened the field of theatre advertising.

A photographic reproduction here presented shows the window display obtained by Harry Swift, of the Albany, N. Y., exchange, at Amsterdam, N. Y., during the run of "The Right to Love" at the Rialto theatre of that city. The right of every human being to enjoy the beauty of flowers is the basis of the display, which is in a florist's window.

That is a typical Paramount exploitation window. And due to the efforts of this exploitation organization practically every class of store, factory, etc., has been added to the advertiser's field of operations.

Adaptable titles are in most cases essential, though there are many instances on record when the "tie up" has been made by other means.

The broadening of the field is the important thing. This is of value to the entire exhibitorial body.

To the organization most active in the indicated direction recognition for a work well done is due.
"Outside the Law" Attests Merit of Stunt Advertising

Showmen disposed to characterization of stunt exploitation as "interesting but impractical and out of keeping with dignity" will find especially interesting the theatre record of "Outside the Law," Universal's production starring Priscilla Dean. The picture is familiar to every theatre man who reads.

The lobby display of the Rivoli theatre, Portland, Ore., reproduced above, is so spectacular as to merit the "stunt" classification.

Stunt exploitation produced the waiting line seen below during the showing at the Strand, Seattle, Wash. Note that rain did not disperse that gathering.

"Outside the Law" serves excellently the exhibitor who becomes convinced after a study of its theatre record that there is merit in stunt exploitation.

William Slutsky, imitator of Douglas Fairbanks, "booked solid" on the New York "exploitation time."

Fairbanks Double Proves Advertising Method Practical

William Slutsky, said to be very like Douglas Fairbanks in general appearance and athletic ability, has been booked almost solidly for the past two months in New York and vicinity, playing "exploitation engagements" in connection with the showing of "The Mark of Zorro," that star's United Artists production.

Wearing the costume which Fairbanks wears in the picture, the impersonator appears at theatres playing the picture, performs stunts in front of the theatre or upon the stage and permits passersby and patrons to form their own opinions as to his identity. Due to the fact that he wears a mask, it is reported, many conclude that the star is making a personal appearance.

The idea may be applied in practically any city. An advertisement for an impersonator, incidentally, should prove a good publicity stunt, though in this case the mistake as to identity is less likely to be generally made. The additional publicity will more than compensate for that.

A similar stunt may be employed with imitators of other stars whose personalities are such as to permit of successful impersonation. Such an enterprise conducted in connection with a Roscoe Arbuckle vehicle was described in a recent issue.

Employment by exchanges of impersonators for such work, possibly with standardized arrangements whereby they can be "booked" in connection with the motion pictures in which the stars represented are featured, is not an altogether impractical suggestion.
Colorful Broadside Specially Constructed
For "The Kid" at Atlantic City Colonial

One of the best lobby displays seen in Chicago was used during the Randolph theatre run of "The Kid," Charles Chaplin's First National feature. Unfortunately, the theatre front is so constructed that a photograph showing with fidelity the excellent appearance probably could not be made. At any rate, none was obtainable.

A display of like character and possessing at least one point of superiority was used for the attraction during its engagement at the Colonial theatre, Atlantic City, N. J. Photographs in this case are available, that reproduced at the bottom of this page being very similar to the Randolph composition.

Difference in location and drawing territory are doubtless responsible for the fact that the feature was shown for only one week in Atlantic City and for seven weeks at the Randolph.

A. STRAUSS, manager of the Colonial theatre, went to great expense in preparing his lobby display. Robert Hamilton, house artist, painted the giant cutouts which dominate the front. The smaller illustration, showing the theatre from a distance, discloses most advantageously the effect gained.

The lower illustration reveals the care exercised to give the lobby proper the "slum" atmosphere which has been considered advisable for use in advertising the picture. The action of the play is thrown against such a background for the most part, and the paper issued with the picture stresses this fact. It is natural that special lobby displays should carry the same general tone.

The practicality of this type of advertising is borne out in the third illustration. The Colonial lobby is said to have presented a like appearance throughout the week of the run.

Mr. Strauss did not rely altogether upon the lobby for his advertising of the picture. Post cards were sent through the mail, street cars and busses were banded, throwaways were used in profusion and a special drive was made with newspaper publicity.

It is stated that as a result of the exploitation instituted some 35,000 people attended the theatre during the week of its engagement, and this despite a simultaneous showing at a theatre not many blocks away.
Portland Celebrates First National Week

PORTLAND, ORE., scored a "first" in point of numbers among the cities of the Northwest during the recently celebrated First National Anniversary Week, attractions distributed by that organization being exhibited in 26 Portland theatres.

Much unusual advertising was done during the week, accompanying illustrations showing some of the lobby displays used. A stimulating influence upon exhibitorial advertising is not the least important effect of this and similar events.
Exploitation Stories Recorded by the Lens Showing the Trend of Advertising Activity

G. R. STEWART, resident manager of the American and Iris theatres, Casper, Wyo., promised the school boys seen in the above reproduction of a photograph submitted free admission to the showing of "So Long Letty," Robertson-Cole production, if they wore the banners for three days prior to the opening and returned them in good condition. The boys carried the title of the picture into every section of the city, their stunt serving as the climax of a teaser campaign carried on through the mail and in the newspapers.

ONE of the best publicity stunts recently reported drew the mail replies seen above for Ben Serkowich, publicity director of the Madison theatre, Peoria, Ill. Mr. Serkowich convinced the editor of the "Peoria Journal-Transcript" that he could build up his want-ad advertising by offering tickets to the Madison as prizes to the first three who found and replied to a designated keyed ad. The replies received are numbered by thousands.

A HUGE reproduction of the telegram in which the Goldwyn exchange authorized the extension of the "Madame X" engagement at the Fulton Opera House, Lancaster, Pa., was effectively used in announcing the event.

VIEW of the Fulton Opera House during the "Madame X" engagement, showing clearly the reason for the extension of the engagement.

RICHARD E. REDDICK, Paramount exploitation representative at Salt Lake City, Utah, arranged with the Bailey & Sons Co., feed dealers, for a cooperative window display in behalf of "Chickens," then in engagement at the Empress theatre.
THE Victor Dog was represented as saying "No Wedding Bells for Me" as he regarded a sign and poster advertising "Married Life," the First National attraction, in the window of the Laredo Music and Jewelry Company store, Laredo, Tex. The Victor Dog's well known facial expression gave a touch of humor to the display.

BOX office records of Barbee's Loop theatre, Chicago, are reported broken by $400 and $459 on the first and second days Universal's "Outside The Law" was shown.

THE night before Daniel Roche, Chicago representative of the Paramount exploitation staff, arrived at Rock Island, Ill., to advertise "Burglar Proof" and "Held By The Enemy" at the Majestic and Fort Armstrong theatres, a burglary was committed which made the front page of local newspapers. A safe was planted in the Fort Armstrong lobby, as shown in the accompanying illustration, the banner serving for both theatres.

STREET representation of conspicuous proportions was conducted by the Rylander theatre of Americus, Ga., in behalf of the showing of "The Kid," Charles Chaplin's feature length First National attraction.

AN inexpensive and easily read exploitation vehicle used by the Strand theatre, Canton, O., in the exploitation campaign for "Dinty," Marshall Neilan's First National attraction. Carefully thought out sign copy is not the least of the stunt's good points.

FRANK WILSON, manager of the Blake theatre, Webb City, Mo., offered free admissions to children bringing animals to the theatre on the opening day of the showing of "Down on the Farm," United Artists production. Three cows, one horse, one bear, one raccoon and numerous other animals were brought.
THE producer who publishes an exceptionally artistic or otherwise precedential photoplay is lauded by trade and laity alike. The star, if any, and all who have contributed to the picture's greatness come in for a share of glory. Much is said and written about the general advancement of the motion picture by reason of the accomplishment.

Exhibitors figure less often in discussion of this nature. An occasional spectacular individual triumph is widely heralded, but the consistent, unremitting toiler for better motion picture theatrics gets all too little of the praise rightfully due him. The inconsistency of the custom becomes strikingly apparent when it is considered that the man in the street, the gentleman whose purchase of tickets finances the industry in all its departments, sees and knows the exhibitor, whereas those commonly credited with the worth while works of the screen are to him but names or faces.

Joseph Plunkett and Edward Hyman, managing directors of the New York and Brooklyn Mark Strand theatres respectively, are men of the type responsible for but not popularly credited with a great many of the important advances which have brought the theatre to its present high estate. Their showmanship, their ability to enhance by fitting presentation and intelligently directed exploitation the existent qualities of available motion picture productions, exerts an influence upon the theatricals of the nation more generally beneficial than any single production that has been or in all probability will be published.

Illustrations presented herewith show recent accomplishments of the gentleman in discussion. The photographs disclose the general class and magnitude of the work done, work that is characteristic of the two showmen.

There are engaged in similar work in the country some hundred or more exhibitors whose names are synonyms for advanced theatrical thought. Their names in news of the week indicate news of importance. Their endeavors are worth reading about. Accounts of their work are read.

Readers apply the principles and in many instances the concrete endeavors discussed to their own businesses. Thus is general progress effected. Thus is the general estate of the motion picture theatre and the motion picture exhibitor advanced.

Joséph Plunkett, managing director of the Strand theatre, New York, contributed valuable precedent in his presentation of "Black Beauty," the Vitagraph production, the above photograph showing the Strand stage with the prologue in progress. The prologue production is another important episode in Mr. Plunkett's career of service to the American exhibitorial body.
Lobby Decoration Stressed In Washington Advertising

SIDNEY LUST, proprietor of the Leader theatre, Washington, D. C., evinced keen appreciation of advertising values in exploitation of attractions presented at that playhouse. Two illustrations presented herewith are indicative of the high standard maintained.

When "The Mark of Zorro," Douglas Fairbank's United Artists attraction, was shown at the Leader, Mr. Lust made up the attractive lobby display shown above, using paper issued with the production for the purpose. He extended his customary exploitation to embrace distribution of coupons to school children, possession of which entitled children to admission upon payment of fifteen cents. In all probability the price did not represent a great reduction. But in all certainty it represented widespread distribution of advertising.

Below is reproduced the lobby display constructed for "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals," the Universal attraction. Though the photograph does not show it clearly, it is said that a tripod from which was suspended a caldron containing imitations of human legs occupied central position in the display.

The lobby receives special attention in all cases. It is regarded as an essential factor in the selling campaign.

The displays presented herewith are representative of the average Leader composition. They represent a good average.

STUNTS

J. D. Keeler, manager of the Strand Theatre, Canton, Ohio, devoted space measuring ten inches by four columns to a personal endorsement of "Dinty," Marshall Neilan's First National attraction. He gave the message added strength by including in his copy the statement that at no time in his twelve years of experience had he assumed personal responsibility for a picture in that manner.

Sixteen window displays were obtained in the advertising campaign waged for "The Girl With the Jazz Heart," Goldwyn production, at the Calax Theatre, Asheville, N. C. Additional value attached to the stunt by reason of an arrangement whereby the holder of the winning number in a drawing held on the closing night of the engagement was presented with whatever article in any of the sixteen windows was selected.

M. H. Todd, manager of the Princess Theatre, Cheyenne, Wyo., recently used large advertising space in the "Cheyenne Tribune," buying several hundred copies of the same edition and distributing them with a red streamer across the front page. The newspaper gave a two-line head and story in a subsequent issue to description of the feat, according the story front page position.

The Rialto Theatre, holding the First National franchise for Hamilton, Ohio, has instituted "Patrons' Pay Day" to stimulate Friday business. The sum of $25 is put in envelopes varying in amount from $5 to $0.01, enough envelopes being provided so that every patron receives one.

When winners in the star identity contest recently conducted by the "Chicago Herald and Examiner" were announced, the name of the theatre each attended were included. In the theatre display advertisements in subsequent issues a line was inserted stating that the prizes won would be awarded to winners at those theatres on a given evening.
Demand for Comedy
Lobby Display Grows
Amount of Paper Put Out on Shorts Triples in Last Six Months

One of the most significant developments of its recently completed survey of exhibiting and exchange conditions through this country and Canada is reported by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., to be the increased lobby and poster display and general advertising accorded one- and two-reel comedies and short subjects generally.

Issues Paper on Shorts
Educational is issuing one and three-sheet corners on each two-reel comedy, 11 by 14 lobby photos, press books, advertising aids and etc. by 10s to those theatres especially desiring them. The service on other pictures is in corresponding volume, special service being accorded on the single reels, with the idea of adding the exhibitor in selecting the pictures best suited to the remainder of the program.

Survey showed, Educational reports, that the demand for lobby and photos has been practically tripled in the last six months. Although the policy of the head office has been opposed to the exchanges loading themselves up with waste material, every exchange has found it necessary to make substantial increases and this has been directly traceable to the fact that scores of theatres that never before advertised the comedies and single reels are finding them a considerable portion of their lobby and general billboard displays.

Have Proved Drawing Power
"There isn't the slightest doubt," says Educational, "that this has come because these pictures have proven their audience pulling power to the exhibitor. We have never had any stress on the sales of accessories. While we have tried to give the exhibitor every possible service we have never urged him to buy materials. But the product itself has been proven to them and now they recognize that the comedy and the scenic supplied by Educational is in no sense a filler, but that it is worth hundreds to the theatre if their presence is allowed to be known. We have eliminated the sensational from such displays."

Plan Exploitation for Al Christie Comedy

For the exploitation of "See My Lawyer," the Al Christie special comedy produced to be distributed by Robertson-Cole, and to be issued shortly, an extensive exploitation program has been arranged. This is being embodied in the press book which Robertson-Cole is about to publish on this subject.

See My Lawyer has a cast which includes: T. Roy Barnes, Grace Davison, Lloyd T. Whitlock, J. A. Acker, Odgen Crane, J. P. Lockney, Tom McGuire, Lincoln Plumer, Bert Woodruff and Eugene Ford. It was a successful light play on Broadway with Mr. Barnes as star.

Buys Howell Showhouse

HOWELL, MICH.—Vernon LeRoy, who has operated the Temple theatre here for nearly three years, has purchased the building in which it is located and is planning extensive improvements and alterations.

Selznick Takes Complete Charge
Of Production of Its News Reel

The March 17 issue of Selznick News will mark an important change in the handling of that news reel. With this issue the Selznick organization will take over every detail of the production and distribution of the short features. Herebefore there has been some outside help in the production of the publication.

Selznick News came into being more than a year ago after Lewis J. Selznick had made an exhaustive study of the news reel situation and from the very beginning was intended to reflect some of the individual ideas of its publisher, a motion picture man who had had wide experience in all other departments of the business.

Fox Makes Artistic Picture of Harding Inaugural Ceremony

"The Fox News picture of the Harding Inauguration," wrote an Eastern exhibitor to William Fox, "is as artistic a production as if the whole thing had been specially staged for the news reel." Fox News got out a 400 foot special on the inauguration, covering the great event from every angle. Each worthwhile moment, from the time President-elect Harding left his hotel to the close of his inaugural address, provided a scene for the reel. Artistic hand-painted titles aided the impressive effect.

The special was a finely finished piece of work, not a hurried and incomplete production. It reached the theatres speedily, the laboratory having been prepared to give it the right of way and smooth handling; but quality was not sacrificed for the sake of speed.

Claim Bruce Scenic Brings Record Price At Capitol Theatre

With the booking of "Water Trails," a Robert C. Bruce Scenic issued by Educational at the Capitol theatre for this week what is said to be the highest price ever paid for a scenic picture on Broadway, there is another chapter written in one of the worth-while developments of the motion picture business.

It was S. L. Rothafei who showed the first picture that Bruce made for Educational. This was "When the Mountains Call," being 2,000 feet long and issued by Mr. Rothafei in connection with his presentation of "Hypocrates," a bill which awakened Broadway to the possibilities of the motion picture. It was given one of the musical settings that has put Mr. Rothafei in the front ranks of showmen.

Immediately after this Mr. Bruce made a number of single reel pictures Educational and every one of these was booked by Rothafei.

"Arrow Water Trails" was taken in Jamaica and shows the unusual tropical scenery of that country with its jungles, its peaceful rivers and its waterfalls.

Goldwyn to Distribute Under-Sea Feature Produced by Williamson

Ralph Ince Who Directed "Wet Gold" Also Is Star of Picture—Aleene Burr Has Leading Feminine Role in Film

Arrangements have been completed between Goldwyn Distributing Corporation and J. E. Williamson of Submarine Films Corporation whereby Goldwyn will issue through its twenty-two branch offices the newest Williamson under-sea drama, "Wet Gold.

The film is said to be a most spectacular photoplay of adventure on land, on sea and under the water, with plenty of thrills and strongly emotional drama.

Written by Williamson

"Wet Gold" was written by Mr. Williamson, who, with his brother George, completed the system of taking motion pictures underneath the water which rests upon the basic patents obtained by his father, Captain C. Williamson, of Norfolk, Va.

"Wet Gold" is declared to rival ordinary cinematography for clarity, for variety of scenes and for human drama. Not that all of the action of "Wet Gold" takes place below the surface of the sea, for much of it is on the surface and a good deal on the land, but the resulting story is a sea tale that rivals the most powerful imaginings of a Jules Verne.

Directed by Ince

Ralph Ince was engaged by Mr. Williamson to direct and to act the leading male role. Mr. Ince developed Mr. Williamson's scenario into what Goldwyn is satisfied will be one of the biggest box office attractions of the year. Aleene Burr, a new screen beauty, plays the lead opposite Mr. Ince, while many players well known on stage and screen appear in the cast.

The picture was photographed in and around the waters of the Bahamas, where ten months were spent in obtaining the wealth of unusual picture material which went into the making of the finished film. It is shortly will be ready for trade screening.

Many startlingly novel effects were obtained by the photographer, acting under the instructions of Director Ince and of Mr. Williamson, who superintended the entire production.

Director and Dog Star

Re-engaged by Century

Fred Fishbach, well known as a comedy director, and "Brownie," the century wonder dog, have extended their contracts with the Century Film Corporation.

Fishbach has been with the Century company for more than a year and has been particularly successful in making pictures in which "Brownie," the clever canine, has been featured. Fishbach also made several of the first popular "lion" comedies. He has signed up with Century for two more years. His most recent Century film, "The Dog Doctor," is reported by Universal, distributor of Century comedies, to be setting a new work of popularity.

"The Conquest of Canaan"

Next Tom Meighan Feature

Thomas Geraghty, supervising director for Paramount Pictures at the company's Eastern studio, has gone to Asheville, N. C., to inspect the exteriors selected for Thomas Meighan's latest picture, "The Conquest of Canaan," a Booth-Tarkington story, and to supervise the starting of the picture.

MILTON DOUBLES IN BRASS

Milton Sills, the popular hero of many picture and stage plays, improvises for Arthur Somers Roche, the author; Ora Carew, the dainty leading lady, and Philip Rosen, one of Metro's directors, while making "The Little Fool," a new Metro picture.

Pathe Believes New Serial Precedential

Ruth Roland Chapter Picture Published by Company On March 13

Ruth Roland's new Pathé serial, "The Avenging Arrow," is scheduled for publication on March 13.

Pathé officials declare that everything points to the picture being a record breaker among serials.

To date, "Ruth of the Rockies," also starring Miss Roland, has outstripped all Pathé chapter plays, and "The Avenging Arrow," even before the publication date, indicated it would surpass even "Ruth of the Rockies." "Daredevil Jack," starring Jack Drury, is already with "Ruth of the Rockies" for popularity, but Pathé's serial queen has proven to have no equal as a drawing card in Pathé's serial field.

"The Avenging Arrow" is an offering unusual for an episode play. It has a remarkable cast, composed of such well-known and popular players as Edward Hearn, Virginia Ainsworth, S. E. Jennings, Otto Lederer, William Steele, Chief Big Tree, Frank Lackteen, Robert Chandler and others.

It was produced on a lavish scale at the Branton studios under the direction of William Bowman and W. S. Van Dyke. It is said to mark a step upward in serial productions, featuring beautiful locations and lavish sets, all carefully chosen.

The story, adapted by Jack Cunningham from the novel, "The Honeymoon Quest," by Arthur Preston Hanks, is the adventurously and romantic type laid amid the romantic splendor of Old California.

Niblo and Sullivan Postpone Work To Collaborate on Big Read Film

Fred Niblo, director, and C. Gardner Sullivan, member of Associated Producers and prominent screen writer, have postponed all other activities to collaborate with Louise Glaum and J. Parker Read, Jr., in making what Mr. Read believes will be his greatest production.

For the last year Mr. Read has been working on the story which was purchased from a well known author. The producer rewrote the story and then placed it in the hands of a prominent playwright, who also will supervise certain details of production at Culver City.

Same Combination Made "Sex"

Mr. Sullivan spent several weeks in conference with Mr. Read, Miss Glaum and Mr. Niblo and in constructing the body of the story as it now is being filmed. The continuity is said to represent his finest work to date.

The Glaum-Read-Sullivan-Niblo "Big Four" combination is the same that created "Sex" which had such remarkable success.

Mr. Read has announced that no limit of money or time will be set on this story.

Concerning this production Mr. Read says:

"Not only do I expect my next picture starring Miss Glaum to be my finest to date, but I hope to make it the greatest work of my career. The story is there—one of the greatest literary compositions ever made available for the screen."

Hamilton Plays Lead

"I purposely have held up the production of this story at an earlier date for several reasons, among them the fact that I did not have sufficient time, while supervising the production of my Louise Glaum and Hobart Bosworth productions, to devote myself as completely as I would have liked, to my current work."

"As you can realize from the roster of names concerned with this production, no effort or money has been spared to provide the best motion picture material available."

"I have engaged Mahlon Hamilton, for the masculine leading part in support of Miss Glaum. Donald MacDonald and the beautiful Claire Wilkes will have the mother part."

"If this picture costs more than $300,000 and takes more than five months in production, I feel that the expenditure will not be out of proportion with the value of the story."

Allots 85 Per Cent In Eastern District Applications for Remainder of Territory Received by First National William Heenan, manager of the Philadelphia exchange of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., announces that 83 per cent of the franchises allotted to the Eastern Pennsylvania and South- ern New Jersey territory have been approved, and that applications for the remainder already exceed the number to be issued. The matter of issuing franchises probably will not be concluded in the next two weeks, however, according to Mr. Heenan, because of the fact that in nearly every city where a franchise has not yet been awarded there are two or more applicants and the business of selecting the theatre will take considerable time.

The large number of new members to the First National franchise organization through the issuing of the franchises in the Philadelphia territory is indicated by the fact that the largest individual holder of franchises is for himself twenty-four theatres, and the second largest but eight. By far the largest number have gone to individual exhibitors that own but one, or two theatres.

The Stanley Company of America is the largest franchise holder with nineteen theatres franchised in Philadelphia, and five outside. Those in Philadelphia of this company that hold franchises are the Market Street, Broadway, Imperial, Globe, Great Northern, Broad Street, Casino, Colonial, Rialto, Allegheny, Savoy, Princess, Auditorium, Capitol, Victoria, Orpheum, and Empress. The enfranchised theatres outside of Philadelphia are the Colonial and Virginia, Atlantic City; Garrick, Morristown, Pa.; Ralph, West Chester, Pa.; and Darby, Darby, Pa.

The next largest holder of franchises in the M. E. Commerford Circuit with the following theatres enfranchised: Regent, Strand and Park theatres in Scranton, Pa.; Majestic, Carbondale; Roman, Pittston; Strand, Sunbury and Savoy, Wilkes-Barre.

Kathleen Norris Signs to Write Films for Goldwyn

Goldwyn announces that Kathleen Norris, popular woman novelist, has been signed to write original scenarios for that firm, also to contribute her other work for picturization.

She also has gone to Europe for a short time, but immediately upon her return will proceed to the Goldwyn studios at Culver City, Cal., to study the technique of motion picture writing on the ground and probably to aid personally in the preparation of the continuity, in the directing and photographing of her first scenario.

Stoll Promises Popular Picture in "Testimony"

Preliminary reports received by Ralph Proctor, general manager of the Stoll Film Corporation of America, indicate that "Testimony," the George Clark Production presented by Stoll, will be one of the popular issues of the fall. Preview bookings on the picture, according to reports, have been heavier than on any of the other eleven previous publications.

"Testimony," which is an adaptation of the novel by Alice and Claude Askew, was produced on May 5, 1920, at the English stage beauty, has the star part of Althea May, the "butterfly woman" who marries a man with animalistic, old-fashioned views and preachments of the mother of the man she loves and marries. Mary Horke is the mother. The man of the play is portrayed by David Hawthorne, a soldier of gigantic stature, who is here making his acting debut. Guy Newall wrote the scenario and directed the production.

Christie Players Acquire New Two Feminine Leads

In line with its policy of increasing forces so as to deliver two-reel comedies of the highest character for publication through Educational Exchange, Inc., two new leading women were announced this week by the Christie Film Company. They will make their first appearance in a picture which has just been started and which will have its first showing in June.

Vera Rees, who appeared opposite Roscoe Arbuckle in "The Life of the Party," and who has just been playing the leading feminine lead in "Full of Pep," and Rosemary McCarty in "The Party of the Century," and who has appeared in a number of comedies and two-reel Westerns for Universal. She came to pictures from vaudeville. Earl Rodney will be the male featured player in this picture.

Pete Morrison

Starring in two-reel Western Tattered Productions. His first will be "The Long, Long Trail," being released by Independent Films Association of Chicago.

Goldwyn Asks Solons Not to Hamper U. S. Lead in Production

Before sailing for Europe Samuel Goldwyn, president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, issued the following statement to legislators not to sacrifice the leadership of the United States in picture production:

"America has gained a world's market in motion pictures and, if we are not careful, we will lose it in short time.

"The proposed legislative limitations on the motion pictures will have a serious financial effect on this big industry which, solely through the aggressiveness of American producers, has established the United States as the leading nation in this new art.

"Foreign film producers are increasing their output with startling rapidity. For America to sacrifice its freedom in this means of expression will therefore result in a sacrifice of our leadership.

"Objectionable themes in motion pictures are bound to be eliminated. Salaciously is doomed not only because it is not profitable."

Actress Loses in Fox Contract Suit
High Court Denies Attorney Burkan Right to Appeal the Case

A unanimous decision has been handed down by the United States supreme court which ends the suit brought nearly three years ago by Jewel Carmen, motion picture star, against Fox Film Corporation and the William Fox Vaudeville Company.

The litigation grew out of contracts entered into between Jewel Carmen and the two Fox concerns, by which the actress bound her services for a number of years.

Holds Her to Contract

While this contract had several years to run, Miss Carmen is said to have entered into a contract with the Frank A. Keeney Pictures Corporation, serving notice upon Fox that she held a contract with the two Fox concerns to be null and void by reasons of the fact that she had not yet reached legal majority. Miss Carmen notified the actress that she would be held to her contract and served notice upon the Keeney corporation that she would hold that company liable in case they made use of her services.

Suit was brought by Miss Carmen in the United States district court, in which she asked a perpetual injunction restraining Fox from interfering with her contract rights and in which she also asks damages. The finding of the lower court was in favor of the actress and it issued the injunction and awarded her damages in the sum of $43,500.

Fox Makes Appeal

Fox appealed to the United States circuit court of appeals for the second circuit. Nathan Burkan appeared for Jewel Carmen and Saul E. Rogers for the two Fox organizations. This court reversed the finding of the lower court. On February 5 of this year, Nathan Burkan made application to the United States Supreme Court for leave to take the matter up again for appeal.

The United States Supreme Court has just handed down a unanimous decision denying his application to come before the court and his right to appeal the case.

Court Gives Fox Right to Title

The final chapter has been written in the suit brought by Charles E. Blaney, theatrical producer, against Fox Film Corporation alleging for an injunction to restrain the Fox company from using the title "The Man Who Dared." Fox Film Corporation recently produced and published a picture bearing this title. Mr. Blaney applied for an injunction prohibiting its use on the ground that he owned a play entitled "The Man Who Dared." Judge Hotchkiss denied the application for injunction.

Blaney appealed to the appellate division of the supreme court which affirmed the order of Judge Hotchkiss that an injunction be entered.

Modern Dress Makes "East Lynne" More Acceptable, Says Hugo Ballin

Producer of Hodkinson Publication Believes That Costumes of 1861 Would Have Detracted from the Interest of Story

One of the interesting features in connection with the Hodkinson publication of Hugo Ballin's latest production, "East Lynne," is in the modernized version of this classic story that is offered to the screen public.

The original novel by Mrs. Henry Wood, first published in 1861, clothed its characters in the costumes of that day. So has every one of the numerous dramatizations of this tale. In theBAL-in-Hodkinson picture, however, the director-producer has modernized the story entirely, from the clothes worn by the players to the railroad trains, automobiles and other modern inventions which are revealed in the screenings.

Would Not Lose Interest

"I would never lose enthusiasm for the motion picture production of any story which was inherently a costume story, that is where the scenes are laid in countries whose nates wear clothes other than ours of the present day, or in such a remote past that the costumes were radically different from those in fashion today. So, in "Pagan Love," my first production released through W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, I felt no hesitation in clothing the Chinese characters in their national costumes, and I am convinced that their appearance did not at all detract from the continuous grip of the story on the beholders. Similarly, in the picturization of stories of comparatively remote days, the fact that the characters are in costumes other than those we wear today need not necessarily detract from the interest of the story provided the costumes are subordinated to the action of the photoplay.

Presents New Problem

"In 'East Lynne,' however, we had a different problem. The costumes of 1861 were fundamentally very similar to our costumes. It is the present fashion differences as do exist would have been so minor that they would have annoyed and detracted the attention of the audience if they had been shown on the screen. Basically, the story of 'East Lynne' is a story of all time—and that is the main reason why 'East Lynne' is strictly modern in every aspect.

There may be some who believe that the thousands who have read the book have seen what the old costumes may be somewhat taken back at seeing 'East Lynne' clothed in the garb of 1921. But I am sure that this fact will not add rather a pleasant innovation which will result in the audiences being able to follow the story more closely since there are not present any of the distraction which would arise from the petty differences in costume that have been the bane of the movies for sixty years. Clothing the film production in modern day dress I am sure will make it all the more acceptable."

Carey Will Star in Big Features for Universal

Late spring probably will see Harry Carey, Universal's biggest star, beginning his first big Universal-Jewel production, according to Harry M. Berman, general manager of exchanges for Universal.

The sales manager has gone West to confer with Carey concerning the star's new producing unit. Carey has three more five-reel feature pictures to make under his former arrangement with Universal. When the last of these is completed, his name will be taken from Universal's weekly feature issue program, and will appear henceforth only in big productions. These will be classed as Harry Carey Productions. He will have his own producing unit, it is explained, under an arrangement similar to that existing between Universal and Tod Browning and Erich von Stroheim.

Dressed for Conway and former representative for Mary Pickford, will be production manager of the new unit.

East Indian Story Will Be Next Tearle Vehicle

"The Man of Stone," an East Indian story by John Lynch and Edmund Goulding, will be the next starring vehicle for Conway Tearle.

Work on the production is scheduled to start during the second week in March at the Selznick Fort Lee studios under the direction of Henry Kolker. The "Man of Stone" is the fifth production of the first East Conway Tearle star series. The first four in the order of their production are "The Road of Ambition," "Society Snobs," "The Fighter" and "Bucking the Tiger."

Missouri Officials Discuss Situation
Exhibitor Leaders in Wire to “Exhibitors Herald” Announce Success

Exhibitors Herald on March 8 received the following telegram from Charles T. Sears, president, and Adolph M. Eisner, secretary, of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Missouri:

"The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Missouri has been successful in defeating the Sunday blue law bill and standing room bill and is securing the passage of the deposit bill, which has passed the senate without a dissenting vote. This success is the result of the hundred per cent response from the independent exhibitors throughout Missouri especially those in the smaller communities."

"We are wholeheartedly in our support of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and President Sydney S. Cohen. We strongly condemn the attempts of Brady and the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry producers' organization to bait exhibitors."

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Missouri is in one accord with the policies, attitude and actions of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and its officers. Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Missouri expresses its absolute confidence in the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America which less than year ago was organized by the independent exhibitors of United States, and we recognize that the results thus far obtained by this organization is phenomenal."

Lionel Barrymore Will Play “Boomerang Bill”

George B. Van Cleve, general manager of William Randolph Hearst's film interests, announces that he has signed Lionel Barrymore to the title role in "Boomerang Bill" for Cosmopolitan Productions.

"Boomerang Bill" appeared in the Cosmopolitan Magazine and is by the author of the "Boston Blackie" stories. This picture will be directed by Tom Fox, who recently produced Cosmopolitan Productions' work has begun on "Boomerang Bill" at the International Film studios.

"The Foolish Matrons"
Next Tourneur Feature

What makes a successful wife?
This is the question that Maurice Tourneur will set in his forthcoming production to be presented through Associated Producers. The photoplay is an elaborate picturization of Donn Byrne's latest novel, "The Foolish Matrons," which is being made into a screen play under the direction of Maurice Tourneur and Clarence L. Hobbs, and will be seen in the stellar role.

Day for Better Films
Here Says Manheimer Receives Many Inquiries on
First of J. W. Corp.
Series

Following the recent announcements of J. W. Film Corporation anent the launching of its first special, "Every Man's Price," in which Grace Darwell has the leading role, there was a veritable flood of letters and telegrams from exhibitors and exchangemen congratulating E. S. Manheimer, who is handling the distribution of the J. W. series, on his policy of big independent, dignified productions for the state rights market at this particular time.

Mr. Manheimer believes that the time never was more propitious for the launching of high class dramas than at present. "In the matter of getting our pictures an all-around market for the time of release," he says, "I have pursued a "watchful waiting" policy.

Recites Past Conditions
"For the past several months conditions in the film industry have been rather conducive to the downward trend of prices brought to light a number of inferior pictures that have been doing an excellent business in the market for many months. The owners saw the opportunity to cash in on them by taking advantage of the existing unstable conditions and forcing down ridiculously low prices and attractive terms would blind the independent exchangemen as to their own productions offered.

"The result was that the market during the past six months has been cluttered with all sorts of productions and all sorts of propositions, which put the independent exchanger in the position to dictate his own terms.

Was Not a Stimulant
"Instead of stimulating business and giving the independent exchanger the opportunity to keep his exchanges going without any heavy outlay of actual money, as is generally the result when a downward trend of prices is being followed in the market, it left a lot of worthless junk in the exchange that he could not move. These productions it was necessary to have cleaned up in the market on the fly-by-night picture and made a clear road for the bona fide better productions of the legitimate producers and distributors.

Universal Sends Lederman
To South American Center

George E. Kann, export manager for the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has engaged Dan B. Lederman, well known to the trade and many years in the Universal for an important post in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. Lederman, who is married, has a wife, has sailed for the South American port.

Lederman's headquarters will be in Rio de Janeiro, although he will spend a considerable part of his time visiting the various Universal agencies throughout the southern republic, it is explained.

Cabanne's Second Robertson-Cole Special Will Be Published Shortly

Robertson-Cole announces for early publication the second William Christy Cabanne dramatization of "What's a Wife Worth?" which is acted by an all-star cast, and which was written and directed by Mr. Cabanne, whose first production, "The Stealers," has scored such a wide success through the country.

"What's a Wife Worth?" sets before the spectator the analytical story of a man whose soul is torn between his love for a small town girl, whom he marries and then abandoned by her, and his love for a society girl with whom he is forced into a second unhappy marriage.

Mr. Cabanne presents a fine cast, composed chiefly of talented young actors. He has caused their every movement to be concentrated on the main theme of the picture, and the building up of a big dramatic situation has been brought to a telling and logical climax.

"What's a Wife Worth?" is laid in the present, and the scene is a typical American city of today. The objections of the humblest homes are not far from the pretentious homes of the leading citizens, but when the two are distinct, it is seen that they would be between Park avenue and the East Side in New York City—giving the same opportunity for contrast and for struggle.

The cast includes Ruth Renick, Casson Ferguson, Virginia Caldwell, Alex Francis, Charles Drew, Howard Gaye, Maxwell Standley, Lillian Langdon and Charles Wingate.

The most appealing part of the story of "What's a Wife Worth?" is its faithfulness of every day life and the natural and logical way in which its characters act.

The exploitation possibilities are carefully realized in the press book on this production, which Robertson-Cole shortly will publish.

Will Rogers to Star in Familiar "Poor Relation"
A Goldwyn Acquisition

Goldwyn announces the acquisition of the motion picture rights to "A Poor Relation," the famous comedy play by Edward E. Kidder in which the late Sol Smith Russell achieved his most popular and lasting success. The play will serve as a starring vehicle for Will Rogers.

Since the death of Sol Smith Russell in "A Poor Relation" has not been seen with any degree of frequency upon the stage, aside from stock engagements, where it has always been popular, although it served Frank Keenan, Tim Murphy and other actors as starring vehicles in the early years of the press.

Will Rogers will act Noah Vale for the film immediately upon the completion of an original photo play by Elmer L. Riwotzky upon which photography will soon be started at the Goldwyn studios at Culver City, Cal.

"God's Gold" Gives Role
Of Sailor to Neal Hart

All interior scenes of Neal Hart's newest five-reel production for Independent Films Corporation have been "shot" and the company has left Hollywood for Balboa, Cal., where, under the direction of Webster Cullison, the final scenes of the production, "God's Gold," will be filmed.

The story, which is from the pen of Arthur Henry Gooden and adapted to the screen by the author, presents Neal Hart in the role of a sea captain.

Peerless Will Represent
Pioneer in West Canada

Another increase in its distributing work is recorded by the Pioneer Film Corporation through arrangements with the Peerless Films, Ltd., which enterprise will represent Pioneer and handle its product in Western Canada.

The Peerless Films, Ltd., has its main office in Winnipeg and also operates in Calgary and Vancouver. Pioneer is now represented in six offices in the Dominion of Canada.

Winner of Contest Cast in Leading Role in Pathe-Kipling Picturization

Pathe announces that Virginia Brown Faire has been selected for the heroine role of Ameera in Rudyard Kipling's "Without Benefit of Clergy." It is an interesting circumstance that in winning this important engagement this 15-year-old leading woman had to repeat the experience which first introduced her to the picture screen two years ago—to succeed where a numerous field of contestants necessarily must fail.

It is explained that fifteen capable young picture actresses upon invitation submitted themselves at the Branton studio to an exhaustive series of tests in competition for the prize Kipling feature engagement.

Three Experts Chose Star

These crucial tests were made in the presence of the three principal authorities entrusted with the interpretation of Rudyard Kipling's first Pathe picture—Robert Brunton, producer; James Young, director, and Randolph Lewis, the Pathé technical expert, who advised with the English novelist throughout the progress of the contest.

At 17, Miss Faire is about the same age and possesses the same graceful and slender figure which Kipling gives to Ameera. She has dark hair, also, and large, languorous dark eyes, with a girlishly rounded face. Her emotional gifts, well trained, although in short a time, cover a wide range, and in the tests for Ameera are said to have revealed subtle shades of a nature calculated to bear out Kipling's ideal of the character.

Winner of Contest

Virginia Brown Faire was barely 15 years old when she entered the "Fame and Fortune" contest of 1919 conducted by the Brewster Publication. She was one of 50,000. The official judges were Mary Pickford, Cecil DeMille, Maurice Tourner, Comodore J. Stuart Blackton, Howard Chayton, the Citizens, James Montgomery Flagg, Samuel Lumiere and Eugene V. Brewster.

Miss Faire has made her first engagement with Universal, where she appeared with Hoot Gibson in "Running Straight," and later did fine work in "Under Northern Lights." After that she scored with Will Rogers in "A Bashful Romeo." In each of these parts she bore out the verdict of the "Fame and Fortune" judges.

It is reported to Pathe from the Branton Studio that all of the exterior sets are ready, and that production of "Without Benefit of Clergy" will begin as soon as the cast is complete.

Lesser Promises Big Production in Which David Butler Is Star

The first David Butler production which Irving Lesser will produce will be in story, cast and financial output, according to an announcement by Mr. Lesser.

The Wallace Vanux Saturday Evening Post story, "Sophie Senemoff," has been adapted into screen form and work is going well under way on the filming. In addition to a large space of the Robert Brunton Hollywood studios, Lesser has leased a plot of land situated in the Santa Monica canyon, where an entire Russian village is being erected. The expenditure for this setting will be in excess of thousands of dollars. All numbers of people are called for in every scene and the services of hundreds of extras and types have been selected.

Helen Ferguson will enact the title role, working opposite young Butler. Others in the cast include William R. Walling, Frances Raymond, John Congreve, Hector Desano, Garvie Crest and Alice Wilson. Fred J. Butler is directing.

Lasky's "Mystery Road"
Soon Ready in England

With the completion of the studio scenes following a lengthy location visit to Southern France, Paul Powell's production of "The Mystery Road" for Samuel Goldwyn Company, Ltd., is ready for the cutting room. This is the picture which was adapted from a novel by Ethel Phillips-Greenhow, the scenario being by Mary H. O'Connor, who was sent to England by Paramount a few months ago to write scenarios for the Lowndes production.

Since returning from the Riviera the company has passed from one big studio scene to another, representing interiors ranging from humble peasants' homes to the most elaborate villas and cafes in Nice and Paris. The final scenes were made in two sets, which taxed the capacity of both the big studio floors, one representing the royal suite in an exclusive and palatial hotel in the South of France, and the other a large and resplendent Parisian cafe.

Itala Feature "Faith"
Is Nearing Completion

"Faith," the six-reel film drama written and produced by Raffaele Baccellieri of the Itala Photoplay Corporation in New York, is rapidly nearing completion.

The scenes are laid in Italy, Paris, and New York, and are said to contain much outdoor pictorial beauty with elaborate interiors. In the cast are the Baroness Katusha Oriolova, the Russian refugee who has recently been much in the limelight—Frank Otto, Maude Hill, Margaret Grayce, Dulio Maratzi, Madame Aceri, Ernest Venetrella and Rafaele Bongini.

Oakman to be Star in "The Half Breed"
Oliver Morosco Announces Cast of First Pictures For First National

That Wheeler Oakman will have the opportunity to make the title role of "The Half Breed" to the screen what William Farnum made it to the stage has been decided upon.

Oliver Morosco has entered into contract with Irving M. Lesser in Los Angeles whereby Oakman will immediately commence initial scenes for the new production. It is expected that the role of "the half breed" will be the strongest yet portrayed by Oakman and it is declared nothing will be spared toward making the screen version of the famous stage play equally successful.

Oakman is Film Veteran

Oakman, although a very young man, has had considerable training before the camera. In his picture career he has played important roles in seventy-seven productions. His latest films have been in "Outside the Law," when he was seen working opposite his wife, Priscilla Dean, and "Peck's Bad Boy," the Lesser production which stars Jackie Coogan, in which Oakman played the male lead working opposite Doris May.

Made for First National

"The Half Breed" will be produced by the Oliver Morosco Productions, 4 being the first Morosco picture for Associated First National. In the strong support will be Ann May, Mary Anderson, Sydney DeGrey, Carl Stockdale, Iuantia Archer, H. F. DeRuiz, Stanton Heck, Evelyn Selchie, dieta DeGraff, Harvey Prior, Lew Harvey, George Kiowa and a host of others equally important in filmland. The picture will be made in the Louis B. Mayer studios.

New York Notes About Film Folk
By J. B.

ACE BERRY, one of Robertson-Cole's New England magnates, who is responsible for the grand and glorious opening of "Kismet" in Boston and whose magnetism drew Governor Cox and Mayor Peters to the Majestic for the premier, had the time of his young life at the A. M. P. A. banquet. Ace has returned to the Bunker Hill section with only one regret, and that is that there is no A. M. P. A. in Boston.

Another Boston ace, in the person of S. C. Sladden, who has been knocking 'em over for Famous Players around the Back Bay and other aristocratic sections, was a visitor in Manhattan on Friday, Mar. 11.

NELSON LINDGARD of the Victor Kremer publication department has a fine line of assorted French, which he is now using for publicity purposes. Atta boy, "Nels."

Joe W. Engle, who recently returned from California, has a novelty card which he handed out to inquisitive reporters which reads, "Got in this morning. About a week. Feeling fine. California great. Business not so bad." That's efficiency. Joseph saves breath and tells the whole story in tabloid.

M. MITCHELL of the Quality Film Service, Atlanta, Ga., is certainly an optimist. He writes to inquire about "When Dawn Comes." It can't come, there is a rift in the clouds and a ray of sunshine is beginning to break through.

Now get ready for a good laugh. "A Connecticut Yankee In King Arthur's Court" has opened on Broadway and HARRY REICHENBACH is campaign manager for the "Kink." Since this picture opened there are more smiles on Main Street than we have seen in many a moon. It's a mirth tickler from start to finish. Harry ought to pull something good with this one.

Publicity has been received from the Bishop Film Company. Also from "The Parish Priest" and likewise from Bob Priest. This, together with stuff which comes from the Church Pictures Company, leads us to believe that the "Infant Industry, fifth largest, etc." has a chance and that old Doc Crafts won't have to step it half as hard as he started out to do.

EDWARD FALE, advertising manager of Typhoon Fan Company, is known as one of the pictures' most ardent fans.

HAMPTON DE ARC ST. SYRE LA COUT submitted a scenario to this office for a reading. We didn't pass on his script, but will admit that his moniker is a humdinger.

CHARLIE BURR gave the boys a luncheon at the Astor hotel on March 11, and for dessert he blew them three two-reel Torchy Comedies at the projection room. All enjoyed it greatly.

COURTENAY FOOTE auctioned a number of paintings at the National Association of Women Painters and Sculptors on March 9, in the Architectural League room of the Fine Arts building. The pictures were sold for the benefit of the club.

The HoY Jeff Dolan announces that he will issue a picture soon which will feature ORMA HAWLEY. Jeff is a hustler and if he says he has Orma for New York and New Jersey he ought to know it.

JOE LEE is training a menagerie which he will use in exploiting Guy Crowell Smith's next picture. The animals were secured from the "sluffs and slimes" of the river Nile at stupendous expense and transported on the naked backs of unmuzzled cannibals to the coast. Barnum's circus will soon land at the Garden and Joe will have to "step on it" to out-supercat the "big top" guys.

The very name of Pabst sounds cool and refreshing, but when you connect it up with the Monson cooling system, the coming summer dog days should hold no terror for the picture fan.

COLLEEN MOORE is making her first visit to New York. She had a keen desire to see how the Automat worked, so the First National sent the chief of the Mulligan guards out as a guide and he purchased $500 worth of crumbs for her and turned her loose. She survived.

Ouida Bergere, in private life Mrs. George Fitzmaurice, who has written the last four Fitzmaurice specials, is the author of Mae Murray's and Robert Z. Leonard's first picture, since that pair left Famous Players to do pictures of their own for Associated Exhibitors. Miss Bergere's story is "Peacock Alley." She will also do the continuity. In addition, Miss Bergere is adapting "Peter Ibbetson" for Mr. Fitzmaurice's next special. Very shortly she will begin work on her first Ouida Bergere Production, "Sweethearts and Wives," which she will adapt and direct. Busy? We'll say so!

Master Films Working On New Torchy Comedy Series
Having completed the first ten comedies contracted for by Educational Film Exchanges, Master Films, Inc., has started to work on the second series of twelve Torchy comedies featuring Johnny Hines, which will also be handled by Educational.

According to the distributing organization, its various branches have reported an immense gain in the bookings of these two-reelers made from the stories by Sewell Ford. "Torchy's Big Lead," the March issue, gives Torchy the opportunity, unwittingly, of foiling the plot to smuggle a quantity of aigrettes into New York. The April issue has been titled "Crowning Torchy," and is said to afford a series of highly amusing events which will follow the office boy taking gas in a dentist's chair.

Three New Theatres Are Planned for Montclair
EX-MAJOR ERNEST C. HINCK will erect a $60,000 theatre and office building on the site of the old First Presbyterian church, H. H. Wollenkrenk, manager and lessee of the Montclair theatre, is having plans drawn for a $400,000 motion picture house in Bloomfield avenue. Edward D. Ring has announced his intention of erecting a $200,000 house in Bellevue avenue near Lorraine.

"IT'S GETTING A LITTLE THIN ON TOP"

Scene from the Goldwyn production, "The Concert," presented with an all-star cast.
EXHIBITORS who receive the brunt of complaints from patrons for pictures which tend to offend will welcome the latest move of the big manufacturers to keep the screen clean. In cooperation with the National Board of Review the National Association of Motion Picture Industry will confer with a committee in an effort to "prevent at its source the production in all motion pictures detailed presentation of questionable matter."

The National Board of Reviews has conducted a nation-wide inquiry among municipal and state officers, license commissioners and others to ascertain the effect of certain types of films, and, based on this data a concerted movement is being made by the responsible producers to follow up the question. The use of main titles which frequently represent an otherwise innocuous story, will be eliminated; the illustration of ingenuity in practical methods of breaking the law will not be incorporated and the insidious elaboration of intimate sex relationships so as to bring into disrepute the otherwise legitimate presentation of sex in photodramas will be left out.

"THE GILDED LILY" (Paramount) is a romance of Broadway, with Mae Murray cast as a dancer. The story makes an excellent vehicle for Miss Murray and Robert Z. Leonard has directed it with fine skill, handling the big situations in a manner that brings out the suspense to the full.

"TESTIMONY" (Stoll) is a long drawn out picturization of a moderately interesting domestic tale of a young couple whose lives and happiness are almost ruined by a Puritanical mother. Ivy Duke has the leading role. Guy Newhall directed.

"THE LITTLE FOOL" (Metro) is a C. F. Shurtleff production, made with a special cast of players. It was adapted from a Jack London story and is interesting chiefly because of its pretty backgrounds. The story is of the familiar triangle situation. Milton Sills, Ora Carew and Nigel Barrie are the leading players.

"THE NUT" (United Artists) is Douglas Fairbanks' latest. It is a potpourri of nonsense, mildly interesting, presented with a capable supporting cast. Ted Reed directed the athletic Doug, who performs the usual acrobatic stunts.

"OUT OF THE HOUSE OF BONDAGE" (Lyceum), a story of The Exodus, offers a distinctly Biblical, not theological, feature. It combines the artistic elements of the successful picture in appealing manner and is an uncommonly interesting and completely absorbing picture. Will appeal to every creed and sect and can be employed to distinct advantage by institutions and societies. Should go good in any theatre.

"THE BLUSHING BRIDE" (Fox) offers Eileen Percy and a lively cast in a bit of screen nonsense with the semblance of slapstick in high grade setting. Whimsical and fanciful and will please that patronage enjoying "The Land of Jazz."

"SEE MY LAWYER" (Robertson-Cole) is farcical comedy drama that mingles love and business in comical and clever fashion. Smooth and lively of action and ingenious of plot. A picture that men will particularly like.

"THE LITTLE CLOWN" (Realart) is Mary Miles Minter's latest screen contribution. One of the best issues of the season for the juvenile patronage, and a picture that will thoroughly appeal to grownups as well. Star at her best and the employment of a real circus offers an interesting touch. An excellent offering.

"THE BLUE MOON" (American) is a story of the Wabash river pearl fishing industry with uncommonly attractive scenic settings. The mystery is well sustained. A picture out of the ordinary in a number of ways. Pell Trenton and Elinor Field have leading roles.

"EVERY MAN'S PRICE" (Burton King) presents Grace Darling and E. J. Radcliffe in attractive roles in a story of politics and love. Has entertaining and brisk action, is smooth and interesting. Especially good photography.

"THE CALL OF YOUTH" (Paramount) is an offering from the Famous Players-Lasky corps of British players. A story of the love of December for May, and the inevitable call of youth to its mate that prevents an unhappy alliance. Mary Glynn very pretty in leading feminine role. Better than the average English-made screen production.

"THE UNKNOWN WIFE" (Universal) is a story of crooks and a youth who would go "straight." Edith Roberts is starred and shares honors with Casson Ferguson. A fine cast appears in support and the usual excellent photography that marks Universal features is here present. Entertaining but short on plot material.

"BOYS WILL BE BOYS" (Goldwyn) brings Will Rogers to the screen in a decidedly likable role. The story is based on a "Judge Priest" yarn written by Irvin S. Cobb. Clarence Badger directed. The characters are well drawn and there is a genuine air of wholesomeness about the entire production.
MARY MILES MINTER IN

THE LITTLE CLOWN

(REALART)

Clean and delightful entertainment for the whole family. Mary Miles Minter in one of her most appealing roles. A picture that will enchant children and captivate their elders. A circus story to which Thomas Heffron has brought a maximum of excellence.

All the fascination of the "big top" has been caught in this story of the circus, starring one of the foremost of the ingénue screen players. Mary Miles Minter in "The Little Clown" is one of the best pictures of the year from the box office viewpoint.

Its appeal to children will be tremendous and adults will hail with delight the clean, wholesome and captivating story that has been brought to the screen here. Miss Minter will please even the most blasé picture patron the while they are perfectly suitable and entrancing for the juvenile patronage.

A real circus was hired, according to Realart, to stage this production in California, and its people, animals and clowns supply the professional touch certain and wholly entertaining. A monkey offers much of the comedy and is the cause of one of the best humor situations when he removes the hat from the head of a woman caller in the aristocratic and snobbish Southern family into which Miss Minter "as the little circus clown" Pat, goes as the fiancee of Dick Beverley, the elder son of the house. The younger son, Roddy, who "dopes" the drinks of the circus people when they come to call upon Pat, seeking to make "Daddy Toto," the clown, the funner, but instigating a situation that almost spells disaster to the whole romance, is one of the peaks of attraction in the cast. Jack Mulhall in the part of Dick plays with agreeable grace. The star is unquestionably bewitching and the part is an ideal choice for her.

There are endless exploitation possibilities in this picture, and the exhibitor is wisest who directs his energies in that line towards the juvenile patronage.

EILEEN PERCY IN

THE BLUSHING BRIDE

(FOX)

Fanciful nonsense that will appeal to those who liked "The Land of Jazz." Titles and scenes are whimsically and ridiculously comical and settings are attractive. High class slapstick. Jules Furthman wrote and produced the feature.

If the effervescent doses of ridiculous nonsense that have been purveyed with Eileen Percy in the leading role by Fox have been well received this will also be liked. Wherever "The Land of Jazz," for example, has pleased this will undoubtedly please.

It virtually, in the last analysis, amounts to high grade slapstick. It concerns a party of society folk with a chorus girl bride in a home of wealth posing as the relative of nobility and learning at the end that well-meaning but misguided relatives had falsely prompted her to do this. There is an amount of pool-ducking, hiding under beds, inebriation, chasing and fistflying and all that makes for the regular Furthman brand of humor.

Miss Percy is attractive in her role and with others of the cast plays well. They include Herbert Ayres, Philo McCullough, Rose Dione and others.

BRITISH CAST IN

THE CALL OF YOUTH

(PARAMOUNT)

A picture far better than the average English production and one that will please universally. A love story with a light tinge of the melodrama apparently indispensable to the British picture. Directed by Hugh Ford.

The familiar theme of the proposed marriage of May to December and the inevitable call of youth to youth preventing it is the situation around which this feature has been well built.

It holds an agreeable surprise for the patron familiar with the picture made by English players in English surroundings, for it is more skillfully done than the average picture of its kind, and its settings are charming. The feminine lead, the part of Betty Overton, is carried by a very pretty young woman, Mary Glyne, and while the leading man, Hubert Richman, impersonated by Jack Hobbs, is not altogether in appearance the hero of the dreams of the average American girl, he plays with grace and quiet torcetfulness that makes him appealing. Charles Cherry takes the part of James Agar, the elder suitor, in excellent way. Marjorie Hume is an attractive cousin and pal to the girl.

The story has to do with Agar and Richman, who love the same girl. The former, an elderly man of money, causes the younger man to be sent to Africa to get him out of his way. There the latter sickens seriously, and the climax of his illness comes on the eve of the wedding of Agar and Betty. Richman's presence seems to be with the girl, and she suffers a severe nervous shock from it, coupled with an unexpected passionate advance of the older man. This delays the wedding, and with the return of Richman and the realization by Agar that he must call to account that old rogue who has lost him the fight, he gracefully accedes his place to the younger man.

There are some beautiful exteriors and a very competent cast of players.

Shurtleff, Inc., production. Conventional triangle pattern makes draggy and uninteresting picture.

Jack London wrote the story, "The Little Lady of the Big House," upon which this picture is based. It does not seem like Jack London. We have grown accustomed to expecting—and seeing—action in anything of Jack London's transferred to the screen. But "The Little Fool" is an exception. It is practically without action—nothing more than a character sketch.

If the characters who are well drawn were really interesting there would be some comfort in the picture. Instead of being interesting they strike one as being weak. They don't seem to know what they want. The hero, for instance, secure in his wife's love, allows a novelist to come between himself and his wife.

The novelist confesses to Richard Forrest, the husband, the true state of affairs, and explains that he will leave, but Forrest does not agree to it. He will give up his wife, he says, if she loves the novelist. It seems that Paula, the wife, does love the novelist. Then Forrest changes his mind. He rages, rants and then shuts himself up after telling his wife to decide between the two. He hears the door slam, the whir of an automobile motor. The scenario writer and director attempt to keep the audience in suspen

dence as to whether the wife will go or remain. But the subterfuge doesn't work. As expected, the novelist leaves, the wife returns to the husband, confesses her shame and all ends well.

Three reels go by before the scenario writer allows the spectator to know deninitely that all the character building, together with the many touches, revel-ant and irrelevant, are used for the purpose of establishing a groundwork for a simple triangle story. The remaining three reels labiously reach the big scene, which isn't dramatic because it is obvious tri ckery. In other words, "The Little Fool" is shy on story, and what there is is of familiar design.

The one bright spot of the picture is to be found in the backgrounds. The sets are attractive, while the exteriors are picturesque and colorful.

Philip Rosen directed and Edward
Lowe, Jr., is credited with the scenario.
Mr. and Mrs. Ora C. Carew and Nigel Barrie are respectively Richard Forrest, his wife and the novelist. Byron Munson, Marjorie Prevost, Helen Howard and Iva
Forrester make up the rest of the cast.

SPECIAL CAST IN

EVERY MAN'S PRICE

(BURTON KING-J. W. FILM)

A timely story of romance and politics with Grace Darling and E. J.
Radcliffe in leading roles. Burton
King has directed the production skillfully and it is smoothly and entertainingly played. Photography is good, particularly the numerous close-ups of leading players.

The story of a man stronger than his wishes and his victory over those who seek to find the price for his honor comes to the screen in this feature.

It has a timely touch in being made to deal with the story of a district attorney's fight for the people who elected him against the profiteering of a man of wealth. Sending his lieutenants to gather evidence against the person known to be profiteering, they report to the attorney, Bruce Steele, the character assumed by E. J. Radcliffe, that the man is his prospective father-in-law, a Mr.
Armstrong. Steele stands staunch against the efforts of the father to reach him through his daughter and again through his son, whom he causes to appear to forge a check in conspiracy with the attorney's brother. But the object of all their efforts refuses to be bought for any price, and in the end the tangle unites itself with the happiest of results for all concerned.

The exterior scenes are very pretty.
The work of the leading members of the cast is commendable, and Miss Darling is especially pleasing as the girl in the case. The whole is worked smoothly and logically to an exciting and interesting conclusion. It will give general satisfaction, as it contains good entertainment.

MAE MURRAY IN THE GILDED LILY
(PARAMOUNT)
Romance of a Broadway dancer interestingly and dramatically picturized by Robert Z. Leonard from Clara Beranger's story. Best Mae Murray picture since "On With the Dance."
"The Gilded Lily" as a story, Robert
Z. Leonard as the director and Mae Murray as the star is a happy combination here. The story is of the sort that presents the star to good advantage, the directorial work is excellent, while Mae Murray contributes a splendid perfor-ance. The result is the best Mae Murray picture since "On With the Dance."
"The Gilded Lily" is the title applied to a Broadway dancer. She lives in the land of artificiality and waits for love—a true love that has never been offered her.
A New England youth crosses her path and the romance begins. She falls deeply in love with him at first sight and her dancing and her friends to prepare herself in the performance of housewifely duties. The youth, however, loves not the woman but the dancer, as he discovers, and disillusioned she returns to her old life.
Then one who has always hovered in the half home body comes to the fore.
The New England youth is jealous of the new arrival and swears that none but himself shall possess the girl. With the idea of committing murder he makes his way to the dancer's apartment.
The director has handled this climax scene with admirable skill and he has generated an unusual amount of suspense in the meeting of the three characters.
The youth fires at his rival, but misses.
To save the situation within the dancer
he has braved the gun fire. The realization of the rashness of his act creeps upon the youth and he links away, leaving his rival with the girl.
Throwing all care to the winds, the dancer agrees to accompany the newcomer. He takes her to his home. Here a healthy punch is inserted. The man leaves the girl alone in a drawing room.
As she sits by the window of the house in surprise upon a grey-haired mother in an easy chair. The woman is the mother of the newcomer; she takes the boy to her heart. And then, alone with the girl, the man makes his plea.
There is a fine finish to the production in its every phase, and the picture is good entertainment from every angle.
It ought to exert strong audience appeal.
Mae Murray does exceptionally well in the role with support by Lowell Sherman, Jason Robards, Charles Gerrard and Leonora Ottinger.

CLYDE COOK IN THE JOCKEY
(FOX)
Clyde Cook gallops home a winner in "The Jockey" his latest Fox comedy, di-terred. To be sure it has a lot of the old holism in it the peg driving incident for instance but there is so much that is original and the action is so compelling that it holds one's attention all the way through. Cook is a stable boy and handy man around a track. To save the homework and the horses he rides a speed-mare upon which her father has bet his last cent. The horse stops to eat hay thrown to him but wins the race after a poor start, says the writer. In the words of T. Biddle, "grandmother of Man o' War" who is rejuvenated by goat glands furthers a lively finish to the picture. Cook has set a hard pace in "The Jockey."

Will Rogers and two of his players in a scene from the Goldwyn picture, "Boys Will Be Boys."

IVY DUNE IN TESTIMONY
(STOLL)
Drawn-out picturization of slender domestic story of a young couple whose lives are almost ruined by a mother's Puritanism. Too little material to hold the interest.
Directed by Guy Newhall.
"Testimony" falls below the Stoll standard, chiefly because of its story.
The material from which the picture was made is decidedly frail. Five and a half reels are taken up to demonstrate that Puritanism is impossible by the use of simple terms that haven't enough hardi-hood for so much footage. As a result the offering is drawn out and draggy.
The story is motivated by a Puritational mother-in-law who would marry her son to a fortune hunter. But the son marries a dreamer, and the mother, unhappy because her own selfish ambitions are unfulfilled, drives the girl from her home by hickeries. The wife seeks refuge with an uncle, but here again she becomes unhappy, for the uncle, unaware that the girl is married, seeks to marry her to a fortune hunter. Discouraged, she returns to her husband's home. Her husband being absent seeking her, she is turned away by her mother-in-law and goes out into the snow storm to die. A little bird, broken by the storm, brings the mother-in-law to her senses, and she takes the despairing girl in. Finally the son returns for the happy ending.

Much of the first part of the picture is devoted to character drawing, which,
because it frequently sounds a human note, is interesting, despite the lack of relief from drabness. The last two reels fall into conventional melodrama, with the heroine going out to die in a snow storm that has every aspect of having been generated in the studio. The return of the hero is delayed much longer than necessary.
The director, Guy Newhall, gives evidence of skill. His cast, with Ivy Duke, Marc Rorke and David Hawthorne as the main figures, is adequate.

WILL ROGERS IN BOYS WILL BE BOYS
(GOLDWYN)
The popular comedian in an decidedly human and lovable role.
The story is based on one of the famous Judge Priest yarns by Irvin S. Cobb. It is a picture of small-town life, but one that should appeal to metropolitan, neighborhood and small-town audiences alike. Directed by Clarence Badger.
"Boys Will Be Boys," Will Rogers' latest Goldwyn feature, is a picture that should please any aggregation of spectators except those who can enjoy only the sensational.
Rogers is shown as a blacksmith's helper who has been raised in the county poor house. He is considered more or less half-witted by some of the townsfolk, but is adored by all the kiddies, both black and white. He falls heir to a fortune and announces he is going to spend it being just a boy, for he never has had any real boyhood when he should have been enjoying youthful frolics. With the youngsters as his guests he stages many a picnic, participates in their childish games, and is finally charged with insanity by a shyster lawyer who brings in a "phoney" piece that he requests be appointed guardian. The trial held before the kindly old Judge Priest with all the town-people present shows how sane he really is, the hocus pocus turns against the shyster and all ends well, our hero being even able to evade a homely old maid who set her cap for him when she heard of his newly acquired wealth. The characters are all well drawn, the story is entertaining, you will find laughs a-plenty, and there is a genuine air of wholesomeness about the entire production.
ALL STAR CAST IN OUT OF THE HOUSE OF BONDAGE
(LYCEUM FILM BUREAU)

Three reels of drama founded on the familiar Bible story of the leading of the Children of Israel out of the Land of Egypt and out of the house of bondage make of this innovation in screen material something novel and attractive.

About the story of the life of Moses the author, Arthur L. Huston, and the director, John W. Noble, and the assistant director, Fred W. Wheeler, have built not only an authentic historical contribution, but one that is colorful in action and artistry, reduced to art-tie essentials and dedicated to a little reverence. Scenes have been faithfully drawn and placed in backgrounds that realistically reproduce the Egyptian conditions of the time. There is a decided departure from the typically Biblical backgrounds, costumes and titles, and ingenious brains and clever hands have supplied a film that is both artistic and attractive. The modern has been injected into both play and titles to agreeable effect.

The picture is one which will entertain, absorb, teach and impress the events with which it deals with a vividness and reality which other mediums have heretofore failed to meet. While designed primarily for institutions and society use, it is expected to market it in the theatre at a fair figure.

The story is divided by reels into the trine periods in the life of Moses—the childhood with his finding in the bulrushes by the daughter of Pharaoh, the boyhood in the court of Pharaoh, where he learned from his mother the history of his own Hebrew race, and the maturity during which he received the ten commandments and led his people through the Sea out of slavery and the Miracles and plagues, the death of Moses and other points that lend force to the feature, are suggested with a delicacy that makes them the more convincing even if they were luridly pictured on the screen.

Art titles are worthy of much praise. They are notably artistic and suggestive of the action. A special musical score to accompany the picture has been given, and other mediums have herefore failed to meet. While designed primarily for institutions and society use, it is expected to market it in the theatre at a fair figure.

SPECIAL CAST IN
SEE MY LAWYER
(ROBERTSON-COLE)
A farcical comedy-drama built about the uniqueness of a bogus invention and a troublesome corporation. Highly amusing. Has a good plot with smooth and rapid action. An Al Christie production.

A machine designed to make artificial rubber causes all the trouble in “See My Lawyer.” It is exceedingly lively in action and contains many perplexities. A wily inventor palms off the fake device upon an unsuspecting prospective bridegroom, Billy Noble. Billy enthusiastically and innocently issues stock and sends thousands of circulars through the mails. Suddenly it is discovered that the machine is a fake. The law enters, bent on jailing Billy for the use of the mails to defraud; also the trust enters, seeking to get control of the machine. Billy is persuaded to become “insane” to keep himself free from the bars, and the humor resulting is lively enough. The trust gets the machine, and the apparently hopeless tangle of situations resolves themselves into a surprise ending and one completely unexpected.

Whitlock gives a splendid performance as Billy. T. Roy Barnes is his able second as Robert Gardner. J. P. Leckney as the inventor is one of the best of the cast, and the parts of the two attractive young women are taken by Grace Desmond and Jean Acker.

The feature has entertainment value of a high standard. It will afford many a good laugh and will keep interest and wit at high tension throughout the showing. The outcome is difficult to be guessed as complications pile themselves one upon another.

BUSTER KEATON IN THE GOAT
(METRO)
Some clever and original gags, mixed up with others more or less familiar, are presented by Buster Keaton in his latest two-reel Metro comedy, “The Goat.” While it is not the most original, and not the “Hard Luck,” it is a mighty good comedy nevertheless.

The phlegmatic pantomimist gets much of his fun this time out of a chase. He peers through prison bars and is photographed as a convict, the latter having first snapped Buster’s picture while the cameraman wasn’t looking, and then having covered the lens with his own cap when his turn came. Unaware of this, however, the young girl pursues the phantom and smartly knocks down the man in the case. Later when he sees himself pictured on the billboards as an escaped murderer, he thinks that he has murdered the girl’s tormentor. He runs into a detective and when his actions arouse suspicion the fun begins.

A lot of comedy is brought out in the chase. By burying the detective under a load of stones dropped from a dump wagon, Buster gets away and meeting the girl once again accepts her invitation to dinner. The detective is the girl’s father. He comes in and the chase is taken up again. This time the elevator is brought into play with amusing results.

ALL STAR CAST IN THE BLUE MOON
(AMERICAN)

The unusualness of the setting and elements depicted in this picture is its chief value. Its charm of scenic setting is another attribute, and the whole is entertaining and interesting, although the mystery element is not solved with any degree of surprise.

The story is placed among the pearl hunters of the Wabash river. The pearl hunter, who locates with his aged mother along its banks, finds her dead when he returns to tell her of his discovery of a wonderful blue pearl. She has revealed to him only the fact that the slander of another man prompted her to cast out herself and the boy, whom she was a baby, and the remainder of her secret is not revealed until the climax discloses both the father and the secret of the pearl. The picture has an element of romance. Scenes in a cave beneath a waterfall and night scenes of pearl fishing are highly colorful and interesting.

The part of the pearl hunter is ably taken by Pell Trenton. Elnor Field is the girl "wild rose". The characters are given no other names except descriptive titles such as “The Man-With-the-Fancy-Vest,” “The Iron-Grey Woman” and the like.

EDITH ROBERTS IN THE UNKNOWN WIFE
(UNIVERSAL)
A semi-crook story built around the familiar plot of the young wife who takes a position under an assumed name. Entertaining, but short on original material. Well-balanced cast.

Edith Roberts, the Universal star, shares honors in this picture with Cas- son Ferguson, who has become a free lance. His work as "The Kid," a reformed crook, outshines hers as the country girl who becomes a personal secretary. The story follows more or less familiar lines where the "Kid’s" wife changes her name to "Mild Goat" during working hours, is proposed to by a wealthy gentleman, and is confronted by the husband when he calls upon her. It is entertaining enough and it will be a theater that expects more of the story, which expectation will not be realized.

It starts out well enough where “The Kid,” who is a member of a band of crooks, planning to rob a factory, falls in love with the village belle, Helen Webster, and gives up his old life. Her father dies. The Kid" marries her and they move to the city. The crooks steal the factory's money and suspicion rests on "The Kid." He furnishes an alibi. Being out of work, however, he falls in with the gang again. Meanwhile, his wife secures a position as secretary and the wealthy lady's nephew is attracted by the secretary's beauty. He falls in love with her, but again finds that she is married. From this point the plot lags and does not hold interest. The plot, however, of the crooks to "The Kid's" flat and in a battle on the fire escape the crook is killed. "The Kid" and his wife find happiness in a complete understanding.

Gladys Walton Again

Cast in Circus Story

Ever since Gladys Walton scored her first success in the Universal production, "Pink Tights," eight months ago, exhibitors all over the country have been deluged with requests from their patrons for another circus story starring her, Universal is preparing its "The Man Tamer," a unique romance of the big tops and the theatre, has been chosen for her and will be produced under the direction of Harry B. Harms. "The Man Tamer" is the work of John Barton Oxford, Allan Forrest, Rex Roselli, William Welsh, Charles B. Murphy, Parker McConnell, and C. Norman Hammond will play the leading roles in support of Miss Walton, and four of the largest lions in the Universal City Zoo will be used in the circus and theatre scenes.

Dwan Works Night and Day to Finish Picture

Allan Dwan is reported to be keeping his company working night and day on "Johnny Cucalob," his third Associated Producers' production. The story concerns Tommy Dawes, a ranch hand, who finds himself in the midst of alarming and amusing situations with but one fear in his heart—the wrath of a little girl whose doll he inadvertently broke. He faces revolvers, bandits and death without a quiver, but he trembles at the thought of little Rosemary's accusing eyes. All of the excitement comes when Tommy starts to cover up his crime and buys a new doll, and is mistaken for an escaped convict. Monte Blue, Mary Thurman and little Mary Jane Irving have the leading parts.

Ford Weekly's Current Issue Is History Review

With the inauguration of the new president Fitzpatrick & McElroy announce a timely issue of the Ford feature for March 13, in "Presidents of the United States." This Ford Educational Library film shows President Harding, as well as all the presidents who preceded him. It gives a likeness of each president and a glimpse into his character, and tells of the growth of the country and the principal developments in history during each administration, presenting a review of the important incidents in American history from the administration of George Washington until the present day.

First National

Nineteen and Phyllis, with Charles Ray.—A clever picture and it pleased most everyone.—Raymond Gear, Mayflower theatre, Florence, Kansas.—General patronage.

The Love Expert, with Constance Talmadge.—Rather spicy. Kept me un- easy for fear of what was coming next, but it did me well.—A. X. Mikes, Eminence theatre, Eminence, Ky.

The Perfect Woman, with Constance Talmadge.—Starts out good, but in sixth reel fair down completely because of improbable situations.—Giacoma Bros., Crystal theatre, Tombstone, Ariz.—General patronage.

Daisy, a Marshall Neilan production.—Mighty good production that pleased only fair business.—Verner Hicks, Family theatre, Marion, Ill.—General patronage.

A Daughter of Two Worlds, with Norma Talmadge.—Excellent picture. Wonderful acting by this very popular star. This picture drew the best house we have had in some time. Book this picture and boost it to the limit. You can't go wrong.—Smith Read, Patriot theatre, DeKalb, Tex.—Small town patronage.

Two Weeks, with Constance Talmadge.—This is a good picture. Lively and comedy like she always gives us. Went well.—Wolz, Star theatre, Lake City, Ia.—Small town patronage.

Passion's Playground, with Katherine MacDonald.—Was a great success. Did a dollar a day grosser than I have ever had with either Constance or Norma Talmadge.—New Cozy theatre, Winchester, Ind.

What Women Love, with Annette Kellerman.—Some wonderful deep under water scenes and a splendid exhibition of high diving. Under water fight was excellent, also. Not much to the story, but all that our patrons expected—S. J. Goodwin, Royal theatre, Lehi, U.

The Beauty Market, with Katherine MacDonald.—Too much society and love story. Too much kind of pictures fall flat here. Miss MacDonald is a beautiful lady, but beauty alone doesn't make a picture. This picture pleased those from 16 to 20, others disgusted. Some profanity in sub-titles, which should be eliminated. It's bad anywhere, but es-

Curtain, with Katherine MacDonald.—Many favorable comments. Will please the average audience. Good business.—W. L. Unrow, Crystal theatre, Burlington, Wis.—General patronage.

The Romance of Tarzan, with Elmo Lincoln.—Many specials like this would make a small town exhibitor forget some of the 39 varieties of worries that he is heir to and put a smile on his face that isn't mere camouflage.—Philip Rand, Rex theatre, Salmon, Idaho.—Small town patronage.

What Woman Love, with Annette Kellerman.—A dandy good picture. Good story, good acting by all and the best swimming and diving chicks Miss Kelllerman ever got. Well appreciated by all who saw it.—H. A. Wishard, Wishard theatre, Bloomfield, Ia.—Home patronage.

The Perfect Woman, with Constance Talmadge.—Another real good one of Connie's. They all please.—Oljen Reynolds, Pearl theatre, Hymera, Ind.—Small town patronage.

Yes or No, with Norma Talmadge.—

This is one of Norma's best. Pleased 100 per cent. In this she takes two parts and does it fine.—Mrs. Sufus Olson, Pal-time theatre, Delavan, Wis.—General patronage.

Two Weeks, with Constance Talmadge.—

A good picture, but not up to The Love

Expert. Our people were generally satisfied so why kick?—S. J. Goodwin, Royal theatre, Lehi, U.

A Daughter of Two Worlds, with Norma Talmadge.—Pleased good crowds two days.—Verner Hicks, Family theatre, Marion, Ill.

Heart o' The Hills, with Mary Pickford.—Broke all records. Patrons well pleased—F. M. Jones, Bonita theatre. Copperhill, Tenn.—Small town patronage.

The Splendid Hazard, with Henry B.

Walthall.—Semipro with a has-been star and a never was director.—W. H. Mart, Strand theatre, Grinnell, Ia.

Mary Regan, with Anita Stewart.—

This was our first Anita and went over very well. Picture not great, but a good program offering.—Mrs. James Webb, Cozy theatre, Union Ore.—Small town patronage.

The Price of Innocence, with Stella Talmadge.—Dandy good program picture.—

W. W. Wales, Yeomen theatre, Seneca, S. D.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Yellow Typhoon, with Anita Stewart.—Very good. Cannot help but please all.—George E. Taylor, Idle Hour the-teatre, Dunlap, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

Her Kingdom of Dreams, with Anita Stewart.—As usual Miss Talmadge handles her part just as her friends admire, but the plot of this picture was badly overdone. It killed the picture with the majorities.—E. A. Baradel, Palace theatre, McGehee, Ark.—Small town patronage.

The Perfect Woman, with Constance Talmadge.—Good comedy. Good business—W. L. Uglow, Crystal theatre, Burlington, Wis.—General patronage.

Fox

The Iron Rider, with William Russell.

—A very good story well acted by this star. Pleased a good house.—Smith Read, Patriot theatre, DeKalb, Tex.—Small town patronage.

The Mountain Woman, with Pearl White.—Pleased about 50 per cent. Fair only.—Royal theatre, Center Point, Ind.—Small town patronage.

The Mountain Woman, with Pearl White.—A good comedy-drama very much on the serial order. Will please those who like the feud type of story, also the Western fans.—Harold Daspit, Atheron theatre, Kentwood, La.

Two Moons, with Buck Jones.—Dandy Western. Full of pep.—E. A. Baradel, Palace theatre, McGehee, Ark.—Small town patronage.

The Plunger, with George Walsh.—

Better than From Now On. May Fox continue to improve Walsh releases.—

George E. Taylor, Idle Hour theatre, Dunlap, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Mountain Woman, with Pearl White.—Not up to Pearl White's standard. You are taking a chance on this one. Worst picture I ever saw a star like Pearl White in.—N. Navary, Liberty theatre, Verona, Pa.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Little Grey Mouse, with Louise Lovel.—Very good picture, but star did not show up as well as she did in Wolves of the Night.—Harold Daspit, Atheron theatre, Kentwood, La.—Neighborhood patronage.

If I Were King, with William Farnum. —A splendid picture, but some people don't seem to care for costume plays—

Ellis Irvin, Cozy Theatre, Newkirk, Okla.
Peter Krauth, Denison theatre, Denison, la.—Small town patronage.

Sink or Swim, with George Walsh.—Here is one real one that you will like yourself, and they are few.—Olen Reynolds, Pearl theatre, Hymera, Ind.—Small town patronage.

The Land of Jazz, with Eileen Percy.—One of the most unusual, queer stories we have ever seen on the screen. Some very clever acting, however, and will entertain.—Smith Read, Patriot theatre, DeKalb, Tex.—Small town patronage.

The Speed Maniac, with Tom Mix.—Everyone pleased. Good. Some are still talking about it. They like Tom Mix. Run a Sunshine comedy with this. Business good. Ten and twenty cents.—William Thacher, Royal theatre, Salina, Kans.

Drag Harlan, with William Farraun.—A shame to put such a good actor as Farraun in such a cheap Western. As the leading role did not require good acting. Mix could have done as well.—Harold Daspit, Atherton theatre, Kentwood, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Little Grey Mouse, with Louise Lovely.—Very ordinary. Not much to it.—George E. Taylor, Idle Hour theatre, Dunlap, la.

The Little Grey Mouse, with Louise Lovely.—Good little picture with lovely Louise.—Olen Reynolds, Pearl theatre, Hymera, Ind.—Small town patronage.

Vagabond Luck, with Elinor Fair and Albert Ray.—Little old, but fair program picture. Kids enjoyed the horse race.—Auditorium theatre, Carleton, Neb.—Small town patronage.

The Man Who Dared, with William Russell.—All went to sleep. Long drawn out and tiresome.—Royal theatre, Center Point, Ind.—Small town patronage.

Prairie Trails, with Tom Mix.—Very good. Mix getting better. This is the kind of production we want. Stunts and story good.—Harry L. Thred, Scenic theatre, Holsten, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

Just Pals, with Buck Jones.—One of the most entertaining comedy-dramas I ever ran. The little kid made me a hit as the star. Picture pleased everyone that saw it.—Harold Daspit, Atherton theatre, Kentwood, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

From Now On, with George Walsh.—A good seven reel picture full of thugs, thieves, gamblers and robbers and Walsh does plenty of good scrapping. No kicks and a few compliments. Ran it at regular price.—H. A. Wishard, Wishard theatre, Bloomfield, la.—Home patronage.

Goldwyn

Guile of Women, with Will Rogers.—Played to good crowds and pleased immensely.—Ascher Bros., Palace theatre, Peoria, Ill.—Transient patronage.

Jes' Call Me Jim, with Will Rogers.—This is great. Advertise it big and tell anything for it. It will stand all kinds of boosting. I used it with Loyd's Haunted Spooks, and people said it was the best consistent all round show they had seen.—Mrs. James Webb, Cozy theatre, Union, Ore.—Small town patronage.

The Slim Princess, with Mabel Normand.—About as good as her others, but glad we have only one more of her pictures to play.—Olen Reynolds, Pearl theatre, Hymera, Ind.—Small town patronage.

Jubilo, with Will Rogers.—Fine picture. Will please all classes of people.—Wilkinson & Hunter, Elite theatre, Weeping Water, Neb.—Small town patronage.

The Branding Iron, with a special cast.—Pleased 100 per cent. Book this one. You will not go wrong.—R. Navary, Liberty theatre, Verona, Pa.—Neighborhood patronage.

Jes' Call Me Jim, with Will Rogers.—Will Rogers and Raymond Hatton certainly worked fine in this picture. 100 per cent picture to our patrons.—Sam DeBois, Rink theatre, Des Palos, Cal.—Small town patronage.

Jubilo, with Will Rogers.—Drew the biggest Wednesday night crowd in many weeks. Will is a sure bet in this town. Universal satisfaction.—G. F. Rediske, Star theatre, Rye gate, Mont.—Small town patronage.

The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come, with Jack Pickford.—This is splendid, and will bring the people in and satisfy them. Although it is not as well directed as most Goldwyn pictures, it is fine, and should not be passed up by houses playing the best.—Mrs. James Webb, Cozy theatre, Union, Ore.—Small town patronage.

The World and Its Woman, with Geraldine Farrar.—Pleased about 75 per cent. Farrar doesn't take well here. Will be glad when the last picture is played. Fair crowd.—G. F. Rediske, Star theatre, Rye gate, Mont.—Small town patronage.

Earthbound, with a special cast.—Drew good crowds, increasing daily. Please.—Ascher Bros., Palace theatre, Peoria, Ill.—Transient patronage.

A Man and His Money, with Tom Moore.—Usual Modest picture, which satisfi ed. Story not so good as in former pictures.—Merle E. Rhoda, Palace theatre, Royalton, Minn.—Small town patronage.

The Strange Boarder, with Will Rogers.—My people were a little disappointed, as they expected more comedy, although it is good, but not so well liked as his comedies. The kid is also fine in this picture.—H. A. Wishard, Wishard theatre, Bloomfield, la.—Home patronage.

The Gay Lord Quex, with Tom Moore.—Not as good as Toby's Bow. About 50-50.—Olen Reynolds, Pearl theatre, Hymera, Ind.—Small town patronage.

The Revenge of Tarzan, with Gene Pollar.— Didn't draw like the others, and not as good.—Olen Reynolds, Pearl theatre, Hymera, Ind.—Small town patronage.

The World and Its Woman, with Geraldine Farrar.—Pleased about 75 per cent. Farrar doesn't take well here. Will be glad when the last picture is played. Fair crowd.—G. F. Rediske, Star theatre, Rye gate, Mont.—Small town patronage.

The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come, with Jack Pickford.—This is splendid, and will bring the people in and satisfy them. Although it is not as well directed as most Goldwyn pictures, it is fine, and should not be passed up by houses playing the best.—Mrs. James Webb, Cozy theatre, Union, Ore.—Small town patronage.

The World and Its Woman, with Geraldine Farrar.—Pleased about 75 per cent. Farrar doesn't take well here. Will be glad when the last picture is played. Fair crowd.—G. F. Rediske, Star theatre, Rye gate, Mont.—Small town patronage.

Earthbound, with a special cast.—Drew good crowds, increasing daily. Please.—Ascher Bros., Palace theatre, Peoria, Ill.—Transient patronage.

A Man and His Money, with Tom Moore.—Usual Modest picture, which satisfi ed. Story not so good as in former pictures.—Merle E. Rhoda, Palace theatre, Royalton, Minn.—Small town patronage.

The Strange Boarder, with Will Rogers.—My people were a little disappointed, as they expected more comedy, although it is good, but not so well liked as his comedies. The kid is also fine in this picture.—H. A. Wishard, Wishard theatre, Bloomfield, la.—Home patronage.

The Gay Lord Quex, with Tom Moore.—Not as good as Toby's Bow. About 50-50.—Olen Reynolds, Pearl theatre, Hymera, Ind.—Small town patronage.

The Revenge of Tarzan, with Gene Pollar.— Never had a better one aside from one or two of the top notchers, and this one ran them a close race, and turned out a happy house full of throngs. You could use more like it.—H. A. Wishard, Wishard theatre, Bloomfield, la.—Home patronage.

The Strange Boarder, with Will Rogers.—Not as good as Jubilo, but will please generally.—Wilkinson & Hunter, Elite theatre, Weeping Water, Neb.—Small town patronage.

Hodkinson

The Coast of Opportunity, with J. Warren Kerrigan.—Nothing great. Good program offering.—Verner Hicks, Family theatre, Marion, Ind.—Small town patronage.

The Joyous Liar, with J. Warren Kerrigan.—While Hodkinson has good service, the Kerrigans I have had are very good program pictures. Their act is good.—The Joyous Liar is redeemed at the final close by a whirlwind finish.—Mrs. James Webb, Cozy theatre, Union, Ore.—Small town patronage.

Cynthia of the Minute, with Leah Baird.—Didn't please our patrons. Ship scenes not realistic.—Wilkinson & Hunter, Elite theatre, Weeping Water, Neb.—Small town patronage.

Metro

The Marriage of William Ashe, with May Allison.—Very pleasing program picture.—Charles H. Goulding, Cayuga theatre, Auburn, N. Y.—Transient patronage.

The Misfit Wife, with Alice Lake.—She has not made a bad one yet. Her pictures all please.—Raymond Piper's Piper's Opera House, Virginia City, Nev.

The Cheer, with May Allison.—Picture fell flat. Not the type of picture for this star. 10 and 25c average audience. Lost money.—A. N. Miles, Eminence theatre; Eminence, Ky.

A Chorus Girl's Romance, with Viola Dana.—Miss Viola sure is a box office attraction. No matter how dull things get, Miss Dana will sure get them, and she will sure send them out with those smiles that always bring them back again to see her. She is just spicy enough to be delicious. Book her on the closest day of the week and you will soon have the biggest day of the week.—Elle Irvin, Cosy theatre, Newkirk, Okla.—Neighborhood patronage.

A Modern Salome, with Hope Hamp- ton.—High-class picture with beautiful and spectacular scenery. Star made a hit with the ladies on account of the rich costumes she wore.—Harold Daspit, Atherton theatre, Kentwood, La.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Cheer, with May Allison.—People who saw it say they thought it good. It did not get any money for me, but it was not the picture's fault. Metro pictures are usually good.—Mrs. James Webb, Cozy theatre, Union, Ore.—Small town patronage.

In Hold in Trust, with May Allison.—Good program picture. Top price, twenty-five cents.—Giacoma Bros., Crystal theatre, Tombstone, Ariz.—General patronage.

The Price of Redemption, with Bert Lytell.—A very good picture.—Mrs. Sufus Olson, Pastime theatre, Delavan, Wis.—General patronage.

The Mutiny of the Elsmore, with Mitchell Lewis.—Pretty good picture.—Raymond Piper, Piper's Opera House, Virginia City, Nev.

Toys of Fate, with Nazimova.—A great star and a wonderful picture, although business was poor.—W. C. Cleaton, Gem theatre, Highbee, Mo.

Dangerous to Men, with Viola Dana.—This is a good picture. Good acting and will please.—W. W. Waltz, Star theatre, Lake City, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Hope, with a special cast.—This is not a bad picture, but our people didn't like it. Too much foreign stuff.—Raymond Piper, Piper's Opera House, Virginia City, Nev.

The Best of Luck, with a special cast.—A Drury Lane melodrama of remarkable spectacle power. Not bad, but well acted, and one that will please them all.—R. Ross Riley, Wigwam theatre, Oberlin, Kans.—Small town patronage.

Love, Honor and Obed, with Alice Lake and Willplayed.—Another good Lake picture.—Raymond Piper, Piper's Opera House, Virginia City, Nev.

Parlor, Bedroom and Bath, with a special cast.—All comments I have seen on this picture I consider it was good. Patrons did not like it and said so. Such pictures are what give censors work! I liked it and am sorry, so will you if you use it.—Mrs. James Webb, Cozy theatre, Union, Ore.—Small town patronage.

Old Lady 31, with Emma Dunn.—If you have any trimmed tunes to go with it, it will get by. Not a picture for young people. They won't like it.—Mrs. Sufus Olson, Pastime theatre, Delavan, Wis.—General patronage.

The Cheer, with May Allison.—An average good picture, but not the kind of story to show off May Allison in.—Raymond Piper, Piper's Opera House; Virginia City, Nev.

Paramount

Why Change Your Wife?—a Cecil B. DeMille production.—An exploiting letter from Paramount to the small town patrons pleases me. I have a letter with liberal advance advertising and special orchestra brought out big crowds to see the rich costumes and the general trionfo music and productions. Prices 50 and 25c.—Philip Rand, Rex theatre, Salmon, Idaho.—Small town patronage.

The Jailbird, with Douglas MacLean.—Good story. Well produced. Went over all right.—Raymond Gear, Mayflower theatre, Florence, Kans.—General patronage.

The Prince Chap, with Thomas Meighan.—Almost as good as Why Change Your Husband? Admission 15 and 30c, and it was good.—G. P. Duncan, Pastime theatre, Cow- pens, S. C.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Copperhead, with Lionel Barrymore.—We played this on Lincoln Birthday to very ordinary business. 10 and 25c. Fair weather. It is discouraging to the exhibitor who wants to play good pictures like this that they are poorly attended.—A. N. Miles, Eminence theatre, Eminence, Ky.

Hawthorne of the U. S. A., with Wallace Reid.—Extra good. Both it and you can hear your patrons compliment you.—Raymond Schneider, Midget theatre, Maitland, III.—Neighborhood patronage.

Humoresque, with a special cast.—This is fine, and a prestige to any house showing high-class pictures. If you want something spectacular, you will not find it in Humoresque. It has the story and heart appeal. Vera Gordon is the real star. Splendid.—Mrs. James Webb, Cozy theatre, Union, Ore.—Small town patronage.

Terror Island, with Houdini.—Nothing to excite an audience with. There are better ones and some worse.—Giacoma Bros., Crystal theatre, Tombstone, Ariz.—General patronage.

The Prince Chap, with Thomas Meighan.—This is a real honest-to-goodness picture. A real knockout. Pleased patrons 100 per cent.—S. J. Goodwin, Royal theatre, Lehi, Utah.

Why Smith Left Home, with Bryant Washburn.—A good comedy-drama. Plenty of action.—W. H. Gilliland, Lotus theatre, Red Lake Falls, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Grim Game, with Houdini.—Went big. Caused much comment.—Royal theatre, Center Point, Ind.—Small town patronage.

In Mizzoura, with Robert Warwick.—Drew well. My folks like melodramas. We are tired of sex plays, so this was enjoyable. 10 and 25c.—A. N. Miles, Eminence theatre, Eminence, Ky.

Red Hot Dollars, with Charles Ray.—Like Ivory soap, 90 to 99 pure. This picture pleased a goodly crowd. First Ray picture here and had a good crowd in spite of another show and high school contest.—R. Ross Riley, Wigwam theatre, Oberlin, Kans.—Small town patronage.

Come Out of the Kitchen, with Marguerite Clark.—This is good and will please. Not a heavy production, but very good for a Sunday night. Was well liked.—Mrs. James Webb, Cozy theatre, Utica, Ore.—Small town patronage.

Away Goes Prudence, with Billie Burke.—Far below average of former pictures. Story not adapted to star. Majority of patrons was not satisfied.—Mrs. E. Rhoda, Palace theatre, Royalton, Minn.—Small town patronage.

Behind the Door, with Hobart Bos-

Huckleberry Finn, with a special cast. — Absolutely nothing to it, failed to please. Just seven reels of film. Stay off of this one. Called it a special and the theatre manager, G. P. Duncan, Pastime theatre, Cow pens, S. C. — Neighborhood patronage.

Wanted: A Husband, with Billie Burke. — A good picture! Billie Burke draws well for me. — W. H. Gillillan, Lotus theatre, Red Lake Falls, Minn. — Neighborhood patronage.

The Valley of Giants, with Wallace Reid. — Good picture, but not as good as some of Reid's older pictures. — Harold Daspit, Atherton theatre, Kentwood, La. — Neighborhood patronage.

The Sins of Rozanne, with Ethel Clayton. — Played this two days. No comments and no business. — Charles Dahler, Abingdon theatre, Abingdon, Ill. — Neighborhood patronage.

Square Deal Sanderson, with William S. Hart. — Best Hart picture to date, and they banged at me. — P. Duncan, F. G. pastime theatre, Cow pens, S. C. — Neighborhood patronage.

What's Your Hurry? — with Wallace Reid. — This is not up to the Reid standard, but gave general satisfaction. — S. J. Goodwin, Royal theatre, Lehi, Utah.

The 13th Commandment, with Ethel Clayton. — Another good bet. Don't be afraid of it. First-class program picture, and something the women should see. — Raymond Schneider, Midget theatre, Metamora, Ill. — Neighborhood patronage.

You're Fired, with Wallace Reid. — This pleased just like all of Wallie's pictures do. Pleased a large crowd. Wallie is a favorite with us. Photography good and story very pleasing. — W. F. Baker, Boone Way theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ky. — General patronage.

Crooked Streets, with Ethel Clayton. — A bang-up program picture. Lots of action. They will like it. — W. H. Mart, Strand theatre, Grinnell, la.

Excuse My Dust, with Wallace Reid. — Very good. Reid always draws well for me. Double Speed also good. Book pictures well. His pictures with a little raise in admission. — G. P. Duncan, Pastime theatre, Cow pens, S. C. — Neighborhood patronage.

23½ Hours Leave, with Douglas MacLean and Doris May. — This is the style of comedies that our people like. Good, clean picture. Something worth while. — S. J. Goodwin, Royal theatre, Lehi, Utah.

Mary's Ankle, with Douglas MacLean and Doris May. — Perfectly delightful. Worst snow storm we've had this winter. Ruined business. But those who braved the storm said they were well repaid. — A. N. Miles, Eminence theatre, Eminence, Ky.

Crooked Streets, with Ethel Clayton. — Pleased, but is rather thin. Holt puts up such a poor mix with the gloves the gallery gods were smirking. Would he get the K. O. — D. B. Baker, Circle theatre, Ottumwa, la.

Pathé

Fighting Cressey, with Blanche Sweet. — Good comedy-drama. Star does some very good acting and looks as good as she did in the old days when she was a big favorite. — Harold Daspit, Atherton theatre, Kentwood, La. — Neighborhood patronage.

The House of the Tolling Bell, a J. Stuart Blackton production. — Don't ask for a better picture. This is one of those 100 per cent kinds. — G. L. Deady, Palace theatre, No. Rose, N. Y. — Neighborhood patronage.

Hereward Wanted: Male, with Blanche Sweet. — Good comedy-drama, but Blanche Sweet does not get money in this city. — Ray Y. McMinn, Capitol theatre, Superior, Wis.

The Right to Lie, with Dolores Cass inelli. — A good picture, but not as good as Tarnished Reputations. The first picture in which I have seen Dolores, and she was beautiful in this picture. — Harold Daspit, Atherton theatre, Kentwood, La. — Neighborhood patronage.

The Empire of Diamonds, with a special cast. — The least desirable Pathé we have run in a long time. Diamond fakes, fakers and thieves don't hit many people. — G. L. Deady, Palace theatre, No. Rose, N. Y. — Neighborhood patronage.

The Love Cheat, with June Caprice. — No good. Don't see how this star gets by at all. — Carl Sather, Grand theatre, Annandale, Minn. — Small town patronage.

The Unknown Love, with Dolores Cass inelli. — One of the best pictures I ever showed on my screen and my patrons all told me so. Boost it big, it will stand a raise in admission. — L. A. Hasse, Mystic theatre, Mauston, Wis.

Other Men's Shoes, an Edgar Lewis production. — To beat this one you got to go some, and then some. Only a few pictures made can be compared to it. This is 100 per cent any of them are. — G. L. Deady, Palace theatre, No. Rose, N. Y. — Neighborhood patronage.

Realart

Out of the Chorus, with Alice Brady. — Have been waiting for a picture that would fit Alice and this is it sure. Out of The Fear Market, Sinners, The Dark Lantern, The New York Idea, this is the best. — A. E. Anderson, Pastime theatre, Straitford, S. D. — Neighborhood patronage.

The Furnace, with a special cast. — Very fine picture. It made a hit with my patrons, but did not draw well. — Nav ary, Liberty theatre, Verona, Pa. — Neighborhood patronage.

A Cumberland Romance, with Mary Mil lis Minter. — One of the real big pictures we have shown in this theatre. If you are looking for an all round, jam up, 100 per cent attraction, here it is.

Ida May McKenzie, who plays with "Snooky" and the other animals in "Beat It," the new Chest-Educational comedy, is called down by the stage manager.
Welcome!

EXHIBITORS HERALD.
Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen:

One of the first things I do when I get my "Herald" is to turn to the "What The Picture Did For Me" section, and I consider it very helpful.

Having been benefited from the reports of my fellow exhibitors, I feel like, too, should contribute to this to help some one else.

A. L. German.
Royal Theatre.
Bonner Springs, Kans.

You cannot go wrong on this one.—Smith Read. Phantom theatre, Delafield, Tex.—Small town patronage.

Her First Elopement, with Wanda Hawley. This one a very pleasing comedy film with plenty of pep. Wanda Hawley is becoming very much liked with my patrons.—New Cozy theatre, Winfield, Ind.

The Law of the Yukon, with a special cast.—Every comment favorable. Please a good week night crowd. They liked it and said so.—Alvin S. Frank, Jewel theatre, Layette, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

The New York Idea, with Alice Brady. The New York Idea is a very poor picture. In spite of the fact that it was advertised to open Saturday, after looking at this Saturday we sent it back on the first train.—Ray Y. McMinn, Capitol theatre, Superior, Wis.

You Never Can Tell, with Bebe Daniels. Bebe will have to have better stories than this to make a success. It's so childish it's silly. She is good. Rain hurt attendance.—A. N. Miles, Emience theatre, Emience, Ky.

She Couldn't Help It, with Bebe Daniels. Fine! Some said as good as The Snob, but did not have as good a house by several dollars. But the picture is good. Will stand boosting.—A. B. Anderson, Pastime theatre, Stratford, S. D.—Neighborhood patronage.

Robertson-Cole

One Man in a Million, with George Beban. This is one picture you are proud to have shown in your theatre. Push it. Get the social organizations in your town to help you put it over. Enlist the aid of the churches and schools. I only had it booked for two days, but expect to get a return booking on it.—Charles E. Casey, Bushong theatre Bushong, Kans.—Transient patronage.

The Notorious Mrs. Sands, with Bessie Barriscale. A good program picture.—George E. Taylor, Idle Hour theatre, Dunlap, La.—Neighborhood patronage.

Modern Husbands, with Henry Walthall. A very ordinary play. Did not please.—George E. Taylor, Idle Hour theatre, Dunlap, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

A Sagebrush Hamlet, with William Desmond. Good program picture.—Alvin S. Frank, Jewel theatre, Layette, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Point of View, with Elaine Hammerstein. The Point of View is a picture.—E. A. Baradel. Palace theatre, McGehee, Ark.—Small town patronage.

The Glorious Lady, with Olive Thomas. Very good. All Olive Thomas pictures are good. Our people like them.—Carl Sather, Grand theatre, Annandale, Minn.—Small town patronage.

The Greatest Love, with Vera Gordon. A good picture, but paper very poor. Our lobby is our greatest salesman, and the paper won't sell the picture to the public. Business very poor.—Ray Y. McMinn, Capitol theatre, Superior, Wis.

The Flapper, with Olive Thomas. My patrons like all of this star's pictures. I consider this one of her best.—S. B. Brock, Electric theatre, Hagerman, N. M.—Neighborhood patronage.

Upstairs and Down, with Olive Thomas. Another beautiful production from her whom we did not appreciate until too late.—T. Metcalf, Opera House, Greenfield, Ill.—Small town patronage.

The One Way Trail, with Edythe Sterling. One of those action pictures of the Canadian North west and the Royal N. Y. Four thousand pleased 100 per cent judging from comments.—Mrs. Lloyd Junktin, Queen theatre, Aspermont, Tex.—Small town patronage.

The Palace of Darkened Windows, with a special cast. Picture good. Paper very bad. Had to have sign painter make lobby display in place of posters, as it would have been suicide to use contents of the paper.—Ray Y. McMinn, Capitol theatre, Superior, Wis.

Sauce for the Goose, with Constance Talmadge. While this is not a new picture, it is a good one and will go over good in any small town.—Geo. Eberwine, Auditorium theatre, Marshallhead, Ohio.—Small town patronage.

A Perfect Lover, with Eugene O'Brien. Better picture than we had expected from reviews, and it pleased. O'Brien is coming for us.—C. T. Metcalf, Opera House, Greenfield, Ill.—Small town patronage.

Happiness a la Mode, with Constance Talmadge. Not a bad picture and yet nothing new.—S. B. Brock, Electric theatre, Hagerman, N. M.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Servant Question, with Willie Col-
Universal

If Only Jim, with Harry Carey.—This is the best Carey picture I ever played in. Despite the dull business, he will fill up the house. Patrons well pleased. You take no chance on booking this one, and you won't have to sneak away when they come out. Big favorite here, and a sure box office attraction. Every picture gets better. Book it and boost it. Carey will do the rest.—Ellis Irving, Cozy theatre, Newkirk, Okla.—Neighborhood patronage.

Blue Streak McCoy, with Harry Carey.—Best Carey picture we ever played independently. The Palace theatre, Wallis, Tex.—Small town patronage.

West Is West, with Harry Carey.—Carey not popular here. However, this is best of his pictures we have had.—E. A. Haradel, Palace theatre, McGregor, Ark.—Small town patronage.

Outside the Law, with Priscilla Dean.—Opened to largest business in the last two months. Wonder picture.—M. Jackson, Tudor theatre, Atlanta, Ga.—Downtown patronage.

La La Lucile, with Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran.—A good comedy-drama. Good business for one day.—F. J. Kozuch, Dixie theatre, Wallis, Tex.—Small town patronage.

Blue Streak McCoy, with Harry Carey.—Good of the kind.—Verner Hlick, Family theatre, Marion, Ill.—General patronage.

Human Stuff, with Harry Carey.—It is Carey, and that is enough to insure a good house. Unfortunately most Westerns because they are real, and Carey is the best bet.—R. Ross Riley, Wigwam theatre, Oberlin, Kans.—Small town patronage.

The Red Lane, with Frank Mayo.—Star well liked. Picture good. Paper and advertising good. Business satisfactory. Picture well liked by audience.

Motorcycle Experts Appear in Fox Film

The motorcycle army of fully armored knights who appear in the Fox Film spectacular of Mark Twain's 'Connecticut Yankee,' represents the entire membership of the Indian Motorcycle Club of Los Angeles.

Harry Spindler, himself an expert motorcyclist, was commissioned by Emmett J. Flynn, the director, to round up the necessary riders, and after several vain attempts to convince this part of the story with a mob of more or less inexperienced cyclists, with machines of old age, the Indian Club was urged to appear in the picture, as an assurance that this part of the film would render as nearly perfect as possible.

A showing of the picture reveals that although the motorcycle knights are shown dashing along over every variety of road at full speed, taking all the curves and grades on high, not one of the 300 knights was unseated, so to speak. They succeeded in supplying the picture with one of its big thrills.

Ray Y. McMinn, Capitol theatre, Superior, Wis.

The Petal on the Current, with Mary MacLaren.—A very good picture. Had many comiems on this.—W. H. Gilfillan, Lotus theatre, Red Lake Falls, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

Outcasts of Poker Flat, with Harry Carey.—This is the best Carey picture we have run to date. Pleased very well.—C. E. M. Rothwell, Palace theatre, Bison, Kans.—Small town patronage.

The Red Lane, with Frank Mayo.—This was a good picture. Drew well and pleased my patrons.—F. J. Kozuch, Dixie theatre, Wallis, Tex.—Small town patronage.

A Tokio Siren, with Tsuru Aoki.—Drew well but didn't please.—E. T. Crafts, Pastime theatre, Seelyville, Ind.—Small town patronage.

The Devil's Passkey, an Eric Von Stroheim production.—One of the best we have had in a long time. Truly a special. Only one objection, and that is the photography, is in spots caused apparently bad focus. Pleased well.—E. A. Haradel, Palace theatre, McGregor, Ark.—Small town patronage.

Locked Lips, with Tsuru Aoki.—This is a good picture, but when it comes to the box office will fall short. The star and lobby display will kill it. Why don't they have the right kind of posters? Some good thrills in this one, but the posters don't show anything to pull them in. Don't want any Jap pictures. If you gave them in they will be pleased.—William Thachier, Royal theatre, Salina, Kans.

Mad Marriage, with Carmel Myers.—Another good picture; but title killed it. Why does Universal make up pictures to this sensational stuff?—Mrs. Sufus Olson, Pastime theatre, Delavan, Wis.—General patronage.

Vitaphot

Dead Men Tell No Tales, with a special cast.—A well made melodrama. Picture went over good. Excellent paper and other advertising aids. Use the teager campaign in your newspaper and it will result.—Ray Y. McMinn, Capitol theatre, Superior, Wis.

Trumpet Island, with a special cast.—This picture is one of the good pictures to come from high society to a small island. It is sure a hummer, and one that you can go limit in the advertising.—R. Ross Riley, Wigwam theatre, Oberlin, Kans.—Small town patronage.

The Birth of a Soul, with Harry T. Morey.—They did not like this one.—New Cozy theatre, Winchester, Ind.

God's Country and the Woman, with William Boyd.—A good story business and no picture for small town. Lay off of it.—Sam DuBois, Rink theatre, Dos Palos, Cal.—Small town patronage.

Specials

Mid-Channel (Equity), with Clara Kimball Young.—A very good picture, but failed to do business.—Peter Kram, Denison theatre, Denison, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

Up in Mary's Attic (Fine Arts), with a special cast.—I thought this one was the best picture we have all year. Will please any audience, and get the money. Don't pass it up.—Ray Y. McMinn, Capitol theatre, Superior, Wis.

Fickle Women (D. N. Schwab), with David Butler.—A good, little five-act comedy-drama that went good here. They liked it and went out telling me so.—C. H. Ryan, Garfield theatre, Chicago, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Skyfire (Pinnacle), with Neal Hart.—Good. Fine. Good story, beautiful scenery. This is one of Neal's best so far. Business fair Friday; big Saturday. You can't go wrong on this one. Boost it. Don't advance price. We played it as it and did.—William Thachier, Royal theatre, Salina, Kans.

The Struggle (Canyon), with Franklyn Farnum.—Very good feature. Pleased our people. Beautiful settings.—J. B. Disch, Majestic theatre, Gahwa, Wis.—Neighborhood patronage.

Miss Arizona (Arrow), Gertrude Bonahill.—Good. Thrilling Western. Well made. People were well pleased.—R. J. Dolly, Edwards theatre, Chicago, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Woman Untamed (McGovern), with Doraldina.—A picture that's different. Boost it and it will go over here. Pleases all. Big business.—Joseph J. Gross, Comet theatre, Milwaukee, Wis.—Neighborhood patronage.

Eyes of Youth (Equity), with Clara Kimball Young.—A good, big eight-reel production that pleased them all. Drew well. Good scenes and fine acting.—H. A. Wishard, Wishart theatre, Bloomfield, Ia.—Home patronage.

The Woman of Mystery (Aywon), with a special cast.—The best Sunday business I ever had. Wonderful production.—Empire theatre, Chicago, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Silk Husbands and Calico Wives (Equity), with a special cast.—Nice, even running story of things that do happen. Not a big picture, but a mighty good picture that is consistent.—Raymond Piper, Piper's Opera House, Virginia City, Nev.

NORMA TALMADGE

In a scene from the First National production, "The Passion Flower," adapted from the stage success.
Serials

King of the Circus (Universal), with Eddie Polo.—Just started King of the Circus with a two-reel Hoot Gibson, and it went over fine. First episode O. K. Clean and fine, that parents need not be afraid to allow their children.—Mrs. James Holman, Cozy theatre, Union, Ore.—Small town patronage.

The Veiled Mystery (Vitagraph), with Antonio Moreno.—Good serial. On the 11th episode and going good. Book it.—G. F. Duncan, Pastime theatre, Cow- pens, S. C.

The Lost City (Warner Bros.), with Juanita Hansen.—A wonderful drawing serial. I have read many, but this is best I ever had. On fourth episode and gaining. Book it: there is money in it.—W. H. Gillihan, Lotus theatre, Red Lake Falls, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Lost City (Warner Bros.), with Juanita Hansen.—I am on the 5th episode. Already lost some customers. Too much of animal stuff. Not liked here.—F. J. Horzech, Dixie theatre, Wallis, Tex.—Small town patronage.

The Lost City (Warner Bros.), with Juanita Hansen.—This serial is very fine, and no mistake will be made in booking it. It is clean and wholesome, and no mother would have regrets concerning the attendance of her children.—Mrs. James W. Webb, Cozy theatre, Union, Ore.—Small town patronage.

King of the Circus (Universal), with Eddie Polo.—A good serial, but short reels. No wonder they make them in 15 episodes.—Olen Reynolds, Pearl theatre, Hymera, Ind.—Small town patronage.

Velvet Fingers (Pathé), with George B. Seitz.—Playing second episode of Velvet Fingers. George B. Seitz has them skinned a mile. This is the talk of the town. Everybody likes it.—John L. Norman, Lyric theatre, Alexandria, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Moon Riders (Universal), with a special cast.—On 14th episode. Going big. Held up fine. Pleasing all. They come in next week. Running four other short reels Universals with this and it makes a good show. Universal's short stuff is O. K.—William Thacher, Royal theatre, Salina, Kan.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Phantom Foe (Pathé), with Juanita Hansen.—This is the best all-round serial we have ever played. Draws the high brown as well as the rough necks. Big business.—Pfeiffer Bros. Opera House, Kenton, O.—General patronage.

Daredevil Jack (Pathé), with Jack Dempsey.—On the 3rd episode, holding up good with attendance, but the first episode they were disappointed. They are booked for a big fighting serial. The serial is good and holding up fine. Business good.—William Thacher, Royal theatre, Salina, Kan.

Short Subjects

The Stage Hand (Vitagraph), with Larry Semson.—A serial. One of Larry's best.—George E. Taylor, Idle Hour theatre, Dunlap, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

Number Please (Pathé), with Harold Lloyd.—One of Lloyd's best. He takes well around here.—R. Navary, Liberty theatre, Verona, Pa.—Neighborhood patronage.

A Tray Full of Trouble (Educational), with a special cast.—Great. Most wonderful monkey comedian of them all.—Raymond Piper, Piper's Opera House, Virginia City, Nev.

Rolin Comedies (Pathé).—Pollards are very good. Vanity Fair comedies are worthless. No comedy in them. Nothing but legs.—Wilkinson & Hunter, Elite theatre, Weeping Water, Neb.—Small town patronage.

Sunshine Comedies (Fox).—Food for licensors is right on these comedies. The poster we gave this comedian dare not put up until we dress them with a crayon pencil, and we have to run all of them through and censor out the bad.—A. J. Stegall, Opera House, Fayette, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

Neighbors (Metro), with Buster Keaton.—One of the best two-reel slapstick comedies we have shown this year.—C. H. Ryan, Garfield theatre, Chicago, Ill.—Transient patronage.

Sunshine Comedies (Fox).—Played 26 of these to date. Every one good, and they seem to be getting better.—Mont Piper, Piper's Opera House, Virginia City, Nev.

Lloyd Comedies (Pathé), with Harold Lloyd.—Have run the first two series. All fine.—Wilkinson & Hunter, Elite theatre, Weeping Water. Neb.—Small town patronage.

You'll Be Surprised and An Overall Hero (Educational), with Snooky the monkey.—It would be hard to tell whether the kiddies or the grown-ups like these best. This monkey is wonderful and the children and other pets in the picture are very amusing.—A. N. Miles, Eminence theatre, Eminence, Ky.

Jester Comedies, with Twede Dan.—Have run some of these comedies and they are O. K. Please patrons.—B. Keene, Orpheum theatre, Cuba, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Sportsman (Vitagraph), with Larry Semson.—Not up with his other pictures. The stuff he put off in this one he has used before. Business off on this one for Semson.—William Thacher, Royal theatre, Salina, Kan.

Torchy (Educational), with Johnny Hines.—I call this a very poor comedy. Failed to get a laugh.—G. E. Wendel, Opera House, Smithland, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

Going Through the Rye (Educational), with Bobby Vernon.—Exceptionally good. Lots of people stayed to see it again on the second show.—A. N. Miles, Eminence theatre, Eminence, Ky.

Can You Beat It? (Jester), with Twede Dan.—Audience laughed throughout. Best comedy we have run.—Lydia theatre, Chicago, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Snub Pollard Comedies (Pathé).—Find them all good. Have run a number of them. Good on any program.—William Thacher, Royal theatre, Salina, Kan.

Raver to Offer Short Version of "Cabiria"
(From Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, March 15.—Harry Raver, who brought "Cabiria" to America in 1921, is to offer a shorter version of the picture, which is now en route from Europe. The original was in twelve reels while the new film will be in seven parts. No distribution arrangements have been made.

Creator of "East Side"
Tales Writes for Screen

A new and unusual figure in American literature is busy at the Goldwyn studios. She is Anzia Yezierska, who recently flashed across the literary sky with the publication of "Hungry Hearts," a collection of short stories, which are being combined into a feature film. Miss Yezierska is assisting in the translation of her work to the screen. She came from the East Side of New York—the section which she has vividly interpreted. "The Fat of the Land," one of the short stories in "Hungry Hearts," was selected by Edward J. O'Brien, the anthropologist, as the best poetic imaginative work in short form which 1919 produced.

Wheeler Will Head Production Company At Universal City

(Neutral to Exhibitors Herald)

NEW YORK, March 15.—Capt. Clifford Slater Wheeler is heading the newly organized Wheeler Productions, which has leased studio space at Universal City for the production of a series of feature pictures.

Prior to his service with the French Mission in Siberia, Captain Wheeler had taken an active part in a number of productions. The theme of the pictures in the making will touch upon national topics.

While in Siberia, Captain Wheeler was in Ekaterinburg shortly after the death of the Czar and has woven into the story of his first picture a portrayal of the brutal death of the imperial family.

Ohio Exhibitor Gets Star
In a Personal Appearance

Breaking his rule against making personal appearances at theatres, Thomas Meighan, Paramount star, who arrived recently in New York from Los Angeles, was the principal attraction recently at the Liberty theatre, Youngstown, O., on the invitation of C. W. Deiber, the manager.

Hearing that Meighan was coming East, Deiber wired him offering $1,000 if he would appear in person at the Liberty for an evening performance. Meighan accepted on the condition that he would give $500 to the Youngstown Orphan Asylum and $300 to the Actors' Fund.

Installs Film Equipment

CEDAR RAPIDS, Ia.—The Crystal theatre has installed additional equipment at a cost of $2,500.

Films in Churches

DANVILLE, Ill., March 10.—Editor of Exhibitors Herald: While all this agitation is going on around the country about closing Sunday shows and rigid censorship laws and while all of the exhibitors are endeavoring to keep blue laws from being passed, I would suggest another law.

All persons, except regularly licensed exhibitors, should be prohibited from giving any kind of a motion picture exhibition. Any church or society that plays home talent should have to put their shows on in a regular theatre.

I note the churches protest against Sunday shows as for instance the church in my neighborhood, and then immediately, they proceed to put pictures in their church. Churches put on pictures and pay no government tax, no city license, have no help, buy cheap film—no wonder they make money.

If the exhibitor is closed on Sunday will the church be willing to let him have the rest of the week? No, I should say not. They will try to give something on two or three other nights of the week in order to spoil the week day for him.

It seems to me that the church should try to get a law passed compelling churches to remain churches. Would like to have you take this matter up in your magazine and pass it along to other exhibitors.

Chester to Eliminate Maids and Telephones From His Productions

No more will the dainty white-capped maid wait demurely in a corset and pretty up the telephone, there to unfold the plot to the anxious spectators through an imaginary conversation. George Randolph Chester, famous author, who, after studying pictures for two years, is about to personally stage his own story, says this is "out."

In "The Son of Wallingford," his latest story, which he is starting for screen production at Vitagraph's Western studios, there will be no servants, no telephones, and more, no letter by letter plot. He has tossed these mechanics of the screen into the discard.

And further, he is not going to take the usual advertised "$50,000 feet of film exposed." He says useless footage costs just as much to take as needed footage, so he will confine himself to the latter. Mr. Chester reduced his script to exact screen length before he selected a location. He selected all locations before he even commenced casting. And he will finish casting before he takes a scene on the stage.

Equipment Progress

What report would the local fire marshal make on your theatre today if he were to go through it from basement to balcony to learn how you guard the safety of your patrons?

This is a question that every exhibitor in the country might well ask himself.

Theatres of Chicago are facing more than the question. They are facing the investigation itself. The so-called legitimate houses were visited first and already many indications of carelessness have been unearthed.

This has been played up prominently in the newspapers and some facts insignificant in themselves have been magnified to an extent that it will have certain public influence.

Of course, setting aside the matter of law violation, you owe it to your patrons to provide every possible protection. Go over your house today. Clean up any rubbish there may be in the basement. Do away with any possible chance of spontaneous combustion.

Go over your fire escapes. See that they are not rusted. Have proper illuminated exit signs which can be seen from all parts of your theatre.

A steel or asbestos curtain is always desirable. Hand fire extinguishers at points of vantage are worth their price in the evidence they give that you fully feel your responsibilities.

Get in touch with the equipment manufacturers. They are fully informed on devices designed for fire protection. They can start you in the right direction.

Care of the Projection Machine; A Simple Formula

Abandon the Screw Driver—Devote Your Efforts to Keeping Parts Oiled and Well Cleaned

BY J. J. DUFFY

Projection Engineer, Exhibitors Supply Company

Editor's Note.—The following is the first of a series of articles to be contributed by Mr. Duffy on care and analysis of projection room equipment. The article this week is particularly applicable to amateur projectionists and we are sure the writer's sound advice is concerned in by expert operators everywhere.

Much has been written about the care of the projector and undoubtedly most of the advice given to operators in this regard has been sincere and intended to help them in the routine of their daily task.

But out of this advice has arisen a great many evils which have tended to rob the operator rather than help him in the operation of the projector. Far too much has been said about fixing this and that and adjustments here and there.

The projection machine of this day and age is of such mechanical perfection that it requires little or no attention other than two set instructions. These are vital:

Keep your machine clean and well oiled.

This may sound like a simple doctrine for the successful operation of the projection machine of today with its hundreds of parts and delicate mechanism but if this sound advice was more faithfully followed there would be considerable less work in the repair shop.

True, the modern projector of motion pictures is a delicate piece of mechanism. But just as true is the fact that the manufacturers of the standard machines now in use have so coordinated this mechanism that disorder and trouble have been reduced to a minimum under clever and intelligent guidance.

I might add at this point, and have come to this conclusion after many years of experience with projection machines, that the greatest evil of the projection room is the common or garden variety of the screw driver. I have no criticism to make of the screw driver. It is a useful instrument. But in the hands of the uninitiated, it works havoc.

I have known these amateurs after having practiced their deadly art with the screw driver, to be in much the same position as the small boy who, after dis- secting his father's watch, upon reassembling, had a surplus supply of sprockets and screws.

This is the point I want to emphasize: about the only attention the modern projection machine needs is proper cleaning and oiling.

However, I do not want to be misconstrued. I do not think that a man should be ignorant of the mechanics of his machine. I believe that he should familiarize himself with the integral parts of the projector. But I do not think he should get his education by means of a screw driver. This way is too expensive. It means repairs and repairs mean money.

There is a much simpler way. A study of printed matter and conversations with your supply dealer will do more toward giving you a full understanding than all the probing you could possibly do yourself.

Many expert operators make it a plan to completely take down their machines once a year and give the parts a thorough bath in gasoline. This is an excellent idea if intelligently carried out.

It places a great responsibility upon the operator. He must be fully informed concerning the general make-up of his projector and it is a wise, able affair if he is not.

There are a number of precautions to be followed if this plan is used. Each part must be thoroughly dried before setting up of the machine. Failure to do this can result only in disaster.

Once the parts are dried and the reassembling is completed, it is then necessary to completely oil the projector. This is one of the vital things and I emphasize it because it has been frequently overlooked—even by the experts. Put the two together, think of them as the Siamese twins of successful projection—Clean and Oil.

I may seem to have dwelt on this longer than absolutely necessary but I am so firmly convinced that this formula will do so much to overcome projection trouble that, perhaps, I am a trifle enthusiastic.

Another thing while I am still on the subject, just one parting shot at the screw driver—leave it at home when you go to take up your duties in the projection room.

In the balance of this series of articles I will take up in detail other features of projection which you should understand as well as a discussion of what I consider proper equipment for the modern projection booth.
VENTILATION OF THEATRE

Most Important Feature Considered Is the Location and Size of Grills.

In the installation of the Typhoon cooling system one of the most important features to be considered, in order to get the desired results, is the size and location of the grills, or openings into the theatre through which the air passes before reaching the audience. No two theatres are constructed exactly alike, therefore the problems of the Typhoon engineering staff are entirely different with regard to the grill work, on each theatre job.

It is an easy matter, however, to overcome any difficulties which may at first seem impossible to the theatre owner as the Typhoon system is so constructed that it can readily be installed in any size theatre, old or new.

Made On Roof

Installations are usually made on the roof, although if the construction of the theatre does not allow this arrangement, there are other locations such as the attic space, or in a room above the stage, or auditorium. There is still one more location that has in many instances proved very satisfactory, and this one is on the outside wall of the theatre near the screen.

No matter where the installation is made, it is necessary to construct the grill work, which also must be placed in its proper relation with respect to the audience.

Photographs Show Method

In the accompanying photographs will be seen several different locations of the grills used in connection with the Typhoon cooling system. Each of these theatres was entirely different from the other, while at the same time each of the Typhoon systems installed was of a different size.

In order to meet the requirements of the various theatres in one instance the grill work was placed directly over the proscenium, in another it was worked into the general design and in still another the grills were placed in the ceiling in such a way as to harmonize nicely with the rest of the interior.

SYNCHRONIZED AT COVENT

A try-out of the Synchronized Scenario Music Company's method of harmonizing music and the picture will be made at the Covent Garden theatre on Chicago's north side this week. The theatre is making a three day's showing of First National's "The Kill" and this is one of the first big productions to be synchronized by the Synchronized Scenario Music Company.

EQUIPS SOUTHERN THEATRE

ATLANTA, GA.—The Southern Theatre Equipment Company has just completed equipping the Dreka theatre of DeLand, Fla., a 550 seat house. Included in the equipment is a Powers 6-B of the improved type E equipment, a Minusa Gold Fibre screen, transverter. The theatre also has a complete Monsoon ventilating system installed.

H. Fitman, who will open a 750 seat house this month, has already purchased two Powers 6-B improved type E machines and a Minusa Gold Fibre screen. He has also ordered for Stanza display frames and a stage set designed by the Decorative Plant Company of Chicago.

CONSOLIDATED'S NEW HOME

Ground is being broken for the new two-story home of the Consolidated Film and Supply Company in Savannah, Ga. The structure will be located in Walton street.

The new building will also house the Southern Theatre Equipment company and will be built at an estimated cost of $230,000. Pathe Exchange, Inc., is said to have leased the adjoining property for exchange purposes and will be housed in a building also to be erected by Consolidated.

ADDITIONAL STOCK MODELS

Exhibitors Supply Company Adding Many New Display Frames to Present Lines.

In addition to the recently instituted new feature in their lobby display frame business of manufacturing special built to order display frames, the Exhibitors Supply company has added many new stock models, to their present line. The designs are unique and attractive enough it is said, to harmonize with the architectural scheme and decorations of the most pretentious lobbies.

This move, it is announced is made in furtherance of the company's policy of economy, service and courtesy, and it allows the exhibitor a wider selection than heretofore.

To take care of the additional factory activity made necessary by the new plans a number of new wood working machines will be installed in the near future.

Special attention is also being given to the manufacture of outside display frames that, the company claims, will withstand all weather conditions and changes.

Herman Jans Tours Large Film Centers
Will Visit Exchanges Which Are Handling His Features

Herman F. Jans, president of Jans Pictures, Inc., and of Jans Film Service, Inc., left for an extended journey on Saturday, March 12. His itinerary will carry him to the principal film centers of the United States. Mrs. Jans and their daughter will accompany him. Mr. Jans intends to make the trip partly one of pleasure.

Desires to Meet Film Men

The president of Jans Pictures will visit the various exchanges handling his special "Madonnas and Men," and his features, "Love Without Question," "Woman's Business," and "Wings of Pride," all productions made under the Jans banner and now being issued from every film center of the entire world.

Mr. Jans is very interested in the success of these productions and desires to meet the various executives of the exchanges handling them in order that he may establish a close personal relationship which will fit him to correctly judge the contracts submitted to him.

First Stop is Chicago

Mr. Jans' first stop will be Chicago and from that point he will touch Minneapolis, Seattle, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Dallas, New Orleans, Atlanta, Baltimore and Washington. While at Los Angeles he will spend some time in looking into a number of propositions which have been made him by certain Coast producing companies for the purchase of their entire output. Mr. Jans will be absent from New York about eight weeks.

Plan Dowagiac Theatre

DOWAGIAC, MICH.—Work is expected to start soon on the new theatre which A. L. Larkin and associates will build this summer. The house will seat 1,200 patrons.

Priscilla Dean's New Universal-Jewel Film Titled "Reputation"

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Film Manufacturing Company, announces that Priscilla Dean's new Universal-Jewel picture is to be called "Reputation." It is from a story by Edwin Levin, and originally was called "False Colors." Miss Dean has a dual role in the production.

In the production of "Reputation," Stuart Paton, the director, inaugurated a novel method for handling his cast. The story is comprehensive in theme and divides itself into several sequences. Paton selected his players by sequence, thus permitting slight alterations of the plot as the picture developed.

Among the well-known screen players used by Paton in the early parts of the picture were Harry Van Meter, Rex Rosell, May Giraci and Harry Carter. In later sequences he used other characters, including such well known players as Nile Welsh, who is leading man for Miss Dean, William Welsh, Spottswood Atiken, James McLaughlin, Al Garcia, Kathleen Myers, Joey McCreery, Alice H. Smith, Francois Dumas and Joe Ray.

Takes Over the Palace

MARSHALL, TEX.—Jack Rodder of the Old Mill theatre of Dallas has assumed the management of the Palace theatre. He succeeds R. H. Clemonson who has become traveling representative of the Southern Enterprise Amusement Company with headquarters at Dallas and territory over the state of Texas.

Will Build in Missouri

KANSAS CITY, MO.—Star Amusement and Investment Company will erect a $125,000 theatre, to be named the National, at 312-314 East Twelfth street, this summer. The company is controlled by C. O. Fields, president, and J. T. Wilson, secretary-treasurer.

Selznick Will Publish Talmadge Production "Ghosts of Yesterday" Will Be Re-Issued to Trade This Month

Lewis J. Selznick, president of Selznick Corporation, announces for republication the latter part of March another Norma Talmadge picture, "Ghosts of Yesterday," based upon the Rupert Hughes play, "Two Women." It was directed by Charles H. Miller for Joseph Schenck, who distributed it through the Selznick organization.

Not many months ago Norma Talmadge's "Panthea" was re-issued by Mr. Selznick. The immediate success which it scored may be responsible for the republication of "Ghosts of Yesterday" at this particular time, it is said. "Panthea" was welcomed by exhibitors everywhere, Selznick declares.

"Two Women," written as a stage play by Rupert Hughes, was ideally adapted for the screen under the attractive title of "Ghosts of Yesterday." The resulting photoplay is said by Selznick to be one of the best in which Miss Talmadge ever has appeared. From the players chosen to support Miss Talmadge in the offering there have been developed a number of stars whose names are these days frequently written in electric lights, as in the name of Miss Talmadge herself.

It is believed that "Ghosts of Yesterday" will score as strongly as has "Panthea." It is being sent out with new titles, new prints and new advertising accessories throughout.

Anna Q. Nilsson Joins Cast of "Lotus Eaters"

The two star combination of John Barrymore and Director Marshal Neilan, now busy on "The Lotus Eaters," has acquired a third stellar name by the engagement of Anna Q. Nilsson to play opposite Mr. Barrymore.

Miss Nilsson's presence in this production is not only regarded as the climax of her own career, but also an additional assurance of the merit for this picture.

Two scenes from the latest Torchy comedy, "Torchy's Big Lead," featuring Johnny Hines, to be distributed through Educational Exchanges.

Bradley Placed in Charge Advertising and Publicity

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., March 15.—A forcible advertising stunt to swell the box office receipts during the current showing of "Parenthood" at the Blue Mouse theatre is a 24-sheet cut-outs mounted on a truck which is driven daily through the loop district. The cut-outs show a picture of the baby while in the background the word "Parenthood" loops up effectively.

George Beban will appear in person with the showing of "One Man in a Million" at the State theatre during the week of April 3, according to Manager Preston of the State.

Give the management of the New Grand theatre credit for a neat bit of enterprise last week. Here's what they did: Lenore Ulric appeared in "The Son-Daughter," at the Metropolitan theatre in the New Grand managing without taking advantage of her personal appearance here showed Miss Ulric in "Roses and Thorns." Incidentally arrangements were made for her to appear in person at the motion picture house too.

Carlton Miles, dramatic critic and motion picture editor of the Minneapolis Sunday Journal, returned recently from looking "em out in New York. He is now writing Sunday features on the latest wrinkles in motion pictures and the legitimate stage.

Northwest theatre managers are cooperating with a Chinese relief committee in their efforts to raise funds for the poverty stricken people of China. The Finkelstein & Ruben theatres have offered aid in any way the committee may suggest.

Frank C. Faude, formerly Sunday editor of the Minneapolis Tribune, is now dramatic critic and motion picture editor. He succeeds Wilbur Judd who resigned to go to France where he will do short story writing.

Rustic Theatre to Be Erected by Tingdales

(Minneapolis Tribune Correspondent)

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., March 15.—A rustic picture theatre constructed entirely from peeled tamarack logs, said to be the only one of its kind in the United States, will be features at Lake Minnewawa, a Minnesota summer resort, this summer, according to Exploring the Minneapolis real estate dealers. The interior will be kept with the general rustic appearance. Benches, somewhat like those used in ancient European churches, will be used instead of chairs.

400 Instructors to View "Black Beauty"

Playhouse Manager Also Will Placard Cafes to Exploit This Production

(Minneapolis Tribune Correspondent)

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., March 15.—Four hundred Minneapolis school teachers will be guests at a private screening of "Black Beauty," Vitagraph's production, before the picture opens an indefinite run at the Minneapolis picture house on March 20, according to John H. Prescott, manager of the theatre, who is planning several exploitation stunts. Manager Prescott believes that the 400 school teachers will advertise the picture effectively among the school children after seeing the picture. B. B. Jackson, superintendent, is enthusiastic about the invitation extended the teachers.

Another feature of Prescott's "Black Beauty" exploitation will be neat little placards which will be placed on every table in Minneapolis cafes and restaurants. The card will bear a picture of "Black Beauty" and will read: "Black Beauty" says: 'My, they have good things to eat here!" The name of the theatre will be imprinted.

Manager Prescott recently succeeded Charles Perry as manager of the Lyric theatre. Perry has gone to Canada where he will join the Famous Players forces.

Halsey Hall, former newspaper man from Minneapolis, joins Finkelstein & Ruben Exploitation Forces in St. Paul under Ferris Management

From Staff Correspondent

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., March 15.—Several changes in the advertising staff of Finkelstein & Ruben have just been made.

O. J. Jones, special interest, is the appointment of Charles J. Bradley to the directorship on both advertising and publicity in the Twin Cities.

Prior to the resignation of J. 1. Johnston as advertising manager Bradley had charge of the publicity only.

Hall Joins Company

Announcement is made of the appointment of Halsey Hall, for the last two years a member of the Minneapolis Tribune editorial staff, as a member of the publicity force in St. Paul. He will work under the direction of Ben Ferris.

As head of the "F-R" publicity staff Bradley had made a worthy showing. Many effective stunts for the exploitation of the company's programs were conceived by him.

Shallenger Guest at Minneapolis Dinner

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN. March 15.—Dr. W. E. Shallenger, president of Arrow Film Corporation, has arrived. Mr. Shallenger, manager of the Minneapolis Journal Correspondent)

Brett A. P. Manager

(Brett A. P. Manager)

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., March 15.—Dr. W. E. Shallenger, president of the Minneapolis Journal, was guest at a dinner here recently. Among those present were Theodore Hayes, general manager of Finkelstein & Ruben Enterprises; Charles J. Bradley, publicity director; Carlton Miles, dramatic critic, Minneapolis Journal, and J. F. Cumberly, local First National manager.

They called him the "Barbarian" because the only God he knew was the God of heaven.

The spell of the northwoods grew upon them and they suddenly awoke to the realization that the "Barbarian" was a Man.

Chicago Exhibitors Favor Girl Ushers
Declare They Can Be Relied Upon to Avert Panic in Case of Fire

Agitation in council circles to prohibit the employment of girl ushers in theatres has met opposition from the exhibitors. In voicing their opposition to such restrictions the theatre men have cited instances in which the employment of ushers was a matter of life and death, and several years ago the employment of ushers was found to be effective in averting such cases.

J. C. McDonnell, chief of the fire prevention bureau, has urged upon the council building committee that every theatre be required to have "panic proof" doors which cannot be locked from within. A subcommittee of the council building committee is now making a survey of the theatres.

Peter J. Schaefer of Jones, Linick & Schaefer stated that the girls employed in their nine loop theatres are well drilled and competent to conduct themselves properly in case of fire.

Gollos Enterprises Buys "Deliverance" For Its Territory

Gollos Enterprises has purchased the northern Illinois rights to "Deliverance," the much talked of production starring Helen Keller from the George Kleine System.

Negotiations have been opened for the leasing of a stage theatre in which to give the picture its Chicago premier. Aaron Gollos, president of the Gollos Enterprises, states that it will be exploited on a large scale.

Helen Keller, the star, is one of the best known women in the world. In the supporting cast are Roy Stewart, Betty Schade, Edith Lyle, Elmo Lincoln and Edythe Chapman.

Hector Fuller Leaves

Hector Fuller, who has been handling the publicity for "Way Down East" at the Woods theatre, has returned to New York. Mr. Fuller is well known in Chicago and has quite a reputation as a newspaper man and war correspondent. Pat Campbell of Kansas City succeeded Mr. Fuller.

Harry Reichenbach, having conducted a two weeks' campaign for "Outside the Law," the Universal feature, playing Barbee's theatre on Monroe street, has returned to New York to put on an advertising campaign for the Fox special, "A Yankee in King Arthur's Court."

Julius Trinz, Popular Manager, Dies Here

Julius Trinz, one of Chicago's most popular managers, died on Monday, March 7, of pneumonia. Mr. Trinz was a nephew of Joseph Trinz of Lubliner and Trinz, and was well liked for his sunny disposition and good nature. He was for several years manager of the Columbia theatre in Milwaukee, and prior to his death was manager of the Crawford theatre in Chicago.

Malloy Re-elected

The Motion Picture Operators union re-elected Thomas Malloy as business manager last week.

An Old Timer

IKE VAN RONKEL of the Favorite Players Company is one exchange man who knows an exhibitor's problems, having been an exhibitor for a number of years back in the old days when the question of obtaining good pictures was a real problem.

In 1906, Mr. Van Ronkel ran three theatres on Halsted street and made money in all of them. He later became the proprietor of an independent exchange and served as exchange manager for General. Bluebird-Universal and Goldwyn in the order named. He recently formed the Favorite Players Film Company with Maurice Fleckles, another whose experience in the film field dates back to the early days of the industry. The new independent exchange is one of the busiest in the Central West.

Jones, Linick and Schaefer Buy Star

Madison Street Playhouse Is Added to Holdings of Big Chain

The Star Theatre building, on Madison street near Clark, has been purchased by Jones, Linick & Schaefer for a purchase price of $40,000 with a ground lease of one hundred and three years. They will take possession May first.

There are several leases in the building which extend beyond that date and which Jones, Linick & Schaefer will permit to continue under their ownership. E. F. Keebler & Company represented the purchasers and W. D. Kerfoot represented the Todd estate from whom the purchase was made. The legal matters were handled by Ryan, Condon & Livingston.

Tenth Theatre in Loop

The building contains the Star theatre which will be added to the rapidly growing chain of Jones, Linick & Schaefer motion picture theatres, which now includes the Orpheum, Bijou, Dream, Randolph, Lyric, Rose, Alcazar and Boston, and two vaudeville houses, namely, the McVickers and the Rialto.

The Star theatre seats a little over three hundred and, upon its addition to the new chain of "Jaycees" theatres, it will undergo the same reformation that has been accorded to the three newest children across the street.

Have Knack of Improving

Jones Linick & Schaefer seem to have a knack of rejuvenating and reforming little playhouses. When they took over the Rose, Alcazar and Boston they immediately turned loose a small army of painters, decorators and carpenters upon these three new theatres and it must be said, to their credit, that the reformation has been most complete. They have been transformed into the coziest kind of cinema playhouses.

Joseph Otto Hinze
Charlotte Organist

Joseph Otto Hinze, formerly of Chicago and Madison, Wis., is now organist at the Imperial theatre at Charlotte, N. C., one of the prettiest of the Lynch theatres. He plays an organ of the Hope-Jones type.

Gets Freeport Princess

FREEPORT, ILL.—John F. Dittman, owner of the Strand and Majestic theatres, has acquired the Princess, purchasing it from Edward Bauch. He will remodel it. The work is expected to be completed by autumn.
SHOTS AND MISSES

By Mac

Leave it to that subtle genius of the pen, Ralph Kettering, to make 'em sit up and take note. Didja all see that mob gathered about the entrance of the Kialto theatre at week during the run of Charles Chaplin's "The Kid" and that palace ultra, known in motor circles as a Rolls-Royce? After a curious public got through with Pete Schaefer's recent motor action, you should have seen them pack into the Kialto and make that Rolls investment of $15,000 a mere "bag o' shells" to Pete's checking account.

One of our very best scribes had occasion to park his motor equipage, a Harley-Davidson, along side the curb of a certain well known pharmacy on the Southside the other night and received the jolt of his cub career. Inside he found "Pop" Flonh, "Alte" Hamburger and "Billy" Levy engaged in serious conference. The "youngster" spiked a real murmur and tells us of Chi may soon welcome the debut of this interesting trio in control of another big circuit within our City limits.

It seems rather tough that Warren G. Harding, the new tenant at the Capitol, in arranging his "gold" cabinet overlooked the peer of 'em all, the unfeathered film champ, Tommy Greenwood of the local Hodkinson exchange. Cheep up Tom, old deal, the President has to deal out the ambassadorial assignments very shortly and we'll freshen him up a bit.

Paul De Quay, former Vitaphotographer, is now covering the south side of Chicago for the Educational exchange and reports a record demand for all the subjects he is offering. Owning to miserable telephone service we have been unable to gain any recent reports on big Jim Salter, another go-get- it of this live exchange.

Art Lowy, of the Illinois-Indiana exchange, announces the recent purchase of "Skinny Skinner" a live-reel comedy feature with vaudeville's tophitter, Johnny Bok, and starring a live-reel romantic drama, "Love's Plaything" featuring William Cavanaugh and Cora Collins for immediate release. With Ted Braun and Phil Banovitz covering Illinois and Indiana, also J. K. Parness, this live trio should crowd the house office with contracts plentiful.

Talkin' about the silver sheet as a lure. They tell us that Ed Tarble, manager of the local Vitagraph exchange, has become so enthused with his company's big super-production "Black Beauty" that Ed is keeping all the various riding academies about here and trying to corral one of those black equine single footers, to permit the popular mid-West manager an opportunity to display his equestrian prowess about Chicago's saddle palaces.

"Belle" Rudolph is in our midst with a print of the Sawyer and Lubin picture "Without Limit." He is stopping at the Sherman hotel.

The impatient filmmaker who broke into Sam Schaffer's fire-proof projection room last Thursday morning, to get a can of film reposing therein, got more than he bargained for. The flap of the door flew off with such force that doused him and gave him a beautiful black eye.

Wanted Expert Film Inspectors
NO NOVICES
NEED APPLY
If you have had practical experience as a film inspector in a reliable exchange, you may be able to qualify with us. We are in need of several inspectors with these qualifications. Just because you know how to patch film does not mean that you can satisfy us. If you think that you can inspect films so that when they reach the exhibitor they are clean and properly patched without any chance of them breaking with ordinary usage, you are the one we are looking for.
